1. A book, or section, of a poem. Dr. Johnson cites a passage, in proof of this definition, from Shakspeare, where the real word is canton; which was common, in Shakspeare's time, for canto. The cantos of the poems by Spenser and Butler must be in the recollection of most men.

2. The treble part of a song or musical composition.

C A N

CANTON.† n. s. [old Fr. cantoin, quanton, and then canton; from the Lat. quantum. Cotgrave defines canton, “a corner or cross-way in a street; also a hundred or canton, a precinct.”]

1. A small parcel or division of land.

Only that little canton of land, called the English pale, containing four small shires, did maintain a bordering war with the Irish, and retain the form of English government. Davies.

2. A small community, or clan.

The same is the case of rovers by land; such, as yet, are some cantons in Arabia, and some petty kings of the mountains, adjacent to straits and ways. Bacon, Italy War.

3. In heraldry, the canton is that which occupies only a corner of the shield.

To CANTON.† v. a. [Fr. cantonner.] To divide into little parts. See CANTONMENT.

Families shall quit all subjection to him, and canton his empire into less governments for themselves. Locke.

It would certainly be for the good of mankind, to have all the mighty empires and monarchies of the world *canton*ed out into petty states and principalities. Addison on Italy.

The late king of Spain, reckoning it an indignity to have his territories *canton*ed out into parcels by other princes, during his own life, and without his consent, rather chose to bequeath the monarchy entire to a younger son of France. Swift.

They canton out to themselves a little province in the intellectual world, where they fancy the light shines, and all the rest is in darkness. Watts on the Mind.

To CANTONIZE.† v. a. [from canton.] To parcel out into small divisions.

Thus was all Ireland cantonized among ten person of the English nation. Davies on Ireland.

The whole forest was in a manner cantonized among; a very few in number, of whom some had regal rights. Howel.

CANTONMENT.* n. s. [Fr.] That distinct situation, which soldiers occupy, when quartered in different parts of a town; and to canton a town, is to divide it for such purpose.

There were no cities, no towns, no places of cantonment for soldiers. Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist.

CANTRED. n. s. The same in Wales as an hundred in England. For cantref, in the British language, signifieth an hundred. Coxw.

The king regrants to him all that province, reserving only the city of Dublin, and the cantreds next adjoining, with the maritime towns. Davies on Ireland.

CANTRY.* adj. In the north of England, is cheerful, talkative. Grose. Perhaps from the Gael. canteach. See CANT.

CANVASS.† n. s. [canvas, Fr. cannabis, Lat. hemp.]

1. A kind of linen cloth woven for several uses, as sails, painting cloths, tents.

The master commanded forthwith to set on all the canvass they could, and fly homeward. Sidney.

And eke the pens that did his pinions bind,
Were like main yards with flying canvass lin'd. Spenser, F. Q.

Their canvass castles up they quickly rear,
And build a city in an hour's space. Fairfax.

Where'er thy navy spreads her canvass wings,
Homage to thee, and peace to all she brings. Waller.

With such kind passion hastes the prince to fight,
And spreads his flying canvass to the sound;

Him whom no danger, were he there, could fright;
Now absent, every little noise can wound. Dryden.

Thou, Kneller, long with noble pride,
The foremost of thy art, hast vy'd
With nature in a generous strife,
And touch'd the canvass into life. Addison.

2. The act of sifting voices, or trying them previously to the decisive act of voting: [from canvass, as it signifies a sieve.]

C A P

There be that can pack cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon, Ess. xxii.

But why shouldst thou take thy neglect, thy canvas so to heart? It may be thou art not fit.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 357.

I deem it worthy the canvass and discussion of sober and considerate men. More, Pre-exist. of the Soul, Pref.

To CANVASS.† v. a. [Skinner derives it from canabasser, Fr. to beat hemp; which being a very laborious employment, it is used to signify, to search diligently into. This is a verb in our language of much higher authority than Woodward or L'Estrange, whom Dr. Johnson cites. Barret, in his old dictionary, "has canvassed, much talked of;" and the word in Shakspeare implies to examine narrowly. So Cotgrave renders canabasser, "to canvass, or curiously to examine, or sift out, the depth of the matter."]

1. To sift; to examine: from canvass, a straining cloth.

Thou, that contriv'st to murder our dead lord;

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin:

I'll canvass thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

I have made careful search on all hands, and canvassed the matter with all possible diligence. Woodward.

2. To debate; to discuss.

The crows discovered a raw hide in the bottom of a river, and laid their heads together how to come at it: they canvassed the matter one way and t'other, and concluded, that the way to get it, was to drink their way to it. L'Estrange.

To CANVASS.† v. n. To solicit; to try votes previously to the decisive act.

Elizabeth being to resolve upon an officer, and being by some that canvassed for others, put in some doubt of that person she meant to advance, said, she was like one with a lantern seeking a man. Bacon.

This crime of canvassing, or soliciting for church preferment, is, by the canon law, called simony Ayliffe's Parergon.

CANVASS-CLIMBER.* n. s. [from canvass and climb.]

He who climbs the mast to furl or unfurl the sail or canvass.

A sea

That almost burst the deck, and from the ladder-tackle

Wash'd off a canvass-climber. Shakspeare, Pericles.

CANVASSER.* n. s. [from canvass.] He who solicits favour or a vote.

As real publick counsellors, not as the canvassers at a perpetual election. Burke on the Duration of Parliaments.

CANVY. adj. [from canv.]

1. Full of canes.

2. Consisting of canes.

But in his way lights on the barren plains
Of Sericana, where Chineses drive,

CANZONET. n. s. [canzonetta, Ital.] A little song.

Vecchi was most pleasing of all others, for his conceit and variety, as well his madrigals as canzonets. Peacham.

CAP.† n. s. [cap, Welsh; cappe, Sax. cappe, Germ. cappe, Fr. cappa, Ital. capa, Span. kappe, Dan. and Dutch; caput, the head, Latin.]

1. The garment that covers the head.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—

Why, this was moulded on a porringer,

A velvet dish. Shakspeare, Taming the Shrew.

I have ever held my cap off to thy fortune.—

—Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. Shakspeare.

First, lolling, sloth in woollen cap,

Taking her after-dinner nap.

Swift.

The cap, the whip, the masculine attise,

For which they roughen to the sense. Thomson, Autumn.

2. The ensign of the cardinalate.

Henry the Fifth did sometimes prophesy,
If once he came to be a cardinal,
He'd make his cap coequal with the crown.

Shakespeare, Henry VI.

3. The topmost; the highest.

Thou art the cap of all the fools alive. Shakespeare, Timon.

4. A reverence made by uncovering the head.

They more and less, came in with cap and knee,
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
Should the want of a cap or a cringe so mortally discompose him, as we find afterwards it did. L'Estrange.

5. A vessel made like a cap.

It is observed, that a barrel or cap, whose cavity will contain eight cubical feet of air, will not serve a diver above a quarter of an hour. Wilkins.

6. Cap of a great gun. A piece of lead laid over the touch-hole, to preserve the prime.7. Cap of maintenance. One of the regalia carried before the king at the coronation.8. To set a man's cap. This was a phrase of elder times, meaning to make a fool of a man.

This maniple settle their all cappe.

Chaucer, Paol. Cant. Tales.

9. To set her cap at him. This is a phrase of modern times, signifying that a woman considers herself worthy the notice of a particular person.

To CAP. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover on the top.

The bones next the joint are capped with a smooth cartilaginous substance, serving both to strength and motion. Dr Ham.

2. To deprive of the cap.

If one, by another occasion, take any thing from another, as boys sometimes use to cap one another, the same is straight felony. Spenser on Ireland.

3. To cap verses. To name alternately verses beginning with a particular letter; to name in opposition or emulation; to name alternately in contest. To cap, is, in the Cumberland dialect, to surpass, to overcome in argument. Capping verses, is used by Dryden, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it.

Now I have him under girdle, I'll cap verses with him to the end of the chapter. Dryden, Amphitryon.

Where Henderson, and th' other masses,
Were sent to cap texts, and put cases. Hudibras.

Sure it is a pitiful pretence to ingenuity, that can be thus kept up, there being little need of any other faculty but memory, to be able to cap texts. Government of the Tongue.

There is an author of ours, whom I would desire him to read, before he ventures at capping characters. Afterbury.

*To CAP.* v. n.* To uncover the head, by way of salutation or respect; a word still retained in our universities.

Three great ones of the city,
In personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
Oft capp'd to him. Shakespeare, Othello.

Still capping, cringing, applauding;—waiting at men's doors with all assiduity. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 112.

CAP à pé. ? [cap à pié, Fr.] From head to foot; all CAP à pié } over.

A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, cap à pé,
Appears before them, and, with solemn march,
Goes slow and stately by them. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

There for the two contending knights he sent,
Arm'd cap à pié, with reverence low they bent. Dryden, Fables.

A woodlouse,
That folds up itself in itself for a house,
As round as a ball, without head, without tail, Inclos'd cap à pé in a strong coat of mail. Swift.

CAP-PAPER. A sort of coarse brownish paper. So called from being formed into a kind of cap to hold commodities.

Having, for trial sake, filter'd it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder. Boyle.

CAPABILITY. † n. s. [from capable.] Capacity; the quality of being capable.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason
To rust in us unus'd. Shakespeare.

There being a possibility of creating things after sundry and manifold manners, nothing was yet determined, but this vast capability of things was unsettled, fluid, and of itself undeterminable as water: But the Spirit of God, who was the vehicle of the Eternal Wisdom,—having hovered awhile over all the capacities of this fluid possibility,—forthwith settled upon what was most perfect and exact. More, Conject. Cabalist. p. 23.

CAPABLE. adj. [capable, Fr.]

1. Sufficient to contain; sufficiently capacious.

When we consider so much of that space, as is equal to, or capable to receive a body of any assigned dimensions. Locke.

2. Endued with powers equal to any particular thing.

To say, that the more capable, or the better deserver, hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle. Bacon.

When you hear any person give his judgement, consider with yourself whether he be a capable judge. Watts.

3. Intelligent; able to understand.

Look you, how pale he glares;
His form and cause conjoined, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

4. Intellectually capacious; able to receive.

I am much bound to God, that he hath endued you with one capable of the best instructions. Dugby.

5. Susceptible.

The soul, immortal substance, to remain,
Conscious of joy, and capable of pain. Prior.

6. Qualified for; without any natural impediment.

There is no man that believes the goodness of God, but must be inclined to think, that he hath made some things for as long a duration as they are capable of. Tillotson.

7. Qualified for; without legal impediment.

Of my land,
Loyal and natural boy! I'll work the means
To make thee capable. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

8. It has the particle of before a noun.

What secret springs their eager passions move,
How capable of death for injur'd love! Dryden, Virgil.

9. Hollow. This sense is not now in use.

Lean but upon a rush,
The creatrice, and capable impressure,
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

CAPABLENESS. † n. s. [from capable.] The quality or state of being capable; knowledge; understanding; power of mind.

The efficacy of these does not depend upon the mere opus operatum; but upon the capableness of the subject, and the qualifications of the person they are applied to. Kiltingbeck's Sermon. p. 322.

*To CAPACITY.* v. a.* [Lat. capax and facio.] To qualify; to make one capable.

Wisdom capacities us to enjoy pleasantly and innocently all those good things the divine goodness hath provided for and consigned to us. Barrow, Sermon. i. 5.

CAPACIOUS. adj. [capax, Lat.]

1. Wide; large; able to hold much.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of those drains,
I see the rocky Siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Or stiff compacted clay, capacious found. Thomson, Autumn.

2. Extensive; equal to much knowledge, or great design.

There are some persons of a good genius, and a capacious mind, who write and speak very obscurely. Watts.

CAPA'CIOUSLY.* adv. [from capacious.] In a wide or capacious manner.

CAPA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from capacious.] The power of holding or receiving; largeness.

A concave measure, of known and denominate capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. In like manner, to a given weight, the weight of all other bodies may be reduced, and so found out. Holder on Time.

CAPACITA'TION.* n. s. [from the verb.] Capability.

To CAPA'CITATE. v. a. [from capacity.] To make capable; to enable; to qualify.

By this instruction we may be capacitated to observe those errors. Dryden.

These sort of men were sycophants only, and were endued with arts of life, to capacitate them for the conversation of the rich and great. Teller, No. 56.

CAPA'CITY. n. s. [capacit  , Fr.]

1. The power of holding or containing any thing.

Had our palace the capacity
To camp this host, we would all sup together. Shakspeare.

Notwithstanding thy capacity

Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,

Of what validity and pitch so'er,

But falls into abatement and low price.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

For they that most and greatest things embrace,

Enlarge thereby their mind's capacity,

As streams enlarg'd, enlarge the channel's space. Davies.

Space, considered in length, breadth, and thickness, I think, may be called capacity. Locke.

2. Room; space.

There remained, in the capacity of the exhausted cylinder, store of little rooms, or spaces, empty or devoid of air. Boyle.

3. The force or power of the mind.

No intellectual creature is able, by capacity, to do that which nature doth without capacity and knowledge. Hooker, i.    3.

In spiritual natures, so much as there is of desire, so much there is also of capacity to receive. I do not say, there is always a capacity to receive the very thing they desire; for that may be impossible. South.

An heroic poem requires the accomplishment of some extraordinary undertaking; which requires the duty of a soldier, and the capacity and prudence of a general. Dryden, Juv. Dedication.

4. Power; ability.

Since the world's wide frame does not include

A cause with such capacities endu'd,

Some other cause o'er nature must preside. Blackmore.

5. State; condition; character.

A miraculous revolution, reducing many from the head of a triumphant rebellion, to their old condition of masons, smiths, and carpenters; that, in this capacity, they might repair what, as colonels and captains, they had ruined and defaced. South.

You desire my thoughts as a friend, and not as a member of parliament; they are the same in both capacities. Swift.

CAPA'RISON. n. s. [caparazon, a great cloke, Span.] A horsecloth, or a sort of cover for a horse, which is spread over his furniture. Parrier's Dict.

Tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields,
Impresses quaint, caparisons, and steeds,
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights,
At joust, and tournament. Milton, P. L.

Some wore a breastplate, and a light jupon;

Their horses cloth'd with rich caparison. Dryden, Fab.

To CAPA'RISON. v. a. [old Fr. caparasonner.]

1. To dress in caparisons.

The steeds, caparison'd with purple, stand;

With golden trappings, glorious to behold,

And clasp betwix their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To dress pompously: in a ludicrous sense.

Don't you think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition?

Shakspeare, As you like it.

CA'PCASE.* n. s. [from cap and case.] A covered case; a chest.

He asked his wife whether she shut the trunks and chests fast, whether the capcase be sealed, and whether the hall-door be bolted. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 116.

One cart will serve for all your furniture,

With room enough behind to ease the footman,

A capcase for your linnen, and your plate.

Beaumont and Fl. Noble Gentleman.

CAPE.    n. s. [cape, Fr. capo, Ital. from the Lat. caput.]

1. Headland; promontory.

What from the cape can you discern at sea? —

— Nothing at all; it is a high wrought flood. Shakspeare, Othello.

The parting sun,

Beyond the earth's green cape, and verdant isles,

Hesperian sets; my signal to depart. Milton, P. L.

The Romans made war upon the Tarentines, and obliged them by treaty not to sail beyond the cape. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The neck-piece of a cloke. [Fr. cappe, Dan. kappe, a cloke or riding-coat.]

He was clothed in a robe of fine black cloth, with wide sleeves and cape. Bacon.

CAPER. n. s. [from caper, Latin, a goat.] A leap; a jump; a skip.

We that are true lovers, run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Elimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the strait rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

CA'PER.    n. s. [Fr. c  pre; Gr.           , the tree and the fruit.] An acid pickle. See CAPER-BUSH.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as mangoes, olives, and capers. Floyer on the Humours.

CA'PER-BUSH. n. s.

The fruit is fleshy, and shaped like a pear. This plant grows in the south of France, in Spain and in Italy, upon old walls and buildings; and the buds of the flowers, before they are open, are pickled for eating. Miller.

CA'PER-CUTTING.* n. s. [from caper and cut.] To cut a caper is a common phrase. See the citation from Swift under CAPER. The Italians have a similar expression, tagliar le capriole.] The act of dancing in a frolicsome manner.

I am not gentle, sir, nor gentle will be,

Till I have justice, my poor child restor'd,

Your caper-cutting son has run away with.

Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

To CA'PER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance frolicsomenely.

The truth is, I am only old in judgement; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. To skip for merriment.

Our master

Capering to eye her.

His nimble hand's instinct then taught each string

A capering cheerfulness, and made them sing.

To their own dance. Crashaw's Poems, p. 82.

The family tript it about, and capere'd like hailstones bounding from a marble floor. Arbutnot, John Bull.

3. To dance: spoken in contempt.

The stage would need no force, nor song, nor dance,
Nor capering monsieur from active France. Rowe.

CAPERER n. s. [from capere.] A dancer: in contempt.

The tumbler's gambols some delight afford;
No less the nimble caperer on the cord;
But these are still insipid stuff to thee,
Coop'd in a ship, and toss'd upon the sea. Dryden, Juv.

CAPIAS n. s. [Lat.] A writ of two sorts, one before judgement, called capias ad respondendum, in an action personal, if the sheriff, upon the first writ of distress, return that he has no effects in his jurisdiction. The other is a writ of execution after judgement. Cowel.

CAPILLA'CEOUS adj. The same with capillary.

CAPILLAI'RE * n. s. [Fr.] A sirop extracted from maidenhair.

CAPILLAMENT * n. s. [capillamentum, Lat.] Those small threads or hairs which grow up in the middle of a flower, and adorned with little herbs at the top, are called capillaments. Quincy.

The solid capillaments of the nerves.

CAPILLARY * adj. [old Fr. capillaire, from capillus, hair, Lat.]

1. Resembling hairs; small; minute: applied to plants.

Capillary, or capillaceous plants, are such as have no main stalk or stem, but grow to the ground, as hairs on the head; and which bear their seeds in little tufts or protuberances on the backside of their leaves. Quincy.

2. Applied to vessels of the body. Small: as the ramifications of the arteries. Quincy.

Ten capillary arteries in some parts of the body, as in the brain, are not equal to one hair; and the smallest lymphatic vessels are an hundred times smaller than the smallest capillary artery. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CAPILLARY * n. s. [from the adj.] A small plant: or a small vessel.

The hyssop—may tolerably be taken for some kind of minor capillary, which best makes out the antithesis with the cedar. Sir T. Brown on the Plants in Scripture, p. 8.

Our common hyssop is not the least of vegetables, nor observed to grow upon walls; but, rather, some kind of capillaries which are very small plants, and only grow upon walls and stony places. Ibid. Vulg. Err.

What remains, is received into the capillaries of the veins in the several parts. Smith's Old Age, p. 233.

Tar-water, by its active qualities, doth stir the humours, entering the minutest capillaries, and dislodging obstructions. Bp. Berkeley on Tar-Water.

CAPILLATION n. s. [from capillus, Lat.] A vessel like a hair; a small ramification of vessels. Not used.

Nor is the humour contained in smaller veins, or obscurer capillations, but in a vesicle. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CAPITAL adj. [capitalis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the head.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise Expect with mortal pain. Milton, P. L.

2. Criminal in the highest degree, so as to touch life.

Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That which affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men. Spenser on Ireland.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of endless perdition. Hooker.

They do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of a capital article in religion. Atterbury.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been

Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread

All generations; and had hither come,

From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate

6. Applied to letters; large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

Our most considerable actions are always present, like capital letters to an aged and dim eye. Bp. Taylor's Holy Living.

The first is written in capital letters, without chapters or verses. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

7. Capital stock. The principal or original stock of a trader, or company.

CAPITAL * n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The upper part of a pillar.

You see the volute of the Ionick, the foliage of the Corinthian, and the uovali of the Dorick, mixed, without any regularity, on the same capital. Addison on Italy.

2. The chief city of a nation or kingdom.

He could not leave the improved society of the capital, or consent to exchange the exhilarating joys, and splendid decorations, of publick life for the obscurity, insipidity, and uniformity of remote situations. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

3. The stock, with which a tradesman enters upon business, or by which he carries it on; as, he is known to have a good capital. See CAPITALIST.

4. A large letter; as, the word is printed in capitals.

CAPITALIST * n. s. [from capital.] He who possesses a capital fund.

I take the expenditure of the capitalist, not the value of the capital, as my standard. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

CAPITALLY * adv. [from capital.] In a capital manner.

If any man swore by the king's head, and was found to have sworn falsely, he was punished capitally.

Bp. Patrick on Genesis, xlii. 15.

CAPITALNESS * n. s. [from capital.] A capital offence. Sherwood.

CAPITATION * n. s. [from caput, the head, Lat.]

1. Numeration by heads.

He suffered for not performing the commandment of God, concerning capitation; that, when the people were numbered, for every head they should pay unto God a shekel. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Taxation on each individual.

CAPITE n. s. [caput, capitis, Lat.]

A tenure which holdeth immediately of the king, as of his crown, be it by knight's service or socage, and not as of any honour, castle, or manour: and therefore it is otherwise called a tenure, that holdeth merely of the king; because, as the crown is a corporation and seignior in gross, as the common lawyers term it, so the king that possesseth the crown, is, in account of law, perpetually king, and never in his minority, nor ever dieth. Cowel.

CAPITOL * n. s. [Lat. capitolium.] The temple of Jupiter Capitolinus at Rome.

When you have drawn your number,

Repair to the capitol.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

C A P

The most celebrated [temples] on all accounts were the capitol and the pantheon. Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. ch. iii.

CAPITULAR. n. s. [from capitulum, Lat. an ecclesiastical chapter.]

1. The body of the statutes of a chapter.

CAPRICE.† } n. s. [caprice, Fr. capricho, Span. CAPRICHIO. } probably from the Lat. caper, a goat.]

Freak; fancy; whim; sudden change of humour.

Will the capricho hold in thee? art sure?

Shakspeare, All's W. 3, &c.

It is a pleasant spectacle to behold the shifts, windings, and unexpected caprichios of distressed nature, when pursued by a close and well managed experiment. Glaxville, Scopsis, Præj.

We are not to be guided in the sense of that book, either by the misreports of some ancients, or the caprichios of one or two neoterics. Greec.

Quoth Hudibras, 'tis a caprich

Beyond the infliction of a witch.

Heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole;

That counterworks each folly and caprice,

That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice.

Pope.

If there be a single spot more barren, or more distant from the church, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build.

Swift.

Their passions move in lower spheres,

Where'er caprice or folly steers.

Swift.

All the various machines and utensils would now and then play old pranks and caprices, quite contrary to their proper structures, and design of the artificers. Bentley.

Bruce's Travels, iii. 74.

CAPRIOLE. † n. s. [French.]

1. In horsemanship. Caprioles are leaps, such as a horse makes in one and the same place, without advancing forwards, and in such a manner, that when he is in the air, and height of his leap, he jerks or strikes out with his hinder legs, even and near. A capriole is the most difficult of all the high manage, or raised airs. It is different from the croupade in this, that the horse does not show his shoes; and from a balotade, in that he does not jerk out in a balotade.

Farrier's Dict.

The capriole is called by horsemen the goat's leap.

Bullough.

2. A dance; sometimes written cabriole, inaccurately; [originally from the Lat. caper, a goat.]

With lofty turns and capriols in the air.

Sir J. Davies, Poem of Dancing, st. 68.

Ision is loosed from his wheel, and turned dancer; does nothing but cut capreols, fetch friskals, and leade lavaltoes with the Lanie.

B. Jonson, Masques.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CAPSULATE. } adj. [capsula, Lat.] Inclosed, or in

CAPSULATED. } a box.

Seeds, such as are corrupted and stale, will swim; and this agreeth unto the seeds of plants locked up and capsulated in their husks.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The heart lies immured, or capsulated, in a cartilage, which includes the heart, as the skull doth the brain.

Derham.

CAPTAIN. † n. s. [captain, Fr. in Lat. capitaneus, being one of those who, by tenure in capite, were obliged to bring soldiers to the war, Dr. Johnson says; but the derivation is probably from caput, the head or chief, and thane, an ancient title of honour.]

1. A chief commander.

As captain of the host of the Lord am I now come.

Josh. v. 14.

Dismay'd not this

Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. The chief of any number or body of men.

Nashon — shall be captain of the children of Judah.

The king sent unto him a captain of fifty.

2 Kings, i. 9.

The captain of the guard gave him victuals.

Jeremiah, xl. 9.

3. A man skilled in war; as, Marlborough was a great captain.

4. The commander of a company in a regiment.

A captain! these villains will make the name of captain as odious as the word occupy; therefore captains had need look to it.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

The grim captain, in a surly tone,

Cries out, Pack up, ye rascals, and be gone!

Dryden.

5. The chief commander of a ship.

The Rhodian captain, relying on his knowledge, and the lightness of his vessel, passed, in open day, through all the guards.

Arbutnot on Cons.

Shakspeare, Sonnet.

CAPTAINRY. † n. s. [old Fr. captainerie.] The power over a certain district; the chieftainship.

There should be no rewards taken for captainries of counties, no shares of bishopricks for nominating of bishops.

Spenser on Ireland

CAPTAINSHIP. n. s. [from captain.]

1. The condition or post of a chief commander.

Therefore so please thee to return with us,

And of our Athens, thine and ours, to take

The captainship.

Shakspeare, Timon.

2. The rank, quality, or post of a captain.

The lieutenant in the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship in the same regiment.

Wotton.

3. The chieftainship of a clan, or the government of a certain district.

To diminish the Irish lords, he did abolish their pretended and usurped captainships.

Davies on Ireland.

4. Skill in the military trade.

CAPTATION. † n. s. [old Fr. captation, ruse, artifice. Lacombe and Roquefort.] The practice of catching favour or applause; courtship; flattery.

I am content my heart should be discovered without any of those dresses, or popular captations, which some men use in their speeches.

King Charles.

C A P

CA'PTION. † n. s. [from capio, Lat. to take.] The act of taking any person by a judicial process, Dr. Johnson says; it is also generally the act of taking any person unawares by some trick or cavi; [Lat. captio.] imposition.

I beseech you, sir, to consider seriously 'with what strange captious you have gone about to delude your king and country; and if you be convinced they are so, give glory to God, and let the world know it, by your deserting that religion which stands upon such deceitful foundations.

Chillingworth, Relig. of Protestants.

CAPTIOUS. adj. [captivus, Fr. captiosus, Lat.]

1. Given to cavils; eager to object.

If he shew a forwardness to be reasoning about things, take care, that nobody check this inclination, or mislead it by captious or fallacious ways of talking with him. Locke.

2. Insidious; ensnaring.

She taught him likewise how to avoid sundry captious and tempting questions which were like to be asked of him. Bacon.

CAPTIOUSLY. adv. [from captious.] In a captious manner; with an inclination to object.

Use your words as captiously as you can, in your arguing on one side, and apply distinctions on the other. Locke.

CAPTIOUSNESS. † n. s. [from captious.] Inclination to find fault; inclination to object; pcevisness.

The reader may see how nature passeth arte, seeing here much more captiousness in a subtil sophistical wit, than in him that hath but learned the sophistical art.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 78.

Whither would restless subtilty proceed, if it were not bounded: there is of captiousness no end.

Wotton, Panegy. on K. Ch. I.

Captiousness is a fault opposite to civility; it often produces misbecoming and provoking expressions and carriage. Locke.

TO CA'PTIVATE. v. a. [captiver, Fr. captivo, Lat.]

1. To take prisoner; to bring into bondage.

How ill beseeching it is in thy sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates. Shakspeare.

He deserves to be a slave, that is content to have the rational sovereignty of his soul, and the liberty of his will, so captivated.

King Charles.

They stand firm, keep out the enemy, truth, that would captivate or disturb them. Locke.

2. To charm; to overpower with excellence; to subdue.

Wisdom enters the last, and so captivates him with her appearance, that he gives himself up to her. Addison, Guardian.

3. To enslave: with to.

They lay a trap for themselves, and captivate their understandings to mistake, falsehood and error. Locke.

CA'PTIVATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Made prisoner.

This word Dr. Johnson had placed under the verb.

I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny, these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captivate.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

CAPTIVA'TION. † n. s. [from captivate.] The act of taking one captive.

No small part of our servitude lyes in the captivation of our understanding; such as, that we cannot see ourselves captive.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 27.

CAPTIVE. n. s. [captif, Fr. captivus, Lat.]

1. One taken in war; a prisoner to an enemy.

You have the captives
Who were the opposites of this day's strife? Shakspeare.

This is no other than that forced respect a captive pays to his conqueror, a slave to his lord. Rogers.

Free from shame

Thy captives: I ensure the penal claim. Popc, Odyssey.

2. It is used with to before the captor.

C A P

If thou say Antony lives, 'tis well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him. Shakspeare.

My mother, who the royal sceptre sway'd,
Was captive to the cruel victor made. Dryden.

3. One charmed, or ensnared by beauty or excellence.

My woman's heart

Grossly grew captive to his honey words. Shakspeare.

CA'PTIVE. adj. [captivus, Lat.] Made prisoner in war; kept in bondage or confinement, by whatever means.

But fate forbids; the Stygian floods oppose,
And with nine circling streams the captive soul inclose. Dryden.

TO CA'PTIVE. † v. a. [from the noun.] It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first. The old accent seems to have been discontinued in Milton's time; for Dryden, it appears, places the accent on the first syllable. To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all defeated save a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she slew. Spenser, F. Q.

Thou leavest them to hostile sword
Of heathen and profane, their carcasses

To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd. Milton, S. A.

What further fear of danger can there be?

Beauty, which captives all things, sets me free. Dryden.

Still lay the god: the nymph surpris'd,

Yet, mistress of herself, devis'd,

How she the vagrant might intral,

And captive him, who captives all. Prior.

CAPTIVITY. n. s. [captivité, Fr. captivitas, low Lat.]

1. Subjection by the fate of war; bondage; servitude to enemies.

This is the serjeant,
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought
'Gainst my captivity. Shakspeare.

There in captivity he lets them dwell

The space of seventy years; then brings them back;

The name of Ormond will be more celebrated in his captivity, than in his greatest triumphs. Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

2. Slavery; servitude.

For men to be tied, and led by authority, as it were with a kind of captivity of judgement; and though there be reason to the contrary, not to listen unto it. Hooker.

The apostle tells us, there is a way of bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. Decay of Piet.

When love's well tim'd, 'tis not a fault to love;

The strong, the brave, the virtuous, and the wise,

Sink in the soft captivity together. Addison, Cato.

CA'PTOR. n. s. [from capio, to take, Lat.] He that takes a prisoner or a prize.

CA'PTURE. n. s. [capture, Fr. captura, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of taking any thing.

2. The thing taken; a prize.

TO CA'PTURE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To take as a prize; as, four sail of the line were captured, and two sunk.

CAPUCCIO.* n. s. [Ital.] A capuchin, or hood.

That at his back a broad capuccio had. Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 10.

CAPU'CHED. adj. [from capuce, Fr. a hood.] Covered over as with a hood.

They are differently cuculleted and capuched upon the head and back, and, in the cicada, the eyes are more prominent.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CAPUCHIN. † n. s. [Fr. capuce, capuchon; Ital. capuccio.]

C A R

1. A female garment, consisting of a cloke and hood, made in imitation of the dress of capuchin monks; whence its name is derived.

2. A pigeon, whose head is covered with feathers, as it were with a capouch.

CAPUCHIN. * n. s. [So called from the capuchon, or cowl, with which they covered their heads.] One of the order of St. Francis, in its strictest observance.

Behold yet a new swarm of locusts, the order of the capuchins, and of those shameless companions which attribute unto themselves the name of the companie of Jesus; which are within these forty years crawled out of the bottomless pit.

Harmier, Trans. of Beza's Sermon. (1587,) p. 242.

CAPUT MORTUUM. * [Lat.] In chemistry, the faeces remaining of any body, after all the volatile and humid parts, as the phlegm, spirit, salt, &c. have been extracted from it by force of fire. Figuratively used.

Poetry is of so subtle a spirit, that, in pouring out of one language into another, it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum.

Denham, Trans. of Æneid, Pref.

CAR, CHAR, in the names of places, seems to have relation to the British car, a city. Gibson's Camden.

CAR. † n. s. [Celt. and old Fr. carr, a chariot; Welsh and Bret. car; Dutch, karre; Sax. cræt; Lat. currus.]

1. A small carriage of burden, usually drawn by one horse or two.

When a lady comes in a coach to our shops, it must be followed by a car loaded with Wood's money. Swift.

2. In poetical language, any vehicle of dignity or splendour; a chariot of war, or triumph.

Henry is dead, and never shall revive:

Upon a wooden coffin we attend,

And death's dishonourable victory,

We with our stately presence glorify,

Like captives bound to a triumphant car.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou aspire to guide the heavenly car,

And with thy daring folly burn the world?

Shakespeare.

And the gilded car of day,

His glowing axle doth allay,

In the steep Atlantick stream.

Milton, Comus.

See, where he comes, the darling of the war!

See millions crowding round the gilded car!

Prior.

3. The Charles's wain, or Bear; a constellation.

Every fixt and every wand'ring star,

The Pleiads, Hyads, and the Northern Car.

Dryden.

CARABINE. † } n. s. [carabine, Fr.]

CARBINE. }

1. A small sort of fire arm, shorter than a fusil, and carrying a ball of twenty-four in the pound, hung by the light horse at a belt over the left shoulder. It is a kind of medium between the pistol and the musket, having its barrel two foot and a half long.

2. He who is armed with a carabine or carbine.

When he was taken, all the rest they fled,

And our carbines pursued them to the death.

CARABINE. † n. s. [Germ. carabinier.] A sort of light horse carrying longer carabines than the rest, and used sometimes on foot. Chambers.

CARRACK. † n. s. [caraca, Spanish; Dr. Johnson says. The word is often written carrack, and carrick. So in old Fr. carraguc, and low Lat. carraca. But carrike, or carrick, which is Chaucer's word, and which is defined in our old dictionaries a great ship of burthen, directs us to the Ital. carico, or carco, which is a freight or lading, a burthen.] A large ship of burden; the same with those which are now called galleons.

C A R

In which river, the greatest carack of Portugal, may ride afloat ten miles within the forts. Raleigh.

The bigger whale, like some huge carack lay,

Which wanteth sea-room with her foes to play.

CARRACOLE. n. s. [caracole, Fr. from caracol, Span. a snail.] An oblique tread, traced out in semi-rounds, changing from one hand to another, without observing a regular ground.

When the horse advance to charge in battle, they ride sometimes in caracoles, to amuse the enemy, and put them in doubt, whether they are about to charge them in the front or in the flank.

Barrier's Dict.

To CARRACOLE. v. n. [from the nom.] To move in caracoles.

CARRAT. † } n. s. [carat, Fr. “The fruit of the tree

CARRACT. } called kuara is a red bean, which seems to have been in the earliest ages used for a weight of gold. This bean is called carat.” Bruce's Travels, v. 66. Morin derives the word from the Arab. kirat, a weight; which he thinks is from the Gr. κεράτιον, a kind of small weights.]

1. A weight of four grains, with which diamonds are weighed.

In digging, if a diamond exceed twenty carats, (a carat is four grains,) such by the law of that place are reserved for the king. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 88.

2. A manner of expressing the fineness of gold.

A mark, being an ounce troy, is divided into twenty-four equal parts, called carats, and each carat into four grains: by this weight is distinguished the different fineness of their gold; for, if to the finest of gold be put two carats of alloy, both making, when cold, but an ounce, or twenty-four carats, then this gold is said to be twenty-two carats fine. Cocker.

Thou best of gold, art worst of gold;

Other, less fine in carat, is more precious.

Shakespeare.

3. A manner of expressing the value of any thing.

They are men that set the carat and value upon things, as they love them; but science is not every man's mistress.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

It is the most prevailing eloquence, and of the most exalted equat. Ibid.

Here's a gentleman

(My pair of lofty clerks) of that high carat,

As hardly hath the age produc'd his like.

CARAVAN. n. s. [caravanne, Fr. from the Arabick.]

A troop or body of merchants or pilgrims, as they travel in the East.

They set forth

Their airy caravan, high over seas

Flying, and over lands, with mutual wing

Easing their flight.

Milton, P. I.

When Joseph, and the Blessed Virgin Mother, had lost their most holy Son, they sought him in the retinues of their kindred, and the caravans of the Galilean pilgrims.

Bp. Taylor.

CARAVANSARY. † n. s. [from caravan. The caravans-lodge, as Sir Thomas Herbert calls it; and he distinguishes the word, in writing it caravans-raw. Trav. p. 206. Some derive it from the Arab. cairawan, or Pers. cároán, and serai, a large

Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal caresses. Milton, P. L.

There are some men who seem to have brutal minds wrapt up in human shapes; their very caresses are crude and importune. L'Estrange.

After his successor had publicly owned himself a Roman catholic, he began with his first caresses to the church party. Swift.

CARET. n. s. [caret, Lat. there is wanting.] A note which shews where something interlined should be read.

CARGASON.† n. s. [cargason, Spanish.] A cargo. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; and he gives only the first of the examples from Howell. By Howell it is often used, but I have not found it elsewhere.

My body is a cargason of ill humours. Howell's Letters.
The ship Swan was sailing home with a cargazon valued at 80,000*l.* Howell's Letters, i. vi. 42.

These travellers, in lieu of the ore of Ophir wherewith they should come home richly freighted, may be said to make their return in apes and owls, in a cargazon of complements and cringes, or some huge monstrous periwigs, which is the golden fleece they bring over with them.

Howell, Instruct. for For. Travel, p. 188.

CA'RG.† n. s. [charge, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But the old Fr. cargue must here be cited. Nor should the Ital. carico or carco, a burthen, be overlooked.] The lading of a ship; the merchandize or wares contained and conveyed in a ship.

In the hurry of the shipwreck, Simonides was the only man that appeared unconcerned, notwithstanding that his whole fortune was at stake in the cargo. L'Estrange.

A ship, whose cargo was no less than a whole world, that carried the fortune and hopes of all posterity. Burcel, Theory.

This gentleman was then a young adventurer in the republic of letters, and just fitted out for the university with a good cargo of Latin and Greek. Addison.

CARICATURE.* n. s. [Ital. caricatura, from caricare, to load or charge, that is, to exaggerate. The word was written caricatura, in our own language, till within the last half century.] The representation of a person or circumstance, so as to render the original ridiculous, without losing the resemblance.

Expose not thyself, by four-footed manners, unto monstrous draughts and caricatura representations.

Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 14.

From all these hands we have such draughts of mankind as are represented in those burlesque pictures which the Italians call caricaturas; where the art consists in preserving, amidst distorted proportions and aggravated features, some distinguishing likeness of the person, but in such a manner as to transform the most agreeable beauty into the most odious monster. Spectator, No. 534.

Let not this strained affectation of striving to be witty upon all occasions, be thought exaggerated, or a caricatura of Cowley.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

A portrait is sufficient; a caricature needless.

Bp. Horne, Lett. on Infidelity, Pref.

A new exhibition in English of the French caricature [Amyot's] of this most valuable biographer [Plutarch] by North, must have still more widely extended the deviation from the original. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. Diss. p. xx.

To CARICATU'RE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To ridicule; to represent unfairly.

He could draw an ill face, or caricature a good one, with a masterly hand. Lord Lyttelton.

The numerous imitators, who are certain to follow every extraordinary effort of genius, may be induced to caricature its errors. Pye.

CARICATU'RIST.* n. s. [from caricaturc.] He who caricatures other persons or things.

CA'RICOUS Tumour. [from carica, a fig, Lat.] A swelling in the form of a fig.

Fistulas of a long continuance, are, for the most part, accompanied with ulcerations of the gland, and caries in the bone. Wiseman's Surgery.

CA'RINATED Leaf.* In botany, a leaf, of which the back resembles the keel of a ship. [Lat. carina, the keel.] Chambers.

CARIO'SITY. n. s. [from carious.] Rottenness. This is too general, taking in all cariosity and ulcers of the bones. Wiseman's Surgery.

CA'RIOUS. adj. [cariosus, Lat.] Rotten. I discovered the blood to arise by a carious tooth. Wiseman.

CARK. n. s. [Saxon.] Care; anxiety; solicitude; concern; heedfulness. This word is now obsolete.

And Klaius taking for his youngling cark,
Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

He down did lay

His heavy head, devoid of careful cark. Spenser, F. Q.

To CARK.† v. n. [Carpician, Saxon.] To be careful; to be solicitous; to be anxious. It is now very little used, and always in an ill sense.

I do find what a blessing is chanced to my life, from such muddy abundance of carking agonies, to states which still be adherent. Sidney

Hark my husband, he's singing and hoiting;

And I'm fain to cark and care, and all little enough.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of the Burning Pestle.

What can be vainer, than to lavish out our lives in the search of trifles, and to lie carking for the unprofitable goods of this world? L'Estrange.

CA'RKING.* n. s. [from cark.] Care; anxiety.

Nothing can supersede our own carkings and contrivances for ourselves, but the assurance that God cares for us.

Decay of Piety.

CARLE.† n. s. [Iceland. karl, a rustick, or man of mean condition; Goth. karl, "karl oc konung, plebs et princeps," Ihre. Germ. karl; Welsh carl, a clown, or a miser; Sax. carl, a miser, a rustick, a male; whence, in our language, carl-cat, a he-cat; also ceopl, whence the synonyme churl.] A mean, rude, rough, brutal man. We now use churl.

The carle beheld, and saw his guest

Would safe depart, for all his subtle sleight. Spenser, F. Q.

Answer, thou carle, and judge this riddle right,
I'll frankly own thee for a cunning wight. Gay's Pastorals.

The editor was a covetous carle, and would have his pearls of the highest price. Bentley.

CARLE. n. s. A kind of hemp.

The fiddle to spin and the carl for her seed. Tusser.

(To) CARLE.* v. n. [from the noun.] To act like a carle.

They [old persons] carle many times as they sit, and talke to themselves; they are angry, waspish, displeased with every thing. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 59.

CA'RLINE THISTLE. [carlina, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

CA'RLINGS. n. s. [in a ship.] Timbers lying fore and aft, along from one beam to another; on these the ledges rest, on which the planks of the deck are made fast. Harris.

CA'RLISH.* adj. [Sax. ceoplic, vulgar.] Churlish; rude; uncivil. Hulcot, in his old dictionary, notices this adjective.

Shee witch'd mee, being a faire yonge maide,

In the greene forest to dwell:

She witch'd my brother to a carlish boore.

Marriage of Sir Gawaine, P. II.

CA'RLISHNESS.* n. s. [from carlish.] Churlishness. Hulcot.

C A R

CA'RLOT.* n. s. [from carle.] A countryman.
He hath bought the cottage, and the bounds,
That the old carlot once was master of. Shakspeare, As you like it.

CA'RMAN. n. s. [from car and man.] A man whose employment it is to drive cars.
If the strong cane support thy walking hand,
Chairmen no longer shall the wall command;
E'n sturdy carmen shall thy nod obey,
And rattling coaches stop to make thee way. Gay's Trivia.

CARME, or CA'RMELITE.* n. s. [from mount Carmel.]
A Carmelite or white friar.
Augustins, and Cordileres,
And Carmis, and eke sackid freres. Chaucer, R. R. 7462.
John Bale writ a large treatise of this order of Carmes or Carmelites. Weever, Fun. Monum.

CA'RMELIN.* } adj. [from Carmel.] Belonging to CA'RMELITE. } the order of Carmelites.
There were likewise Carmelin or Carmelinesse nuns here in England. Weever.
We saw the chapels of the Carmelite nuns. Gray's Letters.

CA'RMELITE. n. s. [carmelite, Fr.] A sort of pear.

CARMI'NATIVE.* n. s. [supposed to be so called, as having rim carminis, the power of a charm.]
Carminals are such things as dilute and relax at the same time, because wind occasions a spasm, or convulsion in some parts. Whatever promotes insensible perspiration, is carminals; for wind is perspirable matter retained in the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CARMI'NATIVE.* adj. [old Fr. carminatif.] See the example to the substantive.
Carminals and diuretick
Will damp all passion sympathetick. Swift.

CAR'WINE. n. s. A bright red or crimson colour, bordering on purple, used by painters in miniature.
It is the most valuable product of the cochineal mastick, and of an excessive price. Chumbers.

CARNAGE. n. s. [carnage, Fr. from caro, carnis, Lat.]

1. Slaughter; havock; massacre.
He brought the king's forces upon them rather as to carnage than to fight, insomuch as without any great loss or danger to themselves, the greatest part of the seditious were slain. Hayward.
2. Heaps of flesh.
Such a scent I draw
Of carnage, prey innumerable! and taste
The savour of death from all things there that live. Milton, P. L.
His ample maw, with human carnage fill'd,
A milky deluge next the giant swill'd. Pope.

CARNAL. adj. [carnal, Fr. carnalis, low Lat.]

1. Fleshly; not spiritual.
Thou dost justly require us, to submit our understandings to thine, and deny our carnal reason, in order to thy sacred mysteries and commands. King Charles.
From that pretence
Spiritual laws by carnal power shall force
On every conscience. Milton, P. L.
Not such in carnal pleasure; for which cause,
Among the beasts no mate for thee was found. Milton, P. L.
A glorious apparition! had not doubt,
And carnal fear, that day dimm'd Adam's eye. Milton, P. L.
He perceives plainly, that his appetite to spiritual things abates, in proportion as his sensual appetite is indulged and encouraged; and that carnal desires kill not only the desire, but even the power of tasting purer delights. Atterbury.
2. Lustful; lecherous; libidinous.
This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body. Shakspeare.

CA'RNAL-MINDED.* adj. [from carnal and mind.]
Thinking only of the flesh; worldly-minded.
Abusing the credulous and carnal-minded, thereby to be masters of their persons and wealth. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 10.

C A R

He [Jesus Christ] stript off those veils and colours, which the worldly and carnal-minded Scribes and Pharisees had laid over them [the Scriptures]. West on the Resurrection, p. 191.

CA'RNAL-MINDEDNESS,* n. s. [from carnal-minded.]
Grossness of mind.
They made their own virtue their god, which was the most cursed piece of carnal-mindedness and idolatry. Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 282.

CA'RNALIST.* n. s. [from carnal.] One given to carnality.
They are in a reprobate sense mere carnalists, fleshly-minded men. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 686.

CA'RNALITE.* n. s. [from carnal.] A worldly-minded man.
God is on our side, and therefore we feare not what the pope or any other carnalite can do against us. Anderson, Expos. upon Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 7. b.

CARNALITY.* n. s. [old Fr. charnalité.]

1. Fleshly lust; compliance with carnal desires.
An inciter of lust, and the waker of carnality. Feltham's Resolves, ii. 36.
Mortifications were more in use, and all luxurious indulgence to carnality generally condemned. Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 307.
If godly, why do they wallow and sleep in all the carnalities of the world, under pretence of christian liberty? South.
2. Grossness of mind.
So was Jeroboan's episcopacy partly from the pattern of the law, and partly from the pattern of his own carnality. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. i. 5.
He did not institute this way of worship, but because of the carnality of their hearts, and the proneness of that people to idolatry. Tillotson.

To CA'RNALIZE.* v. a. [from carnal.] To debase to carnality.
What concord can there be between a sensual and carnalized spirit, that understands no other pleasures but only those of the flesh, and those pure and virgin-spirits, that neither eat nor drink, but live for ever upon wisdom and holiness, and love and contemplation? Scott's Christian Life, i. § 2.

CA'RNALLY.* adv. [from carnal.]

1. According to the flesh; not spiritually.
Where they found men in diet, attire, furniture of house, or any other way observers of civility and decent order, such they reproved, as being carnally and earthly minded. Hooker.
In the sacrament we do not receive Christ carnally, but we receive him spiritually; and that of itself is a conjugation of blessings and spiritual graces. Bp. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.
So, the sense requires; it being spoken carnally, or like a man, to charge God with injustice. Tr. of Knatchbull's Annot. p. 157.
2. Libidiously; lustfully.
Thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her. Levit. xviii. 20.

CA'RNALNESS. n. s. The same with carnality. Diet.

CARNA'TION. n. s. [carnea, Lat.] The name of the natural flesh colour; from whence perhaps the flower is named; the name of a flower.
And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust
Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust;
O punish him! or to th' Elysian shades
Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades. Pope.

CARNA'TIONED.* adj. [from carnation.] Coloured like the carnation.
Court gentle zephyr, court and fan
Her softer breasts carnation'd wan. Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 12.

CARNE'LION. n. s. A precious stone.
The common carnelion has its name from its flesh colour, [carne]; which is, in some of these stones, paler, when it is called the female carnelion; in others deeper, called the male. Woodward.

CA'RNEOUS. adj. [carneus, Lat.] Fleshy.

In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies, divided into a multitude of carneous papillæ. Ray.

CARNEY.* A disease in horses, wherein their mouths become so furred that they cannot eat.

Chambers.

CARNIFICA'TION.* n. s. [from carnify.] The making of, or turning to, flesh. In medicine, the reverse of ossification.

Chambers.

To CARNIFY. v. n. [from caro, carnis, Lat.] To breed flesh; to turn nutriment into flesh.

At the same time I think, I deliberate, I purpose, I command: in inferior faculties, I walk, I see, I hear, I digest, I sanguify, I carnify.

CARNIVAL.† n. s. [Ital. carnavale, Fr. carnaval.] Our old writers seem to have considered it as "the bidding farewell to flesh," carni vale. See Bullokar's Expositor. But Ducange explains the word by carn-a-val, the flesh being put into the pot at this feast, in order to compensate for the abstinence ensuing: and therefore, in the low Latin, the word was carnelevamen.] The feast held in the popish countries before Lent; a time of luxury.

The whole year is but one mad carnival, and we are voluptuous, not so much upon desire or appetite, as by way of exploit and bravery.

Decay of Piety.

CARNIVOROUS. adj. [from carnis and voro.] Flesh-eating; that of which flesh is the proper food.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw. Ray on the Creation.

Man is by his frame, as well as his appetite, a carnivorous animal.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CARNOSITY.† n. s. [from carnosité, Fr.] Fleishy excrecence.

What's good for a carnosity in the bladder?

Beaumont and Fl. The Chances.

By this method, and by this course of diet, with adorificks, the ulcers are healed, and that carnosity resolved. Wiseman.

CARNOUS. adj. [old Fr. charneux, from caro, carnis, Lat.] Fleishy.

The first or outward part is a thick and carnous covering, like that of a walnut; the second, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The muscle whereby he is enabled to draw himself together, the academists describe to be a distinct carnous muscle, extended to the ear.

Ray on the Creation.

CAROB, or St. John's Bread. [soliqua, Lat.]

A tree very common in Spain, and in some parts of Italy, where it produces a great quantity of long, flat, brown-coloured pods, which are thick, mealy, and of a sweetish taste. These pods are eaten by the poorer inhabitants.

Miller.

CAROCHE.† n. s. [Ital. carrozza, said to be from carro rosso, a red carriage; whence, as chariots were first used in Italy, the Fr. carosse; and thence our old word caroche; which, Dr. Johnson says, is used in the comedy of Albimazar, and is obsolete. It is a very frequent word in our old writers. Probably the unauthorized modern word barouche may have been introduced, by some learned charioteer, with a retrospective view to caroche.]

A coach; a carriage of pleasure.

Like any lady, countess, dutchess, or queen, they shall have gowns, furs, jewels, coaches, and caroches.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 500.

Make ready my caroch.

Beaumont and Fl. Custom of the Country.

A caroch with six horses. Transl. of Boccaccio, (1621), p. 79.

CAROCHE.* part. adj. [from caroche.] Placed in a coach.

This man's taking up a common wench
In raggs, and lowlie, then maintaining her
Caroch'd in cloth of tisue. Beaumont and Fl. Little Fr. Lawyer.

CAROL.† n. s. [carola, Ital. from chorcola, Lat.] Pr. Johnson says. Mr. Brand deduces it from cantare, to sing, and rola, an interjection of joy. In old French, however, carole is a kind of dance. See Colgrave in V. CAROLLE, Lacombe, and Roquefort. "Carolle, divertissement accompagnée de danses et de bals." Rom. de R. Gl.

1. A song of joy and exultation.

And let the Graces dance unto the rest,

For they can do it best:

The whiles the maidens do their carol sing,
To which the woods shall answer, and their echo ring.

Spenser, Epithalamion.

Even in the old testament, if you listen to David's harp, ye shall hear as many horse-like airs as carols.

Baron.

Oppos'd to her, on t'other side advance
The costly feast, the carol, and the dance,
Minstrels and musick, poetry and play,
And balls by night, and tournament: by day.

Dryden.

2. A song of devotion.

No night is now with hymn or carol bless'd,
They gladly thither haste; and, by a choice
Of squadron'd angels, hear his carol sung.

Shakespeare.

Milton, Ode

3. A song in general.

The carol they began that hour,
How that a life was but a flower.

Shakespeare.

To CAROL.† v. n. [carolare, Ital. caroler, old Fr.]

To sing; to warble; to sing in joy and festivity.

Hark, how the cheerful birds do chaunt their lays,

And carol of love's praise.

Spenser.

This done, she sung, and carol'd out so clear,
That men and angels might rejoice to hear.

Dryden.

Hovering swans, their throats releas'd
From native silence, carol: ombs harmonious.

Prior.

To CAROL. v. a. To praise; to celebrate in song.

She with precious viol'd liquors heels,
For which the shepherds at their festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays.

Milton, Com.

CAROLING.* n. s. [from carol.] An hymn, or song of devotion.

They see such admirable things,

As carries them into an extasy,

And hear such heavenly notes and carolings

Of God's high praise.

Spenser, Hymn of Hear. Beauty.

CAROTID. adj. [carotides, Lat.] Two arteries, so called, which arise out of the ascending trunk of the aorta, near where the subclavian arteries arise.

The carotid, vertebral, and splenic arteries, are not only variously contorted, but also here and there dilated, to moderate the motion of the blood.

Ray on the Creation.

CAROTIDAL.* adj. The same as CAROTID.

The two carotidal, and the two vertebral arteries are this golden quaternion.

Smith's Old Age, p. 220.

CAROUSAL.† n. s. [from carous.] It seems more properly pronounced with the accent upon the second syllable; but Dryden accents it on the first, Dr. Johnson says. Dryden, however, was only observing the fashion of his own time; as the example from Marvel shews. Some imagine carousal to be derived from the Ital. carosello, a diminutive of carro, a chariot; and that the entertainment, originally, was a course or contest of chariots and horses; and that the word at length signified generally a magnificent feast.] A festival.

This game, these carousals Ascanius taught,
And building Alba to the Latins brought.

Dryden.

Before the crystal palace, where he dwells,
The armed angels hold their carousals.

A. Marvel, in Lachrymæ Musarum, 1650.

Leaving out the warlike part of the carousals, and forming a poetical design for the use of the machines, the songs and the dances.

Dryden, Pref. to Albion and Albanus.

A royal carousal given by Charles the Fifth of France to the emperor Charles the Fourth, in the year 1373, was closed with the theatrical representation of the Conquest of Jerusalem by Godfrey of Bullioign. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 245.

TO CAROUSE. † v. n. [carousser, Fr. from gar ausz, all out, Germ. Dr. Johnson says. But the Germ. rausch, drunkenness, seems better entitled to the fame of producing carouse.] To drink; to quaff; to drink largely.

He calls for wine: a health, quoth he, as if He'd been aboard carousing to his mates
After a storm.

Shakspeare.

Learn with how little life may be preserved,
In gold and myrrh they need not to carouse.

Raleigh.

Now hats fly off, and y'auths carouse,
Heaths first go round, and then the house,
The brides came thick and thick.

Suckling.

Under the shadow of friendly boughs
They sit carousing, where their liquour grows.

Waller.

TO CAROUSE. v. a. To drink up lavishly.

Now my sick fool, Rodrigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd
Potations pottle deep.

Shakspeare.

Our cheerful guests carouse the sparkling tears
Of the rich grape, whilst nautick charms their ears.

Denham.

CAROUSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A drinking match.

Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast and late carouse.

Pope.

2. A hearty dose of liquor.

He had so many eyes watching over him, as he could not drink a full carouse of sack; but the taste was advertised thereof within few hours after.

Darvis on Ireland.

Please you, we may contrive this afternoon,

And quaff carouses to our mistress' health.

Shakspeare.

CAROUSE. n. s. [from carouse.] A drinker; a toper.

The bold carouser, and adverting dame,
Nor fear the fever, nor relute the pain;
Safe in his skill from all constraint set free,
But conscious shame, remorse, and piety.

Graville.

CARP. n. s. [carpe, Fr.] A pond fish.

A friend of mine stored a pond of three or four acres with carps and tench.

TO CARP. † v. n. [carpo, Lat.] To censure; to cavil; to find fault: with at before the thing or person censured. It was formerly used in the sense of to jest.

In fellowship well could she laugh and carpe.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol. 470.

Tertullian, even often through discontentment, carpeth injuriously at them, as though they did it even when they were free from such meaning.

Hooker.

This young all leens'd fool
Does hourly carp and quarrel, breaking forth
In rank and not to be endured riot.

Shakspeare.

No, not a tooth or nail to scratch,
And at my actions carp or catch.

Herbert.

When I spoke,

My honest homely words were carp'd and censur'd,
For want of courtly stile.

Dryden.

TO CARP. † v. a. To blame.

Which my saying divers ignorant persons, not used to reade old auncient authors, nor acquainted with their phrase and manner of speeche, did carpe and reprehend, for lacke of good understandng.

Ahp. Cramer, Doct. of the Sacrament, fol. 100.

They carpe us like crakers.

Skelton's Poems, p. 213.

Herod heard John gladly, while he carped others.

Ahp. Sandys, Sermon, fol. 120. b.

CARPENTER. † n. s. [charpentier, Fr. low Lat. carpenterius, in the thirteenth century. Mr. Horne Tooke observes, that what we now call a carpenter, was anciently called a smith; and that the translation of the N. Test. ascribed to Wicliffe proves that smith and carpenter were then [in the fourteenth century] synonymous, viz. "Wher this is not a smith, ether a carpentere, the sone of Marie." St.

Mark, vi. 2, 3. If this be the true reading, it is remarkable that it should not be noticed in a recent publication of Wicliffe's Testament, by the learned and reverend Mr. Baber, where the passage is simply thus; without smith, and without any note, or various reading; "Wher this is not a carpenter
the sone of Marye." The parallel passage in St.
Matthew, xiii. 55. has also only carpenter.] An artificer in wood; a builder of houses and ships.
He is distinguished from a joiner, as the carpenter performs larger and stronger work.

This work performed with adseiment good,
Godfrey his carpentere, and men of skill,
In all the camp, sent to an aged wood.

Fairfax.

In building Hiero's great ship, there were three hundred carpenters employed for a year together.

Wilkins.

In burden'd vessels, first with speedy care,
His plenteous stores do season'd timbers send,
Thither the brawny carpenters repair,
And, as the surgeons of main'd ships, attend.

Dryden.

CARPENTRY. n. s. [from carpenter.] The trade or art of a carpenter.

It had been more proper for me to have introduced carpentry before joinery, because necessity did doubtless compel our forefathers to use the convenience of the first, rather than the extravagancy of the last.

CARPER. † n. s. [from To CARP.] A caviller; a censorious man.

I have not these weeds,

By putting on the cunning of a carper.

Shakspeare.

That audacious carper at the works of God was sufficiently silenced.

Smith's Old Age, p. 58.

CARPET. † n. s. [karpel, Dutch, Ital. carpetta; from the city of Cairo, and the Ital. tapeto, i. e.
tapestry made at Cairo.]

1. A covering of various colours, spread upon floors or tables.

Be the Jacks fair within, the Jills fair without, carpets hid,
and every thing in order?

Shakspeare.

Against the wall, in the middle of the half pace, is a chair placed before him, with a table and carpet before it.

Bacon.

2. Ground variegated with flowers, and level and smooth.

Go signify as much, while here we march

Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.

Shakspeare.

The carpet ground shall be with leaves o'erspread,
And boughs shall weave a covering for your head.

Dryden.

3. Any thing variegated.

The whole dry land is, for the most part, covered over with a lovely carpet of green grass, and other herbs.

Ray.

4. Carpet is used, proverbially; for a state of ease and luxury; as, a carpet knight, a knight that has never known the field, and has recommended himself only at table, Dr. Johnson says. This reflects no great credit on the knights in question. The fact is, that a carpet-knight was so called, because he received his honour from the king's hand in the court, and upon a carpet, or such like ornament belonging to the regal state. Markham's Booke of Honour, 1625. p. 71. They were sometimes called knights of the green cloth, in contradistinction to those who were knighted as soldiers; and they were selected from those, who had been serviceable to the court, city, or state, and had therefore merited distinction, whether having studied law, physick, or any other arts and sciences. Holme's Acad. of Armory, B. iii. p. 57.

He is knight, dubbed with unhacked rapier, and on carpet consideration. Shakspeare.

5. To be on the carpet, [sur le tapis, Fr.] is to be the subject of consideration; an affair in hand.

To CA'RPET. v. a. [from the noun.] To spread with carpets.

We found him in a fair chamber, richly hanged and carpeted under foot, without any degrees to the state; he was set upon a low throne, richly adorned, and a rich cloth of state over his head, of blue satten embroidered. Bacon.

The dry land we find every where naturally carpeted over with grass, and other agreeable wholesome plants. Derham.

*CA'RPET-WALK.** n. s. Carpet-way: a green way; CA'RPET-WAY. } a way on the turf. Ray.

Mow carpet-walks, and ply weeding. Evelyn.

CA'RPING. particip. adj. [from To CARP.] Captious; censorious.

No carping critick interrupts his praise, No rival strives, but for a second place. Granville.

Lay aside therefore a carping spirit, and read even an adversary with an honest design to find out his true meaning: do not snatch at little lapses, and appearances of mistake. Watts.

*CA'RPING.** n. s. [from the verb.] Cvil; censure; abuse.

The passage of the Israelites over Jordan, in memory of which those stones at Gilgal were set up, is free from all those little carplings before-mentioned, that are made as to the passage through the red-sea. Leslie, Method with the Deists.

CA'RPINGLY. adv. [from carping.] Captiously; censoriously.

We derive out of the Latin at second hand by the French, and make good English, as in these adverbs, carpingly, currently, actively, colourably. Candem's Remains.

CA'RPMEALS. n. s. A kind of coarse cloth made in the north of England. Phillips's World of Worlds.

CARPUS. n. s. [Latin.] The wrist so named by anatomists, which is made up of eight little bones, of different figures and thickness, placed in two ranks, four in each rank. They are strongly tied together by the ligaments which come from the radius, and by the annular ligament. Quincy.

I found one of the bones of the carpus lying loose in the wound. Wisean's Surgery.

*CA'RRAWAY.** n. s. See CARAWAY. Mr. Mason blames Dr. Johnson for here referring to caraway, which means caraway seeds, when carraway, the word before us, means apples; "carraway Harvey apples," he says, "so called from their spicy flavour," as a Herefordshire friend informed him. There may be such apples; but both Johnson and the poet will be supported, in opposition to Mr. Mason in using carraways as the seeds or comfits, and not as apples, by the following passage; which, as Mr. Steevens observes, may settle this important point!

This is a confirmation of our use in England, for the serving of apples and other fruites last after meales. Howbeit we are wont to eate carawaies or biskett, or some other kind of comfits or seedes together with apples, thereby to breake winde ingendred by them: and surely it is a very good way for students. Cogan's Haven of Health, 1595.

Nay, you shall see mine orchard, where, in an arbour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth; come, cousin, silence, and then to bed. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

*CA'RRIBLE.** adj. [from carry.] That which may be carried. Sherwood.

*CA'RRIDGE.** n. s. [cariage, Fr. baggage; from carry.]

1. The act of carrying or transporting, or bearing any thing.

The unequal agitation of the winds, though material to the carriage of sounds farther or less way, yet do not confound the articulation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If it seem so strange to move this obelisk for so little space, what may we think of the carriage of it out of Egypt? Wilkins.

2. Conquest; acquisition.

Solyman resolved to besiege Vienna, in good hope, that by the carriage away of that, the other cities would, without resistance, be yielded. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. Vehicle; that in which any thing is carried.

What horse or carriage can take up and bear away all the loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

4. The frame upon which cannon is carried.

He commanded the great ordnance to be laid upon carriages, which before lay bound in great unweildy timber, with rings fastened thereto, and could not handsomely be removed to or fro. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

5. Behaviour: personal manners.

Before his eyes he did cast a mist, by his own insinuation, and by the carriage of h's youth, that expressed a natural princely behaviour. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Though in my face there's no affected frown, Nor in my carriage a feign'd niceness shown, I keep my honour still without a stain. Dryden.

Let them have ever so learned lectures of breeding, that which will most influence their carriage, will be the company they converse with, and the fashion of those about them. Locke.

6. Conduct; measures; practices.

You may hurt yourself; nay, utterly Grow from the king's acquaintance by this carriage. Shakspeare.

He advised the new governour to have so much discretion in his carriage, that there might be no notice taken in the exercise of his religion. Clarendon.

7. Management; manner of transacting. Not used.

The manner of carriage of the business, was as if there had been secret inquisition upon him. Bacon, Hen. VII.

8. That which is carried; the burthen.

With speare in th' one hand (Calpine) staid himselfe upright, With th' other staid his lady up with steady might:— But when as Calpine came to the brim, And saw his carriage past that perill well,— His heart with vengeance inwardly did swell. Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 34.

CA'RRIER. n. s. [from To carry.]

1. One who carries something.

You must distinguish between the motion of the air, which is but a vehiculum cause, a carrier of the sounds, and the sounds conveyed. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For winds, when homeward they return, will drive The loaded carriers from their evening hive. Dryden.

2. One whose profession or trade is to carry goods for others.

I have rather made it my choice to transcribe all, than to venture the loss of my originals by post or carrier. Pierce's Letters.

The roads are crouded with carriers, laden with rich manufactures. Swift.

3. A messenger; one who carries a message.

The welcome news is in the letter found; The carrier's not commissioned to expound; It speaks itself. Dryden, Religio Laici.

4. The name of a species of pigeons, so called from the reported practice of some nations, who send them with letters tied to their necks, which they carry to the place where they were bred, however remote:

There are tame and wild pigeons, and of tame there are croppers, carriers, rants. Walton's Angler.
CARRION. † n. s. [old Fr. cavaigne, carongne: modern, charogne; from the Lat. caro and rodens. V. Roquefort.]

1. The carcase of something not proper for food.

They did eat the dead carrions, and one another soon after; insomuch that the very carcases they scraped out of their graves. Spenser on Ireland.

It is by

That, lying by the violet in the sun,
 Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower. Shakspeare.

Ravens are seen in flocks where a carrion lies, and wolves in herds to run down a deer. Temple.

Sheep, oxen, horses full; and heap'd on high.
 The differing species in confusion lie,
 Till, warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found,
 To lodge their loathsome carrion under ground. Dryden.

Criticks, as they are birds of prey, have ever a natural inclination to carrion. Pope.

2. Any flesh so corrupted as not to be fit for food.

Not all that pride that makes thee swell.
 As big as thou dost blown-up veal;
 Nor all thy tricks and slights to cheat,
 Sell all thy carrion for good meat. Hudibras.

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death,
 Yet scarce enough their hunger to supply,
 For love has made me carrion ere I die. Dryden.

3. A name of reproach for a worthless woman.

Shall we send that foolish carrion, Mrs. Quickly, to him, and excuse his throwing into the water? Shakspeare.

CARRION. † adj. [from the substantive.] Relating to carcases; feeding upon carcases.

Match to match I have encounter'd him,
 And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
 Even of the bonny beasts he lov'd so well. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

You'll ask me why I rather choose to have
 A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive Three thousand ducats? Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

This foul deed shall smell above the earth
 With carrion men groaning for burial. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The charity of our death-bed visits from one another, is much at a rate with that of a carrion crow to a sheep; we smell a carcase. L'Estrange.

CARRION-LEAN. * adj. Applied properly to beasts; to jades that be more carrion like, or more lean. Hudibras.

CARRONADE. * n. s. A very short piece of iron ordnance, originally made at Carron in Scotland. James's Milit. Dict.

CARROT. n. s. [carote, Fr. daucus, Lat.] An esculent root.

Carrots, though garden roots, yet they do very well in the fields for seed. Mortimer.

His spouse orders the sack to be immediately opened, and greedily pulls out of it half a dozen bunches of carrots. Dennis.

CARROTINESS. n. s. [from carrotly.] Redness of hair.

CARROTY. n. s. [from carrot.] Spoken of red hair, on account of its resemblance in colour to carrots.

CARROWS. n. s. [An Irish word.]

The carrows are a kind of people that wander up and down to gentlemens houses, living only upon cards and dice; who, though they have little or nothing of their own, yet will they play for much money. Spenser on Ireland.

To CARRY. † v. a. [charier, Fr. from currus, Lat.]
 But Serenius deduces it from the Su. kora, to carry, to drive; Goth. kera.]

1. To convey from a place; opposed to bring, or convey to a place: often with a particle, signifying departure; as, away, off.

When he dieth, he shall carry nothing away. Psaln xlix. 18.

 I mean to carry her away this evening, by the help of these two soldiers. Dryden, Span. Fryar.

As in a hive's vimineous dome,
 Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
 Each does her studious action vary,
 To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.

They exposed their goods with the price marked, then retired;
 the merchants came, left the price which they would give upon the goods, and retired; the Soreas returning carried off either their goods or money, as they liked best. Arbuthnot.

2. To transport.

They began to carry about in beds those that were sick. Mark, vi. 55.

The species of audibles seem to be carried more manifestly through the air, than the species of visibles. Bacon.

Where many great ordnance are shot off together, the sound will be carried, at the least, twenty miles upon the land. Bacon.

3. To bear: to have about one.

Do not take out bones like surgeons I have met with, who carry them about in their pockets. Wiseman's Surgery.

4. To take; to have with one.

If the ideas of liberty and volition were carried along with us in our minds, a great part of the difficulties that perplex men's thoughts would be easier resolved. Locke.

I have listened with my utmost attention for half an hour to an orator, without being able to carry away one single sentence out of a whole sermon. Swift.

5. To convey by force.

Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;
 Take all his company along with him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

6. To effect any thing.

There are some vain persons, that whatsoever goeth alone, or moveth upon greater means, if they have never so little hand in it, they think it is they that carry it. Bacon.

Often-times we lose the occasion of carrying a business well thoroughly by our too much haste. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

These advantages will be of no effect, unless we improve them to words, in the carrying of our main point. Addison.

7. To gain in competition.

And hardly shall I carry out my side,
 Her husband being alive. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

How many stand for consulships? — Three, they say; but it is thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it. Shakspeare.

I see not yet how any of these six reasons can be fairly avoided; and yet if any of them hold good, it is enough to carry the cause. Sanderson.

The latter still enjoying his place, and continuing a joint commissioner of the treasury, still opposed, and commonly carried away every thing against him. Clarendon.

8. To gain after resistance.

The count woos your daughter,
 Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty;
 Resolves to carry her; let her consent,
 As we'll direct her now, 'tis best to bear it. Shakspeare.

What a fortune does the thick lips owe,
 If he can carry her thus? Shakspeare, Othello.

The town was distressed, and ready for an assault, which, if it had been given, would have cost much blood; but yet the town would have been carried in the end. Bacon, Hen. VII.

9. To gain; with it; that is, to prevail. [le porter, Fr.]

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
 But that's no matter; the greater part carries it. Shakspeare.

By these, and the like arts, they promised themselves, that they should easily carry it; so that they entertained the house all the morning with other debates. Clarendon.

If the numerousness of a train must carry it, virtue may go follow Astræa, and vice only will be worth the courting. Glanville.

Children, who live together, often strive for mastery, whose wills shall carry it over the rest. Locke.

In pleasures and pains, the present is apt to carry it, and those at a distance have the disadvantage in the comparison. Locke.

10. To bear out; to face through: with it.

If a man carries it off, there is so much money saved; and if he be detected, there will be something pleasant in the frolick. L'Estrange.

11. To continue external appearance.

My niece is already in the belief that he's mad; we may carry it thus for our pleasure, and his penance. Shakspeare.

12. To manage; to transact.

The senate is generally as numerous as our house of commons; and yet carries its resolutions so privately, that they are seldom known. Addison on Italy.

13. To behave; to conduct: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place. Bacon.

He attended the king into Scotland, where he did carry himself with much singular sweetness and temper. Wotton.

He carried himself so insolently in the house, and out of the house, to all persons, that he became odious. Clarendon.

14. Sometimes with it: as, she carries it high.

15. To bring forward; to advance in any progress.

It is not to be imagined how far constancy will carry a man; however, it is better walking slowly in a rugged way, than to break a leg and be a cripple. Locke.

This plain natural way, without grammar, can carry them to great elegance and politeness in their language. Locke.

There is no vice which mankind carries to such wild extremes, as that of avarice. Swift.

16. To urge; to bear forward with some kind of external impulse.

Men are strongly carried out to, and hardly took off from the practice of vice. South.

He that the world, or flesh, or devil, can carry away from the profession of an obedience to Christ, is no son of the faithful Abraham. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Ill nature, passion, and revenge, will carry them too far in punishing others; and therefore God hath certainly appointed government to restrain the partiality and violence of men. Locke.

17. To bear; to have; to obtain.

In some vegetables, we see something that carries a kind of analogy to sense; they contract their leaves against the cold; they open them to the favourable heat. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

18. To exhibit to show; to display on the outside; to set to view.

The aspect of every one in the family carries so much satisfaction, that it appears he knows his happy lot. Addison.

19. To imply; to import.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, lightness or folly, for men to quit and renounce their former tenets, presently upon the offer of an argument, which they cannot immediately answer. Locke.

20. To contain; to comprise.

He thought it carried something of argument in it, to prove that doctrine. Watts on the Mind.

21. To have annexed; to have any thing joined: with the particle with.

There was a righteous and a searching law, directly forbidding such practices; and they knew that it carried with it the divine stamp. South.

There are many expressions, which carry with them to my mind no clear ideas. Locke.

The obvious portions of extension, that affect our senses, carry with them into the mind the idea of finite. Locke.

22. To convey or bear any thing united or adhering, by communication of motion.

We see also manifestly, that sounds are carried with wind: and therefore sounds will be heard further with the wind than against the wind. Bacon, Natural History.

23. To move or continue any thing in a certain direction.

His chimney is carried up through the whole rock, so that you see the sky through it, notwithstanding the rooms lie very deep. Addison on Italy.

24. To push on ideas, arguments, or any thing successive in a train.

Manethes, that wrote of the Egyptians, hath carried up their government to an incredible distance. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

25. To receive; to endure: not in use.

Some have in readiness so many odd stories, as there is nothing but they can wrap it into a tale, to make others carry it with more pleasure. Bacon.

26. To support; to sustain.

Carry camomile, or wild thyme, or the green strawberry, upon sticks, as you do hops upon poles. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

27. To bear, as trees.

Set them a reasonable depth, and they will carry more shoots upon the stem. Bacon, Natural History.

28. To fetch and bring, as dogs.

Young whelps learn easily to carry; young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

29. To carry away. In naval language, to lose.

We carried away our mizen-mast. Byron's Narrative, p. 4.

30. To carry coals. To bear injuries. This phrase, which is used by Shakspeare, seems, Mr. Mason observes, to have continued in vogue, considerably longer than any commentator on Shakspeare probably was aware of.

I advise those who are sensible that they carry coals, and are full of ill will, and entertain thoughts of revenge, that they do day by day think upon this argument, till they have wrought out all malignity out of their souls. Whichest, Sermons.

31. To carry off. To kill.

Old Parr lived to one hundred and fifty-three years of age, and might have gone further, if the change of air had not carried him off. Temple.

32. To carry on. To promote; to help forward.

It carries on the same design that is promoted by authors of a graver turn, and only does it in another manner. Addison.

33. To carry on. To continue; to put forward from one stage to another.

By the administration of grace, begun by our Blessed Saviour, carried on by his disciples, and to be completed by their successors to the world's end, all types that darkened this faith, are enlightened. Spratt.

Aeneas's settlement in Italy was carried on through all the oppositions in his way to it, both by sea and land. Addison.

34. To carry on. To prosecute; not to let cease.

France will not consent to furnish us with money sufficient to carry on the war. Temple.

35. To carry out. To put into amazement.

These things transport and carry out the mind, That with herself herself can never meet. Sir J. Davies, Nones Tillium, st. 35.

36. To carry through. To support; to keep from failing, or being conquered.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our success, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

TO CARRY.† v. n.

1. A hare is said, by hunters, to carry, when she runs on rotten ground, or on frost, and it sticks to her feet.

2. A horse is said to carry well, when his neck is arched, and he holds his head high; but when his neck is short, and ill shaped, and he lowers his head, he is said to carry low.

3. To convey; to transport; a phrase from gunnery or archery; as, the cannon carried well; i. e. was successful. The word in Shakspeare is supposed to have this meaning.

This speed of Caesar Carries beyond belief. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

As the ancients She'll carry blank. Bacon, and Fl. Tamer tamed.

C A R

CARRY.* n. s. The motion of the clouds. They are said to have a great carry, when they move with swiftness before the wind.

1. A carriage in general.

The Scythians are described by Herodotus to lodge always in carts, and to feed upon the milk of mares. Temple.

Triptolemus, so sung the Nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine. Dryden.

2. A wheel-carriage, used commonly for luggage.

Now while my friend, just ready to depart,
Was packing all his goods in one poor cart,
He stopp'd a little. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. A small carriage with two wheels, used by husbandmen, distinguished from a waggon, which has four wheels.

Alas! what weights are these that load my heart!
I am as dull as winter starved sheep,
Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

4. The vehicle in which criminals are carried to execution.

The squire, whose good grace was to open the scene,
Now fitted the halter, now travers'd the cart,
And often took leave, but was loth to depart. Prior.

To CART.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To expose in a cart by way of punishment.

If this house be not turn'd within this fortnight
With the foundation upward, I'll be carted.
Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

Democritus ne'er laugh'd so loud,
To see bawds carted through the croud. Hudibras.

No woman led a better life;
She to intrigues was e'en hard-hearted;
She chuck'd when a bawd was carted;
And thought the nation ne'er would thrive,
Till all the whores were burnt alive. Prior.

2. To place in a cart.

Thespis — with his carted actors.

CARTAGE.* n. s. [from cart.] The employment of a cart.

CARTE BLANCHE. [French.] A blank paper a paper to be filled up with such conditions as the person to whom it is sent thinks proper.

CARTELL.† n. s. [cartel, Fr. cartello, Ital. dimin. of Lat. charta.]

1. A writing containing, for the most part, stipulations between enemies.

As this discord among the sisterhood is likely to engage them in a long and lingering war, it is the more necessary that there should be a cartel settled among them. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Anciently any publick paper, Dr. Johnson says. But it was particularly the challenge to a duel or combat, as even the solitary instance from Daniel, with which he illustrates the word, proves. It is sometimes written chartel.

They flatly disavouch

To yield him more obedience, or support;

And as to perjur'd duke of Lancaster,

Their cartel of defiance, they prefer. Daniel's Civil Wars.

Xerxes — sent a cartel of defiance against the mountain Atho. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, viii. § 3.

Chief of domestick knights and errant,

Either for cartel or for warrant. Hudibras, i. 2.

2. To cut meat at the table.
3. To make any thing by carving or cutting.

Yet fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill;
And carv'd in iv'ry such a maid so fair,
As nature could not with his art compare,
Were she to work. Dryden.

4. To engrave.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye, which in this forest looks,
Shall see thy virtue witness'd every where.
Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, the unexpressive she. Shakspeare.

5. To distribute; to apportion; to provide at will.

He had been a keeper of his flocks, both from the violence of robbers and his own soldiers; who could easily have carved themselves their own food. South.

How dares sinful dust and ashes invade the prerogative of Providence, and carve out to himself the seasons and issues of life and death? South.

The labourer's share, being seldom more than a bare subsistence, never allows that body of men opportunity to struggle with the richer, unless when some common and great distress emboldens them to carve to their wants. Locke.

6. To cut; to hew.

Or they will buy his sheep forth of the cote,
Or they will carve the shepherd's throat. Spenser's Pastorals.

Well then, things had carved were serv'd;
My mistress for the strangers carv'd. Prior.

CA'RVEL.† n. s. See CARAVEL. A small ship.

I gave them order, if they found any Indians there, to send in the little fly-boat, or the carvel, into the river; for, with our great ships, we durst not approach the coast. Raleigh.

She spreads sattens, as the king's ships do canvas every where, she may spare me her mison, and her bonnets, strike her main petticoat, and yet outsail me, I am a carvel to her.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

CA'RVEL.* n. s. Apparently a term for the urtica marina, or sea-blubber. See BLUBBER.

The carvel is a sea-foam, floating upon the surface of the ocean, of a globous form, like so many lines throwing abroad her stings, which she can spread at pleasure, angling for small fishes, which by that artifice she captivates.

St. T. Herbert, Trav. p. 26.

CA'RVET. n. s. [from carve.]

1. A sculptor.

All arts and artists Theseus could command,
Who sold for hire, or wrought for better fame,
The master painters, and the carvers came. Dryden.

2. He that cuts up the meat at the table.

Meanwhile thy indignation yet to raise,
The carver, dancing round each dish, surveys
With flying knife, and, as his art directs,
With proper gestures ev'ry fowl dissects. Dryden.

3. He that apportions, or distributes at will.

In this kind, to come in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrongs it may not be.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

We are not the carvers of our own fortunes. U' E' strange.

CA'RVING. n. s. [from carve.] Sculpture; figures carved.

In each seven small brass and leather guns, charged with case-shot. Clarendon.

CASE. n. s. [casus, Lat.]

1. Condition with regard to outward circumstances.

Unworthy wretch, quoth he, of so great grace,

How dare I think such glory to attain?

These that have it attain'd, were in like case,

Quoth he, as wretched, and liv'd in like pain. Spenser, F. Q.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;

Be now a father, and propose a son. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Some knew the face,

And all had heard the much lamented case. Dryden.

These were the circumstances under which the Corinthians then were, and the argument which the apostle advances is intended to reach their particular case. Atterbury.

My youth may be made, as it never fails in executions, a case of compassion. Pope, Pref. to his Works.

2. State of things.

He saith, that if there can be found such an equality between man and man, as between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government, which seemeth rather an impossible case, than an untrue sentence.

Bacon.

Here was the case; an army of English, wasted and tired with a long winter's siege, engaged an army of a greater number than themselves, fresh and in vigour.

Bacon.

I can but be a slave where-ever I am; so that, taken or not taken, 'tis all a case to me. U' E' strange.

They are excellent in order to certain ends; he hath no need to use them, as the case now stands, being provided for with the provision of an angel. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Your parents did not produce you much into the world, whereby you have few ill impressions; but they failed, as is generally the case, in too much neglecting to cultivate your mind. Swift.

3. [In physick.] State of the body; state of the disease.

It was well; for we had rather met with calms and contrary winds, than any tempests; for our sick were many, and in very ill case. Bacon.

Chalybeate water seems to be a proper remedy in hypochondriacal cases. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. History of a disease.

5. State of a legal question.

If he be not apt to heat over matters, and to call up one thing, to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers cases; so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt. Bacon, Essays.

6. In ludicrous language, condition with regard to leanness, or fat. In case, is lusty or fat.

Thou liest, most ignorant monster; I am in case to jostle a constable. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Pray have but patience till then, and when I am in little better case, I'll throw myself in the very mouth of you.

L'Estrange.

Quoth Ralph, I should not, if I were
In case for action now be here.

Hudibras.

For if the sire be faint, or out of case,
He will be copied in his famish'd race.

Dryden, Virgil.

The priest was pretty well in case,
And shew'd some humour in his face;
Look'd with an easy careless mien,
A perfect stranger to the spleen.

Swift.

7. Contingence; possible event.

The atheist, in case things should fall out contrary to his belief or expectation, hath made no provision for this case; if, contrary to his confidence, it should prove in the issue that there is a God, the man is lost and undone for ever.

Tillotson.

8. Question relating to particular persons or things.

Well do I find each man most wise in his own case. Sidney.
It is strange, that the ancient fathers should not appeal to this judge in all cases, it being so short and expedite a way for the ending of controversies.

Tillotson.

9. Representation of any fact or question.

10. The variation of nouns. The several changes which the noun undergoes in the Latin and Greek tongues, in the several numbers, are called cases, and are designed to express the several views or relations under which the mind considers things with regard to one another; and the variation of the noun for this purpose is called declension.

Clarke's Lat. Gram.

11. In case. [in caso, Ital.] If it should happen; upon the supposition that: a form of speech now little used.

For in case it be certain, hard it cannot be for them to shew us where we shall find it; that we may say these were the orders of the apostles.

Hooker.

A sure retreat to his forces, in case they should have an ill day, or unlucky chance in the field.

Bacon Hen. VII.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, either by their evil destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost.

Hayward.

To CASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in a case or cover.

Case ye, case ye; on with your vizours, there's money of the king's coming down the hill.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The cry went once for thee,

And still it might, and yet it may again,

If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive,

And case thy reputation in a tent.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

Like a fall'n cedar, far diffus'd his train,

Case'd in green scales, the crocodile extends.

Thomson.

2. To cover as a case.

Then comes my fit again, I had else been perfect;

As broad, and general, as the casing air,

To saucy doubts and fears.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To cover on the outside with materials different from the inside.

Then they began to case their houses with marble.

Arbutnot.

4. To strip off the covering; to take off the skin.

We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

To CASE. v. n. To put cases; to contrive representations of facts: a ludicrous use.

They fell presently to reasoning and casing upon the matter with him, and laying distinctions before him.

L'Estrange.

To CASEHARDEN. v. a. [from case and harden.] To harden on the outside.

The manner of casehardening is thus: Take cow horn or hoof, dry it thoroughly in an oven, then beat it to powder; put about the same quantity of bay salt to it, and mingle them together with stale chamberlye, or else white wine vinegar. Lay some of this mixture upon loam, and cover your iron all over with it; then wrap the loam about all, and lay it upon the hearth of the forge to dry and harden. Put into the fire, and blow up the coals to it, till the whole lump have just a blood-red heat.

CA'SEMATE.† n. s. [Ital. casamatta, from casa armata; Span. casamata; a vault formerly made to separate the platforms of the lower and upper batteries. Formerly written casamate.]

1. [In fortification.] A kind of vault or arch of stone-work, in that part of the flank of a bastion next the curtain, somewhat retired or drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, serving, as a battery, to defend the face of the opposite bastion, and the moat or ditch.

Secure your casemates,

Here Master Picklock, sir, your man o' law

And learn'd attorney, has sent you a bag of munition.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

2. The well, with its several subterraneous branches, dug in the passage of the bastion, till the miner is heard at work, and air given to the mine.

Harris.

CA'SEMENT. n. s. [casamento, Ital.] A window opening upon hinges.

Why, then may you have a casement of the great chamber window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

Here in this world they do much knowledge read,

And are the casements which admit most light.

Davies.

They waken'd with the noise, did fly

From inward room to window eye,

And gently op'ning lid, the casement,

Look'd out, but yet with some amazement.

Hudibras.

There is as much difference between the clear representations of the understanding then, and the obscure discoveries that it makes now, as there is between the prospect of a casement and a key hole.

South.

CA'SEUS. adj. [caseus, Lat.] Resembling cheese; cheesy.

Its fibrous parts are from the caseous parts of the chyle.

Floyer on Humours.

CA'SERN.† n. s. [caserne, Fr.] A little room or lodgement erected between the rampart and the houses of fortified towns, to serve as apartments or lodgings for the soldiers of the garrison, with beds.

Wrazha, Berlin, i. 101.

CA'SEWORM. n. s. [from case and worm.] A grub that makes itself a case.

Caddises, or caseworms, are to be found in this nation, in several little brooks.

Floyer.

CASH.† n. s. [caisse, Fr.] This etymology, given by Dr. Johnson, has been questioned. But our word certainly seems to have been used, originally, in the French sense. "She [the countess of Shrewsbury] is said to have amassed a great sum of money to some ill use: 20,000*l.* are known to be in her cash." Winwood's Memorials, iii. 281. Lat. capsa. The Su. cassa is cash.] Money; properly, ready money; money in the chest, or at hand.

A thief, bent to unhoard the cash

Of some rich burgher.

Milton, P. L.

He is at an end of all his cash, he has both his law and his daily bread now upon dust.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

He sent the thief, that stole the cash, away

And punish'd him that put it in his way.

Pope.

CASH-KEEPER. n. s. [from cash and keep.] A man entrusted with the money.

Dispensator was properly a cash-keeper, or privy-purse.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To CASH*. v. a. [from the noun.] A mercantile expression; as, to cash a bill, i. e. to give money for the promissory payment.

To CASH*. v. a. [from the Fr. casser. Perhaps the parent of our word cashier.] To discard.

And thereupon cashing the greatest part of his land army, he only retained one thousand of the best souldiers.

Sir A. Gorges, in Purchas's Pilgrim.

CASH'EW'NUT. n. s. A tree that bears nuts, not with shells but husks. Miller.

CASH'ER. † n. s. [from cash, and Teut. cassier, or kassier. Formerly written casheure.] He that has charge of the money.

Where's my cashere?

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle. South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, ordered his cashier to let him have no more money than what he should count when he received it. Locke.

Flight of cashiers, or mobbs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses, while the music is kind. Pope.

To CASH'ER. v. a. [casser, Fr. cassare, Lat.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does 't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And then by that small hurt hast cashier'd Cassio. Shakspeare.

Seconds in factions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers, and are cashiered. Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cashiered in my hands, he had no longer been Lucetius. Dryden.

They have already cashiered several of their followers as mutineers. Addison, Freetholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cashier'd, Contrives, as he is hated, to be feared. Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate; which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be utter cashiering of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity. South.

Some cashier, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious. Locke.

CASH'ROO.* n. s. The gum or juice of a tree in the East Indies.

CASH'ING. n. s. [from To case.]

1. The covering of any thing; that which is used for covering.

2. In Northumberland, dried cowdung, used for fuel, has still the name of cashings.

God permitted him to take other fuel, namely, cow's dung, dried cashings, to bake his bread with. Waterland, Script. Firdic. iii. 94.

CASK. † n. s. [casque, Fr. cadus, Lat. Dr. Johnson says. But it may be from the Goth. kas, a vessel.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquour or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask. Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,

C A S

Whose title, and whose age, with mould o'ergrown,
The good old cask for ever keeps unknown. Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniences grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away. Raleigh.

To CASK*. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a cask; as, to cask beer or wine.

CASK. } n. s. [casque, Fr. cassis, Lat.] A helmet;
CASQUET. } armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy pernicious enemy. Shakspeare.

And these
Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;
Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light. Dryden.

Why does he load with darts
His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask
His wrinkled brows? Addison.

CASKET. n. s. [a diminutive of caisse, a chest, Fr. casse, cassette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd, and ta'en away. Shakspeare.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou hear,
Lock'd up within the casket of thy breast?

What jewels, and what riches hast thou there?
What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest? Davies.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,
That was the casket of Heav'n's richest store. Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure
In one dear casket, and sav'd only that. Otway.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

To CASKET. † v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a casket.

I have writ my letters, casketed my treasure, and given order for our horses. Shakspeare.

Casket them not up for holy reliques.
Sir M. Saurdys, Essays, (1634.) p. 133.

The qualities of blood in a healthy state are to be florid, the red part congealing, and the serum ought to be without any greenish cast. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

13. Exterior appearance.

The native hue of resolution

Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought. Shakspeare.

New names, new dressings, and the modern cast,

Some scenes, some persons alter'd, and outfac'd
The world. Sir J. Denham.

14. Manner; air; mien.

Pretty conceptions, fine metaphors, glittering expressions, and something of a neat cast of verse, are properly the dress, gems, or loose ornaments of poetry. Pope, Letters.

Neglect not the little figures and turns on the words, nor sometimes the very cast of the periods; neither omit or confound any rites or customs of antiquity. Pope on Homer.

15. A flight; a number of hawks dismissed from the first.

A cast of merlins there was besides, which, flying of a gallant height, would beat the birds that rose, down unto the bushes, as falcons will do wild fowl over a river. Sibney.

16. [Casta, Spanish.] A breed; a race; a species.

Many of the Indian casts will not drink out of the same cup, nor feed out of the same dish with a person deemed impure; and they hold all such [impure] except their own fraternity.

Bryant, Anc. Mythol.

17. [Cast, Welsh.] A trick.

I have detected his untrue meaning, revealed his juggling castes, and by his own authours opened clearly their meaning much contrarie to his assertion.

Marlin, Marriage of Priests, (1554) LL. i.

18. The act of casting metal.

Such daily cast of brazen cannon,

And foreign mart for implements of war. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

CA'STANET.† n. s. [castaneta, Span. diminut. of the Lat. castanea, a chesnut; the dancer's shells are said to resemble the shells of a chesnut.] A small shell of ivory, or hard wood, which dancers rattle in their hands.

If there had been words enow between them, to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears like a pair of castanets.

CA'STAWAY. n. s. [from cast and away.] A person lost, or abandoned, by Providence; any thing thrown away.

Neither given any leave to search in particular who are the heirs of the kingdom of God, who castaways. Hooker.

Lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. 1 Cor. ix. 27.

CA'STAWAY. adj. [from the subst.] Useless; of no value.

We only prize, pamper, and exalt this vassal and slave of death, or only remember, at our castaway leisure, the imprisoned immortal soul. Raleigh, History.

CA'STED. The participle preterite of cast, but improperly, and found perhaps only in the following passage.

When the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity. Shakspeare.

CA'STELLAN. † n. s. [castellano, Span.] The captain governour, or constable of a castle.

These are the rights which belong to Robert Fitzwalter, castellan of London. Blount's Anc. Tenures, p. 116.

Bp. Taylor, Sermon at Golden Grove, 1653, p. 226.

To CA'STIGATE. † v. a. [castigo, Lat.] To chastise; to chasten; to correct; to punish.

If thou didst put this sour cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well. Shakspeare.

These lower powers are worn, and wearied out, by the toilsome exercise of dragging about and managing such a load of flesh; whereof being so castigated, they are duly attuned to the more easy body of air again.

Glanville, Pre-ex. of Souls, ch. 14.

About a year ago, reflecting upon some passages of St. Hierom, that he had adjusted and castigated the then Latin Vulgate to the best Greek exemplars, &c. Bentley, Let. p. 237.

CASTIGATION. n. s. [from To castigate.]

1. Penance; discipline.

This hand of yours requires
A sequester from liberty; fasting and prayer,
With castigation, exercise devout. Shakspeare.

2. Punishment; correction.

Their castigations were accompanied with encouragements; which care was taken, to keep me from looking upon as mere compliments. Boyle.

3. Emendation; repressive remedy.

The ancients had these conjectures touching these floods and conflagrations, so as to frame them into an hypothesis for the castigation of the excesses of generation. Hale.

CA'STIGATOR.* n. s. [Lat.] He who makes an emendation or correction.

The Latin castigator hath observed, that the Dutch copy is corrupted and faulty here.

Barnevell's Apology with Marginall Castigations, (1618) F. ii. b.

1. A strong house, fortified against assaults.

The castle of Maeduff, I will surprise. Shakspeare.

2. CASTLES in the air. [chateau d'Espagne, Fr.] Projects without reality.

These were but like castles in the air, and in men's fancies, vainly imagined. Raleigh, History of the World.

Do not our great reformers use

This sidrophel to forebode news;

To write of victories next year,

And castles taken yet? the air?

Hudibras, ii. iii.

CA'STLE-BUILDER.* n. s. A fanciful projector; he who builds castles in the air.

The poets—are the greatest castle-builders in the world.

Student, i. 223.

CA'STLE-BUILDING.* n. s.

Castle-building, or the science of aerial architecture, is of much too vague a nature to be comprehended in a concise regular definition: but, for the sake of custom and method, I define it to be the craft of erecting baseless fabricks in the air, and peopling them with proper notional inhabitants for the employment and improvement of the understanding.

Student, i. 223.

CA'STLE-CROWNED.* adj. [from castle and crown.]

Crowned or topped with a castle.

It was my chance in walking all alone,

That ancient castle-crowned hill to scale.

Mir. for Mag. p. 776.

CA'STLE SOAP. n. s. [I suppose corrupted from Castile soap.] A kind of soap.

I have a letter from a soap-boiler, desiring me to write upon the present duties on Castle soap. Addison.

CA'STLED. † adj. [from castle.] Furnished with castles.

The horses neighing by the wind is blown,

And castled elephants o'erlook the town.

CA'STLEGUARD.* n. s. [old Fr. castelegarde, "le service de garde ou de guet que doit un vassal à son seigneur." Lacombe.] One of the feudal tenures.

One species of knight-service was castleguard, differing from it in nothing but that whoever held by that tenure, performed his service within the realm, and without limitation to any certain term. Ld. Lyttelton.

CA'STLERY, or CA'STELRY.* n. s. [from castle.] The custody or government of a castle.

The said Robert and his heirs ought to be and are chief banner-bearers of London in fee, for the castelry, which he and his ancestors have, of Baynard's castle in the said city.

Blount, Anc. Tenures, p. 116.

CA'STLET.* n. s. A small castle.

There was in it a castlet of stone and brick.

Leland's Itinerary.

CA'STLEWARD.* n. s. [from castle and ward.]

An imposition laid upon such of the king's subjects, as dwell within a certain compass of any castle, toward the maintenance of such as watch and ward the castle.

Cowel.

CA'STLING.* n. s. [from castl.] An abortive.

We should rather rely upon the urine of a castling's bladder, a resolution of crabs eyes, or a second distillation of urine, as Helmont hath commended.

Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CA'STOR, or CHESTER, are derived from the Sax. ceaster, a city, town, or castle; and that from the Latin castrum; the Saxons chusing to fix in such places of strength and figure, as the Romans had before built or fortified.

Gibson's Camden.

CA'STOR.* n. s. [castor, Lat.]

1. A beaver. See BEAVER.

CASTOR OIL.* An oil extracted from a tree called by the Americans Palma Christi, growing in the West Indies. It is very strong, and an excellent purgative in medicine.

CASTOR and POLLUX. [In meteorology.] A fiery meteor, which appears sometimes sticking to a part of the ship, in form of one, two, or even three or four balls. When one is seen alone, it is called Helena, which portends the severest part of the storm to be yet behind; two are denominated Castor and Pollux, and sometimes Tyndarides, which portend a cessation of the storm. Chambers.

CASTOREUM.* n. s. [from castor.] In pharmacy.]

A liquid matter inclosed in bags or purses, near the anus of the castor, falsely taken for his testicles.

Chambers.

CA'STORY.* n. s. [from castoreum.] Probably the oil drawn from castoreum, and used in the preparation of colours.

Polish't ivory,
Which cunning craftsman hand hath overlaid
With fayre vermillion or pure castory.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. ix. 41.

CASTRAMETA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. castrametation, from castra meto; Lat.] The art or practice of encamping.

Between Chadlington and Saresden is also an unmentioned camp, either Saxon or Danish, for both are concerned in this question; and their castrametation, even under the most practicable and commodious circumstances of ground, is sometimes ambiguous.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 50.

To CA'STRATE.* v. a. [castr, Lat.]

1. To geld.

Origen—having read that scripture, "There be some that castrate themselves for the kingdom of God," which was but a parabolical speech, he did really, and therefore foolishly, castrate himself.

Bp. Morton, Discharge of Imputations, &c. p. 138.

2. To take away the obscene parts of a writing, Dr. Johnson says. It means to take away any part of a publication; as, a castrated set of Holinshed's Chronicles means a copy, which wants a considerable portion that had once been published in it, and has been removed. It means also, in a general sense, to take away.

Ye castrate the desires of the flesh, and shall obtaine a more ample reward of grace in heaven.

Martin, Marriage of Priests, (1554) Y. i. b.

CASTRATION.* n. s. [from castrate.] The act of gelding.

The largest needle should be used, in taking up the spermatick vessels in castration.

Sharp's Surgery.

CA'STERIL.* n. s. A kind of hawk.

CA'STREL.***

But there is another in the wind, some castrel

That hovers over her, and dares her daily;

Some flicking slave.

Beaumont and Fl. Pilgrim.

That air of hope has blasted many an airy of castrels like yourself.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

CASTRE'NSIAN.* adj. [castronensis, Lat.] Belonging to a camp.

Dict.

CA'SUAL.* adj. [casuel, Fr. from casus, Lat.] Accidental; arising from chance; depending upon chance; not certain.

The revenue of Ireland, both certain and casual, did not rise unto ten thousand pounds.

Davies on Ireland.

That which seemeth most casual and subject to fortune, is yet disposed by the ordinance of God.

Raleigh, History.

Whether found, where casual fire

Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale

Down to the veins of earth.

Milton, P. L.

The commissioners entertained themselves by the fire-side, in general and casual discourses.

Clarendon.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance, rather than of philosophy.

Glawville.

The expences of some of them always exceed their certain annual income; but seldom their casual supplies. I call them casual, in compliance with the common form.

Atterbury.

CA'SUALLY.* adv. [from casual.] Accidentally; without design, or set purpose.

Go, bid my woman

Search for a jewel, that too casually

Hath left mine arm.

Shakspeare.

Wool new shorn, laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, had drunk up the verjuice, though the vessel was without any flaw.

Bacon.

I should have acquainted my judge with one advantage, and which I now casually remember.

Dryden.

CA'SUALNESS.* n. s. [from casual.] *Accidentalness.

CA'SUALTY.* n. s. [from casual.]

1. Accident; a thing happening by chance, not design.

With more patience men endure the losses that befall them by mere casualty, than the damages which they sustain by injustice.

Raleigh, Essays.

That Octavius Caesar should shift his camp that night that it happened to be took by the enemy, was a mere casualty; yet it preserved a person, who lived to establish a total alteration of government in the imperial city of the world.

South.

2. Chance that produces unnatural death.

Builds in the weather on the outward wall,

Ev'n in the force and road of casualty.

Shakspeare.

It is observed in particular nations, that, within the space of two or three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men doubles.

Burnet's Theory.

We find one casualty in our bills, of which, though there be daily talk, there is little effect.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

CA'SUIST.* n. s. [casuiste, Fr. from casus, Lat.]

One that studies and settles cases of conscience.

The judgement of any casuist, or learned divine, concerning the state of a man's soul, is not sufficient to give him confidence.

South.

You can scarce see a bench of porters without two or three casuists in it, that will settle you the rights of princes.

Addison.

Who shall decide, when doctors disagree,
And soundest casuists doubt, like you and me?

Pope.

TO CASUIST.* n. n. [from the noun.] To play the casuist.

We never leave subtilizing and casuisting, till we have straitened and pared that liberal path into a razor's edge to walk on.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, ii. 20.

CASUISTICAL.* adj. [from casuist.] Relating to cases of conscience; containing the doctrine relating to cases.

What arguments they have to beguile poor, simple, unstable souls with, I know not; but surely the practical, casuistical, that is, the principal, vital part of their religion savours very little of spirituality.

South.

There is a generation of men, who have framed their casuistical divinity to a perfect compliance with all the corrupt affections of a man's nature.

South, Serm. ii. 393.

CASUISTRY. n. s. [from casuist.] The science of a casuist; the doctrine of cases of conscience.

This concession would not pass for good casuistry in these ages.

Pope, Odyssey, Notes.

Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
Chicane in furs, and casuistry in lawn.

Pope, Dunciad.

CAT.* n. s. [katz, Teuton: chat, Fr. cat, Sax. old Fr. cat; has Bret. cat; low Lat. catus, cattus. The Persian also is chat. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 317.] A domestick animal that catches mice, commonly reckoned by naturalists the lowest order of the leonine species.

'Twas you incens'd the rabble:

Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which Heaven

Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

A cat, as she beholds the light, draws the ball of her eye small and long, being covered over with a green skin, and dilates it at pleasure.

Peacham on Drawing.

CAT.* n. s. A sort of ship.

There are vessels, at this day, which are common upon the northern part of the English coast, and are called cats. Part of the harbour at Plymouth is called Catwater, undoubtedly from ships of this denomination, which were once common in those parts.

Bryant, Observ. on Rowley's Poems.

CAT.* n. s. A double trivet or tripod, having six feet; so called perhaps, from falling, as it is said of the cat, always on its legs.

CAT in the pan.* [imagined by some to be rightly written Catipan* as coming from Catipania. An unknown correspondent imagines, very naturally, that it is corrupted from Cate in the pan,* Dr. Johnson says. Some have imagined it to be connected with the Ital. accattare; whence accattapane; for a beggar. But our old writers do not countenance this. They write cat in the pan, whether cate or cake be intended or not. "Perchance this turning catte in the pan, is but as he dyd in the kinge's daies." Bp. Gardiner de Obed. transl. Ronn, 1553. "A subtile turning the catte in the panne, or wresting of a false thing to some purpose." Hulot's Dict.]

There is a cunning which we, in England, call the turning of the cat in the pan; which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him.

Bacon.

CAT o' nine tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for the punishment of crimes.

You dread reformers of an impious age,
You awful cat o' nine tails to the stage,
This once be just, and in our cause engage.

Prologue to Vanbrugh's False Friend.

CAT'S-PAW.* n. s. An expression of no great date or good authority in our language; but now common; as, he has been the cat's-paw of the man who flattered him only to serve his own ends.

CAT-EYED.* adj. [from cat and eye.] Having eyes like a cat.

If cat-ey'd, then a Pallas is their love;

If freckled, she's a party-colour'd dove.

Dryden, Lucret.

CATABAPTIST.* n. s. [from Gr. κατά and βαπτίζω.] He who is against, or who abuses, Baptism.

Of these anabaptists, or catabaptists, who differ no more than Bavius and Mævius, Alstedius maketh fourteen sorts.

Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 23.

CATACHRESIS.* n. s. [κατάχρησις, abuse.] It is, in rhetoric, the abuse of a trope, when the words are too far wrested from their native signification, or when one word is abusively put for another, for want of the proper word; as, a voice beautiful to the ear.

Smith's Rhetorick.

I ask — if now and then he does not offer at a catachresis — wresting and torturing a word into another meaning.

Dryden, Ess. on Dram. Poesy.

Their skill in astronomy dwindled into that, which, by a great catachresis, is called judicial astrology.

Stillingsfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 3.

CATACHRESTICAL.* adj. [from catachresis.] Contrary to proper use; forced; far fetched.

A catachrestical and far derived similitude it holds with men, that is, in a bifurcation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CATACHRESTICALLY.* adv. [from catachrestical.] In a forced or exaggerated manner.

Where, in divers places of Holy Writ, the denunciation against groves is so express, it is frequently to be taken but catachrestically.

Evclyn, iv. § 4.

CA'TACLYSM.* n. s. [old Fr. cataclisme, from Gr. κατακλύσμι.] A deluge; an inundation; used generally for the universal deluge.

The opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such, as held, that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

CA'TACOMBS.* n. s. [from κατά and κομβος, a hollow or cavity. It has been pretended that the word was formerly catatombs from κατά and τομπος, meaning a subterranean tomb. V. Morin, Dict. Etymol. Fr. and Gr. But catacombs is the true expression. See Greenhill's Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 96.] Subterraneous cavities for the burial of the dead; of which there are a great number about three miles from Rome, supposed to be the caves and cells where the primitive christians hid and assembled themselves, and where they interred the martyrs, which are accordingly visited with devotion. But, anciently, the word catacomb was only understood of the tombs of St. Peter and St. Paul.

Chambers.

On the side of Naples, are the catacombs, which must have been full of stench, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches.

Addison.

CATACOU*STICKS.* n. s. pl. [Fr. catacoustique, from Gr. κατά and ακουω.] The science of reflected sounds; or that part of acousticks, which considers the properties of echoes.

We will not be out-braved thus. Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

CATARACT.† n. s. [old Fr. cataracte, Cotgrave; from the Gr. καταράκτη, which is from καταρρασσα, to fall with force.] A fall of water from on high; a shoot of water; a cascade.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks; rage, blow!
You cataracts and hurricanes, spout,
Till you have drench'd our steeples. Shakspeare.

What if all

Her stores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?

No sooner he, with them of man and beast
Select for life, shall in the ark be lodg'd,
And shelter'd round; but all the cataracts
Of heav'n set open, on the earth shall pour Rain, day and night. Milton, P. L.

Torrents and loud impetuous cataracts,
Through roads abrupt, and rude unfashion'd tracts,
Run down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

CATARACT. [In medicine.] A suffusion of the eye, when little clouds, motes, and flies, seem to float about in the air; when confirmed, the pupil of the eye is either wholly, or in part, covered, and shut up with a little thin skin, so that the light has no admittance. Quincy.

Saladine hath a yellow milk, which hath likewise much acrimony; for it cleanseth the eyes: it is good also for cataracts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CATARRH.† n. s. [old Fr. catarrhe, from the Gr. καταρρῆω, defluo.] A defluxion of a sharp serum from the glands about the head and throat, generally occasioned by a diminution of insensible perspiration, or cold, wherein what should pass by the skin, ouzes out upon those glands, and occasions irritations. The causes are whatsoever occasions

C A T

They have caught up every thing greedily, with that busy minute curiosity, and unsatisfactory acquisitiveness, which Seneca calls the disease of the Greeks. Pope.

I've perus'd her well;

Beauty and honour in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

10. To please; to seize the affections; to charm.

For I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractic'd to persuade,
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But, caught myself, lie struggling in the snare. Dryden.

11. To receive any contagion or disease.

I cannot name the disease, and it is caught
Of you that yet are well. Shakspeare, Wind. Tale.

Those measles,

Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

In sooth I know not why I am so sad:

It wearies me; you say it wearies you;
But how I caught it, found it, or came by it,
I am to learn. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

The softest of our British ladies expose their necks and arms to the open air, which the men could not do without catching cold, for want of being accustomed to it. Addison, Guardian.

Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.

12. To catch at. To endeavour suddenly to lay hold on.

Saucy lictors

Will catch at us like strumpets, and scald rhimers
Ballad us out of tune. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Make them catch at all opportunities of subverting the state.
Addison, State of the War.

13. To catch as catch may. To seize indiscriminately.

Mine, or thine be nothing, all things equal,
And catch as catch may, be proclaim'd.

Beaumont and Fl. Loyal Subject.

14. To catch up. To snatch.

He was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words. 2 Cor. xii. 4.

Sometimes they thought he might be only shown,
And for a time caught up to God, as once
Moves was in the mount, and missing long. Milton, P. R. ii. 14.

15. To catch a Tartar. To be caught in the trap one has laid for another; instead of taking an enemy, to be taken by him. The phrase is probably owing to some particular story.

In this defeat they lost about 5000 men, besides those that were taken prisoners:—so that, instead of catching the Tartar, they were caught themselves.

Life of the Duke of Tyrconnel, 1689.

To CATCH. v. n.

1. To be contagious; to spread infection, or mischief.

'Tis time to give them physick, their diseases
Are grown so catching. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

CATCHPOLL.† n. s. [from catch and poll, Dr. Johnson says; that is, seizing a person by the poll or neck. The Welsh have ccispol for this word. The old French language "cachereau, un bailiff." Lacombe; and "chacepol, sergent préposé a la levée des impots." Roquefort. Catchpoll, though now it be used as a word of contempt, yet, in ancient times, seems to have been used without reproach, for such as we now call serjeants of the mace, or any other that uses to arrest men upon any cause. Cowel.] A serjeant; a bumbailiff.

When day was come, the magistrats sent cachepolls, and seiden, deliver thou the men.

Wichiffe, Acts xvi.

They call all temporal businesses undersheriffries, as if they were but matters for undersheriffs and catchpolls; though many times those undersheriffries do more good than their high speculations.

Bacon, Essays.

One drop of blood

Shed from this arm is recompence enough. Though you had cut the throats of all the Catchpols

In France, nay in the world.

Beaum. and Fl., Honest Man's Fortune.

Another monster,

Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd

A catchpoll, whose polluted hands the gods,

With force incredible and magick charms,

First have endr'd, if he his ample palm

Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay

Of debtor.

Philips.

CA'TCHUP.* n. s. sometimes written, improperly, ketchup. A poignant liquor made from boiled mushrooms, mixed with salt; used in cookery to add a pleasant flavour to sauces.

CATE.† n. s. Food; something to be eaten. This is scarcely read in the singular, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, to be found, on good authority, See CATES.

Even the Christmas pyc, which in its very nature is a kind of consecrated cate, and a badge of distinction, is often forbidden to the druid of the family.

Tatler, No. 255.

We'll see what cates you have,

For soldiers stomachs always serve them well.

Shakespeare.

CATECHÉTICAL. adj. [from κατηχέω.] Consisting of questions and answers.

Socrates introduced a catechetical method of arguing; he would ask his adversary question upon question, till he convinced him out of his own mouth, that his opinions were wrong.

Addison, Spectator.

CATECHÉTICALLY. adv. [from catechetical.] In the way of question and answer.

CATECHÉTICK.* adj. Catechetical.

Fell, Life of Hammond, § 1.

To CA'TECHISE.† v. a. [Gr. κατηχέω.]

1. To instruct by asking questions, and correcting the answers.

I will catechise the world for him; that is, make questions, and bid them answer.

Shakespeare, Othello.

κατηχέω is derived from ἐχέω, and significth originally and properly catechizing, or such a kind of teaching wherein the principles of religion, or of any art or science, are often inculcated, and by sounding and resounding beat into the ears of children or novices; but yet it is taken in Holy Scripture in a larger sense, not only for catechizing of children, but instructing men of riper years in the doctrine of salvation.

Featley, Dippers Dipl. p. 31.

Had those three thousand souls been catechised by our modern casuists, we had seen a wide difference. Decay of Piety.

2. To question; to interrogate; to examine; to try by interrogatories.

Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise

My piked man of countries.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Catechise gross ignorance; purge Italy of luxury and riot.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 59.

There flies about a strange report,

Of some express arriv'd at court;

I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,

And catechis'd in every street.

Swift.

CA'TECHISER.† n. s. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

He that is a reader, preacher, or catechiser.

Con. and Can. Eccl. § 56.

This is an admirable way of teaching, wherein the catechised will at length find delight, and by which the catechiser, if he once get the skill of it, will draw out of ignorant and silly souls even the dark and deep points of religion.

Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 21.

Hark you, good Maria,
Have you got a good catechiser here?

Beaum. and Fl., Tamer tamed.

CA'TECHISING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Interrogation; examination.

You must hear long-winded exercises, sippings, and catechisings, which you are not given to. B. Jonson, Epicæne.

CA'TECHISM. n. s. [from κατηχισμός.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been sundry always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews, even till this day, have their catechisms.

Hooker.

*He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CA'TECHIST. n. s. [κατηχιστής.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

None of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in this foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop. Hammond, Fundam.

The principles of Christianity, briefly and catechistically taught them, is enough to save their souls. South, Sermon vii. 100.

CATECHUMEN.† n. s. [old Fr. catechumene, from the Gr. κατηχούμενος.]

1. One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Stillington.

2. Generally, one who is in the first rudiments of any profession.

The same language is still held to the catechumens in Jacobitism. Bolingbroke to Wyndham.

CATECHUMENICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens. Dict.

CATECHUMENIST.* n. s. The same as catechumen.

Hence their forenamed authors assume, that the children of the faithful dying without baptism, may be thought to receive the baptism of the spirit, as well as those catechumenists spoken of, &c. Bp. Morton, Cath. Appeal, p. 248.

CATEGO'RICAL.† adj. [from category, old Fr. categorique. Cotgrave.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know whether the parliament's commissioners did believe, that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts's Logic.

CATEGO'RICALLY.† adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

We must not look, from them, for either discourses, or demonstrations, or positions, directly and categorically to this purpose. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 295.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts where ever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child's Discourse of Trade.

CATEGORY. n. s. [Gr. κατηγορία.] A class; a rank: an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category.

Cheyne.

CATENA'RIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenation curve is formed by a rope or chain, hanging freely between two points of suspension. Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow. Cheyne, Philosophical Principles.

To CA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat.] To chain. Dict.

CATENA'TION. n. s. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or consering union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CA'TER. v. n. [from cate.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed,

Yea providently caters for the sparrow,

Be comfort to my age.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

CA'TER.† n. s. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted perhaps for caterer, Dr. Johnson says; and abbreviated from acater, old English, according to Mr. Mason.

Both are mistaken. There are few substantives more frequent in our ancient language than cater.

"A cater, or purveyor of victuals," Huloet's Dict.

"Cater, a steward, manciple, provider of meats,"

Barret's Alv. "A cater, Fr. despenseur," Sherwood's Fr. and Eng. Dict.

We call to witness of their fastings, and great pains they take for the church, their faces and bellies, their caters, butlers, and cooks.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 377.

Your meat should be both neat, and cleanly handled.

See, Sweet, I am cook myself, and mine own cater.

Beaum. and Fl. Women plea'd.

A lady's dainty hand,

Th' ambitious cater of her own delight,

Had curiously rais'd an antick band

Of banquet powers.

Beaumont's Psycho, iv. 127.

The servant for employment; the cater for the provision, and the cook of the provision.

Austin's Hæc Homo, p. 116.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcomer acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

CA'TER. n. s. [quatre, Fr.] The four of cards and dice.

CA'TER-COUSIN. n. s. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are source cater-cousins.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins?

Rymer, Tragedies of the last Age.

CA'TERER. n. s. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the providore or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;

Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes;

Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest;

And the cook, in his dressing, comply with their wishes.

B. Jonson, Tarcn Academy.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletic vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer.

South.

CA'TERESS. n. s. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge most innocent nature,

As if she would her children should be riotous

With her abundance! she, good cateress,

Means her provision only to the good.

Milton, Comus.

CATERPILLAR. n. s. [This word Skinner and Minshew are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel; it seems easily deducible from cates, food, and piller, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm, which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth off dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Anster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Any thing voracious and useless.

CATERPILLAR. n. s. [scorpioides, Lat.] The name of a plant. Miller.

TO CATERWAUL. v. n. [from cat, and waul, to howl. Formerly written caterwaul by Chaucer, and revived by Pope.]

1. To make a noise as cats in rutting time.
She licks her fair round face, and frisks abroad,
To shew her fur, and to be caterwaul'd. Pope.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.
What a caterwauling do you keep here? If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.
Was no dispute between
The caterwauling brethren. Hudibras.

CATERY.* n. s. The depository of victuals purchased.
"Serjeant de l'acaterie, serjeant of the catery."
Kelham, Norm. Dict.

CATES. n. s. [Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate, which is not likely, because Junius observes that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular, Dr. Johnson says. I have shewn that it has. And the etymology is rather from the old Fr. acat. See ACATES.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, Sir, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates. R. Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content
With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious
Of cates by land and sea far fetcht and sent. Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton, P. L.

They by th' alluring odour drawn in haste
Fly to the dulcet cates, and cronding sip
Their palatable baue. Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Thou with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbuthnot.

CATFISH. n. s. The name of a sea-fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Philips.

CATGUT.* n. s.

1. A string for fiddles and other instruments, made of the intestines of animals.
2. A species of linen or canvas with wide interstices.

CATHARIST.* n. s. [from the Gr. kathagos, pure.] One who holds himself more pure than others; one whom Coles denominates a puritan. It is indeed a name that has been usurped by sectarists at various periods.

They whom they called in ancient times Catharists as also the Donatists, — make good proof hereof.

Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon, p. 88.

Catharists — deny children baptism, affirming that they have no original sin, and pretending themselves to be pure and without sin. Pagitt's Hecesiography, p. 28.

CATHARPINGS. n. s. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks front one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck; they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHARTICAL. adj. [Fr. cathartique, from the Gr. καθαρτιος.]

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle, Sceptical Chymistry.

CATHARTICALNESS. n. s. [from cathartical.] Purging quality.

CATHARTICKS. n. s. Purging medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents from the pylorus to the rectum: and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartick hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful power,
Emetics ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the catharticks or purgatives of the soul. Addison, Spectator

CATHEAD. n. s. A kind of fossil.

The nodules with leaves in them, called catheads, seem to consist of a sort of iron stone, not unlike that which is found in the rocks near Whitehaven in Cumberland, where they call them catscaups. Woodward on Fossils.

CATHEAD. n. s. [In a ship.] A piece of timber with two shivers at one end, having a rope and a block, to which is fastened a great iron hook, to trice up the anchor from the hawse to the top of the fore-castle. Sea Dict.

CATHE'DRAL. adj. [from the Gr. kathēdra; whence the Lat. cathedra, a chair of authority; an episcopal see; Fr. cathédrale.]

1. Episcopal; containing the see of a bishop.

A cathedral church is that wherein there are two or more persons, with a bishop at the head of them, that do make as it were one body politick. Ayliffe, Parergon.

Methought I sat in seat of majesty
In the cathedral church of Westminster. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. Belonging to an episcopal church.

His constant and regular assisting at the cathedral service was never interrupted by the sharpness of weather. Locke.

3. In low phrase, antique; venerable; old. This seems to be the meaning in the following lines.

Here aged trees cathedral walks compose,
And mount the hill in venerable rows;
There the green infants in their beds are laid. Pope.

CATHE'DRAL. n. s. The head church of a diocese.

There is nothing in Leghorn so extraordinary as the cathedral, which a man may view with pleasure, after he has seen St. Peter's. Addison on Italy

CA'THEDRATED.* adj. [from the Lat. cathedra.] Relating to the authority of the chair, or office, of a teacher. In Spain, a cathedratick doctor [catedratico] is a well-known phrase.

If his reproof be private, or with the cathedrated authority of a prælector or public reader.

Whitlock, Manners of the Eng. p. 385.

CA'THERINE PEAR. See PEAR.

For streaks of red were mingled there,

Such as are on a Catherine pear,

The side that's next the sun.

Suckling.

CA'THETER.† n. s. [Gr. καθετήρ, from καθίμι, to introduce.] A hollow and somewhat crooked instrument, to thrust into the bladder, to assist in bringing away the urine, when the passage is stopped by a stone or gravel.

A large clyster, suddenly injected, hath frequently forced the urine out of the bladder; but if it fail, a catheter must help you.

Wiseman's Surgery.

CA'THOLES. n. s. [In a ship.] Two little holes astern above the gun-room ports, to bring in a cable or hawser through them to the capstain, when there is occasion to heave the ship astern.

Sea Dict.

CATHO'LICAL.* adj. [Gr. καθολικός, Lat. catholicus.] General.

The catholic nativities were so much believed by the ancient kings, saith Haly, that they enquired into the genitures of the principal nati under their dominions.

Gregory's Works, p. 31.

Thou the head shalt be o'er all:

Have I not sworn thee king, true king catholicall?

More, Song of the Soul, i. 37.

CATHO'LICISM.† n. s. [Fr. catholicisme.]

1. Adherence to the catholicick church. This is all which Dr. Johnson offers on this sense of the word, without any example. Adherence to a part of the catholicick church is shewn in the following example.

Though they conform to the Roman catholic mode of worship, they are looked upon in the light of unbelievers; but—all the gipsies I have conversed with, assured me of their sound catholicism.

Swainburne, Travels through Spain, Lett. 29.

2. Universality, or the orthodox faith of the whole church, called catholicick, that is, universal.

There is a church which is holy, and which is catholic; and I understand that church alone, which is both catholic and holy; and, being this holiness and catholicism are but affections of this church which I believe, I must first declare what is the nature and notion of the church, &c.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

Near akin to their notion of church-authority, is that of catholicism.—A particular church, indeed, may be catholic in one sense, i. e. true, sound, and pure, and holding the catholic doctrine; but not catholic, i. e. universal. To say Roman-Catholic therefore, as they [the Papists] mean it, is to say part-whole; which is a contradiction. The church of Rome, notwithstanding her boasts, is but a part of the catholic church.

Trapp, Popery truly stated, i. § 2.

TO CATHO'LICISE.* v. n. To catholicise it; to play the catholicick; to become a catholicick.

Cotgrave in V. Catholicizer.

CA'THOLICK.† adj. [catholique, Fr. καθολικός, universal or general.]

1. The church of Jesus Christ is called catholic, because it extends throughout the world, and is not limited by time.

Catholic signifieth not the Romish church: it signifieth the consent of all true teaching churches of all times, and all ages.

Rogers, in Foxe's Acts and Monuments, 1555.

These truths are said to be catholic, because they are believed by all the faithful.

3. Catholic is often set in opposition to heretick or sectary, and to schismatick.

4. Catholic, or canonical epistles, are seven in number; that of St. James, two of St. Peter, three of St. John, and that of St. Jude. They are called catholic, because they are directed to all the faithful, and not to any particular church; and canonical, because they contain excellent rules of faith and morality.

Calmet.

5. General, in the common sense.

We observe the Fathers to use the word catholic for nothing else but general or universal, in the ordinary or vulgar sense; as the catholic re-urrection is the resurrection of all men; the catholic opinion, the opinion of all men.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

Doubtless the success of those your great and catholic endeavours will promote the empire of man over nature, and bring plentiful accession of glory to your nation.

Glanville, Scep sis.

Those systems undertake to give an account of the formation of the universe, by mechanical hypotheses of matter, moved either uncertainly, or according to some catholic laws.

Ray.

CA'THOLICKLY.* adv. [from catholic.] Generally.

No druggist of the soul bestow'd on all

So catholicly, a curing cordiall.

Sir L. Cary, Elegy on the death of Donne.

CA'THOLICKNESS.* n. s. [from catholic.] Universality.

One may judge of the catholicness, which Romanists brag of, and challenge on two accounts.

Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 10.

CATHO'LICON. n. s. [from catholic, καθολικόν ἱαμα.] An universal medicine.

Preservation against that sin, is the contemplation of the last judgment. This is indeed a catholicon against all; but we find it particularly applied by St. Paul to judging and despising our brethren.

Government of the Tongue.

CA'TILINISM.* n. s. An old substantive in our language for conspiracy, from Catiline the conspirator against his own country. [Fr. catilinisme.]

Cotgrave, and Coles.

CA'TRINS. n. s. [kattkens, Dutch. In botany.] An assemblage of imperfect flowers hanging from trees, in manner of a rope or cat's tail; serving as male blossoms, or flowers of the trees, by which they are produced.

Chambers.

CA'TLIKE. adj. [from cat and like.] Like a cat.

A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,

Lay couching head on ground, with catlike watch.

Shakspeare.

CA'TLING. n. s.

1. A dismembering knife, used by surgeons. Harris.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for catgut; the materials of fiddle strings.

What musick there will be in him after Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not. But, I am sure, none; unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make catlings of.

Shakspeare.

3. The down or moss growing about walnut trees, resembling the hair of a cat. Harris.

CA'TMINT.† n. s. [Sax. cattermunt, catavia, Lat.] The name of a plant. Miller.

CATO'NIAN.* adj. [An old English adjective, meaning what resembles the manners of Cato. Fr. Catonien. Cotgrave.] Grave; severe. Dict.

CATO'PTER.* n. s. [Gr. κατοπτρον.] A kind of optick

CATO'PTRON. } glass; an optical instrument. Dict.

CATO'PTICAL. adj. [from catoptrick.] Relating to catoptricks, or vision by reflection.

C A V

A catoptrical or dioptrical hant is superiour to any, vitrifying the hardest substances. Arbutnot on Air.

CATOPTRICKS.† n. s. [Fr. catoptrique, from the Gr. κατοπτρον, a looking glass.] That part of opticks which treats of vision by reflection.

To see strange uncouth sights by catoptricks.

CATPIPE. n. s. [from cat and pipe.] The same with catcal, an instrument that makes a squeaking noise.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks can read in any book but their own; put them out of their road once, and they are mere catpipes and dunces. L'Estrange.

CAT'S-EYE. n. s. A stone.

Cat's-eye is of a glistering grey, interchanged with a straw colour. Woodward on Fossils.

CAT'S-FOOT. n. s. An herb; the same with alchoof, or ground-ivy; which see.

CAT'S-HEAD. n. s. A kind of apple.

Cat's-head, by some called the go-no-further, is a very large apple, and a good bearer. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CAT'SILVER. n. s. A kind of fossile.

Catsilver is composed of plates that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic; and is of three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward on Fossils.

CATS-TAIL. n. s.

1. A long round substance, that grows in winter upon nut-trees, pines, &c.

2. A kind of reed which bears a spike like the tail of a cat. Philips's World of Words.

CATSUP. n. s. A kind of Indian pickles, imitated by pickled mushrooms. See CATCHUP.

And, for our home-bred British cheer, Botanico, &c., and cavier. Swift.

CATTLE.† n. s. [a word of very common use, but of doubtful or unknown etymology. It is derived by Skinner, Menage, and Spelman, from capitalia, quæ ad caput pertinent; personal goods; in which sense chattels is yet used in our law. Mandeville uses catele for price. The old Fr. catel means moveables of any kind. Kellham, Norm. Diet. But see CHATEL. A learned friend informs me, that chattail is a provincial term about Lyons in France for all the beasts of every kind that are on an estate.]

1. Beasts of pasture: not wild nor domestick.

And God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth after his kind. Gen. i. 25.

2. It is used in reproach of human beings.

Boys and women are for the most part cattle of this colour. Shakspeare, As you like it.

CAVALCADE.† n. s. [old Fr. cavalcade, "a riding or a road of horse, whence faire la cavalcade, to course or range up and down on horseback." Cotgrave. It is from the Ital. cavalcare; low Lat. caballicare, from caballus; whence also the Span. cabalgar.] A procession on horseback.

Your cavalcade the fair spectators view,
From their high standings, yet look up to you:
From your brave train each singles out a ray,
And longs to date a conquest from your day. Dryden.

How must the heart of the old man rejoice, when he saw such a numerous cavalcade of his own raising? Addison.

CAVALIER.† n. s. [cavalier, Fr.]

1. A horseman; a knight.

C A U

It is reported, that Tiliacotius had at one time in his house twelve German counts, nineteen French marquesses, and a hundred Spanish cavaliers. Taller, No. 260.

2. A gay sprightly military man.

For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd
With one appearing hair, that will not follow
These cull'd and choice drawn cavaliers to France?

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

Sedition cometh of tyranny, insolency, or mutinous disposition of certain captains, cavaliers, or ringleaders of the people.

Raleigh, Acts of Empire, p. 101.

3. The appellation of the party of King Charles the First; so called from the quietty which they affected in opposition to the sour faction of the parliament.

Each party grows proud of that appellation, which their adversaries at first intend as a reproach: of this sort were the Guelph and Gibelines, Huguenots, and Cavaliers. Swift.

4. In fortification, a mount or elevation of earth, raised in a fortress, to ledge cannon for scouring the field, and to overlook and command all around the place.

Our casemates, cavaliers, and counterscarps,
Are well survey'd by all our engineers.

CAVALIER. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Gay; sprightly; warlike.

2. Generous; brave.

The people are naturally not valiant, and not much cavalier. Now it is the nature of cowards to hurt, where they can receive none. Suckling.

3. Disdainful; haughty.

CAVALIERLY.† adv. [from cavalier.] Haughtily; arrogantly; disdainfully.

Several writers, who profess to believe the Christian religion, treat Moses and his dispensation so cavalierly, that one would suspect they thought the abandoning him could have no consequences destructive of Christianity.

Warburton, Alliance of Ch. and State, (1st. edit.) p. 157.

He [Warburton] very cavalierly tells us, that these notes were among the amusements of his younger years.

Edwards, Canons of Criticism, Pref. p. 9.

CAVALI'ERNESS.* n. s. [from cavalier.] Haughty or disdainful conduct.

CAVALRY.† n. s. [cavalerie, Fr. Formerly written, like the French word, in four syllables. "These regiments and cavallery were contented to enter Holland," Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, p. 113.] Horse troops; bodies of men furnished with horses for war.

If a state run most to gentlemen, and the husbandmen and plowmen be but as their workfolks, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable bands of foot.

Their cavalry, in the battle of Blenheim, could not sustain the shock of the British horse. Addison on the War.

TO CAVATE. v. a. [cavo, Lat.] To hollow out; to dig into a hollow.

CAVATION. n. s. [from cavo, Lat. In architecture.] The hollowing or underdigging of the earth for cellarage; allowed to be the sixth part of the height of the whole building. Philips.

CAUDAL.* adj. [from the Lat. cauda.] Relating to the tail of an animal.

The tail, instead of scuta, is furnished with sub-caudal squamæ, which are counted not singly, but by pairs.

Russell on Indian Serpents.

CAUDATE.* } adj. [Lat. caudatus.] Having a tail;
CAUDATED. } tailed.

How comate, caudate, crinite stars are fram'd,
I know.

Fairfax, Tasso.

CA'UDLE. n. s. [chaudeau, Fr.] A mixture of wine and other ingredients, given to women in childbed, and sick persons.

Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the help of a hatchet.

He had good broths, caudle, and such like; and I believe he did drink some wine. Shakspeare, Henry VI. Wiseman, Surgery.

To CA'UDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To make caudle; to mix as caudle.

Will the cold brook,
Candied with ice, caudle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'ernight's surfeit? Shakspeare, Timon.

CAVE.† n. s. [Fr. cave, Lat. cavea, from cavus, hollow; which is from the Gr. χᾶος, Eo kek χαφος, chavus. V. Morin, Ezym. Dict. Fr. and Gr.]

1. A cavern; a den; a hole entering horizontally under the ground; a habitation in the earth.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Bid him bring his power
Before sun-rising, lest his son George fall
Into the blind cave of eternal night. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They did square, and carve, and polish their stone and marble works, even in the very cave of the quarry. Watson.

Through this a cave was dug with vast expence,
The work it seem'd of some suspicious prince. Dryden.

2. Hollow; any hollow place. Not used.

The object of sight doth strike upon the pupil of the eye directly; whereas the cave of the ear doth hold off the sound a little. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dwell in a cave.

Such as we
Cave here, haunt here, are outlaws. Shakspeare.

To CAVE.* v. a. [Fr. caver, to hollow, Cotgrave; from the Lat. cavare.] To make hollow.

Under a steep hill's side it placed was,
There where the mouldred earth had cur'd the bank. Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 33.

CA'VEAT. n. s. [caveat, Lat. let him beware.] Intimation of caution.

A caveat is an intimation given to some ordinary or ecclesiastical judge by the act of man, notifying to him, that he ought to beware how he acts in such or such an affair. Ayliffe.

The chiefest caveat in reformation must be to keep out the Scots. Spenser on Ireland.

I am in danger of commencing poet, perhaps laureat; pray desire Mr. Rowe to enter a caveat. Trumbull to Pope.

CA'VERN.† n. s. [old Fr. cavérne, from caverna, Lat.] A hollow place in the ground.

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Shakspeare, Julius Cæsar.

Monsters of the foaming deep,
From the deep ooze, and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flounce and tremble in unwieldy joy. Thomson.

CA'VERNEB. adj. [from cavern.]

1. Full of caverns; hollow; excavated.

Embattled troops, with flowing banners, pass
Through flow'ry meads, delighted; nor distrust
The smiling surface; whilst the cavern'd ground
Bursts fatal, and involves the hopes of war
In fiery whirls. Phillips.

High at his head from out the cavern'd rock,
In living rills a gushing fountain broke.* Pope's Odyssey.

2. Inhabiting a cavern.

No bandit fierce, no tyrant mad with pride,
No cavern'd hermit, rest self-satisfy'd. Pope.

CA'VERNOUS. adj. [from cavern.] Full of caverns.

No great damages are done by earthquakes, except only in those countries which are mountainous, and consequently stony and cavernous underneath. Woodward, Nat. History.

CAVE'SSON. n. s. [Fr. In horsemanship.] A sort of noseband, sometimes made of iron, and sometimes of leather or wood; sometimes flat, and sometimes hollow or twisted; which is put upon the nose of a horse, to forward the suppling and breaking of him.

An iron cavesson saves and spares the mouths of young horses when they are broken; for, by the help of it, they are accustomed to obey the hand, and to bend the neck and shoulders, without hurting their mouths, or spoiling their bars with the bit. Farrier's Dict.

CAUF.† n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. cavus, hollow.] A chest with holes in the top, to keep fish alive in the water. Phillips, World of Words.

CAUGHT, particip. pass. [from To catch; which see.]

CAVIA'RE.† n. s. [the etymology uncertain, unless it come from garum, Lat. sauce, or pickle, made of fish salted, Dr. Johnson says. It is adopted from the Barb. or Vulg. Græc. καβίρει, or καυίρει, which signifies the same thing. In Italian, it is caviare, and in old Fr. cavial.]

Sturgeons, the roe of which makes caviare.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 187.

There's a fishmonger's boy with Caviar, Sir.

Beaumont and Fl., Elder Brother.

He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat auchovies, maccaroni, and caviare, because he loves 'em.

R. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Certain of our merchants having seized upon a hundred butts of caviare in the vessel called the Swallow, riding in the downs. Milton, State-Letters.

The eggs of a sturgeon being salted, and made up into a mass, were first brought from Constantinople by the Italians, and called cavine. Grew, Museum.

CAVIER. n. s. A corruption of caviare. See CATSUP.

To CA'VIL.† v. n. [caviller, Fr. cavillari, Lat.] To raise captious and frivolous objections. Formerly to mock, or scoff. Huloet's Dict. See CAVILLATION.

I'll give thrice so much land
To any well deserving friend;

But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

My lord, you do not well, in obstinacy

To cavil in the course of this contract. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

He cavils first at the poet's insisting so much upon the effects of Achilles's rage. Pope, Notes on the Iliad.

To CA'VIL. v. a. To receive or treat with objections.

Thou didst accept them: wilt thou enjoy the good,
Then cavil the conditions? Milton, L.

CA'VIL. n. s. [from the verb.] False or frivolous objections.

Wiser men consider how subject the best things have been unto cavil, when wits, possessed with disdain, have set them up as their mark to shoot at. Hooker.

Several divines, in order to answer the cavils of those adversaries to truth and morality, began to find out farther explanations. Swift.

CAVILLA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. cavillation, or cavellation, "finesse, ruse, subtilité, adresse," Lacombe; and in our old language, it formerly meant a merry taunt, a subtle forged tale. Huloet's Dict. Lat. cavillatio.] The disposition to make captious objection; the practice of objecting.

It is now necessary to make answer to the subtil persua-sions and sophisticall cavillations of the Papistes.

Abp. Cramer, Doct. of the Sacrament, (1550.) fol. 112.

They shall not thereby pick any matter of cavillation against us. Martin, Marriage of Priests, (1554.) S.i.
 Persuading themselves, by cavillations and sophistications, to excuse the impiety of their false oaths.

Raleigh, Art of Empire, p. 69.
 I am resolved, when I come to my answer, not to trick my innocency (as I writ to the lords) by cavillations or voidances.

Bacon, to K. James I.
 I might add so much concerning the large odds between the ease of the eldest churches, in regard of heathens, and ours, in respect of the church of Rome, that very cavillation itself should be satisfied. Hooker.

CA'VILLER. † n. s. [cavillator, Lat.] Formerly a mocker. See CAVILLATION. A man fond of making objections; an unfair adversary; a captious disputant.

Socrates held all philosophers, cavillers and madmen.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 167.
 The candour which Horace shews, is that which distinguishes a critick from a caviller; he declares, that he is not offended at little faults, which may be imputed to inadvertency.

Addison, Guardian.
 There is, I grant, room still left for a caviller to misrepresent my meaning. Atterbury, Pref. to his Sermons.

CA'VILLING.* n. s. [from cavil.] Dispute; captious objection.

These, many times, instead of convincing the judgments of sober persons, fall to cavillings and menacings.

Bp. Taylor, Art of Handson, p. 66.

CA'VILLINGLY. † adv. [from cavilling.] In a cavilling manner. Sherewood.

CA'VILLINGNESS.* n. s. [from cavilling.] The disposition to cavil.

CA'VILLOUS. † adj. [old Fr. cavilleux.] Unfair in argument; full of objections.

Those persons are said to be cavillous and unfaithful advocates, by whose fraud and iniquity justice is destroyed.

Argliffe.

CA'VILLOUSLY.* adv. [from cavillous.] In a cavillous manner.

Since that so cavillously is urged against us.

Milton, Art. of Peace between the E. of Orm. and the Irish.

CA'VIZN. n. s. [French. In the military art.] A natural hollow, fit to cover a body of troops, and consequently facilitate their approach to a place.

Dict.

CA'VITY. † n. s. [old Fr. cavité, from cavitas, Latin.] Hollowness; hollow; hollow place.

The vowels are made by a free passage of breath, vocalized through the cavity of the mouth; the said cavity being differently shaped by the postures of the throat, tongue, and lips.

Holder, Elements of Speech.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishing kind. Dryden, Dedication to Æneid.

Materials packed together with wonderful art in the several cavities of the skull. Addison, Spectator.

An instrument with a small cavity, like a small spoon, dipt in oil, may fetch out the stone. Arbutnot on Dent.

If the atmosphere was reduced into water, it would not make an orb above thirty-two feet deep, which would soon be swallowed up by the cavity of the sea, and the depressed parts of the earth. Bentley.

CAUK. n. s. A coarse talky spar. Woodward.

CA'UKY. adj. [from cauk.] A white, opaque, cauky spar, shot or pointed. Woodward on Fossils.

CAUL. † n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The net in which women inclose their hair; the hinder part of a woman's cap.

Ne spared they to strip her naked all,
 Then when they had depoil'd her tire and caul,
 Such as she was, their eyes might her behold.

Spenser.

Her head with ringlets of her hair is crown'd,
 And in a golden caul the curls are bound. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Any kind of small net.

An Indian mantle of feathers, and the feathers wrought into a caul of packthread. Grew, Musæum.

3. The omentum; the integument in which the guts are inclosed.

The caul serves for the warming the lower belly, like an apron or piece of woollen cloth. Hence a certain gladiator, whose caul Galen cut out, was so liable to suffer cold, that he kept his belly constantly covered with wool. Ray.

The beast they then divide, and disunite

The ribs and limbs, observant of the rite:

On these, in double cauls involv'd with art,
 The choicest morsels lay.

Pope's Odyssey.

4. The little membrane found on some children, encompassing the head, when born; esteemed an infallible preservative against drowning, and also medical in some diseases! It is thought a good omen to the child itself; and the vulgar belief is, that whoever obtains it by purchase will be fortunate. It is an old superstition, which keeps its ground to this day; for, while this account was passing my eye, I observed more than one advertisement of cauls to be sold in the newspapers. The credulous seamen are yet said to be purchasers!

You were born with a caul on your head.

B. Jonson, Alchymist.

If a child be borne with a caule on his head, he shall be very fortunate. Melton's Astrologaster, p. 45.

A person possessed of a caul, may know the state of health of the party who was born with it: if alive and well, it is firm and crisp; if dead or sick, relaxed and flaccid!

CA'ULET.* n. s. [Celt. and old Fr. caul; old Fr. caulet also, a kind of cabbage; Lat. caulis.] Colewort, pronounced in many places collet; as cauliflower is colliflower. See COLE and COLEWORT.

CAUL'FEROUS. adj. [from caulis, a stalk, and fero, to bear, Lat.] A term in botany for such plants as have a true stalk, which a great many have not.

CAULIFLOWER. n. s. [from caulis, Lat. the stalk of a plant.] A species of cabbage.

Towards the end of the month, earth up your winter plants and salad herbs; and plant forth your cauliflowers and cabbage, which were sown in August. Erclyn's Kalendar.

To CAULK. See To CALK.

To CA'UPONATE. v. n. [cauponor, Lat.] To keep a victualling-house; to sell wine or victuals. Dict.

To CA'UPONISE.* v. n. [from the Lat. cauponor.] To sell wine or victuals.

I call your virtues unaccountable, as I do the wealth of our rich rogues, who cauponised to the armies in Germany in this last war. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 171.

CA'USABLE. adj. [from causo, low Lat.] That which may be caused, or effected by a cause.

That may be miraculously effected in one, which is naturally causable in another. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CA'USAL. adj. [causalis, low Lat.] Relating to causes; implying or containing causes.

Every motion owning a dependence on required motors, we can have no true knowledge of any, except we would distinctly go into the whole method of causal contemplations.

Glennville, &c. Scientifica.

Causal propositions are, where two propositions joined by causal particles; as, houses were not built, tho' they might be destroyed; Rehoboam was unhappy, because he followed evil counsel.

CAUSALITY. n. s. [causalitas, low Latin.] The agency of a cause; the quality of causing.

Spencer's Logic.

As he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, in this very essence, as being the soul of their causalities, and the essential cause of their existences. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

By an unadvised transiency from the effect to the remotest cause, we observe not the connection, through the interposal of more immediate causalities. Glanville's Scapris.

CA'USALLY. adv. [from causal.] According to the order or series of causes.

Thus may it more be causally made out; what Hippocrates affirmeth. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CAUSA'TION. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] The act or power of causing.

Thus doth he sometimes delude us in the conceits of stars and meteors, besides their allowable actions, ascribing effects thereunto of independent causation. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CA'USATIVE. † adj.

1. [A term in grammar.] That expresses a cause or reason.

Let any Hebrew reader judge whether pihel can properly be said, in general, to augment the signification, or hiphel to be causative. Student, ii. 308.

2. That effects as an agent.

It appeareth to be one of the essential forms of things, as that, that is causative in nature of a number of effects.

Bacon on Learning.

The notion of a Deity doth expressly signify a being or nature of infinite perfection; of a nature or being which consisteth in this that it be absolutely, and essentially necessary, an actual being of itself; and potential or causative of all beings beside itself; independent from any other, upon which all things depend, and by which all things else are governed.

Pearson, on the Creed, Art. I.

CA'USATIVELY.* adv. [from causative.] In a causative manner. Sherwood.

Several conjugations are used very indiscriminately; and whether they are to be taken actively, passively, causatively, or absolutely, must be determined by the context.

CAUSA'TOR. n. s. [from causo, low Lat.] A causer; author of any effect.

Demonstratively understanding the simplicity of perfection, and the invisible condition of the first causator, it was out of the power of earth, or the arceps of hell, to work them from it. Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CAUSE. n. s. [causa, Lat.]

1. That which produces or effects any thing; the efficient.

The wise and learned amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged some first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Baron, Nat. Hist.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest shall bear some other fight,
As cause will be obey'd. Shakspeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal sir! to see you landed here,
The cause was enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.

The storm was wondrous stood: then ask'd the cause,
Bursts fatal, the stream the crouding people draw. Dryden.

In fiery whirls, Even he,
High at his hel, that there had been cause of enmity,
In living rills a gl. h fate had ordain'd yon friends. Rowe.

2. Inhabiting a debate; subject of litigation.

No bandit fierce, madness of discourse!
No cavern'd hermit, re. with and against thyself!

CA'VERNOUS. adj. [fro. Shakspeare.

Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deut.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickell.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are lober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing and all for ever sustaining. Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care
To loath her life, and languish in despair? Dryden, Fables.

Things that move so swift, as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

To CAUSE.* v. n. [old Fr. causer, "to babble, to talk idly, to reason foolishly, to use much speech to little purpose." Cotgrave.] To assign insufficient cause or reason. Not now in use.

But he, to shifte their curious request,
Gan causen why she could not come in place;
Her crased health, her late recourse to rest,
'And humid evening ill for sick folks' case;
But none of these excuses could take place. Spenser, F. Q. iii. ix. 26.

CAU'SELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth ylight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might;
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser, F. Q.

And me and mine, threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is unceath. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is not sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CA'USELESSLY. † adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

They [sin against the ninth commandment] that secretly raise jealousies and suspicion of their neighbour causelessly.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, vii. § 4.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

CA'USELESSNESS.* n. s. [from causeless.] Unjust ground or motive.

Discerning and acknowledging the causelessness of your exceptions. Hammond, Works, i. 196.

CA'USER. † n. s. [from cause, old Fr. causeours, causers, the occasion of. Kelham, Norm. Dict.]

He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these times
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Abstinence the apostle determines is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial causer of moral effects. Rogers.
CA'USEY.† } n. s. [chaussée, Fr. This word, by a
CA'USEWAY. } false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway, Dr. Johnson rightly observes. But he has improperly placed Milton, who writes it causey, among those who have mistaken the word. Causey is referrible also to the Teut. kautsije. In old Fr. it is sometimes written caucé and also calsay. V. Kelham, Norm. Dict. In our own old language, it is calsey. V. Hulot's Dict. low Lat. calceatum. The Irish cāsan is a path.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shuppin the lot came forth westward by the causey.

I Chron. xxvi. 16.

The other way Satan went down,
 The causey to hell-gate. Milton, P. L.

But that broad causeway will direct your way,
 And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
 Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSIDICAL.* adj. [from the Lat. causidicus, a pleader; and Coles, in his Dict. 1677, gives us the subst. causidick, a pleader of causes: But this is not in use. The adjective, however, is now sometimes used.] Relating to an advocate or pleader.

CA'USTICAL.† } adj. [old Fr. caustique, from the Gr.
CA'USTICK } καυστικός.] Epithets of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to, into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines or escharoticks. Wiseman, Surgery.
 I proposed eradicating by escharoticks, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman, Surgery.
 Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.

CAUSTICITY.* n. s. In chymistry, a quality belonging to several substances, by the acrimony of which the parts of living animals may be corroded and destroyed. Chambers.
CA'USTICK. n. s. A burning application.
 It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.
 The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r, Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

CA'USTICKNESS.* n. s. [from caustick.] The quality of being caustick. Scot.
CA'UTEL.† n. s. [old Fr. cautelle, "a wile, cautel or sleight," Cotgrave. Dr. Johnson deduces it from the Lat. cautela, which signifies caution or prudent foresight; and has cited, in proof of this etymology, a passage from Shakspeare, which he has not given accurately, and to the word cautel in which he has assigned the meaning of caution or scruple. But it there means deceit. Such is the definition in our old lexicography, as we have seen in Cotgrave; and as it is in Hulot, "cautels, crafty ways to deceive;" and in Minshew, "a crafty way to deceive." In Shakspeare's Hamlet, which is the only notice taken of the word by Dr. Johnson, it will hence be seen that cautel is cunning; though cautel for caution may also be found in our old language.]

1. Cunning; subtlety; deceit.

Perhaps, he loves you now;
 And now no soil, nor cautel, doth besmire
 The virtue of his will. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

In him a plénitude of subtle matter,
 Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives.
 Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

2. Caution; provision. [Lat. cautela; old Fr. cautels, warnings. Kelh. Norm. Dict.]

This penance, canonical was appointed—for cautels and provision against the like sins.

Fulke against Allen, (1586,) p. 418.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cauteleux artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cauteleux and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your son
 Will or exceed the common, or be caught
 With cauteleux baits and practice. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cauteleux.]

1. Cunningly; slyly; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cauteleously get the start and advantage, yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon, War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the sciatica side of Jacob, do cauteleously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CA'UTELOUSNESS.* n. s. [from cauteleux.] Cautiousness. Not now in use.

Let it not offend you, if I compare these two great Christian virtues, Cautelousness, Repentance. Hale, Rem. p. 254.

This Christian cauteleousness and wariness here commended. Ibid.

CA'UTER.* n. s. [old Fr. cautère, Gr. καυτήριον, from καίω, to burn.] A scaring hot iron; or more generally, any thing that is applied to burn, and is burning or boiling hot. Minshew, and Cotgrave.

CA'UTERISM.* n. s. [from cauterize.] The application of cautery.

Some use the cauterisms on the legs.

Ferrand's Love Melancholy, p. 261.

CAUTERIZA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. cauterisation.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustick medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CA'UTERIZING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of burning with the cautery. The following passage in Shakspeare is corrupted in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, and so presents the word as a verb.

For each true word, a blister! and each false
 Be as a caut'ring to the root o' the tongue, Consuming it with speaking. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

CA'UTERY. n. s. [καίω, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by scaring up the vessels.

C A W

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment.

Quincy.
Wiseman, Surgery.

CAUTION. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.
2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear.

The Cedar, upon this new acquiescence, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disbursements.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes.

Clarendon.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms afford the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snare?

Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare

The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,

When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy?

Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,

But never gave me equal arms.

Swift.

CAUTIONARY. † adj. [from caution.]

1. Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,

The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

Southerne.

Is there no security for the island of Britain? Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports, to give us for securing trade?

Swift.

2. Warning.

Of old, the Jews wrote the entrances of their synagogues with devout and cautionary sentences.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 90.

Too servile an adherence to the letter—requires a cautionary or explanatory note.

Waterland, Script. Vind. P. iii. 64.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage.

Swift.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive, wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:

Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;

For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

Dryden.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness.

King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived.

Addison, Spect.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Russet-pated choughs, many in sort,

Rising and cawing at the gun's report.

Shakspeare.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows

No more the tops seem to be cawing in another region.

Addison.

No cavern'd rook, who high amid the boughs,

Awakes his airy city builds,

Awakes his airy city builds,

Thomson, Spring.

CA'XON.* n. s. A cant expression for a wig. Dr. Ash's Dictionary presents caxon for caxou, a technical word among miners.

CA'XOU.* n. s. In metallurgy, a chest of ores of silver, or any other metal, that has been burnt, ground, and washed, and is ready to be refined.

Chambers.

CAYE'NNE Pepper.* A powder brought from the West Indies under that name, the basis of which is a species of the piper Indicum, called in the West Indies bird-pepper. It is used principally in sauces.

CAZI'QUE.* n. s. A title given by the Spaniards to the petty kings, and chiefs, of several countries in America.

The principal cazique of the island came to visit Cortes, with a numerous but ill-appointed equipage.

Townsend, Cong. of Mexico, i. 15.

To CEASE. † v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist;

with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;

My brother's be your most peculiar care.

Dryden.

2. Without from.

Yet not the more

Cease I to wander, where the Muses haunt

Clear spring, or shady grove, or sunny hill,

Smit with the love of sacred song.

Milton, P. L.

3. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor shall never cease out of the land.

Deut. xv. 11.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that moles corporea, and are no longer in it.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

4. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see

She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee.

Dryden.

5. To rest.

The ministers of Christ have ceased from their labours.

Sprat.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for my monies; be not ceas'd

With slight denial.

Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cease then this impious rage.

Milton, P. L.

But he, her fears to cease,

Sent down the meek-ey'd peace.

Milton, Ode.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease

The dire debate, nor yet command the peace.

Dryden.

CEASE. n. s. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure; perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty

Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws

What's near it, with it.

Shakspeare.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,

On which my endless tears were bootless spent.

Fairfax.

All these, with ceaseless praise his works behold,

Both day and night.

Milton, P. L.

Like an oak

That stands secure, though all the winds employ

Their ceaseless roar, and only sheds its leaves,

Or mast, which the revolving spring restores.

Philips.

CE'ASELESSLY.* adv. [from ceaseless.] Incessantly; perpetually.

This universal quire—

Prays ceaselessly.

Donne, Poems, p. 347.

CECCHI'N.* n. s. [old Fr. cechin.] We now write it chequin. A coin of Italy, and also of Barbary.

C E D

Sec, Mosca, look,
Here, I have brought a bag of bright cecchines, Will quite weigh down his plate. B. Jonson, For.

CE'CITY.† n. s. [old Fr. cecité, from cacitas, Lat.]
Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutyency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CEC'UTIENCY.† n. s. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness, cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity; yet more than a cecutyency.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

CE'DAR.† n. s. [cebej, Sax. cedre, Fr. cedrus, Lat.
from the Gr. κέδρος.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.
The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinate. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, makes an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, were few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his Travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings, and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept,
Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind,
Shakespeare.

CE'DARLIKE.† adj. [from cedar and like.] Resembling a cedar tree.

His tall
And growing gravity, so cedar-like. B. Jonson, New Inn.

CE'DARN.† adj. [from cedar.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

West winds, with musky wing,
About the cedarn alleys fling
Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton, Comus.

To CE'DE.† v. n. [Fr. ceder, Lat. cedo.] To submit;
to yield.

This fertile glebe, this fair domain,
Had well nigh ceded to the slothful hands
Of monks libidinous. Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

C E L

To CEDE.† v. a. [This verb, whether as an active or neuter, is perhaps of no great age in our language.
It has been hitherto unnoticed.] To resign; to give up.

That honour was entirely ceded to the Pathian royal race.
Drummond's Travels, (1754.) p. 256.

By the peace of Paris in 1763, it [Dominica] was ceded in express terms to the English. Gothrie, Geogr.

CE'DRINE.† adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to
the cedar tree.

CE'DRY.† adj. [Lat. cedrinus.] Resembling the colour of cedar.

That which comes from Bergen being long, strait, and clear, and of a yellow or more cedry colour, is esteemed much before the white. Evelyn, ii. 3. § 2.

CL'DULE.† n. s. [old Fr. cédule. Our elder word for schedule, which see.] A scroll, or writing;
also, an additional written instrument. Colgrave.

CE'DUOUS.† adj. [Lat. cedaus.] Fit to be felled.

These we shall divide into the greater and more ceduous, fruticant, and shrubby. Evelyn, Sylv. Introd. § 3.

To CEIL.† v. a. [celo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chron.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING.† n. s. [from ceil, Dr. Johnson says; but perhaps it might be cieling, as some still write it, from ciel, Fr. cielo, Ital. the heavens. In reference to this etymology, Richardson supposes Milton to have employed the word. Our old word is cielure.]

1. The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood; down a rush'd the rain Impetuous. Milton, P. L.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd brass their trembling light,
The glittering species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling flash the glaring day. Dryden.

2. In sea language, the inside planks of a ship.

Chambers.

CE'LANDINE.† n. s. [chclidoneum, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphrasia. More.

CE'LATURE.† n. s. [celatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in figures.

These celatures in their drinking cups were so framed, that they might put them on or take them off at pleasure, and were therefore called emblemata. Hakewill on Providence, p. 372.

To CE'LEBRATE.† v. a. [celebro, Lat.].

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adored or celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages.

Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath.

2 Maccab.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r, 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

C E L

CELEBRATION. n. s. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakespeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder, Elements of Speech.

CELEBRATOR.* n. s. [Lat. celebrator.] He who celebrates or praises.

It [Scripture] has, among the wits, as well celebrators and admirers, as disregards. Boyle's Style of H. Script. p. 174.

CELEBRIOUS.† adj. [old Fr. celebre, from celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then, the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured, with sacrifices, the most high God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew.

CELEBRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELEBRIOUSNESS. n. s. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELEBRITY.† n. s. [old Fr. celebrité, from celebritas, Lat.] Publick and splendid transaction.

The manner of her receiving, and the celebrity of the marriage, were performed with great magnificence. Bacon.

CELERIACK. n. s. A species of parsley; it is also called turnip rooted celery.

CELERITY.† n. s. [Fr. celerité, from the Lat. celeritas.] Swiftmess; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse; for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity, to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakespeare.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LERY. n. s. A species of parsley; which see.

CELESTIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

There stay, until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning. Shakespeare.

The ancients commonly applied celestial descriptions of other climates to their own. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

2. Heavenly; relating to the blessed state.

Play that sad note
I nam'd my knell; whilst I sit meditating
On that celestial harmony I go to. Shakespeare.

3. Heavenly, with respect to excellence.

Canst thou pretend desire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worship, and a pow'r celestial nam'd? Dryden.

Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celestial sweet, with godlike grace. Pope.

C E L

CELESTIAL. n. s. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild, the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown celestial leads. Pope.

CELESTIALLY. adv. [from celestial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELESTIFY. v. a. [from celestis, Lat.] To give something of heavenly nature to any thing. Not used.

We should affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terrestriated, and earth but heaven celestified, or that each partth above had influence upon its affinity below. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CELESTINS.* n. s. Monks of a religious order, so called; reformed by Pope Celestin V.

CE'LIACK.† adj. [old Fr. célique, or coélique, from the Gr. κοιλία, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving slowly through the celiack and mesenterick arteries, produces complaints. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CELIBACY. n. s. [from celibs, Latin.] Single life; unmarried state.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accursed state, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themselves in their relations of husbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without question, adorned the gospel, glorified God, and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devoutest and strictest celibacy. Atterbury.

CELIBATE.† n. s. [old Fr. celibat, Cotgrave. Lat. celibatus, from celibs; which has been derived from the Gr. κοίτη, a bed, and λείπω, to leave; i. e. he who declines the nuptial bed, or he who has never entered it. Scaliger. V. Morin.] Single life.

The forced celibate of the English clergy is of greater antiquity than these his saints.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 312.
No divine law then, he grants, hath enjoined this celibate, but an ecclesiastical.

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 123.
Celibate, like the fly in the heart of an apple, dwells in a perpetual sweetness, but sits alone. Bp. Taylor, Sermon. i. 223.

If any persons, convict of this unchastity, are in the state of celibate, they are only chastised with scourges.

The males oblige themselves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL.† n. s. [cella, Lat. Dryden has used this word in an extraordinary manner; converting Chaucer's word dale into cell, in his fable of the Cock and Fox, "Deep in a cell her cottage lonely stood;" where the original is her "cottage standing in a dale;" which is very plain; but standing in a cell, is not so; and as this mistake, if I may so call it, in this great master of our language, has hitherto been unnoticed, it seems right to remark it here.]

1. A small cavity or hollow place.

The brain contains ten thousand cells,
In each some active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,
Their separate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious person.

Besides, she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this even; and there she was not. Shakespeare.

Then did religion in a lazy cell,
In empty, airy contemplations dwell. Denham.

3. A small and close apartment in a prison.

When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, [in the margin, cells.] Jerem. xxxvii. 16.

4. Any small place of residence; a cottage.

C E M

Mine eyes he clos'd, but open left the cell
Of fancy, my internal sight.

Milton, P. L.

For ever in this humble cell

Prior.

Let thee and I together dwell.

In cottages and lowly cells,

True piety neglected dwells,

Till call'd to heaven, its native seat,

Where the good man alone is great.

Somerville.

5. A religious house, subordinate to some great abbey.

Tanner.

As loud as doth the chapel belle,
There as this lord was keeper of the celle.

Chaucer, C. T. Prolog.

6. Little bags or bladders, where fluids, or matter of different sorts are lodged; common both to animals and plants.

Quincy.

CELLAR.† n. s. [cellarium, Lat. from cella; Græco-barb. κελλάριον, a place where provisions are kept. V. Meursii Gloss.] A place under ground, where stores and liquours are reposit.

If this fellow had lived in the time of Cato, he would, for his punishment, have been confined to the bottom of a cellar during his life.

Peacham, on Drawing.

CELLARAGE. n. s. [from cellar.] The part of the building which makes the cellars.

Come on, you hear this fellow in the cellarage.

Shakespeare.

A good ascent makes a house wholesome, and gives opportunity for cellarage.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

CELLARER, or CELLERER.* n. s. [Lat. cellarius, and cellerarius.] The officer in a monastery who had the care of provisions; and generally, a butler.

Malact.

Upon my faith, thou art some officer,
Some worthy sextein, or some celerer.

Chaucer, Monk's Prologue.

CELLARIST. n. s. [cellarius, Lat.] The butler in a religious house.

Dict.

CELLULAR. adj. [cellula, Lat.] Consisting of little cells or cavities.

The urine, insinuating itself amongst the neighbouring muscles, and cellular membranes, destroyed four.

Sharp's Surgery.

CELLULE.* n. s. [Lat. cellula.] A little cell or cavity.

CELSITUDE.† n. s. [celsitudo, Lat.] Height.

Dict.

Honour to thee, celestial and clear

Goddess of Love, and to thy celsitude!

Chaucer, Test. of Love, 611.

CELTICISM.* n. s. The manner or custom of the Celts.

The latter, which has every signature of Celticism, I conceive to be coeval and perhaps of a class with Stonehenge.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 61.

CELTICK.* adj. Relating to the country, language, customs, or manners, of the Celts, or Gauls.

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields.

Milton, Comus.

Very many of the Celtick or Gallick words, which are still preserved in authors, agree very well with our British words, both in sound and sense.

Richards, Brit. Dict. Pref. p. viii.

These barrows, apparently connected with the rampart, are as indisputably Celtick, and not Roman.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 66.

CELTS.* n. s. Lat. Celta, Fr. Celtes.] Inhabitants of Gaul.

Nor is it suspected, that many of the numerous encampments in Wiltshire, especially those of a large and loose formation, are probably the effects of this obstinate war between the insular Britons, and the continental Celts.

Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 67.

CEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. cement, from the Lat. cementum.]

C E N

1. The matter with which two bodies are made to cohere; as, mortar or glue.

Your temples burned in, their cement, and your franchises confined into an augre's bore.

Shakespeare.

There is a cement compounded of flower, whites of eggs, and stones powdered, that becometh hard as marble.

Bacon.

You may see divers pebbles, and a crust of cement or stone between them, as hard as the pebbles themselves.

Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough stone, joined together with a most firm cement; upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendship.

Let not the piece of virtue which is set

Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,

To keep it builded, be the rain to batter.

Shakespeare.

What cement should unite heaven and earth, light and darkness?

Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you shall see, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude.

South.

To CEMENT.† v. a. [from the noun. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable in this verb, but, in the example which he brings from Shakespeare, it is on the first; and Dryden, as also Beaumont and Fletcher, have so accented it. The distinction between the verb and the substantive, however, is now generally observed, by the first being accented on the last syllable, and the last on the first.] To unite by means of something interposed.

But how the fear of us

May cement their divisions, and bind up

The petty difference, we yet not know.

Shakespeare.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all loose and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of sand, or fine powder, will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Love with white lead cements his wings;

White lead was sent us to repair

Two brightest, brittlest earthly things,

A lady's face, and china ware.

Swift.

To CEMENT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a sharp instrument, they will, if held in close contact for some time, reunite by inoculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another.

Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTATION. n. s. [from cement.] The act of cementing, or uniting with cement.

CEMENTER.† n. s. [old Fr. cementers, bricklayers, masons. Kelham, Norm. Dict.] A person or thing that unites in society.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, furnished him with language which was to be the great instrument and cement of society.

Locke.

CEMETERY.† n. s. [old Fr. cemeterie, Gr. κοιμητήριον, from κοιμάω, to sleep.] A place where the dead are reposit.

The souls of the dead appear frequently in cemeteries, and hover about the places where their bodies are buried, as still hankering about their old brutal pleasures, and desiring again to enter the body.

Addison.

CEN, and CIN, denote kinsfolk; so Cinulph is a help to his kindred; Cinehelm, a protector of his kinsfolk; Cinburg, the defence of his kindred; Cinric, powerful in kindred.

Gibson.

CENATORY. adj. from ceno, to sup, Lat.] Relating to supper.

The Romans washed, were anointed, and wore a cenatory garment; and the same was practised by the Jews.

* Brown, Vulgar Errors.

CENOBITICAL.† adj. [Fr. cénobitique, from κοιν, and βίος.] Living in community.

They have multitudes of religious orders, black and gray, crenitical and cenobitical, and nuns. Stillfleet.

CENOBY.* n. s. [from the Gr. κοῖνος and βλός.] The place where persons live in community.

His arms are yet to be seen in the ruins of the hospital of St. John's near Smithfield, and in the church of Allhallows at the upper end of Lombard Street, which was repaired and enlarged with the stones brought from that cenoby.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 68.

CENOTAPH.† n. s. [old Fr. cénotaphe, from κέν and τάφος.] A monument for one buried elsewhere.

Priam, to whom the story was unknown,
As dead, deplor'd his metamorphos'd sort;
A cenotaph his name and title kept,
And Hector round the tomb with all his brothers wept.

Dryden, Fab.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, raised a cenotaph, or empty monument. Notes on Odyssey.

CENSE.† n. s. [cense, old Fr. census, Lat.]

1. Publick rate.

We see what floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action; so that the cense, or rates of Christendom, are raised since ten times, yea twenty times told. Bacon.

2. Condition; rank.

If you write to a man, whose estate and cense—you are familiar with, you may the bolder venture on a knot.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

To CENSE.† v. a. [encenser, Fr.] To perfume with odours; contracted from incense.

In his hand he bore a golden censer with perfume; and, censing about the altar, having first kindled his fire on the top, is interrupted by the genius.

B. Jonson, Part of K. James's Entertainment.

The Salii sing, and cense his altars round
With Saban smoke, their heads with poplar bound. Dryden.
Grinens was near, and cast a furious look
On the side altar, cens'd with sacred smoke,
And bright with flaming fies. Dryden.

CENSER. n. s. [encensoir, Fr.]

1. The pan or vessel in which incense is burned.

Antonius gave piety in his money, like a lady with a censer before an altar. Peacham on Drawing.

Of incense clouds,

Fuming from golden censers, hid the mount. Milton, P. L.

2. A pan in which any thing is burned; fire-pan.

Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

CENSIION. n. s. [censio, Lat.] A rate, an assessment.

God intended this cension only for the blessed Virgin and her son, that Christ might be born where he should. Joseph Hall.

CENSOR.† n. s. [censor, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome, who had the power of correcting manners; "a high constable, judge, or reformer of manners."

Huloet.

I reflected, that it was the proper office of the magistrate to punish only knaves, and that we had a censor of Great-Britain, for people of another denomination. Tatler, No. 212.

These characters were forwarded by proper officers—till they arrived at length into the hands of the censor, an officer of great fame in the Roman government.

Harris on the 53d chap. of Isaiah.

2. One who is given to censure and exprobaton.

Ill-natur'd censurs of the present age,
And fond of all the follies of the past. Roscommon.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of his wit, though, at the same time, he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

CENSORIAL.* adj. [from censor.] Full of censure; severe.

The moral gravity and the censorial declamation of Juvenal.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 6.

CENSORIAN. adj. [from censor.] Relating to the censor.

As the chancery had the pretorian power for equity, so the star-chamber had the censorian power for offences under the degree of capital. Baron.

CENSORIOUS.† adj. [from censor.]

1. Addicted to censure; severe; full of invectives.

Sometimes animating the subject by censorious exauthorizing the prince. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

Do not too many believe no religion to be pure, but what is intemperately rigid? no zeal to be spiritual, but what is censorious, or vindictive? Spratt.

O! let my presence make my travels light,
And potent Venus shall exalt my name
Above the rumours of censorious fame. Prior.

2. Sometimes it has of before the object of reproach.

A dogmatical spirit inclines a man to be censorious of his neighbour. Watts on the Mind.

3. Sometimes on.

He treated all his inferiours of the clergy with a most sanctified pride; was rigorously and universally censorious upon all his brethren of the gown. Swift.

CENSORIOUSLY.† adv. [from censorious.] In a severe reflecting manner.

If it be suspected, that this great hatred of the Christians moved this Gentile to animadvert too censoriously upon their carriage, then it will be reasonable to enquire what others have delivered in this matter. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, p. 128.

CENSORIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from censorious.] Disposition to reproach; habit of reproaching.

Some silly souls are prone to place much piety in their mawkingly plainness, and in their censoriousness of others, who use more comely and costly curiosities.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 87.

Sourness of disposition, and rudeness of behaviour, censoriousness and sinister interpretation of things, all cross and distasteful humours, render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another. Tillotson.

CENSORLIKE.* adj. [from censor and like.] Censorious; austere. Cotgrave in J. Censorin.

CENSORSHIP.† n. s. [from censor.]

1. The office of a censor.

In his own phrase, he [Smith] whitened himself, having a desire to obtain the censorship, an office of honour and some profit in the college. Jonson, Life of Smith.

2. The time in which the office of censor is born.

It was brought to Rome in the censorship of Claudius.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CENSUAL.* adj. [old Fr. censuel, from the Lat. census.] Relating to the census or Roman register.

He sent commissioners into all the several counties of the whole realm, who took an exact survey, and described in a censual roll or book, all the lands, titles, and tenures, throughout the whole kingdom.

Temple, Introduct. to the Hist. of Eng. p. 255.

CENSURABLE. adj. [from censure.] Worthy of censure; blamable; culpable.

A small mistake may leave upon the mind the lasting memory of having been taunted for something censurable. Locke.

CENSURABLENESS.† n. s. [from censurable.] Blamableness; fitness to be censured.

This, and divers others, are alike in their censurableness by the unskilful, be it divinity, physick, poetry, &c.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 493.

CENSURABLY.* adv. [from censurable.] In a blame-worthy manner.

CENSURE.† n. s. [censure, old Fr. censura, Lat.]

1. Blame; reprimand; reproach.

Enough for half the greatest of these days,
To scape my censure, not expect my praise. Pope.

2. Judgement; opinion; determination.

Madam, and you, my sister, will you go
To give your censures in this weighty business? Shakspeare.

'Twas said they saw but one; and no discernor Durst wag his tongue in censure. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VIII.

3. Judicial sentence.

To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain. Shakspeare.

4. A spiritual punishment inflicted by some ecclesiastical judge.

Upon the unsuccessfulness of milder medicaments, use that stronger physick, the censures of the church. Hammond.

To CENSURE.† v. a. [censurer, Fr.]

1. To blame; to brand publicly.

Men may censure thine weakness
The gentler, if severely thou exact not More strength from me, than in thyself was found. Milton, S. A.

2. To condemn by a judicial sentence.

Has censur'd him
Already, and, as I hear, the provost hath
A warrant for his execution. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

3. To judge; to estimate.

The onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured. Shakspeare, K. John.
Should I say more, you well might censure me (what yet I never was) a flatterer. Braun, and Fl. Elder Brother.

To CENSURE.* v. n. To judge; to give an opinion.

'Tis a passing shame,
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Bearing my words and doings to the lords
To gloss upon, and, censuring, frown or smile! Milton, S. A.

CENSURER. n. s. [from censure.] He that blames; he that reproaches.

We must not stint
Our necessary actions, in the fear
To cope malicious censurers. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

A statesman, who is possess'd of real merit, should look upon his political censurers with the same neglect, that a good writer regards his critics. Addison.

CENSURING.* n. s. [from censure.] Reproach; blame.

The like censurings and despisings have embittered the spirits, and wetted both the tongues and pens, of learned men one against another. Sanderson.

CENSUS.* n. s. [Lat.] A declaration, among the Romans, made by the several subjects of the empire, of their names and places of abode, before the censors; by whom the declarations were recorded.

This is manifest from the history of the Jewish nation, from the account of the Roman census, and registers of our own country, where the proportion of births to burials is found upon observation to be yearly as fifty to forty.

Bentley, Serm. p. 707.

I shall say little here of the census of the Romans, it being a thing so well known; and shall only stay to remark, that there were, in their books or registers, not only the condition and quality of all people, but also their characters.

Harris on the 53d chap. of Isaiah.

CENT.† n. s. [centum, Lat. a hundred.] A hundred;
as, five per cent, that is, five in the hundred.

The demon makes his full descent
In one abundant shower of cent per cent. Pope.

CENTAGE.* n. s. [from cent.] The payment of cents.

CENTAUR. n. s. [centaure, Sax. centaurus, Lat.]

1. A poetical being, supposed to be compounded of a man and a horse.

Down from the waste they are centaurs, though women all above. Shakspeare.

The idea of a centaur has no more falsehood in it, than the name centaur. Locke.

2. The archer in the zodiack.

The cheerless empire of the sky,
To Capricorn, the Centaur archer yield. Thomson.

CENTAURLIKE.* adj. [from centaur and like.] Having the appearance and skill, as it were, of a centaur, in managing a horse.

You remember the ship we saw once, when the sea went high upon the coast of Argos; so went the beast. But he, [Daunetas.] as if centaurlike he had been one piece with the horse, was no more moved than one is with the going of his own legs; and in effect so did he command him, as his own limbs. Sidney, Arcad. b. 2.

CENTAURY, greater and less. [centaurium.] Two Height and breadth of the cespitious ramparts. Gough.

CESS. † n. s. [probably corrupted from cense; see CENSE; though imagined by Junius to be derived from saisire, to seize. It was anciently written cense, perhaps from the old Fr. cens. The Germ. schoss, tribute-money, is as probable an etymon, at least, as Junius's saisire.]

1. A levy made upon the inhabitants of a place, rated according to their property.

The like cess is also charged upon the country sometimes for victualling the soldiers, when they lie in garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

2. The act of laying rates.

3. [from cess, Fr.] It seems to have been used by Shakspeare for bounds, or limits, though it stand for rate, reckoning.

I prythee, Tom, beat Cutt's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

To CESS. † v. a. [from the noun.] To rate; to lay charge on.

We are to consider how much land there is in all Ulster, that, according to the quantity thereof, we may cess the said rent, and allowance issuing thereout. Spenser on Ireland.

They came not armed like soldiers to be cessed upon me. Briskett, Disc. of Curill Life, p. 157.

To CESS. v. n. To omit a legal duty. See CESSOR.

CESSATION. † n. s. [cessation, old Fr. cessatio, Lat.]

1. A stop; a rest.

The day was yearly observed for a festival, by cessation from labour, and by resorting to church. Hayward.

True piety, without cessation to rest
By theories, the practick part is lost. Denham.

2. Vacation, suspension.

There had been a mighty confusion of things, an interruption and perturbation of the ordinary course, and a cessation and suspension of the laws of nature. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The rising of a parliament is a kind of cessation from politicks. Addison, Freeholder.

3. End of action; the state of ceasing to act.

The scrum, which is mixed with an alkali, being poured out to that which is mixed with an acid, raiseth an effervescence; at the cessation of which, the salts of which the acid was composed, will be regenerated. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. A pause of hostility, without peace.

When the succours of the poor protestants in Ireland were diverted, I was intreated to get them some respite, by a cessation. King Charles.

CESSAVIT. n. s. [Latin.]

A writ that lies upon this general ground, that the person, against whom it is brought, hath, for two years, omitted to perform such service, or pay such rent, as he is obliged by his tenure, and hath not, upon his land or tenement, sufficient goods or chattels to be distrained. Cowel.

CESSIBILITY. n. s. [from cedo, cessum, Latin.] The quality of receding, or giving way, without resistance.

If the subject stricken be of a proportionate cessibility, it seems to dull and deaden the stroke; whereas if the thing stricken be hard, the stroke seems to lose no force, but to work a greater effect. Digby on the Soul.

CESSIBLE. adj. [from cedo, cessum, Lat.] Easy to give way.

If the parts of the stricken body be so easily cessible, as without difficulty the stroke can divide them, then it enters into such a body, till it has spent its force. Digby on the Soul.

CESSION. † n. s. [cession, Fr. cessio, Lat.]

1. Retreat; the act of giving way.

Sound is not produced without some resistance either in the air or the body percussed; for if there be a mere yielding or cession, it produceth no sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Resignation; the act of yielding up or quitting to another.

A parity in their council would make and secure the best peace they can with France, by a cession of Flanders to that crown, in exchange for other provinces. Temple.

3. A manner of vacating or voiding an ecclesiastical benefice; that kind of resignation which is understood, and requires no form, where the clerk takes some benefice which may not be consistent with what he already possesses.

C'ESSIONARY. † adj. [old Fr. cessionnaire. V. Cotgrave in Cession des biens, who makes cessionary also a substantive.] As, a cessionary bankrupt, one who has delivered up all his effects. Martin.

C'ESSMENT. n. s. [from cess.] An assessment or tax. Dict.

C'ESSOR. † n. s. [from cesso, Lat.]

1. In law, he that ceaseth or neglecteth so long to perform a duty belonging to him, as that by his cess, or censing, he incurreth the danger of law, and hath, or may have the writ cessavit brought against him. Where it is said the tenant cesseth, such phrase is to be understood, as if it were said, the tenant cesseth to do that which he ought, or is bound to do by his land or tenement. Coxel.

2. A taxer. Sherwood.

Some [faults] there be of that nature, that though they be in private men, yet their evil reacheth to a general hurt; as the extortion of sheriffs, and their sub-sheriffs, and bayliffs; the corruption of victuallers, cessors, and purveyors. Spenser on Ireland.

CEST. * n. s. [old Fr. ceste, Lat. cestus, Gr. κεστός.] The girdle of a lady.

Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name!
To whom, prepar'd and bath'd in heaven,
The cest of amplest power is given.

Collins, Ode on the Poetical Character.

CESTUS. † n. s. [Latin.] The girdle of Venus.

She [sickness] pulls off the light and fantastick summer-robe of lust and wanton appetite; and as soon as that cestus, that lascivious girdle is thrown away, then the reins chasten us.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii, § 6.

Venus, without any ornament but her own beauties, not so much as her own cestus. Addison, Spectator.

CETA'CEOUS. † adj. [old Fr. cetacé; "poisson cetacée, of the kind of whales." Cotgrave. Lat. cete, Gr. κῆτος.] Of the whale kind.

Such fishes as have lungs or respiration, are not without the wezzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He hath created variety of these cetaceous fishes, which converse chiefly in the northern seas, whose whole body being encompassed round with a copious fat or blubber, it is enabled to abide the greatest cold of the sea-water.

Ray on the Creation.

C'ETERACH. * n. s. [old Fr. ceterach.] A plant; the scale-fern, stone-fern, finger-fern, miltecast.

Cotgrave.

C'ESURE. * n. s. See CÆSURA. The close of a verse; the pause in a sentence.

Vu'gar languages that want
Words and sweetness, and be scant
Of true measure;

Tyrant rhyme hath so abused,
That they long since have refused

Other cesure.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

C'RA UR. A note in the scale of musick.

Gaunt I am, the ground of all accord;

A re, to plead Hortensio's passion;

B mi Bianca, take him for thy lord,

C fa ut, that loves with all affection.

Shakspeare.

CH has, in words purely English, or fully naturalized, the sound of tsh; a peculiar pronunciation, which it is hard to describe in words. In some words, derived from the French, it has the sound of sh, as chaise; and, in some derived from the Greek, the sound of k as choleric.

CHACE. See CHASE.

CHACO'ON. * n. s. [Span. chacóna.] A dance, like a saraband, borrowed from the Spaniards, and by them from the Moors. The incasure of it is said to have been always triple time. See Gloss. Ang. Nov. 1707.

CHAD. n. s. A sort of fish.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, whiting, chad, eels, congar, millet. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

To CHAFE. † v. a. [echauffer, Fr. perhaps from the Lat. calfacere, to make warm.]

1. To warm with rubbing.

They laid him upon some of their garments, and fell to rub and chafe him, till they brought him to recover both breath, the servant, and warlike, the companion of living. Sidney.

At last, recovering heart, he does begin

To rub her temples, and to chafe her skin. Spenser, F. Q.

First to chafe and prepare the wax to receive the seal; then, as officers, to set to that seal.

Mountagu, App. to Caesar, p. 318.

Soft, and more soft, at ev'ry touch it grew;

Like pliant wax, when chafing hands reduce

The former mass to form, and frame to use.

Dryden.

2. To heat by rage or hurry.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,

Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat?

Shakspeare.

Why do you

Chafe yourself so?

Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

3. To perfume.

Lilies more white than snow,

New fall'n from heav'n, with violets mix'd, did grow;

Whose scent so chaf'd the neighbour air, that you

Would surely swear Arabick spices grow.

Suckling.

4. To make angry; to enflame passion.

Her intercession chaf'd him so,

When she for thy repeal was suppliant,

That to close prison he commanded her.

Shakspeare.

An offer of pardon more chafed the rage of those, who were resolved to live or die together. Sir John Hayward.

For all that he was inwardly chafed with the heat of youth and indignation, against his own people as well as the Rhodians, he moderated himself betwixt his own rage, and the offence of his soldiers. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

This chaf'd the boar, his nostrils flames emit,

And his red eyeballs roll with living fire.

Dryden.

To CHAFE. v. n.

1. To rage; to fret; to fume; to rave; to boil.

Therewith he 'gan full terribly to roar,

And chaf'd at that indignity right sore. Spenser, Iub. Tale.

He will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff, as he will chafe at the doctor's marrying my daughter. Shakspeare.

Be lion mettle, proud, and take no care,

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Shakspeare.

How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe,

And swear! not Addison himself was safe. Pope.

2. To fret against any thing.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

The murmuring surge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,

Cannot be heard so high.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CHAFE. n. s. [from the verb.] A heat; a rage; a fury; a passion; a fume; a pett; a fret; a storm.

When Sir Thomas More was speaker of the parliament, with his wisdom and eloquence, he so crossed a purpose of cardinal Wolsey's, that the cardinal, in a chafe, sent for him to Whitehall. Cowden, Remains.

At this the knight grew high in chafe,
And staring furiously on Ralph,
He trembled.

Hudibras.

CHAFE-WAX. n. s. [An officer belonging to the lord chancellor, who prepares the wax for the sealing of writs.] Harris.

CHAFER. † n. s. [ceafon, Sax. kever, Dutch.] An insect; a sort of yellow beetle.

Round ancient elms, with humming noise,
Full loud the chafer swarms rejoice. T. Warton, Ode XI.

CHAFERY. n. s. A forge in an iron mill, where the iron is wrought into complete bars, and brought to perfection. Phillips.

CHAFF. † n. s. [ceaf, Sax. kaf, Dutch. Perhaps from the Sax. cap, swift; or the Gr. χρῶς, light.]

1. The husks of corn that are separated by threshing and winnowing.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That ev'n our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Shakspeare, Henry IV.

Pleasure with instruction should be join'd;
So take the corn, and leave the chaff behind. Dryden.

He set before him a sack of wheat, as it had been just threshed out of the sheaf; he then bid him pick out the chaff from among the corn, and lay it aside by itself. Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing worthless.

Not meddling with the dirt and chaff of nature, that makes the spirit of the mind mud too.

Beaumont and Fl. Elder Brother.

To CHAFFER. † v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy, Dr. Johnson says. But "exchange is the sense of the Hebrew word capher, and as all merchandises, amongst the ancients, were generally managed by exchanges of goods for goods; that word capher has travelled very far into our northern languages: thus we have in our English language the word to chaffer or make a bargain. Hence came the name of our Cheap-side in London." Harris in the 53d Chap. of Isaiah, p. 53. Chaffering is, in our old language, chepe-faring, that is going to market, trading, bargaining.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

That no man overgo, neither deceyve his brother in chaffaring. Wicliffe, 1 Thess. iv.

Nor rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferments with his gold,
Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryden, Fab.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chairmen, when your master sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your master that they will not take a farthing less. Swift.

To CHAFFER. v. a. [The active sense is obsolete.]

1. To buy.

He chaffer'd chairs in which churchmen were set,
And breach of laws to privy farm did let. Spenser, Hub. Tale.

2. To exchange.

Approaching nigh, he never staid to greet,
Ne chaffer words, proud courage to provoke. Spenser, F. Q.

CHAFFER. * n. s. [from the verb.] Merchandize; ware. The word perhaps is not wholly out of use.

Small chaffer doth ease. Skelton's Poems, p. 132.

Deinties for damosels, chaffer far set. Ibid. p. 96.

The chief chaffer and merchandise of England.

Abp. Sandys, Serm. fol. 20.

CHAFFERER. n. s. [from chaffer.] A buyer; bargainer; purchaser.

CHAFFERN. n. s. [from eschaffer, Fr. to heat.] A vessel for heating water. Dict.

CHAFFERY. n. s. [from chaffer.] Traffick; the practice of buying and selling.

The third is, merchandize and chaffery, that is, buying and selling. Spenser, State of Ireland.

CHAFFINCH. n. s. [from chaff and finch.] A bird so called, because it delights in chaff, and is by some much admired for its song.

Phillips's World of Words.

The chaffinch, and other small birds, are injurious to some fruits. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHAFFLESS. adj. [from chaff.] Without chaff.

The love I bear him,
Made me to fan you thus; but the gods made you,
Unlike all others, chaffless. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

CHAFFWEED. n. s. [gnaphalium, Lat.] An herb; the same with cudweed; which see.

CHAFFY. † adj. [from chaff.] Like chaff; full of chaff; light.

If the straws be light and chaffy, and held at a reasonable distance, they will not rise unto the middle.

Brown, Fulg. Err.

A very thief in love, a chaffy lord,
Nor worth the name of villain.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

The most slight and chaffy opinion, if at a great remove from the present age, contracts a veneration. Glanville

CHAFFINGDISH. n. s. [from chafe and dish.] A vessel to make any thing hot in; a portable grate for coals.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantities, whether it will endure the ordinary fire which belongeth to chaffingdishes, posnets, and such other silver vessels.

Bacon, Physical Remains.

CHAGRIN. † n. s. [from chagrin, Fr. which may have been formed from the Lat. acritas, sourness.] Ill humour; vexation; fretfulness; peevishness. It is pronounced shagreen.

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin;
That single act gives half the world the spleen. Pope.

I grieve with the old, for so many additional inconveniences, and chagrins, more than their small remain of life seemed destined to undergo. Pope, Letters.

To CHAGRIN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.] To vex; to put out of temper; to teaze; to make uneasy.

CHAIN. n. s. [chaîne, Fr.]

1. A series of links fastened one within another.

And Pharaoh took off his ring, and put it upon Joseph's hand, and put a gold chain about his neck. Gen. xli. 42.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains. Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyor may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it, or, by thinking, comprehend it. Locke.

4. A series linked together; as, of causes, or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those so mistake the Christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil. Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

The mariners be chained in his own galleys for slaves. Kydler.

Or, march'd I chain'd behind the hostile car,
The victor's pastime, and the sport of war!
They, with joint force oppression chaining, set
Imperial justice at the helm.

Prior.

Thomson.

2. To enslave; to keep in slavery.

The monarch was ador'd, the people chain'd.
This world, 'tis true,

Prior.

Was made for Cæsar, but for Titus too:
And which more blest? who cham'd his country, say,
Or he, whose virtue sigh'd to lose a day?

Pope.

3. To keep by a chain.

The admiral seeing the mouth of the haven chained, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.

Knollys, Hist. of the Turks.

4. To unite.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.

Shakspeare.

CHAINPUMP. n. s. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended, but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise.

Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great ease to great ships both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised, together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did: and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.

Raleigh, Essays.

CHAINSHOT. n. s. [from chain and shot.] Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights oftentimes, a buttock, the brawn of the thigh, and the calf of the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters.

Wiseman, Surgery.

CHAINWORK. n. s. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chainwork, for the chapeters which were upon the tops of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.

CHAIR. † n. s. [chair, Fr. from cathedra, Lat.
καθέδρα, Gr.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rab'lais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind.

Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person, without a back.

Watts, Logic.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—

—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsword'd?

Is the king dead?

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,

Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom, say;

Either that's thine, or else thou wert not his.

Shakspeare.

The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supply with worthy men.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Her grace sat down to rest a while,

In a rich chair of state.

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

The committee of the commons appointed Mr. Pym to take the chair.

Clarendon.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,

The seat of audience, old Latinus sat.

Dryden, Æneid.

3. A vehicle born by men; a sedan.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair.

Pope.

4. A vehicle drawn by one horse.

E'en kings might quit their state to share
Contentment and a one-horse chair.

T. Warton, Phaeton and the One-Horse Chair.

CHAIRMAN. n. s. [from chair and man.]

1. The president of an assembly.

In assembly, generally one person is chosen chairman or moderator, to keep the several speakers to the rules of order.

Watts.

2. One whose trade it is to carry a chair.

One elbows him, one justles in the shole,

A rafter breaks his head, or chairman's pole.

Dryden.

Troy chairmen bore the wooden steed,

Pregnant with Greeks, impatient to be freed;

Those bully Greeks, who, as the mo'lers do,

Instead of paying chairmen, run them through.

Swift.

CHAISE. † n. s. [chaise, Fr.]

1. A carriage of pleasure drawn by one horse, Dr. Johnson says: which was the case formerly, before post-chaises were in request.

Instead of the chariot he might have said the chaise of government; for a chaise is driven by the person that sits in it.

Addison.

[They] run.

They know not whither, in a chaise and one.

Pope, Imit. of Horace.

2. A chaise and pair; a chaise and four; the term of later days for a light vehicle, with four wheels, drawn by two or four horses.

CHALCEDONY.* See CALCEDONY.

CHALCO'GRAPHER. n. s. [χαλκογράφος, of χαλκός, brass, and γράφω, to write or engrave.] An engraver in brass.

CHALCO'GRAPHY. n. s. [χαλκογραφία.] Engraving in brass. See CALCOGRAPHY.

CHALDE'E.* adj. Denoting or relating to the language of Chaldea.

The names of the points or accents are all of a late original, all Chaldee, not any Hebrew.

Br. Walton, Considerata Considered, p. 247.

CHALDRON. † n. s. A dry English measure of coals,

CHALDRON. } consisting of thirty-six bushels heaped

CHALDRON. } up, according to the scaled bushel kept at Guildhall, London. The chaldron should weigh two thousand pounds.

Chambers.

Mr. Malone observes, that the preceding notice of the weight must be a mistake or a misprint. A ton of coals weighs twenty hundred pounds; a chaldron should weigh 2800; so that a chaldron is to a ton, as seven to five. Mr. Malone means a London chaldron, which on an average weighs 28½ cwt.
But a Newcastle chaldron, 53 cwt.

CHALICE. n. s. [calic, Sax. calice, Fr. calix, Lat.]

1. A cup; a bowl.

When in your motion you are hot,

And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him

A calice for the nonce.

Shakspeare.

2. It is generally used for a cup used in acts of worship.

All the church at that time did not think emblematical figures unlawful ornaments of cups or chalices.

Stillingfleet.

CHALICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.]

Having a cell or cup: applied by Shakspeare to a flower, but now obsolete.

Hark, hark! the lark at heav'n's gate sings,

And Phœbus' gins arise,

His steeds to water at these springs,

On calic'd flowers that lie.

Shakspeare.

CHALK. † n. s. [ceale, Sax. catck, Welsh; calch, Gael. cal or kal, Celt. soft stone.]

Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the boles. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn.

Chambers.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost. Mortimer.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits must appear.

Dryden.

CHALK for cheese. A very old expression, not yet disused, for the imposition practised by those who would substitute an inferior thing for what is good.

Lo! how they feign'd chalke for cheese.

Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

To CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub with chalk.

The heastly rabble then came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls and shopboards in vast swarms,
With new chalk'd bills and rusty arms.

Hudibras.

2. To manure with chalk.

Land that is chalked, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking.

Mortimer.

3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.

Being not proud by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way.

Shakespeare.

His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to his fellow-creatures.

South.

With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design.

Dryden.

The time falls within the compass here chalked out by nature, very punctually.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CHALK-CUTTER. n. s. [from chalk and cut.] A man that digs chalk.

Shells, by the sea-men called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pit, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them.

Woodward.

CHALK-PIT. n. s. [from chalk and pit.] A pit in which chalk is dug. See CHALK-CUTTER.

CHALK-STONE.* n. s. [Sax. cealc-stan.] A small piece of chalk.

He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder.

Isaiah, xxvii. 9.

CHALKY. adj. [from chalk.]

1. Consisting of chalk; white with chalk.

As far as I could ken the chalky cliffs,
When from thy shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm.

Shakespeare.

That bellowing beats on Dover's chalky cliff.

Rowe.

2. Impregnated with chalk.

Chalky water towards the top of earth is too fretting. Bacon.

To CHALLENGE.† v. a. [old Fr. challenge, to claim. Kelham, Norm. Dict. chalonger, to dispute, to contest, Lacombe. Calenger, calonger, "calumniator, accuser, disputer," Roquefort; and thus our old lexicography terms "challenge or challenging, a crafty and false accusation, calumnia." Huloet. One of the oldest meanings of challenge which I find, is the legal one of objecting to a witness, viz. in the tenth century. See CHALLENGE.]

1. To call another to answer for an offence by combat.

The Prince of Wales stepped forth before the king,
And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Shakespeare.

2. To call to a contest.

Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden.

I challenge any man to make any pretence to power by right of fatherhood, either intelligible or possible.

Locke.

3. To accuse.

Many of them be such losels and scatterlings, as that they cannot easily by any sheriff be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenser on Ireland.

Where the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness.

Shakespeare.

4. [In law.] To object to the impartiality of any one.

[See the noun.]

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty-four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default.

Hale.

5. To claim as due.

That divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptation is by the best things worthily challenged.

Hooker.

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?

That we our largest bounty may extend,

Where nature doth with merit challenge.

Shakespeare.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd

To you, preferring you before her father;

So much I challenge, that I may profess

Due to the Moor, my lord.

Shakespeare.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes

Did challenge pity of them.

Shakespeare.

So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,

A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,

Roars loudly fierce, and challenges the food.

Dryden.

Hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,

And challenge better terms.

Addison.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.

Peacham on Drawing.

CHALLENGE.† n. s. [old Fr. challenge, a claim.

Kelham, Norm. Dict. "Challenge, moyens par lesquels on rejette le témoignage des jureurs. 930." Lacombe.]

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

Shakespeare.

2. A demand of something as due.

And he side to hem, smyte ye no man wrongfully, nether make ye fals challenge, and be ye apayed with your sondis.

Wielis, St. Luke, iii

Taking for his younglings eark,

Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,

Busy with oker did the shoulders mark.

Sidney.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

Collier of Friendship.

3. [In law.] An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array is, when the whole number is excepted against, as partially empannelled: challenge to or by the poll, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent: challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination; as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

Cowell.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,

You shall not be my judge.

Shakespeare.

CHALLENGEABLE.* adj. [from challenge.] That may be called to account; liable to challenge.

How lords are challengeable by their vassals; and how homage may be dissolved, and adjudged by combat.

Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 30.

God now useth his Majesty to succeed and suppress persons lately in power, highly challengeable for the want of mercy and truth.

Spencer's Righteous Ruler, (1660,) p. 47.

CHALLENGER.† n. s. [from challenge, old Fr. "les chalejurs, the challengers." Kelham, Norm. Dict.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?—
No, fair princess; he is the general challenger. Shakspeare.

Death was denounc'd;

He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grisly challenger. Dryden.

2. One that claims superiority.

Whose worth

Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections. Shakspeare.

3. A claimant; one that requires something as of right.

Earnest challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation. Hooker.

CHALYBEAN.* adj. [old Fr. chalibé, steeled, done over with steel; from the Lat. chalybes, men who were famous among the ancients for their iron works; chalybs, iron or steel.] Relating to steel well wrought or tempered.

The hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

CHALYBEATE. adj. [from chalybs, Lat. steel.] Impregnated with iron or steel; having the qualities of steel.

The diet ought to strengthen the solids, allowing spices and wine, and the use of chalybeate waters. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CHIAM.* n. s. [Pers.] The sovereign prince of Tartary, by way of distinction; a lord of the Persian court, or a governour of a Persian province.

I will fetch you a toothpicker now from the farthest nish of Asia; bring you the length of Prester John's foot; fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard.

Shakspeare, Much Ado, &c. ii. 1.

CHAMADE.* n. s. [French.] The beat of the drum which declares a surrender, Dr. Johnson says. This, however, is the more modern acceptation of the word; It was formerly the sound of the trumpet; whence "sonner la chamade, to sound a parley; also, to summon, challenge, call on." Cotgrave. Menage derives the word from the Ital. chiamata, Lat. clamare, to cry out.

Several French battalions made a shew of resistance; but, upon our preparing to fill up a little fosse, in order to attack them, they beat the chamade, and sent us charte blanche.

Addison.

CHAMBER.* n. s. [chambre, Lat. siambr, Welch; cambre, Celt. low Lat. cambra, Gr. καμάρα.]

1. An apartment in a house; generally used for those appropriated to lodging.

Bid them come forth and hear me,
Or at their chamber door I'll beat the drum,
Till it cry, Sleep to death. Shakspeare.

When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
Of his own chamber. Shakspeare.

A natural cave in a rock may have something not much unlike to parlours or chambers. Bentley.

2. Any retired room.

The dark caves of death, and chambers of the grave. Prior.

3. Any cavity or hollow.

Petit has, from an examination of the figure of the eye, argued against the possibility of a film's existence in the posterior chamber. Sharp.

4. A court of justice.

In the Imperial chamber this vulgar answer is not admitted, viz. I do not believe it, as the matter is propounded and alleged. A life, Parergon.

5. The lower part of a gun where the charge is lodged.

6. A species of cannon; a small piece of ordnance.

"A chamber is a gun which stands erect on its breech. Such are used only on occasions of rejoicing, and are so contrived as to carry great charges, and thereby to make a noise more than proportioned to their bulk. They are called chambers because they are mere chambers to lodge powder; a chamber being the technical term for that cavity in a piece of ordnance which contains the combustibles. Some of them are still fired in the Park, and at the places opposite to the Parliament-house when the king goes thither." Note on Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. ed. Steevens.

Names given them, as cannons, demi-cannons, chambers, arquebuse, musket, &c. Camden, Rom.

To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

7. The cavity where the powder is lodged in a mine.

CHAMBER of London.* The city of London obtained the title of Camera Regis, some centuries since; and was addressed by this appellation in our authors of elder times.

Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. III.

His majesty's triumphant passage from the Tower through his honourable city and chamber of London, being the 15th of March, 1603. Dekker's Entertainment given to K. James.

To CHAMBER.* v. n. [from the noun.] To be wanton, to intrigue. See CHAMBERING.

Their chambering fortitude they did desery
By their soft maiden voice, and flickering eye.

Niccoli's Cuckow, 1607.

To CHAMBER.* n. a. To shut up as in a chamber. The example from Shakspeare is given by Dr. Johnson, under the verb neuter.

To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom.

Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

A beggarly drunkard is haled to the stocks, whiles the rich is chambered up to sleep out his surfeit.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. b. 4.

I that have now been chamber'd here alone,
Barr'd of my guardian, or of any else,
Am not for nothing at an instant freed
To fresh access. Ford, Trag. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore.

CHAMBER-COUNCIL.* n. s. Private or secret council; confidential communication.

I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale, i. 2.

CHAMBER-COUNSEL.* n. s. A counsellor who delivers his private opinion, but does not plead in the court of law. See CHAMBER-PRACTICE.

CHAMBER-HANGING.* n. s. [from chamber and hang.]

The tapestry or other furniture of a chamber.

With tokens thus and thus; averring notes
Of chamber-hanging, pictures, &c. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

CHAMBER-PRACTICE.* n. s. The practice of lawyers, who give their advice privately, without appearing in court.

Chamber-practice, and even private conveyancing, the most voluntary agency, are prohibited to them.

Burke on the Popery Laws.

CHAMBERER.* n. s. [from chamber.]

1. A man of intrigue.

I have not those soft parts of conversation,
That chamberers have. Shakspeare.

2. A chamberlain; a groom of a chamber.

Our old authors use it also for a chamber-maid.

[old Fr. chambriere, f. g. Cotgrave. chambrier, m. g. camérier, Lat. camerarius.]

I ne held me never digne in no manere

To be your wife, ne yet your chamberere. Chaucer, Clerk's Tale.
Ladies faire with their gentilwomen chamberers also and lavenders. Arnold's Chronicle, fol. 193.

She [Q. Katherine Howard] had gotten also into her privy chamber, to be one of her chamberers, one of the women which had before lyen in the bed with her.

Lord Herbert, Hist. of K. Hen. VIII.

CHA'MBERFELLOW, n. s. [from chamber and fellow.]

One that lies in the same chamber.

It is my fortune to have a chamberfellow, with whom I agree very well in many sentiments. Spectator.

CHA'MBERING.* n. s. [from chamber.] Intrigue; wantonness. It is a noun, both in the original, and in the translation, of the N. Test., but has been given as an example of the verb nouter. The passage is rendered by Wicliffe, "not in beddis and unchastitees."

Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. Rom. xiii. 13.

CHA'MBERLAIN.* n. s. [old Fr. camberlane, chamber-lan.]

1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation; to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeomen ushers, and door keepers. To this office the duke of Ancaster makes an hereditary claim. Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,
Got my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shakspeare.

He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think'st thou,

That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm. Shakspeare.

When Duncan is asleep,— his two chamberlains

Will I with wine and wassel so convince. Shakspeare.
He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain. Dryden, Fables.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as, chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London.

Chambers.

Erastus, the chamberlain of the city, saluteth you.

Rom. xvi. 23.

CHA'MBERLAINSHIP. n. s. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHA'MBERMAID. n. s. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,

The chambermaid was named Ciss. B. Jonson.

Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid. Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no,
he used to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped. Swift.

CHA'MBLET.* } n. s. [from camelot. See CAMELOT
CHA'MELOT. } and CHAMLET.] Variegated stuff.

And way'd upon like water-chamelot.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xl. 45.

Your cold water-chamblots; or your paintings
Spited with copper. Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

To CHA'MBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See CAMELOT.]
To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and chamblotted; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CHA'MBREL of a Horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder legs. Farrier's Dict.

CHAME'LEON. n. s. [χαμαιλεων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees.
Its tail is flat, its nose long, ending in an obtuse point; its back is sharp, its skin plaited, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck. Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been observed to feed on flies, caught with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white flesh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied; but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour, and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Calmet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth;
his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly; yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage. Shakspeare.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after.
Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves. Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrow from his neighbour's hue
His white, or black, his green, or blue. Prior.

To CHAME'LEONIZE.* v. a. [from chameleon.] To change into many colours. Dict.

To make a chamlet, draw five lines, waved overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Peachment on Drawing.

CHAMOIS. n. s. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skiff is made into soft leather, called among us shammy.
These are the beasts which you shall eat, the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois. Deut. xiv. 5.

CHAMOMILE. n. s. [χαμαιμήλον. See CAMOMILE.] An odoriferous plant.
Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Eubathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Fresh costmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning setuale. Spencer.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. Shakespeare.
Posset drink with chamomile flowers. Floyer on the Humours.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.
Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.
The fiend reply'd not; overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughty on,

At his command,
The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold. Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.
A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Sidney.
They began to repent of that they had done, and irresolutely to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wicman.

CHAMPAÛNE.* n. s. [from the province of Champagne in France.] Wine so called.

Quick,
As is the wit it gives, the gay champagne. Thomson, Autumn.

CHAMPAIGN.† n. s. [campagne, Fr. Our word was formerly written champion, and champion; and, in later times, champain; as in Milton's two editions of his poetry. See the adjective.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse. Spencer, State of Ireland.

The Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against Gilgal. Deut. xi. 30.

C H A

There were very many in the open valley, [in the margin champaign.] Ezek. xxxvii. 2.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without disarray, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
The one winding, the other straight, and left between Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd. Milton, P. L.

CHAMPAIGN, or CHAMPAIN.* adj. [from the substantive.] Open, or flat.

Thee all the champion fields aboute, both hill and vale doe crie;
And all the pasture grounds. Turbervile, Mant. Ecl. 26.

The champaign head

CHAMPER.* n. s. [from To champ.] A biter, or nibbler; facetiously introduced into the Spectator, but a serious word of elder times; for a horse is "a bridle-champer." Sherwood.

Damsels, whether dignified or distinguished under some or all of the following denominations, to wit, trash-eaters, out-meal-chewers, pipe-*champer*s. Spectator, No. 431.

CHAMPERTORS.† n. s. [old Fr. champarteur, from champart; which is from the Lat. campi pars. Our word should be written champartors.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains. Cowel.

CHAMPERTY.† n. s. [champart, Fr. See CHAMPERTOR.] A maintenance of any man in his suit while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowel.

They bring grace to his good cheer, but no peace or benediction else to his house; these made the champarty, he contributed the law, and both joined in the divinity. Milton, Colasterion.

He thought himself in duty and in conscience bound to clear those points from error which he delivered, lest sacred authority might come in for maintenance and champerty, as they would have it. Mountagu, App. to Cws. p. 5.

CHAMPIGNON. n. s. [champignon, Fr.] A kind of mushroom.

He viler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHAMPION.† n. s. [champion, Fr. campione, Ital. campio, low Lat. campus, Lat. a field; kamp, old Goth. a battle; Sax. campian, to fight; Germ. kampen. Serenius adduces the Goth. kampe, or kappe, pugil. a champion.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.
In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton, P. L.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy! Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right. Dryden.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.
A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakespeare

This makes you incapable of conviction, and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another. Covel.

To CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The seed of Banquo, kings!

Rather than so, come fate, into the list,

And champion me to the utterance. Shakspeare.

CHAMPIONESS. * n. s. [from champion.] A female warrior.

The championess he thought he saw and knew.

Fairfax, Tasso.

The championess had harnessed her peacocks to go for Samos.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

CHANCE. † n. s. [chance, Fr. from the Lat. ca-dentia.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As the unthought accident is guilty

Of what we wildly do, so we profess

Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies

Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

The only man, of all that chance could bring

To meet my arms, was worth the conquering. Dryden.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them. Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; nor bread to the wise, nor riches to men of understanding; nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all. Eccles. ix. 11. The meaning is, that the success of these outward things is not always carried by desert; but by chance in regard of us, though by providence in regard of God. Hakewill on Providence, p. 451.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents. South.

The beauty I beheld, has struck me dead;

Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;

Poison is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance. Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;

All chance direction, which thou canst not see. Pope.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness

Be like our warranted quarrel! Shakspeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits,

That common chances common men could bear. Shakspeare.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton, P. L.

Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

CHANCE. † adj. Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would say,

They met like chance companions on the way. Dryden.

I would not take the gift,

Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,

Lay for the next chance comer. Dryden.

Besides these there were five chance auditors.

Swift.

CHANCE. * adv. By chance; perchance.

If chance by lowly contemplation led,

Some kindred spirit shall enquire thy fate. Gray's Elegy.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think; —

Thou hast thy mistress still. Shakspeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother? Shakspeare.

Ay, Casca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,

That Caesar looks so sad. Shakspeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he easily took. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find

A river's mouth impervious to the wind. Pope, Odyssey.

CHANCEFUL. adj. [chance and full.] Hazardous.

Out of use.

Myself would offer you to accompany

In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy. Spenser.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. † n. s. [from chance and medley,

Dr. Johnson says. Some have considered it as a corruption of the Fr. chaud melle, a fault committed in a sudden tumult; and Coles, in his English vocabulary, gives chaud-melle, with this meaning. The Scotch also have the expression chaud-melle, for a sudden quarrel. Kelham, in his Norman dictionary, says, that chaud-melle is "a hot or sudden debate, corruptly called chance- medley." Fr. chaud, hot; and melle, an affray.]

In law.

The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway side, by which many usually travel, and cast down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain: in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself. Covel.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a smart saying, brought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley. South.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia. Sidney.

CHANCEL. † n. s. [from cancelli, Lat. lattices, with which the chancel was inclosed. κρύγλα,

κρύγλοι, vox Græco-barb. Cancelli. "Ita vocantur in templis sacra adyta, velis, cancellis, et fenestris januis obvelata, quibus ab accessu indigni arcentur." V. Meursii Gloss. et Critopuli Emend.

in Meurs. p. 39.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should stay service in the chancel. Hooker.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference. Addison on Italy.

CHANCELLOR. † n. s. [cancellarius, Lat. chancellor,

Fr. from cancellare, litteras vel scriptum linea per medium ducta damnare, and seemeth of itself likewise to be deriv'd of cancellis, which signify all one with κρύγλας, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out.

It may be thought that judgement seats were compass'd in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view, Dr. Johnson says. Cassiodorus, deducing the name from canc-

celli, adds that "chancellors examined matters within places sevoid apart, enclosed with partitions of such cross bars. Regard, saith he to the chancellor, what name you bear; it cannot be hidden, which you do within lattesses; for you keep your grates lightsome, your bars open, and your doors as transparent as windows. Whereby it is evident, that he sate within grates, where he was to be seen on every side; and thereof it may be thought he took his name." Jus Sigilli, or the law of England, 1673. p. 7. Others derive it from his power of cancelling writings. See To CANCEL.

Quasitus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,

Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

"Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,"

Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.

Verses of Nigel de Wetcere to the Bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.

Our word was formerly written chancellor; so Lord Bacon, in the original editions of his works, repeatedly writes it; and perhaps it should be so, when we consider the derivation chancellier.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharios, scil. qui conscribendis & excipiendis judicium actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and subjecteth himself only to the law of nature and conscience. Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue, how like a beast you lie:
Go, buckle to the law: Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.

Dryden, jun.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms of their government; so that he was in a manner chancellor of Athens. Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary; whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only. Cowel. Chamb.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who, at Oxford, holds his office during life, but, at Cambridge, he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order. Chambers.

CHA'NCERLORSHIP. n. s. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellorship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-usher, Madam, my lord is gone. Camden.

CHA'NCERY.† n. s. [from chancellor; probably chancellery; then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal.

Cowel.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishops letters under the seal episcopal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The mercy, and the pardon, and the huge moderation of that court, [the Gospel,] though it hath mollified the strict law into never so much chancery, will not proceed further, and mollify obedience into libertinism. Hammond, Serm. vi.

CHIA'NCRE. n. s. [chancre, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maladies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relapsed with a chancre. Wiseman.

CHA'NCROUS. adj. [from chancre.] Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chancre, or rather a chancreous callus. Wiseman.

CHANDELIER.† n. s. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

Lamps, branches, or chandeliers, (as we now modishly call them,) were adorned with the flowers then most in season.

Stukeley, Palæogr. Sacra, (1736,) p. 69.

CHA'NDLER.† n. s. [chandelier, Fr.]

1. An artisan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me lights as good cheap at the dearest chandlers in Europe. Shakespeare.

Shakespeare.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born,
With tallow spots thy coat.

Gay.

2. Formerly, a candlestick. Ray's North Country Words, p. 14. It is still employed in this sense in Scotland. It is an abbreviation of the Fr. chandelier; a word which our ancestors disdained to adopt; for Stukeley sneers at the modish introduction of it, in 1736. See CHANDELIER.

3. A corn-chandler, a seller of corn. See CORN-CHANDLER.

CHA'NDLERLY*. adj. [from chandler.] Like a chandler.

To be scolded our headmoney, our twopences in their chandlerly shopbook of Easter. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

CHA'NDLERY*. n. s. [from chandler.] The articles sold by a chandler.

CHA'NDRY*. n. s. low Lat. eschanderia.] The place where the candles are kept. Blount.

To mistake six torches from the chandry, and give them one. B. Jonson, Masques.

CHIA'NERIN. n. s. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. cambia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another.

He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received.

Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the curse,
They change for better, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take.

To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was.

Thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest;
A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.
Shakspeare.

Whatsoever is brought upon thee, take cheerfully, and be patient when thou art changed to a low estate. Eccles. ii. 4.
For the elements were changed in themselves by a kind of harmony, like as in psaltery notes change the name of the tune, and yet are always sounds. Wisdom, xix. 18.

5. To mend the disposition or mind.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Intreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakspeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller.

A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moi-dore, when a customer comes for a crown's worth of goods.
Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or bear the horse's head from one hand to the other from the left to the right, or from the right to the left.
Farrier's Dict.

TO CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure.

One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakspeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution.

I am weary of this moon; would he would change.
Shakspeare.

CHANGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing.

All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come.
Job, xiv. 14.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shakspeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another.

O wondrous changes of a fatal scene,
Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know

A different master, and a change of time. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!

While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution.

Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full.
Bacon, Natural History.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former.

The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shakspeare.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair,
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is sounded.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder, Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring other changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind.

I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments.
Judges, xiv. 12.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces.

Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five and twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient.
Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs. [old Fr. change, place de commerce, Roquef. cambium, Lat.]

The bar, the bench, the change, the schools, and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant.

A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour.
L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents.
Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed.

The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances.

Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakspeare.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. s. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness.

At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness.
Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours.
Addison, Freeholder.

2. Susceptibility of change.

If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.]

Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.]

Full of change; inconstant; uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle.

Unsound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted.
Spenser on Ireland.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELESS. * adj. [from change and less.]

Without change; constant; not subject to variation.

Thus for each change my changeless heart I fortify.
Sidney, Arcad. b. 2.

To teach each hollow grove, and shrubby hill,
Each murmuring brook, and solitary vale,
To sound our love, and to our song accord,
Wearing echo with one changeless word.
Bp. Hall, Defiance to Envy.

CHANGELING. n. s. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

7. A child lost or taken in the place of another.

And her base elfin breed there for thee left;
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by fairies theft.
Spenser, F. Q.

- She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakespeare.
2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.
Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out,
Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.
Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.
3. One apt to change; a waverer.
Of fickle changelings and poor discontents
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakespeare.
'Twas not long
Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they changelings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.
4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another:
in ludicrous speech.
I folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The changeling never known. Shakespeare.
- CHA'NGER.† n. s. [old Fr. changeor; mod. changeur.]
1. One that is employed in changing or discounting money; money-changer.
He turn'd upsodoun the boordis of chaungeris, and the chayeris of men that solden culveris. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxi. 12.
The changers of money sitting. St. John, ii. 17.
2. One who alters the form of any thing.
Changer of all things, yet immutable,
Before and after all, the first and last.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Triumph, ii. st. 40.
Effect most strange!
At last the changer shar'd herself the change.
Rusden, Ovid, Met. 4.
3. One who forsakes the cause which he had espoused.
Meddle not with them that are given to change, [in the margin, changers.] Prov. xxiv. 21.
- CHA'NNEL.† n. s. [old Fr. chanel; bas Bret.
canol; modern Fr. canal; Lat. canalis.]
1. The hollow bed of running waters.
It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser on Ireland.
Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakespeare.
So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wonted course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.
Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea.
Woodward.
The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.
2. Any cavity drawn longways.
Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And scalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell.
Dryden, Fables.
3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel between Britain and France;
St. George's Channel between Britain and Ireland.
4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar.
5. A kennel in the street. [old Fr. chenal, & channel or gutter. Cotgrave.]
As if a channel should be call'd the sea.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI.
- To CHA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Shakespeare.

- The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Wotton, Architecture.
- Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channel'd sides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.
- CHA'NSON.* n. s. [old Fr. chanson.] A song.
The first row of the pious chanson will shew you more.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.
- These [Christmas carols] were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmas celebrity.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 142.
- To CHANT. v. a. [chanter, Fr.]
1. To sing.
Wherein the chearful birds of sundry kind
Do chant sweet musick. Spenser, F. Q.
2. To celebrate by song.
The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bp. Bramhall.
3. To sing in the cathedral service.
To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.
They chant to the sound of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos, vi. 7.
Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight, to chant aloft in air. Dryden.
- CHANT.† n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Song; melody.
A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud. Milton, P. R.
2. A part of cathedral service, both with and without the organ.
I have now taken notice of every musical part of our cathedral service, except that of the unaccompanied chant used in the verses and responses, and that other which is accompanied by the organ in the use of the Psalter.
Mason on Church Musick, p. 154.
- CHA'NTER.† n. s. [from chant.]
1. A singer; a songster.
You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Wotton, Rem. p. 379.
Jove's ethereal lays, resistless fire,
The chanter's soul, and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.
2. He who, in a cathedral, presides over the choir;
or, as Huloet says, who is the chief singer. [Lat.
cantor, præcantor.] And simply, the dignitary of a cathedral; and the priest of a chantry.
The chanter chorister is to begin De Sancta Maria, &c. The respond is, Felix namque, &c.
Gregory on the Child-Bishop, Posth. p. 115.
A certain revenue, sufficient for a chanter to one chapel.
Aubrey, Berk. iii. 24.
A country gentleman related a famous quarrel that had lately happened, in a little church in his province, between the treasurer and the chanter, the two principal dignitaries of that church. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.
He orders many of them [psalms] to be sung by the rector chori, or chanter, and the quier, or choir, alternately.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 183.
- CHA'NTICLEER. n. s. [from chanter and clair, Fr.]
The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.
And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.
Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakespeare.
Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. B. Jonson.
These verses were mentioned by Chaucer, in the description of the sudden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden, Remains.

C H A

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden, Fables.
CHA'NTRESS. † n. s. [old Fr. chantresse, "a chaunteress, a woman that sings, or sings much."
Cotgrave.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy,
Thee, chantress, oft the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton, Il Pens.

CHA'NTRY. † n. s. [old Fr. chanterie.]
Chantry is a church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue, for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint.
Cowel.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakspeare.

CHA'OS. † n. s. [chaos, Lat. from the Gr. χάος. This word is very unusual in the plural number; but Donne gives it.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.
Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done.
King Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill sorted, and mis-join'd,
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

Oh did we grow
To be two chausses, when we did show
Care to aught else. Donne, Poems, p. 36.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.
Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAO'TICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos;
confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthly particles subsided, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositied in the earth. Derham.

To CHAP. † v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referrible to the same original sense. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement.
To chop, however, is more probably a derivative of the Sax. ýppan, to open. In the Biblioth. Eliotæ, 1559, I find "to chappe, to be opened." See also CHAPT.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

Neither summer's blaze can scorch, nor winter's blast chap her fair face. Lilly's Eudymion, i. 1.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.
Then would unbalance'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the russet plain. Blackmore.

CHAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture;
an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet, Theory.

CHAP. n. s. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

C H A

Proth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.
The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew, Musæum.

To CHAP.* v. n. [Sax. ceapian.] To cheap or cheapen; to bargain or deal for a price. See
CHEAP, and CHOP.

CHAP.* n. s. An abbreviation of chapman; still in use among the common people. If the phrase be "a good chap," it implies a dealer to whom credit may be given; if simply, "a chap," it usually designates a person, of whom a contemptuous opinion is entertained.

CHAPE. n. s. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is Monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shakspeare.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword.

Phillip's World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. s. [capella, Lat.]

A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build, or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferiour curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shakspeare.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by. Howel.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the King of England.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CHA'PEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deposit in a chapel; to enshrine.

Give us the bones
Of our dead kings, that we may chapel them.
Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CHA'PELESS. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An old rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakspeare.

CHA'PELLANY. n. s. [from chapel.]

A chapelany is usually said to be that which does not subsist of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAP'ELRY. n. s. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. † n. s. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits, Dr. Johnson says. But it was a cap not confined to them.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

The executioner stands by, — his head and face covered with a chaperon, out of which there are but two holes to look through. Howel, Lett. i. v. 42.

C H A

To CHA'PERON.* v. a. An affected word, of very recent introduction into our language, to denote a gentleman attending a lady in a publick assembly. The old French verb chaperonner is "to uncover the head before others, or put off the cap to them." Cotgrave.

CHAPEAU.* n. s. [Fr.] A hat; and in heraldry, a cap or coronet. The chapeau de bras is almost an indispensable part of the full dress of a gentleman.

CHA'PFALLEN,† adj. [from chap and fallen.] Having the mouth shrunk.

They be indeed
A couple of chap-fall'n curs. B. Jonson, Poetaster.
Till they be chap-fall'n, and their tongues at peace,
Nail'd in their coffins sure, I'll ne'er believe 'em.

Beaum. and Fl. Wild-geese Chase.
A chap-fall'n beaver loosely hanging by
The cloven helm. Dryden, Jur. sat. x.

CHA'PITER. n. s. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapters and their fillets with gold.
Exod. xxxvi. 38.

CHA'PLAIN.† n. s. [old Fr. chapelain, châpelain, from capellanus, Latin.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shakspeare.
Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shakspeare.

2. One that officiates in domestick worship.
A chief governour can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINCY.* n. s. [from chaplain.] The office of a chaplain.

The chaplaincy was refused to me, and given to Dr. Lambert.
Swift, Lett.

CHA'PLAINSHIP.† n. s. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.
The Bethesda of some knight's chaplainship, where they bring grace to his good cheer. Milton, Colasterion.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.
CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sexton's spade. Shakspeare.
Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless bones. Shakspeare.

CHA'PLET. n. s. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.
Upon old hyems' chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakspeare.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistress' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.
The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead made. Dryden.
They made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehearsed of pater-nosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.

C H A

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.

4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider.

Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

CHA'PLET.* n. s. [diminut. of chapel.] A small chapel or shrine.

This is in Amos, ch. v. 26. the tabernacle, or soccoth, of your king or Moloch; that is, the chaplet, where that image of your false god, called here reus, was enshrined or dwelt: so succoth signifies; and the like seems to be understood by Succoth Benoth, the tabernacle of Venus, some little chapel or shrine where her image was kept and worshipped.

Hammond on Acts, vii. 43.

CHA'PMAN.† n. s. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapner; one that offers as a purchaser; a seller; a market-man.

Fair Diomedé, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you intend to buy. Shakspeare.

Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not utter'd by base sale of chapmen's tongues. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
'And understand 'em as most chapmen do. B. Jonson.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquourish chapmen of such wares. Wotton.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Estrange.

Their shops are deus, the buyer is their prey. Dryden.

CHA'PPY.* adj. [from chap.] Cleft; cut asunder; open; gaping. Cotgrave in V. Fendu.

CHAPS. n. s. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.
So on the downs we see
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate so. Sidney.

Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again. Shakspeare.

Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood. Dryden.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT. } particip. pass. [from To chap.]

CHA'PPED. }
Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not horrid, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt. B. Jonson.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid. Dryden, Fables.

CHA'PTER. n. s. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.
The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters. Burnet, Theory.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ceremonies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them. South.

2. From hence comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things; for it gives and it takes away, it makes honest men and knaves, fools and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter. L'Estrange.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church. Cowel.

- The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance. Addison on Italy.
4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction. Ayliffe's Parergon.
5. A decretal epistle. Ayliffe's Parergon.
6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To CHA'PTER.* v. a. [from the noun. See the 4th sense.] To tax; to correct; to take to task.

He more than once arraigns him for the inconstancy of his judgement, and chapters even his own Aratus on the same head. Dryden, Character of Polybius.

CHA'PTREL. n. s. [probably from chapiter.] The capitals of pillars, or pillasters, which support arches, commonly called impostes.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jumbs with the chaptrels. Moron.

CHAR.† n. s. [of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Some derive it from the Sax. cýpan, to turn, because this fish turneth itself swiftly in the water.] A fish found only in Winander mere in Lancashire, Dr. Johnson says; which is not exactly the case.

There are no char ever taken in these lakes, but plenty in Buttermere water, which lies a little way north of Borrowdale, about Martinmas, which are potted here.

Gray, Letter to Dr. Warton.

To CHAR. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.

Spraywood, in charring, parts into various cracks.

Woodward.

CHAR.† n. s. [cýppe, work, Sax. Lyc. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business, or cap, Sax. care, or keeren, Dutch, to sweep. Mr. H. Tooke deduces it from the Sax. cýpan, to turn or return, to turn about. The Goth. kar may not be omitted, which is business or concern: "hwa karra unsis thu witeis," what is that to us, &c. St. Matt. xxvii. 4. "I have a little char for you." Ray's North Country Words. The word is now usually written and pronounced chare; and also in its compounds chare-woman and chare-work. But in Wiltshire it is pronounced cheure, and is sometimes so written in the old editions of Beaumont and Fletcher.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

No more but o'en a woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chairs. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

She, harvest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and twopence, were her daily hire.

Dryden, Theocritus.

To CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

To CHAR.* v. a. To perform a business.

That char is char'd; that business is dispatched.

Ray's North Country Words.

All's char'd when he is gone.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CHA'R-WOMAN. n. s. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, when you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders. Swift.

CHAR-WORK.* See CHAR.

CHA'RACT, or CHA'RECT.* n. s. An inscription; and formerly a charm, or magical inscription. [charact, the inscription, or thing written; characters, the letters in which it is written; character, the materials of which characters are composed. Note on Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas. ed. Steevens.]

It was by necromancy,
By caracteres and conjuration. Skellon, Poems, p. 161.
That he use ne hids no charme, ne charecte.

Dugdale, Orig. Jud. p. 81.

Even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

CHA'RACTER.† n. s. [character, Lat. χαρακτήρ.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation. This is a very ancient acception of the word, being used by Wicliffe.

And he schal make alle, smale and greete,—to have a carecter in their right hond either in their foreheadis.

Wicliffe, Apoc. xiii. 16.

To his own love his loialtie he saved;

Whose character in the adamantine mould

Of his true heart so firmly was engraved,

That no new love's impression ever could

Berave it thence.

Spenser, F. Q. v. vi. 2.

[Titles of] honour are the character of that estimation, which publicly is had of publick estates and callings in the church or commonwealth.

Hooker, 6. vii.

In outward also her resembling less

His image, who made both; and less expressing

The character of that dominion given

O'er other creatures.

Milton, P. L.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.

But his neat cookery! —

He cut our roots in characters.

Shakspeare.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up.

Shakspeare.

It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

3. The hand or manner of writing. Formerly with the accent on the second syllable.

And writing strange charâcters on the ground.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 14.

I found the letter thrown in at the casement of my closet. —

You know the character to be your brother's.

Shakspeare.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.

Each drew fair characters, yet none

Of these they feign'd, excels their own.

Denham.

Homer has excelled all the heroick poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity.

Addison.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.

This subterraneous passage is much mended, since Seneca gave so bad a character of it.

Addison on Italy.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.

In a tragedy, or epic poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outshine the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets.

Dryden.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.

Nothing so true as what you once let fall,

Most women have no characters at all.

Bope.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.

The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions.

Atterbury.

To CHA'RACTER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable, Dr. Johnson says; which indeed Shakspeare exhibits, as also the accent on the first syllable of this verb. The substantive in Spenser has also the accent on the second syllable. See CHARACTER, 3d. sense.

These few precepts in thy memory

See thou character.

Shakspeare.

Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin.

Shakspeare.

O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books

And in their barks my thoughts I'll character.

Shakspeare.

The pleasing poison

The visage quite transforms of him that drunks,

And the inglorious likeness of a beast

Fixes instead, un moulding reason's mintage,

Character'd in the face.

Milton, Comus.

A law not only written by Moses, but charactered in us by nature.

Milton, Doct. and Dis. of Divorce.

2. To describe; to denominate; to characterize.

Being thus character'd,

And challenged, know, I dare appear, and do

To who dares threaten. Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

Thunius, one that writeth truth with a steady hand, thus charactereth the Con-Waldenses:—They used raw pelts clapped about them for their clothes, &c.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 145.

The apostle charactereth a lawful magistrate by this spirit; Rom. xiii. 4. He is the minister of God to thee for good.

Spenser, Righteous Ruler, p. 8.

CHA'RACTERISM.* n. s. [from character.] The distinction of character.

The characterism of an honest man: He looks not to what he might do, but what he should.

Bp. Hall, Characters, p. 13.

He [Christ] was described by infallible characterisms which did fit him, and did never fit any but him.

Bp. Taylor, Demonst. of the Truth of the Chr. Religion.

So far is our version from preserving this Lucanism, this characterism of an author, that it inverts the thought.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. p. 275.

CHARACTERISTICAL.† adj. [from characterize.] That CHARACTERISTICK.† which constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristick distinction.

Woodward on Fossils.

The shining quality of an epic hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration.

Dryden.

CHARACTERISTICALLY.* adv. [from characteristical.]

In a manner which constitutes or distinguishes character.

The title of wise men seems to have been anciently the peculiar addition of prophets, and used characteristically.

Spencer, Vanity of Vulg. Prophecies, p. 36.

Slaying with the sword is very characteristically spoken here, in this epistle, of the faithful martyr Antipas.

More, Seven Churches, ch. 5.

Henry's hypocrisy is not characteristically nor consistently sustained.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 141.

CHARACTERISTICALNESS. n. s. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERISTICK. n. s. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer in a manner superiour to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristick which distinguishes him from all others.

Pope.

CHARACTERISTICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHA'RACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.]

1. To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.

It is some commendation, that we have avoided publickly to characterize any person, without long experience. Swift.

2. To engrave, or imprint.

They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.

There are faces not only individual, but gentilitious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized.

Arbutnot on Air.

CHA'RACTERLESS. adj. [from character.] Without a character.

When water drops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallowed cities up,

And mighty states characterless are grated

To dusty nothing.

Shakspeare.

CHA'RACTERY.† n. s. [from character.] Impression; mark; distinction; a accented anciently on the second syllable.

Fairies use flowers for their charactery.

Shakspeare.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,

All the charactery of my sad brows.

Shakspeare.

A third sort — bestowed their time in drawing out the true lineaments of every virtue and vice so lively, that who saw the medals might know the face; which art they significantly termed charactery.

Bp. Hall, Characters. To the Reader.

CHARADE.* n. s. [Fr.] A species of riddle, usually in verse.

An enigma, which consists in disguising the truth by an ambiguous or obscure expression, is certainly superiour to a rebus or charade, which only puzzles you with letters and syllables; a species of difficult trifling, which one cannot but wonder to find prevailing in this enlightened age, amongst people of good understanding in the polite world.

Graves's Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 99.

CHA'RCOAL.† n. s. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char, business; but, by Mr. Lye, from To charke, to burn, Dr. Johnson says. It may be added, that the word was formerly written charke coal: "A man made charke coles in a wood," Festival, fol. 25. The process of making charcoal, however, has been termed charring the wood.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Love is a fire that burns and sparkles,

In men as nat'rally as in charcoals,

Which sooty chymists stop in holes,

When out of wood they extract coals.

Hudibras.

Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls

With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?

Pope.

CHARD. n. s. [chard, Fr.]

1. Charls of artichokes are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness.

Chambers.

2. Charls of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white, thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot, which is the true chard.

Mortimer.

To CHARGE.† v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare. Ital. low Lat. cargare, from carrus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose: it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them.

Genesis, xl. 4.

What you have charged me with, that I have done.

Shakspeare.

2. To impute as a debt: with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death, I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off,
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heaven to charge the bill on me.

Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time.

Dryden.

It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetic doctrine.

Locke.

It is not barely the ploughman's pains, the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour.

Locke.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,

Charge all their woes on absolute decree;

All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,

And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate.

Pope.

We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen.

Watts, Logick.

4. To impute to, as cost, or hazard.

He was so great an encourager of commerce, that he charg'd himself with all the sea risk of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter.

Arbutnot on Coins.

5. To impose as a task: it has with before the thing imposed.

The gospel *charge*th us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves.

Tillotson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless.

Wake, Preparation for Death.

7. To accuse: it has with before the crime.

And his angels he charged with folly.

Job, iv. 18.

8. To challenge.

The priest shall charge her by an oath.

Numbers, v. 19.

Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name

So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,

To charge me to an answer as the pope.

Shakspeare.

9. To command; to enjoin.

And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

Prior.

To fam'd Apelles, when young Ammon brought

The darling idol of his captive heart;

And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,

Waller.

To have her charms recorded by his art.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,

Her blooming mountains and her sunny shores,

With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,

The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,

While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,

And tyranny usurps her happy plains.

Addison.

CHA'RTIEL.* See CARTEL.

CHA'RTER. n. s. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politick: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empannelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence. Corvel.

Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakspeare.

It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denham.

She shakes the rubbish from her mounting brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which Heav'n will to the death of time allow. Dryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most gaul'd with my folly,
They most must laugh. Shakspeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakspeare.

CHARTER-LAND.* n. s. In law, such land as a man holds by charter; freehold; which the Saxons termed boe-land; both meaning land held by evidence in writing.

Charter-land had its name from a particular form in the charter, or deed, which ever since the reign of Hen. VIII. hath been disused. Coke on Littleton.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. s. [chartre partie, Fr.] A paper relating to a contract, of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakspeare.

CHARTREUX, CHARTREUSE.* n. s. [Fr.] A celebrated monastery of Carthusians; and also a monk of the order of St. Bruno. See CARTHUSIAN. Our CHARTER-HOUSE is a corruption of this word: it was a convent of this order.

A monk o' the Chartreux. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V. III.

The order of the Carthusians was first established in the year 1086, in the desert of Chartreuse, in Grenoble, by one Bruno. Summary of Religious Houses.

Like some lone Chartreux stands the good old hall,
Silence without, and fasts within the wall. Pope.

A famous monastery, called the grand Chartreuse.
Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

CHARTULARY.* n. s. See CARTULARY.

These particulars are recorded by an authentic and well-informed annalist, Henning the learned sub-prior of that monastery, who compiled a chartulary of its possessions and privileges. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 26.

CHARY.* adj. [Sax. ceapig.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakspeare.

Yet I am chary too who comes about me:
Two innocents should not fear one another. Beaumont and Fl., Elder Brother.

To CHASE.* v. a. [chasser, Fr. derived by some from the Lat. calcare, to trample or tread; whence the low Lat. caciare, chaciare; and the Ital. cacciare; by others, from capture, to catch.]

1. To hunt.

It shall be as the chased roe. Isaiah, xlii. 14.
Mine enemies chased me sore like a bird. Lament, iii. 52.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

And Abimelech chased him, and he fled before him. Judges, ix. 40.
How should one chase a thousand. Deut. xxxii. 30.

3. To drive away.

He that chaseth away his mother, is a son that conseth shame. Proverbs, xix. 26.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chased by their brother's endless malice, from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Bisennis. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.

When the following morn had chas'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE.* v. s. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

The chase I sing; hounds, and their various breed. Somerville.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hastening, in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakspeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet, Theory on the Earth.

3. Fitness to be hunted, appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakspeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain,
Frequent the forests, thy chaste will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knoller's Hist.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow,
Expanded on the hero's face;
When the thick squadrons prest the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursu'd,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryden, Jur.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakspeare.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompence the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endued with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game than a park. A chase differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cruel.

C H A

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the northside of this pleasant chase. Shakspeare.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambers.

9. A term at the game of tennis, signifying the spot where a ball falls, beyond which the adversary must strike his ball to gain a point or chase.

Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chases. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

T. I have two chases.

I. Sir, the last is no chase, but a loss.

T. Sir, how is it a loss?

I. Because you did strike it at the second bound.

Wodroephe's Fr. Gr. (1624), p. 234.

CHASE-GUN. n. s. [from chase and gun.] Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chase-guns through our stern they send. Dryden.

CHA'SEABLE, or CHACEABLE.* adj. [old Fr. chassable, "chaseable, fit to be chased, pursued, hunted after." Cotgrave.] Fit for the chase.

Beastes which ben chaceable. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 5.

CHA'SER. n. s. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began

A stop i' th' chaser, a retire; anon

A rout, confusion thick. Shakspeare.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye

Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denham.

Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,

At once the chaser, and at once the prey.

Lo, Rufus tugging at the deadly dart,

Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchaser.

CHASM. n. s. [χάσμα]"

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no chasms or gaps. Locke.

The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground adast her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm! profound. Philips.

2. A place unfilled; a vacuity.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,

No action leave to busy chronicles;

Such, whose supine felicity but makes,

In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryde.

CHA'SMED.* adj. [from chasm.] Having gaps or openings.

Fast by yon chasmed hill that frowns,

Cleft by an elemental shock.

Essays by a Society of Gentlemen at Exeter, (1796), p. 542.

CHASSELIS. n. s. [French.] A sort of grape.

CHASTE, adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language; pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene. Watts, Logick.

4. True to the marriage bed.

To love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home. Titus, ii. 5.

C H A

CHASTE-EYED.* adj. [from chaste and eye.] Having chaste or modest eyes.

The oak-crown'd sisters, and their chaste-ey'd queen.

Collins, Ode on the Passions.

CHASTE-TREE. n. s. [vitex, Lat.]

This tree will grow to be eight or ten feet high, and produce spikes of flowers at the extremity of every strong shoot in autumn. Miller.

CHA'STELY.† adv. [from chaste.]

1. Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous to lie as to live chastely. Shakspeare.

Make first a song of joy and love,

Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,

Which chastely in the channels ran,

And from our demi-gods began. Dryden.

2. Without violation of decent ceremony.

Howsoever my cause goes, see my body

(Upon my knees I ask it) buried chastely.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.

To CHA'STEN. v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs, xix. 18.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path

Thou lead'st me; and to the hand of Heaven submit,

However chastening. Milton, P. L.

Some feel the rod,

And own, like us, the father's chastening hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit she wills to hide

Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

CHA'STENER.* n. s. [from chasten.] He who corrects or chastens.

CHA'STENESS.† n. s. [from chaste.]

1. Chastity; purity.

Stand not upon thy strength, though it surpass;

Nor thy fore-proved chastness stand thou on:

Thou art not holier than David was,

Nor wiser than was most wise Solomon.

Davies, Wil's Pilgrim. Q. 3.

Religion requires of him the highest degree of purity and chasteness. Young, on Idolatrous Corruptions, ii. 213.

2. Purity of writing.

He [Sacheverell] wrote without either chasteness of style, or liveliness of expression. Burnet, Hist. of his own Times.

To CHASTISE.† v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last. So far Dr. Johnson. But it is rather from the old Fr. chastier, chastoyer, which is also from the Lat. castigare. In confirmation of this etymology, I may adduce Chaucer, who writes, for chastise, the word chastie, Rom. of the Rose, "I, that other folke chastie, woll not be taught, &c."]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,

But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet. Shakspeare.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues? Grew, Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,

He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,

That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,

And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impedes thee. Shakspeare

Know, sir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia.

Shakespeare.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd.

Thomson.

CHASTISEABLE.* adj. [old Fr. chastiable.] Deserving chastisement.

Sherwood.

CHASTISEMENT.* n. s. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment: commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment. Dr. Johnson has not noticed the twofold accentuation of this word. The example from Shakespeare shews it to have been, occasionally, on the first syllable; and, in modern times, many so pronounce the word.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?

Shakespeare.

He held the chastisement of one which molested the see of Rome, pleasing to God.

Raleigh, Essays.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natur'd tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod.

Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly father, to wean his affections from the world.

Bentley.

CHASTISER.* n. s. [from chastise.] He who chastises, or corrects by punishment.

They have grown in strength, and by their strength now begin to despise their chastisers.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

An instrument of humility, and a chastiser of too big a confidence.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 3.

The thought of death indulge:

Give it its wholesome empire; let it reign,

That kind chastiser of the soul to joy!

Young, Night Th. 3.

Such as preserve them [the traces of sorrow] longest, do perhaps best acquiesce in the will of the chastiser.

Gray, Lett. to Mr. Nicholls.

CHASTITY.* n. s. [old Fr. chasteté, castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,

To force a spotless virgin's chastity?

Shakespeare.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God.

Bp. Taylor.

Ev'n here where frozen chastity retires,

Love finds an altar for forbidden fires.

Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity enough in language,

Without offence to utter them.

Shakespeare, Much ado.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

That chastity of worship, which God has, so suitably to our understandings, expressed himself to expect from us.

Bp. Compton, Episcopalia, (1686,) p. 29.

CHASTISER. n. s. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skinner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.]

To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,

Ylike as a monster of many heads.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Because that I familiarly sometimes,

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your sauciness will jest upon my love.

Shakespeare.

The shepherd's on the lawn

Sat simply chatting in a rustick row.

Milton, Ode.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd,

To chat a while on their adventures pass'd.

Dryden.

VOL. I.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him! Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him.

Shakespeare.

CHAT. n. s. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate

As amply and unnecessarily,

As this Gonzalo, I myself would make

A chough of as deep chat.

Shakespeare.

The time between before the fire they sat,

And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat.

Dryden.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club.

Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,

With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Pope.

CHAT. n. s. The keys of trees are called chats; as ash chats.

CHATEAU.* n. s. [Fr.] A castle.

The strong chateaus, those feudal fortresses, that were ordered to be demolished, attracted next the attention of your committee.

Burke.

CHATELET.* n. s. [Fr. diminut. of chateau.] A little castle.

Chambers.

CHATELLANY. n. s. [châtelanie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their chateellanies and dependencies.

Swift.

CHATEL.* n. s. [See CATTLE. Goth. katila; old Fr. catal, catels, chatels, moveables of any kind. V. Charpentier, Kelham, and Roquefort. Some of our elder authors write the word cattel. The etymology of chattel is by some referred to the Lat. castellum or capitale; bow Lat. captale.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;

She is my goods, my chattels.

Shakespeare.

Honour's a lease for lives to come,

And cannot be extended from

The legal tenant: 'tis a chattle

Not to be forfeited in battle.

Hudibras.

To CHATTER.* v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter.

Isaiah, xxxviii. 14.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth.

Sidney.

So doth the cuckoo, when the mavis sings,

Begin his witless note apace to chatter.

Spenser.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep; Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog.

L'Estrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air

Chatter futurity.

Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth. See To CHITTER.

Stood Theodore surpriz'd in deadly fright,

With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upright.

Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,

Their correspondent teeth will chatter.

Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Come hither you, to whom the breath

Of music is a second death;

Whose untun'd ears are neither fit

For concord, poesie, nor wit;

That chatter in unpainted prose,

And use no organ but the nose. Jordan's Poems, (before 1650.)

C H E

CHA'TTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Noise like that of a pie or monkey.

The mimick ape began his chatter,
How evil tongues his life bespatter!

Swift.

2. Idle prate.

CHA'TTERBOX.* n. s. A word of contempt, applied to such as are perpetually talking of themselves, or talking idly but incessantly of other things.

CHA'TTERER.† n. s. [from chatter.] An idle talker; a prattler. Sherwood.

CHA'TTERING.* n. s. [from chatter.] Idle or unsatisfiable talk.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifles. Watts, Logick.

CHA'TTY.* adj. [from chat.] Full of prate; chattering; conversing freely.

Expect me in your dressing room as constant as your India cabinet, and as chatty as your parrot. Montagu's Letters, i. 35.

CHA'TWOOD. n. s. Little sticks; fuel.

CHA'UDRON.* See CHAWDRON.

CHA'VENDER. n. s. [chevesne, Fr.] The chub; a fish.

These are a choice bait for the chub, or chavender, or indeed any great fish. Wallon's Angler.

CHAUMONTELLE. n. s. [French.] A sort of pear.

CHAUN.* n. s. [Sax. geonan, to yawn, to gape; Gr. χαλινω.] A gap; a chasm.

Full of crannies, full of chauns. Cotgrave in V. Fendu.
The earth at first, you must suppose, was a very paradise; but in process of time, the sun, with its mighty heat, so parched and filled it with chops and chauns which descended very far into the earth, and prepared it for a rupture.

Bp. H. Croft on Burnet's Theory, (1685.) p. 113.

To CHAUN.* v. n. To open. Sherwood.

CHAUNT.* See CHANT.

To CHAW.† v. a. [hawen, Germ. ceopan, Sax.

The old past participle is chawen; the modern, chawed.] To champ between the teeth; to masticate; to chew.

I home returning, fraught with foul despite,
And chawing vengeance all the way I went. Spenser, F. Q.

They be forced to say, that accidents be broken, eaten, drunken, chawen, and swallowed without any substance at all.

Abp. Cramer, Answer to Bp. Gardiner. p. 391.

They come to us, but us love draws;

He swallows us, and never chaws;

He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Dante.

Whether he found any use of chawing little sponges, dipt in oil, in his mouth, when he was perfectly under water, and at a distance from his engine. Boyle.

The man who laugh but once to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass,
Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law. Dryden.

CHAW. n. s. [from the verb.] The chap; the upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy chaws, and will bring thee forth and all thine army. Ezekiel, xxix. 4.

CHA'WDRON.† n. s. [written also chaudron, and chaudron.] Entrails.

Add thereto a tyger's chawdron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

Sheep's-heads will stay with thee?—
Yes, sir, or chawdrons. Beaumont and Fl. The Valour.

CHAWN.* See CHAUN.

CHEAP.† adj. [ceapan, Sax. koopēn, Dutch, to buy, from the Goth. kaupan.]

C H E

1. To be had at a low rate; purchased for a small price.

Where there are a great many sellers to a few buyers, there the thing to be sold will be cheap. On the other side, raise up a great many buyers for a few sellers, and the same thing will immediately turn dear. Locke.

2. Of small value; easy to be had; not respected.

The goodness, that is cheap in beauty, maketh beauty brief in goodness. Shakespeare.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company. Shakespeare.

He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap. Bacon.

May your sick fame still languish till it die,
And you grow cheap in every subject's eye. Dryden.

The titles of distinction, which belong to us, are turned into terms of derision, and every way is taken by profane men, towards rendering us cheap and contemptible. Atterbury.

CHEAP.† n. s. [chepe is an old word for market, whence Eastcheap and Cheapside. Dr. Johnson might have added, that our ancient lexicography gives "chepe for price," Prompt. Parv.] Market; purchase; bargain: as good cheap; [à bon marche, Fr.]

It is like to children sitting in chepyng. Wicliffe, St. Matt. xi.

The same wine which we pay so dear for now a days, in that good world was very good cheap. Sidney.

Victuals shall be so good cheap upon earth, that they shall think themselves to be in good case. 2 Esdras, xvi. 21.

It is many a man's case to tire himself out with hunting after that abroad, which he carries about him all the while, and may have it better cheap at home. L'Estrange.

Some few insulting cowards, who love to vapour good cheap, may trample on those who give least resistance. Devoy of Piety.

To CHE'APEN.† v. a. [Goth. kaupan, ceapan, Sax. to buy.]

1. To attempt to purchase; to bid for any thing; to ask the price of any commodity.

Rich she shall be, that's certain; wise, or I'll none; virtuous, or I'll never cheapen her. Shakespeare.

He goes on negotiating and cheapening the loyalty of our faithful governor of Ireland.

Milton, Observ. on Peace between E. of Orm. and the Irish.

The first he cheapened was a Jupiter, which would have come at a very easy rate. L'Estrange.

She slept sometimes to Mrs. Thody's,
To cheapen tea. Prior.

To shops in crowds the daggled females fly,
Pretend to cheapen goods, but nothing buy. Swift.

2. To lessen value.

My hopes pursue a brighter diadem:
Can any brighter than the Roman be?
I find my profer'd love has cheapen'd me. Dryden.

CHE'APENER.* n. s. [from cheapen. Prompt. Parv. cheperer, negotiator.] A bargainer. Sherwood.

CHE'APLY. adv. [from cheap.] At a small price; at a low rate.

By these I see
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakespeare.
Blood, rapines, massacres, were cheaply bought,
So mighty recompence your beauty brought. Dryden.

CHE'APNESS. n. s. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant strangers to bring in commodities; having for end cheapness. Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. † v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheter, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun, Dr. Johnson says; where escheat is proposed as the etymology, and perhaps justly. But the Sax. ceatt, circumvention, may be noticed. Serenius gives the old Goth. kyta, deceitfully to impose upon.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deformed, unfinish'd. Shakespeare.

CHEAT. † n. s. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manors in procuring escheats, cheat, the abridgement, was brought to convey a bad meaning. This may be further illustrated. "They call their art [gaming] by a new found name, as cheating; themselves, cheators; and the dice, cheters; borrowing the term from among our lawyers, with whom all such casuals as fall to the lord at the holding of his leets, as waives, straits, and such like, be called chetes, and are accustomedly said to be escheated to the lord's use." Greene's Michel Mumchance, his Discoverie of the Art of Cheating, before 1600.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.

Emp'rick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
Trust on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's fulser than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says, we shall be blest,
With some new joys cuts off what we possess. Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Dissimulation can be no farther useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast sums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryden.

CHEATABLENESS. * n. s. [from cheat.] Disposition to deceive.

Not faith, but folly, an easy cheatableness of heart; and not confidence, but presumption. Hammond's Works, i. 554.

CHEAT-BREAD. * n. s. [probably from the Fr. achet, bought.] Fine bread; bought bread; in opposition to that of a coarser quality, usually baked at home; or, as we now say, whcaten, in contradistinction to household. Cotgrave renders "bis-blanc, whenten or cheat bread."

Without French wines, cheat-bread, or quails.
Com. of Eastward Hoe.

CHEATER. † n. s. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. Shakespeare.

[It is in the preceding example, by way of joke or quibble, for escheator; "with the es left out, and so turned cheater," as Lord Coke in his Charge at Norwich, in 1607, thus played upon the word.]

They say this town is full of couzenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.

He is no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheator i' faith.
Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakespeare.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers. Bp. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To CHECK. † v. a. [from the French echecs, chess; from whence we use, at that game, the term check-mate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any farther. The Dutch have also the word schaak, belonging to the game of chess. But see the remarks on CHECKMATE.]

1. To repress; to curb.

Reserve thy state; with better judgement check
This hideous rashness. Shakespeare.

Fames may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead. Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton, Comus.

He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To reprove; to chide.

Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shakespeare.

His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check him for't. Shakespeare.

The king, which erst kept all the realm in doubt,
The veriest rascal now dare check and flout.

Mir. for Mag. p. 293.

3. To compare a bank note or other bill, with the correspondent paper.

4. To controul by a counter reckoning; to compare the items of an account with vouchers, so as to check and controul it, and thus ascertain its justness. This sense seems to have been taken not from the game of chess, as Mr. Malone also has observed, but from the chequered cloth on the board of the Exchequer, which was used for settling accounts passed before the court. See Archæologia, vol. ix. p. 28.

To CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop; with at.

With what wing the stanyel checks at it. Shakespeare.

He must observe their mood on whom he jests,

The quality of the persons, and the time;

And, like the haggard, check at every feather

That comes before his eye. Shakespeare.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.

If love check with business, it troubleth men's fortunes.

Bacon.

3. To strike with repression.

I'll avoid his presence;

It checks so strong upon me. Dryden.

CHECK. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Repressure; stop; rebuff; sudden restraint.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,

Meeting the check of such another day. Shakespeare.

C H E

We see also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes.

Bacon, Essays.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety.

Tillotson.

It was this viceroy's zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of Christianity.

Addison, Freeholder.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege, which had been but too much winked at.

Atterbury.

The great struggle with passions is in the first check.

Rogers.

2. Restraint; curb; government; continued restraint.

They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much breaketh their spirit.

Hayward.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power.

Clarendon.

Some free from rhyme or reason, rule or check, Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck.

Pope.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest.

Swift.

3. A reproof; a slight.

Oh! this life

Is nobler than attending for a check.

Shakespeare.

I do know, the state,

However this may gall him with some check, Cannot with safety cast him.

Shakespeare.

So we are sensible of a check,

But in a brow, that saucily controuls Our action.

Beaumont and Fl. The Coronation.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wise subjects

Take check, and think it strange? perhaps revolt?

Dryden.

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight.

Chambers.

The free haggard

(Which is that woman, that hath wing, and knows it, Spirit and plume,) will make an hundred checks, To shew her freedom.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings; and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check.

Suckling.

When whistled from the fist,

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd, And with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd, Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

Dryden.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry.

Clarendon.

A satirical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests.

Dryden, Fables, Preface.

7. Any stop or interruption.

The letters have the natural production by several checks or stops, or, as they are usually called, articulations of the breath or voice.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

8. The corresponding cipher of a bank bill. This word is often corruptly used for the draft itself of the person on his banker.

9. A term used in the game of chess, when one party obliges the other either to move or guard his king.

10. Linen cloth fabricated in squares of the same or of different colours.

11. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's household, has the check and controulment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the ushers belonging to the royal family.

12. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers.

Chambers.

Marston, Trag. of the Malcontent.

CHE'CKMATE.† n. s. [echec et mat, Fr.] The movement on the chess-board, that kills the opposite men, or hinders them from moving, Dr. Johnson says. Checkmate, or simply mate, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, is the term used when the king is actually made prisoner, and the game finished. In the East, scheck-mat signifies the king is dead. See Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43.

Love they him called, that gave me checkmate, But better night they have behote him Hate.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To CHE'CKMATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To finish, figuratively.

Our days be datyd

To be checkmated

With drawtys of death.

(CHE'RRY-TREE.) } Cerasanto, a town of Pontus, Lat.
Cerasus.]

The species are; 1. The common red or garden cherry. 2. Large Spanish cherry. 3. The red heart cherry. 4. The white heart cherry. 5. The bleeding heart cherry. 6. The black heart cherry. 7. The May cherry. 8. The black cherry, or mazard. 9. The archduke cherry. 10. The yellow Spanish cherry. 11. The Flanders cluster cherry. 12. The carnation cherry. 13. The large black cherry. 14. The bird cherry. 15. The red bird or Cornish cherry. 16. The largest double flowered cherry. 17. The double flowered cherry. 18. The common wild cherry. 19. The wild northern English cherry, with late ripe fruit. 20. The shock or perfumed cherry. 21. The cherry-tree with striped leaves. And many other sorts of cherries; as the amber cherry, lukeward, corone, Gascoigne, and the morello, which is chiefly planted for preserving.

This fruit was brought out of Pontus at the time of the Mithridatick victory, by Lucullus, in the year of Rome 680; and was brought into Britain about 120 years afterwards, which was Ann. Dom. 55; and was soon after spread through most parts of Europe. Miller.

Some ask but a pin, a nut, a cherry stone; but she, more covetous, would have a chain. Shakspeare.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light-yellow eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peachum.

A little spark of life, which, in its first appearance, might be inclosed in the hollow of a cherry stone. Hale.

CHE'RRY. adj. [from the substantive.] Resembling a cherry in colour.

Shore's wife hath a pretty foot,

A cherry lip, a passing pleasing tongue. Shakspeare.

CHE'RRY-BAY. See LAUREL.

CHE'RRY-BRANDY. * } n. s. Brandy, in which cherries CHE'RRY-WINE. } are infused; wine, of which cherries, mixed with sugar, are the ingredients.

CHE'RRY-CHEEKED. † adj. [from cherry and cheek.] Having ruddy cheeks.

Rather tall than low

She is of stature, cherry-cheek'd, her hair
Inclin'd to red, and of a sprightly air.

Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 43.

I warrant them cherry-cheek'd country girls. Congreve.

CHE'RRYPIT. n. s. [from cherry and pit.] A child's play, in which they throw cherry stones into a small hole.

What! man, 'tis not for gravity to play at cherrypit.

Shakspeare.

CHE'RSONESE. † n. s. [χερσοννησος, of χέρσος, land, and νησος, an 'isle; Fr. also chersonesse.] A peninsula; a tract of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined to the continent by a narrow neck or isthmus.

The sea so circles there, that it becomes a chersonesse.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 35.

From India and the golden chersonesse. Milton, P. R. iv. 74.

CHE'RT. n. s. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint. Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert.

Woodward.

CHE'RTY. * adj. [from chert.] Flinty.

The clay is found near the town, over the cherty stratum.

Pennant.

CHE'RUB. † n. s. [כרוב plur. כרובים] It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims. Milton gives the plural cherubs.] A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubim, differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the Tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exod. xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Cabinet.

Make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end; even of the mercy seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof. Exod. xxv. 19.

To Thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry.

Ti. Dent.

The roof o' the chamber

With golden cherubims is fretted. Shakspeare.

Heaven's cherubin hor'd,

Upon the sightless couriers of the air,

Shall blow the horrid seed in every eye,

That tears shall drown the wind. Shakspeare.

Thou sitt'st between the cherubs bright,

Between their wings outspread. Milton, Ps. lxxx.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,

And to a miracle improves a tune. Prior.

CHE'RT'ICAL. * adj. [from cherub.] Angelical; relating to the cherubim.

Why did you not call to mind the cherubical angel, which, in the form of a crucifix, spoke to St. Francis?

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 162.

A third hymn of great note in the church was the cherubical hymn, or the trisagion, as it was called, because of the thrice repeating, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts.

Christian Antiquities, ii. 117.

CHE'RT'ICK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words

C H E

Divine instructor ! I have heard, than when Cherubick songs by night from neigh'ring hills
Aerial musick send.

Milton, P. L.

And on the east side of the garden place
Cherubick watch.

Milton, P. L.

CHE'RUBIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more destruction than thy sword,
For all her cherubin look.

Shakspeare.

CHE'RUBIN.* n. s. A cherub.

O daughter of the rose, whose cheeks unite
The differing titles of the red and white—
Whose face is paradise, but fenc'd from sin ;
For God in either eye has plac'd a cherubin.

Dryden to the Duchess of Ormond.

CHE'RVIL.* n. s. [Sax. ceppille, Dutch kervill, from chaerophyllum, Lat.] An umbelliferous plant.

Miller.

To CHE'RUP. v. n. [from cheer; perhaps from cheer up; corrupted to cherip.] To chirp; to use a cheerful voice.

The birds——
Frame to thy song their cheerful cheriping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

CHESE.* n. s. Often written by our old authors for CHOSE. See To CHOOSE.

CHE'SIBLE.* n. s. [old Fr. casuble; low Lat. casula, casubla. Our old word for this kind of dress was also sometimes casule.] A kind of cope; a short vestment without sleeves, which a Popish priest wears at mass.

Phillips.

bles, tunicles, stoles, &c. Bale on the Revel. P. II. k. vi. b.

CHE'SLIP. n. s. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles.

Skinner.

CHESS.* n. s. [echec, Fr.] A nice and abstruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other. The first citation, which Dr.
Johnson gives, ascribes the invention of the game to the Persian magi. Mr. Bryant says, that "to the Indo-Cuthites is attributed the most rational and amusing game, called chess; and the names of the several pieces prove that we received it from them." Analys. of Anc. Mythology, vol. iii. p. 510.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express;
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards pensive chess.

Denham.

So have I seen a king on chess,
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn.

Dryden.

CHE'SS-APPLE. n. s. A species of Wild Service.

CHE'SS-BOARD. n. s. [from chess and board.] The board or table on which the game of chess is played.
And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought.

Prior.

CHE'SS-MAN. n. s. [from chess and man.] A puppet for chess.

A company of chessmen, standing on the same squares of the chessboard where we left them: we say, they are all in the same place, or unmoved.

Locke.

CHE'SS-PLAYER. n. s. [from chess and player.] A gamester at chess.

Thus like a skilful chessplayer, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons.

Dryden.

Cherub's mellow earth.

C H E

The tender cheston and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CHEST.* n. s. [Celt. kest; Goth. and Su. kista;
Welsh, cist, cyst; Sax. cýr; Lat. cista; formerly used for a coffin, as by Chaucer: "He is now ded, and nailed in his cheste:" whence our verb to chest, in this sense; of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. The Sax. substantive is so used. Kist is our old word, found in manuscripts of Gower; and is still our Yorkshire word for chest. Mr. Tooke refers to the Sax. ceayr, used for womb, in Alfred's Laws by Lambard, fol. 21. But perhaps the Hebrew kis, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, a little chest or bag for holding weights or money, is the root.]

1. A box of wood or other materials, in which things are laid up.

He will seek there, on my word: neither press, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places.

Shakspeare.

But more have been by avarice oppress,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest.

Dryden.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.

Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks.

Brown.

He describes another by the largeness of his chest, and breadth of his shoulders.

Pope, Notes on the Iliad.

To CHEST.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To repose in a chest; to hoard.

2. To place in a coffin; "to chest a dead corpse with spice and sweet ointments in a coffin."

Hudoc.

He dieth, and is chested.

Genesis, l. 26. Contents of the Chapter.

That afternoon we chested our late commander, putting some great shot with him into it, that he might presently sink.

Terry, Voyage to the E. Indies, (1655,) p. 41.

CHEST-FOUNDING. n. s. A disease in horses. It comes near to pleurisy, or peripneumony, in a human body.

Farricr's Dict.

CHE'STED. adj. [from chest.] Having a chest; as, broad-chested, narrow-chested.

CHE'STER. See CASTOR.

CHE'STNUT.* } n. s. [chastaigne, Fr. castanea,
CHE'STNUT-TREE. } Lat. so called from Castania in Asia Minor, whence the chestnut was brought into Europe. The word is frequently pronounced, and sometimes written, chesnut.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering.
This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once thoroughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber.

Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.

C H E

A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to the ear,
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakespeare.
October has a basket of services, medlars and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.

His hair is of a good colour. —
— An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakespeare.

Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Cowley.

CHESTON. n. s. A species of plum.

CHEVACHIE. * n. s. [Fr. low Lat. chevalchia.] An expedition with cavalry. Obsolete.

He had been sometime in chevachie,
In Flaunders, in Artois, and in Picardie. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

CHEVAGE. * See CHIEFAGE.

CHEVALIER. n. s. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.

Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am low'd by a traitor-villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakespeare.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. s. [Fr. The singular cheval de frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tourniquet. Chamber's.

CHEVEN. † n. s. [chevesne, Fr. from chef, the head; the fish having a large head.] A river fish; the same with chub.

The fishes of this lake were trouts, pikes, chevins, and tenches.
Sir T. Brown, Tracts, p. 99.

CHEVERIL. † n. s. [old Fr. cheveril, from chevreau, i. e. petit chevre. V. Roq. This word, now obsolete, was a favourite expression with our ancestors to denote the pliability of certain consciences; and to the solitary instance of a cheveril conscience in Shakespeare, given by Dr. Johnson, a pleasant illustration of the phrase may be added from an elder writer. B. Jonson has also cheveril conscience, in his Poetaster.] A kid; kid-leather:

A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakespeare.

Neither the captains nor souldiers can stand or prevail. And no marvel; for their armour is of cheveril leather; and the nature of cheveril leather is, that if a man take it by the sides, and pull it in breadth, he may make a little point as broad as both his hands; if he take it by the ends, and pull it in length, he may make it as small as a thread. Moste men now a dayes have cheveril consciences! if the matter touch their owne profit or pleasure, they make their consciences wide enough, and large enough; if it touch another man's profit, they make them as small as a thread.

Ep. of Chichester's Sermon at Paul's Cross, (1576.) c. viii.

Which gifts the capacity

Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare.

O, here's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to a ell broad. Shakespeare.

TO CHEVERILIZE. * v. a. [from cheveril.] To make as pliable as kidleather. Not now in use.

I appeal unto your own, though never so much cheverilized, consciences, my good calumniators; can there be inferred a just accusation? Mountagu, App. to Cass. p. 23.

CHEVISANCE. † n. s. [chevisance, Fr.]

1. Enterprize; achievement. A word now not in use.

Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, said Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spenser, F. Q.

VOL. I.

C H E

2. Bargain. [old Fr. chevisance, chevisance, an agreement between debtor and creditor, in relation to the loan of money. Kelham.]

They maken many a wrong chevisaunce,
Heaping up waves of wealth and woe.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

CHEVRON. † n. s. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand.

Harris.

The masquers were placed in a great concave shell, like mother of pearl; — the top thereof was stuck with a chevron of lights, which, indented to the proportion of the shell, struck a glorious beam upon them, as they were seated one above another. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CHEVRONED. * adj. [from chevron.] Variegated in the shape of a chevron.

Their bases were of watchet cloth of silver, cheveroned all over with lace. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CHEVRONEL. * n. s. A diminutive of, and in size half, the heraldick chevron.

TO CHEW. v. a. [ceopan, Sax. kaewen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,
Appear before us? Shakespeare.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shakespeare.

This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Dryden, Fables.

The vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd
Chews verdurous pasture. Philips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; or ruminate in the thoughts.

While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.

Heav'n's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shakespeare.
Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

TO CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
'Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakespeare.
Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon't. L'Estrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHEW. * n. s. [from the verb.] That which is chewed; a vulgarism, as a chew of tobacco.

CHEWING. * n. s. [Sax. ceopung.] Mastication.

CHEWET. * n. s. [probably from chew. See CHURCH.]

A pie consisting of various articles chopped, and mixed together. Cotgrave terms the "chewet pie, goublet." There is a receipt for this olio, whether fried or baked, in the Archæologia, vol. 15, p. 12.

A kind of dainty chewet, or minced pie.

Florio, Ital. Dict. in V. Frilingotti.
Men laden with bottles of wine, chewets, and currant-custards,
Middleton's Witch, ii. 1.

CHI'BBAL. * n. s. [Fr. ciboule. In the north of England chibe is the word; Sax. cipe, Lat. cepa.] A small kind of onion.

Ye eating rascals,
Whose gods are beef and brewis, whose brave angers
Do execution upon these, and chibbals.

Beaum. and Fl., Bonduca.

CHICA'NE. † n. s. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spanish word chico, little, Dr. Johnson says. But Morin asserts, that both Menage and Huet derive the word from the Gr. δικανις, he who loves a suit at law. Others derive it from δικανος, which at first signified a Sicilian, and afterwards a deceiver, because the Sicilians were so esteemed.
V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr. in V. CHICA-NEUR.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cases, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attorneys have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.

Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICA'NE. † v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

Give me but virtuous actions, and I will not quibble and chicane about the motives. Ld. Chesterfield.

CHICA'NER. n. s. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty sophister;
a trifling disputant; a wrangler.

This is the way to distinguish the two most different things
I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICA'NERY. n. s. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry; mean arts of wrangle.

His anger caused him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and futility of the practice. Arbutnot.

CHI'CHES. † n. s. [old Fr. chiches; chich-peas, Sherwood; from the Lat. cicer.] Dwarf peas, or vetches. See CHICKPEAS.

Such things as neede not much moisture, as sperie, chick, and the other pulses. B. Googe's Husbandrie, (1586.) fol. 18. b.

He chiches gives, for winter laid aside;
Nor are the long and slender oats denied.

Sir J. Beaumont's Poems, p. 41.

CHI'CHLING VETCH. n. s. [lathyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICK. n. s. } [cicen, Sax. kiecken, Dutch.
CHI'CKEN. † n. s. } Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun, Dr. Johnson says. The old proverb, however, yet countenances chicken as the regular plural; and we still say, "a couple of chicken." See Ray's Prov.
"Children and chicken must always be picking."

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.

All my pretty ones!

What all my pretty chickens, and their dam,

At one fell swoop!

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Shakespeare.

Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily practiseth it. Hale.

Ev'n since she was a se'en-night old, they say,
Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobey. Dryden, Fables.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:

On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone.

2. A word of tenderness.

My Ariel, chick;

This is thy charge.

Shakspeare.

3. A term for a young person.

Then, Chloe, still go on to prate

Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,

Your hints, that Stella is no chicken.

Swift.

To CHICK. * v. n. [from the Sax. cicen.] To sprout, as seed in the ground; to vegetate. A word still used in some parts of England. "Chykynge or sprowing of corne, pullulatus; to chyken as corne, or spyren, pullulo." Prompt. Parv.

CHI'CKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.]
Cowardly; timorous; fearful.

Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chickenhearted,

To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Prod. to Sp. Friar.

The CHI'CKENPOX. n. s. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHI'CKLING. n. s. [from chick.] A small chicken.

CHI'CKPEAS. n. s. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHI'CKWEED. n. s. [chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, ure of good use, in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wiseman.

To CHIDE. † v. a. preter. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [Sax. chidan, part. chud.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove.

Shakspeare.

Shakspeare.

Those, that do teach your babes,
Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks;
He might have chid me so: for, in good faith,
I am a child to chiding.

Shakspeare.

Scylla wept,
And chid her barking waves into attention.

Milton, Com.

Above the waves as Neptune shew'd his face,
To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.

Waller.

You look, as if yon stern philosopher
Had just now chid you.

Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her. Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
Have chid me from the battle.

Shakspeare.

If, rather than to marry county Paris,
Thou hast the strength of will to slay thyself;
Then it is likely, thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this shame.

Shakspeare, Romeo and Juliet.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespass.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay,
And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.

Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste;
For, the work perfected, the joy was past.
To CHIDE.† v. n.

Prior.

1. To clamour; to scold.

Therefore the Jews chidden togidre, and seyden, how may this give to us his fleisch to 'ete? Wicliffe, St. John, vi.
What had he to do to chide at me? Shakspeare.

Next morn, betimes, the bride was missing;
The mother scream'd, the father chid,
Where can this idle wench be hid? Swift.

2. To quarrel with.

And the people chode with Moshs.
Numbers, xx. 3. (Transl. 1578.)

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you. Shakspeare.

3. To make a noise.

My duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours. Shakspeare.

CHIDE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Murmur; gentle noise.

Nor the chide of streams,
And hum of bees, inviting sleep sincere
Into the guiltless breast. Thomson, Autumn.

CHIDER.† n. s. [from chide.] A rebuker; a re-prover.

Whether any be brawlers, slanderers, chiders, scolders, and sewers of discord between one and another.

Abp. Cranmer, Articles of Visitation.

Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray. — Shakspeare.
I love no chiders, sir.

CHIDERESS.* n. s. [from chider.] She who chides.
Obsolete.

If one be full of wantonnesse,
Another is a chideresse. Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose.

CHIDING.* n. s. [Sax. cibing.]

1. Rebuke; contention; quarrel.

He called the name of the place Massah, and Meribah, because of the chiding [in the margin strife] of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the Lord. Exod. xvii. 7.
Well thou know'st what cruel chidings
Oft I've from my mother borne.

Bp. Percy, Alcanzor and Zaida.

2. Simply, noise; sound.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
Whence in a wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear Such gallant chiding. Shakspeare, M. N. Dr.

CHIDINGLY.* adv. [from chiding.] After the manner of chiding. Hulot.

CHIEF.† adj. [chef, the head, Fr. from the Gr.
κεφαλη.]

1. Principal; most eminent; above the rest in any respect.

These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's works. 1 Kings, ix. 13.
My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

The hand of the princes and rulers hath been chief in this trespass. Ezra, vi. 2.

Your country, chief in arms, abroad defend;
At home, with morals, arts, and laws amend. Pope.

2. Eminent; extraordinary.

A froward man soweth strife, and a whisperer separateth
chief friends. Proverbs, xvi. 28.

3. Capital; of the first order; that to which other parts are inferior, or subordinate.

I came to have a good general view of the apostle's main purpose in writing the epistle, and the chief branches of his discourse wherein he prosecuted it. Locke.

4. It is used by some writers with a superlative termination; but, I think improperly: the comparative chiefer is never found.

We beseech you, bend you to remain,
Here in the cheer and comfort of our eye,
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son. Shakspeare.
Dog an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen. 1 Sam. xxi. 7.

He sometimes denied admission to the chiefest officers of the army. Clarendon.

CHIEF. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A military commander; a leader of armies; a captain.

Is pain to them
Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? courageous chief!
The first in flight from pain. Milton, P. L.

After or before were never known
Such chiefs; as each an army seem'd alone. Dryden.

A wit's a feather, and a chief a rod;
An honest man's the noblest work of God. Pope.

A prudent chief not always must display
His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array;
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

2. In CHIEF, in law. In capite, by personal service.

All sums demandable, either for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, or for the pardon of any such alienation already made without licence, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper. Bacon.

I shall be proud to hold my dependance on you in chief, as I do part of my small fortune in Wiltshire. Dryden.

3. In Spenser it seems to signify somewhat like achievement; a mark of distinction.

Where be the nosegays that she dight for thee?
The coloured chaplets wrought with a chief,
The knottish rush-rings, and gilt rosemary. Spenser.

4. In heraldry.

The chief is so called of the French word chef, the head or upper part: this possesses the upper third part of the escut-cheon. Peacham on Drawing.

CHIEF.* adv. [from the adj.] Chiefly.

Then, issuing cheerful, to thy sport repair,
Chief, should the western breezes curling play,
And light o'er ether bear the shadowing clouds. Thomson, Spring.

CHIEF.* n. s. [old Fr. chef, from cheoir; whence mescheoir, meschief; and thence our word mischief.
• See also BONCHIEF.] Hap; fortune. Prompt.

Parv. Not now in use, except in the compound mischief.

CHIEFAGE, or CHEVAGE.* [old Fr. chevage, poll-money paid by a villain to his lord, Kelham; from chef, the head.] A tribute by the head.

The Jews, allowed to live in England, long paid chevage, or poll-money; viz. three pence per head, at Easter. Chambers.

CHIEFDOM. n. s. [from chief.] Sovereignty. Not in use.

Zephyrus being in love with Chloris, and coveting her to wife, gave her for a dowry the chiefdom and sovereignty of all flowers and green herbs. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Gloss.

CHIEFLESS.* adj. [from chief.] Wanting a head;
being without a leader.

And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign,
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main. Pope.

CHIEFLY. adv. [from chief.] Principally; eminently;
more than common.

Any man who will consider the nature of an epick poem, what actions it describes, and what persons they are chiefly whom it informs, will find it a work full of difficulty. Dryden.

Those parts of the kingdom, where the number and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay. Swift.

CHIEFRIE. n. s. [from chief.] A small rent paid to the lord Paramount.

They shall be well able to live upon those lands, to yield her majesty reasonable chiefrie, and also give a competent maintenance unto the garrisons. Spenser on Ireland.

Would the reserved rent at this day be any more than a small chiefrie? Swift.

CHIEFTAIN. † n. s. [old Fr. chefetain; and in our ancient language chevetain and chventeyn. Chaucer uses the former in the Knight's Tale; and the latter occurs in a ballad of earlier days than his. See Ritson's Anc. Songs, p. 19.]

1. A leader; a commander.

That forc'd their chieftain, for his safety's sake,
(Their chieftain Humber named was right)

Unto the mighty stream him to betake,
Where he an end of battle and of life did make.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. The head of a clan.

It broke, and absolutely subdued all the lords and chieftains of the Irishry. Davies on Ireland.

CHIEFTAINRY. * } n. s. [from chieftain.] Headship.

The chieftainship of the highlandry is a very dangerous influence. Smollett.

The laird of Raarsa has sometimes disputed the chieftainry of the clan with Macleod of Skie.

Johnson, Lett. to Mrs. Thrale.

CHIEVANCE. n. s. [probably from achervance, Fr. purchase.] Traffick, in which money is extorted; as discount. Now obsolete.

There were good laws against usury, the bastard use of money; and against unlawful chievances and exchanges, which is bastard usury. Bacon.

To CHIEVE, or CHEVE. * v. n. [Fr. cheoir.] To turn out; to come to a conclusion; to succeed. Not yet obsolete. Chieve in Lancashire is to prosper.

Evil mote he cheec.

Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

It chieves nought with him.

Ray, N. C. Words, p. 14.

CHILBLAIN. n. s. [from chill, cold, and blain; so that Temple seems mistaken in his etymology, or has written it wrong to serve a purpose.] Sores made by frost.

I remembered the cure of childblanes when I was a boy, (which may be called the children's gout,) by burning at the fire. Temple.

CHILD. † n. s. [Sax. child; Goth. kilthein, the womb; inkiltho, with child; probably from the Heb. chaul, to bring forth.] In the plural children.

1. An infant, or very young person.

A faire young man,

Of wondrous beauty, and of freshest years:—

Whom when the palmer saw, abasht he was

Through fear and wonder, that he nought could say,

Till him the child bespoke. Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 5—7.

In age, to wish for youth is full as vain,

As for youth to turn a child again.

Denham.

The young lad must not be ventured abroad at eight or ten, for fear of what may happen to the tender child; though he then runs ten times less risque than at sixteen. Locke.

The stroke of death is nothing: children endure it, and the greatest cowards find it no pain. Wake.

2. One in the line of filiation, opposed to the parent.

Of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together. Acts, iv. 27.

Where children have been exposed, or taken away young, and afterwards have approached to their parents' presence, the parents, though they have not known them, have had a secret joy, or other alteration thereupon. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I shall see

The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakspeare.

So unexhausted her perfections were,

That for more children, she had more to spare. Dryden.

He in a fruitful wife's embraces old,

A long increase of children's children told. Addison.

3. The descendants of a man, how remote soever, are called children; as the children of Edom, the children of Israel.

And the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and all the children of the east, lay along in the valley like grasshoppers for multitude. Judges, vii. 12.

4. In the language of scripture.

One weak in knowledge. Isaiah, x. 19.

1 Cor. xiii. 11.

Such as are young in grace. 1 John, ii. 13.

Such as are humble and docile. St. Matthew, xvii. 3, 4.

The children of light, the children of darkness; who follow light, who remain in darkness.

The elect, the blessed, are also called the children of God.

How is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints! Wisdom, v. 5.

In the New Testament, believers are commonly called children of God.

Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Jesus Christ. Gal. iii. 26. Calmet.

5. A girl child. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. But, in some of our inland counties, the contradistinction of a female to a male infant is said to be yet kept up, among the lower orders, by the word child. See Steevens's Note on the Winter's Tale. Formerly, however, it was just the reverse; child being restrained to the young of the male sex; as, "the child lulus," a translation of "puer lulus;" and the children of the chapel, signify the boys of the royal chapel. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, vol. iii. p. 23.

Mercy on's, a bearne, a very pretty bearne!

A boy, or child, I wonder.

Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

6. Any thing, the product or effect of another.

Macduff, this noble passion,

Child of integrity, bath from my soul

Wip'd the black scruples.

Shakspeare.

7. A noble youth; like the Fr. bachelier; not a knight, but a young man of noble birth dubbed esquire, in his progress to the honour of knight-hood; though, in our old ballads and romances, child may certainly be sometimes found for knight. But the sense, best authorized, is that of a youth of noble blood. In Spenser, child Tristram is not knight Tristram, as Bp. Percy has asserted; for he is called child, not after, but before he was made a knight.

Every knight had after him riding

Three henchmen [each] on him awaiting:—

And every childe ware of leaves green

A fresh chapellet upon his haire bright.

Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

The noble childe, preventing his desire,

Under his club with wary boldnesse went,

And smote him on the knee that never yet was bent.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 35.

8. To be with CHILD. To be pregnant.

If it must stand still, let wives with child

Pray that their burthen may not fall this day,

Lest that their hopes prodigiously be crost.

Shakspeare

• To CHILD. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring children.

The spring, the summer,

The childing autumn, angry winter, change

Their wonted liveries.

Shakspeare.

As to childing women, young vigorous people, after irregularities of diet, in such it begins with hæmorrhages.

Arbutnot.

To CHILD.* v. a. To bring forth children.

Whilst ye in durance dwelt, ye to me gave
A little mayde, the which ye childed tho:
The same again if now ye list to have,
The same is yonder lady, whom High God did save.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 17.

An hundred plants beside, e'en in his sight,
Childed an hundred nymphs.

Fairfax, Tasso, xviii. 26.

CHILDBEARING. n. s. [from child and bear.] The act of bearing children.

To thee,
Pains only in childbearing were foretold,
And, bringing forth, soon recompens'd with joy,
Fruit of thy womb.

Milton, P. L.

The timorous and irresolute Sylvia has demurred 'till she is past childbearing.

Addison.

CHILDBED. n. s. [from child and bed.] The state of a woman bringing a child, or being in labour.

The funerals of Prince Arthur, and of Queen Elizabeth, who died in childbed in the Tower.

Bacon.

Pure, as when wash'd from spot of childbed stain.

Milton, Sonnet.

Yet these, tho' poor, the pain of childbed bear.
Let no one be actually married, 'till she hath the childbed pillows.

Spectator.

Women in childbed are in the case of persons wounded.

Arbutnot on Diet.

CHILDBIRTH. n. s. [from child and birth.] Travail; labour; the time of bringing forth; the act of bringing forth.

The mother of Pyrocles, after her childbirth, died.
A kernel void of any taste, but not so of virtue, especially for women travelling in childbirth.

Sidney.
Carew's Survey.

In the whole sex of women, God hath decreed the sharpest pains of childbirth; to shew, that there is no state exempt from sorrow.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

He to his wife, before the time assign'd
For childbirth came, thus bluntly spoke his mind.

Dryden.

CHILDED. adj. [from child.] Furnished with a child.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow;
He childed, as I father'd.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CHILDERMAS DAY.† [Sax. cildamajje-dæg.]

The day of the week, throughout the year, answering to the day on which the feast of the holy Innocents is solemnized, which weak and superstitious persons think an unlucky day.

To talk of hares, or such uncount things, proves as ominous to the fisherman, as the beginning of a voyage on the day when childermas day fell, doth to the mariner.

Carew.

CHILDHOOD. n. s. [from child, cildhad, Sax.]

1. The state of children; or, the time in which we are children: it includes infancy, but is continued to puberty.

Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy
With blood, remov'd but little from our own.

Shakspeare.

The sons of lords and gentlemen should be trained up in learning from their childhoods.

Spenser on Ireland.

Seldom have I ceas'd to eye
Thy infancy, thy childhood, and thy youth.

Milton, P. R.

The same authority that the actions of a man have with us in our childhood, the same, in every period of life, has the practice of all whom we regard as our superiours.

Rogers.

2. The time of life between infancy and puberty.

Infancy and childhood demand thin, copious, nourishing aliment.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The properties of a child.

Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man.

Dryden.

CHILDISH.† adj. [Sax. cildyr.]

1. Having the qualities of a child; trifling; ignorant; simple.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is but beginning and almost childish: then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile.

Bacon, Essays.

2. Becoming only children; trifling; puerile.

Musidorus being elder by three or four years, there was taken away the occasion of childish contentions.

Sidney.

The lion's whelps she saw how he did bear,
And lull in rugged arms withouten childish fear.

Spenser, F. Q.

When I was yet a child, no childish play
To me was pleasing; all my mind was set
Serious to learn and know.

Milton, P. R.

The fathers looked on the worship of images as the most silly and childish thing in the world.

Stillingfleet.

One that hath newly learn'd to speak and go,
Loves childish plays.

Roscommon.

They have spoiled the walls with childish sentences, that consist often in a jingle of words.

Addison on Italy.

By conversation the childish humours of their younger days might be worn out.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

CHILDISHLY. adv. [from childish.] In a childish trifling way; like a child.

Together with his fame their infamy was spread, who had so rashly and childishly ejected him.

Hooker.

Some men are of excellent judgement in their own professions, but childishly unskilful in any thing besides.

Hayward.

CHILDISHMINDEDNESS.* n. s. [from childish and mind.] Triflingness.

I have somewhat of the French; I love birds, as the king does; and have some childishmindedness wherein we shall consent.

Bacon.

CHILDISHNESS.† n. s. [from childish.]

1. Puerility; triflingness; state of a child.

Last scene of all;

That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion.

Shakspeare, As you Like it.

The actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, time and age will of itself be sure to reform.

Locke.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstition, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholic religion.

Addison on Italy.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;

Perhaps thy childishness will move him more
Than can our reasons.

Shakspeare.

CHILDLESS.† adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women.

1 Samuel, xv. 33.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity.

Bacon, Essays.

Childless thou art, childless remain: so death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut.

Milton, P. L.

She can give the reason why one died childless.

Spectator.

So the sad nightingale, when childless made
By some rough swain, that steals her young away.

Ld. Mulgrave, Virg. Georg. iv.

CHILDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or beseeeming a child.

Who can owe no less than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care.

Hooker.

I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cherish'd by her childlike duty.

Shakspeare.

CHILDLY.* adj. [from child.] Like a child. Not in use.

In childly wyse on her [he] gan to smile.

Lidgate, Fall of Princes, ii. 22.

C H I

CHI'LIAD. n. s. [from χιλιας.] A thousand; a collection or sum containing a thousand.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries; chiliads, for the use of computation in history. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. s. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thousand sides.

In a man, who speaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thousand sides, the idea of the figure may be very confused, though that of the number be very distinct. Locke.

CHI'LIARCH.* n. s. [χιλιάρχης.] A commander of a thousand. Coles, and Blount.

CHI'LIAS.* n. s. [χιλιάς.] One of the sect of the millenarians.

To reign with Christ a 1000 years before the ending of the world, was the old error of the chiliasts.

This imposture was put upon us by the Hellenists, those among them who affected that ancient heresy of the chiliasts.

Gregory's Posthuma, p. 115.

CHILIFA'CTIVE.† adj. [from chile, or rather chyle.

This word and the two following should be written chylifactive, chylifactory, and chylification. That which makes chile.

Whether this be not effected by some way of corrosion, rather than any proper digestion, chylifactive mutation, or alimential conversion. Brown, Vulg. Errs.

CHILIFA'CTORY. adj. [from chile.] That which has the quality of making chile.

We should rather rely upon a chylifactory menstruum, or digestive preparation drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION. n. s. [from chile.] The act of making chile.

Nor will we affirm that iron is indigested in the stomach of the ostrich; but we suspect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chylification, by the power of natural heat. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CHILL.† adj. [cele, Sax. kyla, Su. cold.]

1. Cold; that which is cold to the touch.

And all my plants I save from nightly ill,
Of noisom winds, and blasting vapours chill. Milton, Arcades.

2. Cold; having the sensation of cold; shivering with cold.

My heart, and my chill veins, freeze with despair. Rowe.

3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.

4. Depressed; dejected; discouraged.

5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. s. [from the adjective.] Chilness; cold.

I very well know one to have a sort of chill about his precordia and head. Derham, Physico-Theology.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make cold.

Age has not yet

So shrunk my sinews, or so chill'd my veins,
But conscious virtue in my breast remains. Dryden.

Heat burns his rise, frost chills his setting beams,
And vex the world with opposite extremes. Creech.

Each changing season does its poison bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blast the spring. Prior.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

2. To depress; to deject; to discourage.

Every thought on God chills the gaiety of his spirits, and awakens terrors, which he cannot bear. Rogers.

3. To blast with cold.

The fruits perish on the ground,
Or soon drossy, by snows immoderate chill'd,
By winds are blasted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

C H I

CHI'LLINESS. n. s. [from chilly.] A sensation of shivering cold.

If the patient survives three days, the acuteness of the pain abates, and a chilliness or shivering affects the body.

Arbuthnot.

CHI'LLY.† adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.

Their winters are for the most part sharper than ours — perchance by vicinity to the chilly tops of the Alps.

Wotton, Rem. p. 251.

A chilly sweat bedews

My shuddering limbs. Philips.

CHI'LLY.* adv. Coldly.

Sherwood.

CHI'LNES. n. s. [from chill.] Coldness; want of warmth.

If you come out of the sun suddenly into a shade, there followeth a chilness or shivering in all the body. Bacon.

This, while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,

A generous chilness seizes ev'ry part,

The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIMB. n. s. [kime, Dut.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME.† n. s. [The original of this world is doubtful. Junius and Minshew suppose it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut;

Henshaw from chiamare, to call, because the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only softened from chirme, or churme, an old word for the sound of many voices, or instruments making a noise together. But Mr. H. Tooke asks where this old word, chirm, is to be found. I am surprised that it escaped his researches. See To CHIRM.]

1. The consonant or harmonick sound of many correspondent instruments.

Hang our shaggy thighs with bells;

That, as we do strike a tune,

In our dance, shall make a chime.

B. Jonson.

The sound

Of instruments, that made melodious chime,

Was heard, of harp and organ.

Milton, P. L.

Love virtue, she alone is free;

She can teach you how to climb

Higher than the sphery chime.

Milton, Comus.

2. The correspondence of sound.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,

The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.

3. The sound of bells, not rung by ropes, but struck with hammers. In this sense it is always used in the plural, chimes.

We have heard the chimes at midnight.

Shakespeare.

4. The correspondence of proportion or relation.

The conceptions of things are placed in their several degrees of similitude; as in several proportions, one to another: in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reason is often drowned. Grew's Cosmol.

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sound in harmony or consonance.

To make the rough recital apely chime;

Or bring the sum of Gallia's loss to rhyme,

'Tis mighty hard.

Prior.

2. To correspond in relation or proportion.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, do belong one to another; and through custom, do readily chime, and answer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, still perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I am fore'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme. Smith.
To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to sound harmonically, or with just consonancy,
With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their sounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryden, Georg.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMER. * n. s. [from chima] He who chimes the bells. Sherwood.

CHIME'RA. n. s. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece, Dryden, Fables.
Chimeras all; and more absurd, or less.
No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RE. * n. s. [Ital. ciamare, old Fr. chamarre.
Dryden writes the word simar, or symar, which Dr. Johnson has defined "a woman's robe;" and Henry Wharton, the eminent antiquary, samarra, but not in Dr. Johnson's limited and imperfect meaning. See SIMAR. This variation of orthography arises, perhaps, from imitating the Dutch word
sanare, the Span. samarra, or the Goth. samaria; the last of which denotes the priestly gown; as chimere, in some degree, is used by us.] A robe.

The chimere [is] the upper robe, to which the lawn sleeves are generally sewed; which before and after the reformation, till Queen Elizabeth's time, was always of scarlet silk; but Bishop Hooper scrupling first at the robe itself, and then at the colour of it; as too light and gay for the episcopal gravity;
it was changed for a chimere of black satin.

Wheatley on the Comm. Prayer, ii. § 4.

CHIME'RICAL. † adj. [old Fr. chimerique.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

As if the solemnity of this vow had never had beginning!
Chimerical fancies, fit for a shorn head.

By Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 312.

Notwithstanding the fineness of this allegory may atone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem.

Spectator.

CHIME'RICALLY. adv. [from chimericall.] Vainly; wildly; fantastically.

To CHIMERIZE. * v. n. [from chimera.] To entertain wild fancies. Not in use.

What are all these but fantastical dreams and chimerizing ideas of shallow imaginative scholars?

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626.) p. 226.

CHIM'INAGE. n. s. [from chemin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for passage through a forest.

Cowel.

CHIM'NEY. † n. s. [cheminée, French, from the
Lat. caminus, which also figuratively denotes fire.
Wicliffe employs chimney, where the later translations employ furnace. "And they schulen send hem into the chimney of fier; there schal be wepying and beting togidre of teeth. St. Matt. xiii."]

1. The passage through which the smoke ascends from the fire in the house.

Chimnies, with scorn, rejecting smoke. Swift.

2. The turret raised above the roof of the house, for conveyance of the smoke.

The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimnies were blown down. Shakespeare.

3. The fireplace.

The chimney
Is south the chamber; and the chimney-piece,
Chaste Dian bathings. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The fire which the Chaldeans worshipped for a god, is crept into every man's chimney. Raleigh, Hist.

Low offices, which some neighbours hardly think it worth stirring from their chimney sides to obtain. Swift on Sac. Test.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. † n. s. [from chimney and corner.]

The fireside; the seat on each end of the firegrate; usually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.

Yet some old men

Tell stories of you in their chimney-corner. Denham.

Perhaps he had it from an old woman in a chimney-corner, or out of a romance. Leslie's Short Method with the Deists.

CHIMNEY-MONEY. * Hearth-money, or a tax imposed by statute, in Charles the Second's time, on fire-hearths and stoves in houses; and abolished in the first year of William and Mary.

CHIMNEYPIECE. n. s. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or stone, that is set round
the fireplace.

Polish and brighten the marble hearths and chimney-pieces with a clout dipt in grease. Swift.

CHIMNEYSWEEPER. n. s. [from chimney and sweeper.]

1. One whose trade it is to clean foul chimnies of soot.

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black:
And since her time are colliers counted bright. Shakespeare.

The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the headless throng. Gay.

Even lying Ned the chimney-sweeper of Savoy and Tom the Portugal dustman, put in their claims. Arbuthnot.

2. It is used proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.

Golden lads and girls, all must,
As chimney-sweepers, come to dust. Shakespeare.

CHIMNEYTOP. † n. s. [from chimney and top.] The summit of a chimney.

Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops. Shakespeare, Jul. Cesar.

CHIN. † n. s. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ. from the Goth. kinnus, kinn. It may be curious to add, that the Pers. chynoser is the chin. See Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 316.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.

But all the words I could get of her, was wrying her waist, and thru'ting out her chin. Sidney.

With his amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him. Shakespeare.

He rais'd his hardly head, which sunk again,
And, sinking on his bosom, knock'd his chin. Dryden.

CHINNED. * adj. [from chin.] Used in composition for having a long or short chin; "long-chinned."

Kersey.

CHINA. n. s. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a species of vessels made in China, dimly transparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glass. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one easily vitrifies; the other resists a very strong heat:
when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glass, they are completely burnt.

Enferm, vapours, or small-pox, above them all,
And mistress of herself, tho' china fall.

After supper, carry your plate and china together in the same basket.

CHI'NA-ORANGE. n. s. [from China and orange.] The sweet orange; brought originally from China.

Not many years has the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain.

CHI'NA-ROOT. n. s. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH. n. s. [perhaps more properly kincough, from kincken, to pant, Dutch, and cough; Goth. and Su. kikna, to have the respiration interrupted. Kersey, in 1702, calls it the "chine-cough, vulgò chin-cough."] A violent and convulsive cough, to which children are subject.

It shall ne'er be said in our country
Thou dy'st o' th' chin-cough.

I have observed a chin-cough, complicated with an intermitting fever.

CHINE. n. s. [eschine, Fr. schiena, Ital. spina, Lat. cein, Græc.]

1. The part of the back, in which the spine or backbone is found.

She stroke him such a blow upon his chine, that she opened all his body.

He presents her with the tusked head,
And chine, with rising bristles roughly spread.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.

Cut but the burly boned clown in chines of beef ere thou sleep.

He had killed eight fat hogs for this season, and he had dealt about his chine very liberally amongst his neighbours.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun. Fr. eschiner, "to chine, to divide, or break the back of." Cotgrave.] To cut into thines.

He that in his line did chine the long rib'd Apennine.

CHI'NAN. \ aij.* [from chine.] Relating to the back.

Some hind, that, like another Milo, [can] bear quarters of malt upon his back, and sing with it; thrash all day, and in the evening in his stockings strike up a hornpipe: These be they, these steel-chined rascals.

CHINESE. \ n. s.* Used elliptically for the language of the people of China; and for the people themselves, having, in our language, for its plural, Chineses, a circumstance which requires to be noticed.

The Chineses are no quarrellers, albeit voluptuous.

The barren thins
Of Scireans, where Chineses drive
With sails and wind their cany waggons light.

CHINLE. \ n. s.* [perhaps a corruption of channel; which indeed the passage in Donne illustrates.] Gravel, free from dirt. It is yet a local word.

In the superficies whereof was represented in a fair work the flood Meander, running with his returns and windings; in the channel of which, one might see a splendour of precious stones, representing his rolling waves; which chingle was of carbuncles, emeralds, agates, and all other sorts of precious stones, sparkling in their native lustre.

CHINK. n. s. [chian, to gape, Sax.] A small aperture longwise; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.

Pyramus and Thisby did talk through the chink of a wall.

Flagnes also have been raised by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like.

Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they so contract the chink of their larynx, as to prevent the admission of wet or dry ingested.

Other inventions, false and absurd, that are like so many chinks and holes to discover the rottenness of the whole fabrick.

In vain she search'd each cranny of the house,
Each gaping chink, impervious to a mouse.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the sound.] To shake so as to make a sound.

He chinks his purse, and takes his seat of state
With ready quills the dedicators wait.

To CHINK. v. n. To sound by striking each other.

Lord Strutt's money shines as bright, and chinks as well, as 'squire South's.

When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's self was drain'd of all his hoards.

To CHINK. \ v. a.* [Sax. cman.] To break into apertures or chinks. "To be chinked or crannied."

Hulot. "To chink or chap, as the north wind does, the face." Cotgrave in V. Cerecer.

The surface, which is the skin of that great body, is chopped, and chinked with drought, and burnt up with heat.

To CHINK. \ v. n.* "To open, or gape; as, "the boat chinketh." Barret.

CHINKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless men
Sure ruin.

CHINTS. n. s. Cloath of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a charming chints, and Brussels lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my lifeless face.

CHI'OPINE. n. s. [from chapin, Span. often written chapin, or chopin, in our own language.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chioppine.

Nor are those short-legged ladies thought less goodly, who fly to chopines.

The queen of Spain took off one of her chopins, and clouted Olivarez about the noddle with it, because he had accompanied the king to a lady of pleasure.

The woman was a giantess, and yet walked always in chopines.

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from chop.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

Hismangled myrmidons
Noseless, handless, hackt and chipt come to him.
Crying on Hector.

To return to our statue in the block of marble, we see it sometimes only begun to be chipped; sometimes rough hewn, and just sketched into an human figure.

The critick strikes out all that is not just
And 'tis ev'n so the butler chips his crust.

Indust.
Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the st

CHIP, CHEAT, CHIPPING, in the name of, imply a market; from the Sax. cyppan, ceppan, to buy.

To CHIP. \ v. n.* [Dutch chopen, to hatch, to disclose.] To break, or crack. An egg is said to chip, when the young bird cracks the shell.

A north country word. Grose. Potters also now use the phrase, meaning the flying of small pieces, or the breaking of the edges of earthen ware.

CHIP. n. s. [fr]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrumen

As children be as it were chippes hewen from their parents, so are other things when they are disjoined one of them from another.

Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585.) p. 232.

Cucumbers do extremely affect moisture, and over-drink themselves, which claff or chips forbiideth.

Bacon.

That chip made iron swim, not by natural power:

Bp. Taylor.

The saw was laid below;

Of chips and screwwood was the second row.

Dryden, Fables.

2. A small piece, however made.

The manganese lies in the vein in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone.

Woodward.

CHIP-AXE. * n. s. A chip-axe, or one-handed plane-axe, wherewith carpenters hew their timber smooth.

Huloet, and Colgrave in F. Aiscuan.

CHIPPING. † n. s. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

I know you were one could keep

The battery-hatch still lock'd and save the chippings.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

They dug their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authours.

Felton on the Classics.

CHIRAGRA. * n. s. [Lat. and Fr. chiragra, from the Gr. χειρ, the hand, and αγος inert.] The gout in the hands only.

CHIRURGICAL. adj. [chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chirurgical persons do suffer in the finger as well as in the rest, and sometimes first of all.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CHIRK. * v. n. [Teut. cirken, to chirp; and perhaps chirk is our true word for chirp; which is hardly a contraction of cheer up, as Dr. Johnson supposes; but rather a corruption of chirk. Dr. Jamieson has connected chirp with cheep or chepe, to peep, as very as young birds in the nest; and in his illustration of chirk, which he defines only "to make a chirping noise," has overlooked the use of the word in Chaucer, where it expresses the brisk or cheerful noise of the bird, not the puling of it in the nest.] To chirp.

This fere ariseth up ful curtisly,

And hir embraceth in his armes narrowe,

And kiseth hir swete, and *chirke*th as a sparowe

With his lippes.

Chaucer, Somnour's Tale.

To CHIRM. * v. n. [Huloet, noticing this old verb, says "to chirme, or to chur, as birds do, Lat. gignio." Gignio, however, is to gaggle or cackle. But to chur, or chirre, is to coo. See To CHINAR. Possibly it may mean, generally, to sing, as the example which I bring seems to shew; Lat. carmen, whence our charm, and Sax. cipm, a charm; and so chirma. The Dutch verb kermen, to moan, is hardly applicable to this sense.] To chirp.

bird chirmes as it is whistled to,

Wodroephe's Fr. Gr. (1623.) p. 505.

CHIROGRAPH. * n. s. [Fr. chiragraphe, from chirographie, "double copie d'un acte passé entre plusieurs personnes," 1200." Lacombe. Lat. chirographum, from χειρ, the hand, and γραφω, to write.]

Formerly, a deed, requiring a counterpart, engrossed twice into the same piece of parchment, and cut through the middle; the same as chequer party; which see.

2. Formerly also, a fine: a phrase still preserved in the office of the chirographer in the common pleas.

CHIROGRAPHER. † n. s. [from chirograph.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing; and, by way of distinction, the officer in the common pleas who engrosses fines.

Thus passeth it from this office to the chirographer's, to be engrossed.

Bacon, Office of Alienation.

CHIROGRAPHIST. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes, by examining the hand: the true word is chirosofist, or chiro-mancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity.

Aburknot, on Pope.

CHIROGRAPHY. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROLOGY. * n. s. † Fr. chirologie, Gr. χειρ and λογος.] What we now call, talking by the hand.

Chirology is interpretation by the transient motions of the fingers; which, of all other ways of interpretation, comes nearest to that of the tongue.

Dalgarno, Deaf and Dumb Man's Tutor, (Ox. 1686.) Introd.

CHIROMANCER. n. s. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,

To chiromancers cheaper art repair,

Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.

Dryden, Juvenal.

CHIROMANCY. † n. s. [Fr. chiromancie, Gr. χειρ, the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand. Sometimes written chiromanty.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chiromancy that spots in the top of the nails, do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Other signs [of melancholy] there are taken from physiognomy, metoposcopy, chiromancy. Burton, Anal. of Med. p. 58.

The thumb, in chiromanty, we give Venus.

B. Jonson, Alchemist.

To CHIRP. † v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up; and the Dutch have cirken, Dr. Johnson says; but the etymology is more fully shewn in To chirk, which silences the supposition of cheer up.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away.

Sidney.

And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren

Can chase away the first conceived sound?

Shakespeare.

How cheerfully do these little birds chirp, and sing, out of the natural joy they conceive at the approach of the sun.

Bp. Hall, Occ. Medit. 36.

No chirping lark the welkin sheen invokes.

Gay, Pastorals.

The careful hen

Calls all her chirping family round.

Thomson, Spring.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin,

To push on the chirping and moderate bottle.

Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lings like other folks;

He takes his chirping pint, and cracks his jokes.

Pope.

CHIRP. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,

And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet.

Spectator.

CHIRPER. n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

CHIRPING. * n. s. [from chirp.] The gentle noise of birds.

Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or fulings. Bacon.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceojuan, Sax.] See CHURME.

To coo as a pigeon.

Junius.

CHIRURGEON.† n. s. [old Fr. chirurgien, Gr. χειρουργος, from χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.]

One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon. Dr. Johnson says. Surgeon, it must be added, was the old word; and not modern, as Dr. Johnson's remark insinuates.

Thou art surgeon that cureth syne deadly.

Old Morality of Every Man.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not seeing his need of a chirurgion. South, Sermons.

CHIRURGERY.† n. s. The art of curing by external applications. This is called **Surgery*, [old Fr. chirurgie.]

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wiseman.

CHIRURGICAL.† } adj. [old Fr. chirurgial.] See CHIRURGICK. } CHIRURGEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

In the Marchant's second tale, the history of Beryn, falsely ascribed to Chancer, a chirurgical operation of changing eyes is partly performed by the assistance of the occult sciences. Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. 44.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first, according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Watkins.

CHI'SEL.† n. s. [ciseau, Fr. : Ital. cisello, of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me, For I will kiss her. Shakespeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroked them in oil. Watson, Architecture.

Imperfect shapes : in marble such are seen,

When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHI'SEL.† v. a. [from the noun. Fr. ciseler.]

To cut with a chisel.

A grace [step] there was, yehegld all of stone Out of the rock.

Hawes, Hist. of Grande Amoure, (1555.) ch. 3.

CHIT.† n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chiao, little, Span. To this etymology, given by Dr. Johnson, it may be added, that the dwarf pea or chitch-pea, is called a chit. See Sherwood's Dict. 1632. Citto is an Italian word, addressed to children in order to make them hold their peace, when noisy. Florio, Ital. Dict. Citto is also a low Italian word for a little dirty boy.]

1. A child; a baby. Generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politics to jest.

Anonymous.

She pinched me, and called me squealing chit, and threw me into a girl's arms that was taken in to tend me.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters. This is probably a corruption of chick. See To CHICK.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. A freckle. [from chick-pease.] In this sense it is seldom used. Huloet denominates "chits in the face or body, warts;" and gives the adjective chitty also from this word. See CHITTY.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CHITCHAT.† n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of a female society, who call ourselves the chitchat club. Spectator.

If Ralph had learning added to the common chit-chat of the town, he would have been a disputant upon all topics that ever were considered by men of his own genius.

Tatler, No. 197.

To CHITTER.* v. n. [Dutch, citteren, to tremble for cold.] To shiver. We now use chatter in this sense. See To CHATTER. But our old genuine word is this, "Chyttering, quivering, or shaking for colde." Huloet.

CHITTERLINGS.† n. s. [from schytterlingh, Dut. Minshen; from luteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Dr. Johnson is mistaken in stating the word to be without singular. "A gut or chitterling hanged in the smoke." Burret.

Cypresse batbands shrivelled into black chitterlins.

Gayten, Notes on D. Quix. iii. 3.

His warped ear hung o'er the string,

Which was but souse to chitterlings. Hudibras, i. ii.

CHITTERLING.* n. s. The frill to the breast of a shirt, which appears to have been a very ancient, as it is still a fashionable, part of dress.

We Englishmen can mock and scoff at all countries for their defects; but, before they have many times mustered before us, we can learn by lytle and lytle to exceed and pass them all: — of an Italian waist, we make an English patycoate; of a French ruffe, an English chytterling, &c.

Gascogne, Delicate Diet for Droonkards, (1576.)

CHITTY.† adj. [from chit.]

1. Childish; like a baby; as, a chitty face; still a common expression. Sherwood, in his old dictionary, parallels "a chittie-face with chichie-face," old Fr. *chiche*face, which however means one of a sneaking or miserable appearance.

2. Full of chits or warts. Huloet.

CHIVALROUS.† adj. [old Fr. chevalereux, Gower writes our word chevalerous, Conf. Am. B. 1.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. A word now out of use, Dr. Johnson says; but this is surely not the case.

And noble minds of yore allied were

In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Spenser, F. Q.

I'll answer thee in any fair degree,

Or chivalrous design of knightly trial. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

The duc de Mantill, Count Spadassin, and captain Mardaille, persuade him, [king Picrocholo] that he is the most puissant and chivalrous prince that ever appeared since Alexander the great! Louth, Lett. to Warburton.

The Spaniards, from temper and constitution, were extravagantly fond of chivalrous exercises.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet.

CHIVALRY.† n. s. chevalerie, Fr. knighthood, from cheval, a horse; as equus in Latin.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Ducon, Essays.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as valour; dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain

The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare.

I may speak it to my shame,

I have a trumpet been to chivalry. Shakspeare.

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,

That by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,

And what'er else to chivalry belongs,

He would not cease 'till he reveng'd their wrongs. Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not now in use.

They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalries. Sidney.

5. The body, or order, of knights.

And by his light

Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakspeare.

Arthur, with all his chivalry. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. iii.

6. In law.

Servitium militare, of the French, chevalier; a tenure of land by knights service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called jeuda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services as they thought good: and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king is properly called sergeantry, and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person as well as of the king, is called scutagium. Covent.

7. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances, Dr. Johnson says; which is so far from being the case, that few words have been more forcibly employed by writers both of his own time, and since.

We find the divinity lectures of Don Quixote, and the penance of his squire, are both of them in the ritual of chivalry.

Warton, on Love's Lab. Lost.

I look upon chivalry on some mighty river, which the fablings of the poets have made immortal. It may have sprung up amidst rude rocks, and blind deserts. But the noise and rapidity of its course, the extent of country it adorns, and the towns and palaces it ennobles, may lead a traveller out of his way, and invite him to take a view of those dark caverns, unde superne

Plurimus Eridani per sylvani volvitur amnis.

Hurd, Lett. on Chiv. and Rom. L. 2.

I thought ten thousand swords must have leaped from their scabbards to avenge even a look that threatened her with insult. But the age of chivalry is gone.

Burke, on the Fr. Revolution.

CIN'VRS.† n. s. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers, with seeds at the end.

The masculine or proliſick seed contained in the chives, or apices of the stamina. Ray on the Creation.

2. A species of small onion. [old Fr. ceves, ciboule, oignon; cepa, Lat. V. Roq. Gloss.]

CHLORO'SIS. n. s. [from χλῶρ, green.] The green-sickness.

CHLORO'TICK.* adj. [Fr. chlorotique, from chlorosis.] Affected by chlorosis; subject to it.

The extasies of sedentary and chlorotick nuns.

Ballie.

TO CHOLK. See CHOK.

CHOCK.* n. s. [old Fr. choc, a shock, a brunt, a violent encounter. Cotgrave. "Choquer sa teste contre le muraille, to run his head against a wall."] An encounter; an attack.

One of the kings of France died miserably by the chock of an hog. Rp. Patrick, Divine Arithmetick, p. 27.

CHOCOLATE. n. s. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao-tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalement arises the pointal, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the Tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA.

Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao-nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of the cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.

Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exoticick liquors: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbutnot on Aliments.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,

And tremble at the sea that froths below. Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. s. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

CHODE. [the old preterite, from chide.] See CHIDE.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.

Genesis, xxxi. 36.

CHOICE.† n. s. [choix, French, according to Dr. Johnson; but it is rather from the Sax. ceoyan, ciran, to choose.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,

The choice is made; for I must both refuse.

Dryden.

Soft elocution doth thy style renown,

Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,

To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice.

Dryden, Persius.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take to be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If fire consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Hooker.

There's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choer, whether I will live to the world, or to myself.

L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew's Cosmol.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon, Apophthegms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty: That you might well enjoy her, Shakspeare.

Take to thee, from among the cherubim, Thy choice of flaming warriors. Milton, P. L.

Now Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice; Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choce and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis, xxiii. 6.

Their riders, the flower and choice Of many provinces, from bound to bound. Milton, P. R.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits, Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

7. To make CHOICE of. • To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom, of what herself approves, makes choice, Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denham.

CHOICE. adj. [choisi, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus in a sea of folly toss'd, My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful. Used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Rp. Taylor's Holy Diving.

CHOICE-DRAWN.* part. adj. [from choice and draw.] Selected with particular care.

For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd With one appearing hair, that will not follow These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers of France? Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter, of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHOICEELY. adv. [from choicely.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men, Collected choicely from each county some. Shakspeare.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Walton's Angler

CHOICELESS.† n. s. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Make exact animadversion where style hath degenerated, where flourished and thrived in choiceness of phrase.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Carry into the shade such auriculars, seedlings, or plants, as are for their choiceness reserved in pots.  Evelyn's Calendar.

CHOIR.† n. s. [old Fr. choür, Sax. chop, Lat. chorus.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir, Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divinement worship.

The choir, With all the choicest musick of the kingdom, Together sung Te Deum. Shakspeare.

3. The part of the church where the choiristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies, having brought the queen To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off At distance from her. Shakspeare.

CHOIR-SERVICE.* n. s. [from choir and service.] The duty performed by the choir of a cathedral.

That part of our choir-service called the motet or anthem. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 183.

To CHOKE.† v. a. [aceocan. Sax. from ceoca, the check or mouth. According to Minshew, from 𐌿𐌺; from whence, probably, the Spanish, ahogar. From the Goth. kuak, the throat; according to Sereinius.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue, * I'll choke myself. Shakspeare.

The herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and were choked in the sea. St. Mark, v. 13.

While you thunder'd clouds of dust did choke Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court, Whose porticos were chok'd with the resort. Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the ports, and keep them from being choked up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While prayers and tears his destin'd progress stay, And crowds of mourners choke their sovereign's way. Tickell.

3. To hinder by obstruction, or confinement.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together, And choke their art. Shakspeare.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see, Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window light. Davies.

It seemeth the fire is so choked, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

You must make the mould big enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatest; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fire, which chok'd in ashes lay, A load too heavy for his soul to move, Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shakspeare.

Confess thee freely of thy sin: For to deny each article with oath, Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception That I do groan withal. Shakspeare.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. St. Luke, viii. 14.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return; But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden, Past.

CHOKER. † n. s. [from the verb, or perhaps from the Ital. ciocco, a lock of hair. See ARTICHOKE.] The filamentous or capillary part of an artichoke. A cant word.

CHOKE-FULL. * adj. [from choke and full. Corruptly pronounced chuck-full.] Filled, so as to leave no more room.

We filled the skins chock full. Bruce's Travels, iv. 549.

CHOKE-PEAR. † n. s. [from choke and pear.]

1. A rough, harsh, unpalatable pear.
2. Any aspersion or sarcasm, by which another is put to silence. A low term, Dr. Johnson says, in citing the passage from Richardson's Clarissa. But it is a phrase of a century's date, at least, beyond Richardson.

After your goodly and vain-glorious banquet,
I'll give you a chock-pear. Webster, Trag. of the White Devil.
Pardon me for going so low as to talk of giving choke-pears.
Clarissa.

CHOKER. n. s. [from choke.]

1. One that chokes or suffocates another.
2. One that puts another to silence.
3. Any thing that cannot be answered.

CHOKE-WEED. n. s. [eryngina.] A plant.

CHOKKY. adj. [from choke.] That which has the power of suffocation.

CHOLAGOGUES. n. s. [χολαγῶν, bile.] Medicines which have the power of purging bile or choler.

CHOLER. n. s. [cholera, Lat. from χολή.]

1. The bile.

There would be a main defect, if such a feeding animal, and so subject unto diseases from bilious causes, should want a proper conveyance for choler. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Marcilius Ficinus increase these proportions, adding two more of pure choler. Wotton on Education.

2. The humour, which, by its super-abundance, is supposed to produce irascibility.

It engenders choler, planteth anger;
And better 'twere that both of us did fast,
Since, of ourselves, ourselves are choleric,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakespeare.

3. Angry; rage.

Put him to choler-straight: he hath been used
Ever to conquer, and to have his word
Of contradiction. Shakespeare.

He, methinks, is no great scholar,
Who can mistake desire for choler. Prior.

CHOLERA-MORBUS. * n. s. [Gr. χολή, bile, ῥέω, to flow; and the Lat. morbus, a disease.] In medicine, a sudden overflowing of the bile, or bilious matter, both upwards and downwards: a dangerous disease.

CHOLERICK. adj. [cholericus, Latin.]

1. Abounding with choler.

Our two great poets being so different in their tempers, the one choleric and sanguine, the other phlegmatick and melancholick. Dryden.

2. Angry; irascible: of persons.

Bull, in the main, was an honest plain-dealing fellow, choleric, bold, and of a very unconstant temper. Arbutnot.

3. Angry; offensive: of words or actions.

There came in choleric haste towards me about seven or eight knights. Sidney.

Bechanus threatneth all that read him, using his confident, or rather choleric speech. Roylegh, Hist. of the World.

CHOLERICKNESS. n. s. [from choleric.] Anger; irascibility; peevishness.

CHOLIA'MBICKS. * n. s. [Lat. choliambi, from χολή, lame.] Verses differing from the true Iambick, having an Iambick foot in the fifth place, and a spondee in the sixth, or last. They are the same as scanzons.

After him came one Babrius, that gave a new turn of the fables into choliambicks. Bentley, Diss. on Phalaris.

To CHOOSE. † v. a. I chose, I have chosen or chose. [choisir, Fr. ceopan, Sax. kiesen, Germ. kinsan, M. Goth. kesa, old Goth. Often written, in our old language, chese.]

1. To take by way of preference of several things offered; not to reject.

Did I choose him out of all the tribes of Israel to be my priest. 1 Sam. ii. 28.

I may neither choose whom I would, nor refuse whom I dislike. Shakespeare.

If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's will, if you should refuse to accept him. Shakespeare.

2. To take; not to refuse.

Let us choose to us judgement; let us know among ourselves what is good. Job. xxxiv. 4.

The will has still so much freedom left as to enable it to choose any act in its kind good; as also to refuse any act in its kind evil. South, Sermon.

3. To select; to pick out of a number.

How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him? Job. ix. 14.

4. To elect for eternal happiness; to predestinate to life. A term of theologians.

To CHOOSE. † v. n. To have the power of choice between different things. It is generally joined with a negative, and signifies must necessarily be, Dr. Johnson says. This is indeed the modern construction; but, formerly, it was otherwise; as in the Book of Homilies, "who can choose but marvelle?" p. 280. The word thus occurs in a passive form, "as it cannot be chosen but we must needs fall often." Ib. p. 260.

Without the influence of the Deity supporting things, their utter annihilation could not chese but follow. Hooker.

Knaves abroad,
Who having by their own importunate suit,
Convinced or supplied them, they cannot chese
But they must blab. Shakespeare.

When a favourite shall be raised upon the foundation of merit, then can he not choose but prosper. Bacon.

Thow down a golden apple in her way;
For all her haste, she could not choose but stay. Dryden.

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot choose but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration. Tillotson.

CHO'OSER. n. s. [from choose.] He that has the power or office of choosing; elector.

Come all into this net, quoth she;

Come closely in, be rul'd by me;

Each one may here a chooser be;

For room you need not wrestle. Drayton.

In all things to deal with other men, as if I might be my own chooser. Hammond's Profr. Catechism.

This generality is not sufficient to make a good chooser, without a more particular contraction of his judgement. Wotton.

CHO'OSING. * n. s. [Sax. ceorung.] Choice; election.

Wicliffe writes it chesyng.

To CHOP. v. a. [kappen, Dut. couper, French.]

1. To cut with a quick blow.

What shall we do, if we perceive
Lord Hastings will not yield to our complots?

— Chop off his head, man. Shakespeare.

Within these three days his head is to be chopt off.

Shakspeare.

And where the cleaver chops the heifer's spoil,
Thy breathing nostril hold.

Gay, Trivia.

2. To devour eagerly: with up.

You are for making a hasty meal, and for chopping up your entertainment, like an hungry clown.

Dryden.

Upon the opening of his mouth he drops his breakfast, which the fox presently chopp'd up.

L'Estrange

3. To mince: to cut into small pieces.

They break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot.

Micah, iii. 3.

Some grannaries are made with clay, mixed with hair, chopped straw, mulch, and such like.

By dividing of them into chapters and verses, they are so chopped and minced, and stand so broken and divided, that the common people take the verses usually for different aphorisms.

Locke.

4. To break into chips.

I remember the cow's dugs, that her pretty chopt hands had milk'd.

Shakspeare.

To CHOP. v. n.

1. To do any thing with a quick and unexpected motion, like that of a blow: as we say, the wind chops about, that is, changes suddenly.

If the body representing be near, and yet not so near, as to make a concurrent echo, it choppeth with you upon the sudden.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. To catch with the mouth.

Out of greediness to get both, he chops at the shadow, and loses the substance.

L'Estrange.

3. To light or happen upon a thing suddenly: with upon.

To CHOP. † v. a. [ceapan, Sax. koopen, Dut. to buy, kaupan, Goth.]

1. To purchase generally by way of truck: to give one thing for another. "To chop and change, mercator."

Huot.

To have her husband in another country,

Within a month after she is married,

Chopping for rotten raisins.

2. To put one thing in the place of another.

My chance was great, for, from a poore man's son,

I rose aloft, and chopt and chang'd degree.

Mur. for Mag. 1607.

Sets up communities and senses,

To chop and change intelligencies.

Hudibras.

Affirm the Trigon chopp'd and chang'd,

The watry with the fiery rang'd.

Hudibras.

We go on chopping and changing our friends, as well as our horses.

L'Estrange.

3. To bandy; to altercation; to return one thing or word for another.

Let not the council at the bar chop with the judge, nor wind himself into the handling of the cause a-new, after the judge hath declared his sentence.

Bacon.

To CHOP in. † To become modish; to come in.

He that cometh lately out of France will talk French English, and never blush at the matter. Another choppes in with English Italianated.

Wilson's Rhetorick, (1553.) B. iii.

To CHOP out. † To give vent to; to come out.

Who has brought

A merry tale about him, to raise a laughter

Amongst our wine? Why Strato, where art thou?

Thou wilt chop out with them unseasonably

When I desire them not.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

CHOP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A piece chopped off. See CHIP.

Sir William Capel compounded for sixteen hundred pounds, yet Ensign would have cut another chop out of him, if the king had not died.

Bacon.

2. A small piece of meat, commonly of mutton.

Old Cross condemns all persons to be fops,

That can't regale themselves with mutton chops.

King's Cook.

3. A crack; or cleft.

Water will make wood to swell; as we see in the filling of the chops of bowls, by laying them in water.

Bacon.

*CHOP-FALLEN.** See CHAP-FALLEN.

Though strong persuasion hung upon thy lip,—

Alas! how chop-fall'n now!

R. Blair, The Grave.

CHOP-HOUSE. n. s. [chop and house.] A mean house of entertainment, where provision ready dressed is sold.

I lost my place at the chop-house, where every man eats in publick a mess of broth, or chop of meat, in silence.

Spectator.

(CHOPIN.† n. s. [French.]

1. A French liquid measure, containing nearly a pint of Winchester.

My landlord, who is a pert smart man, brought up a choppin of white wine; and, for this particular, there are better French wines here than in England, and cheaper; for they are but a groat a quart.

Howell's Lett. i. vi. 38.

2. A term, used in Scotland for a quart, of wine measure.

*CHO'PPER.* n. s.* [from chop.] A butcher's cleaver; a word now used more frequently than cleaver.

*CHO'PPING.* n. s.* [from chop.]

1. Act of merchandizing; "chopping and changing, mercatus."

Huot.

The chopping of bargains, when a man buys, not to hold, but to sell again, grindeth upon the seller and the buyer.

Bacon.

2. Altercation.

You'll never leave off your chopping of logick, 'till your skin is turned over your ears for prating.

L'Estrange.

CHO'PPING. participial adj. [In this sense, of uncertain etymology.] An epithet frequently applied to infants, by way of ludicrous commendation: imagined by Skinner to signify lusty, from cap, Sax.; by others, to mean a child that would bring money at a market. Perhaps a greedy, hungry child, likely to live.

Both Jack Freeman and Ned Wild,

Would own the fair and chopping child.

Fenton.

CHOPPING-BLOCK. n. s. [chop and block.] A log of wood, on which any thing is laid to be cut in pieces.

The strait smooth elms are good for axle-trees, boards, chopping-blocks.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CHOPPING-KNIFE. n. s. [chop and knife.] A knife with which cooks mince their meat.

Here comes Dametas, with a sword by his side, a forrest-bill on his neck, and a chopping-knife under his girdle.

Sidney.

CHO'PPY. adj. [from chop.] Full of holes, clefts, or cracks.

You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips.

Shakspeare.

CHORS. n. s. without a singular. [corrupted probably from CHAPS, which see.]

1. The mouth of a beast.

So soon as my chops begin to walk, yours must be walking too, for company.

L'Estrange.

2. The mouth of a man, used in contempt.

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,

'Till he unscam'd him from the nape to the chops.

Shakspeare.

3. The mouth of any thing in familiar language; as of a river; of a smith's vice.

*CHORAGUS.* n. s.* [Lat.] The superintendant of the ancient chorus.

He scruples not to affirm, that in this fantastick farce of life, in which the scene is ever changing and inconstant, the whole machinery is of human direction; and the mind the only choragus of the entertainment.

Warburton on Prodigies, p. 93.

CHO'RAL.† adj. [old Fr. choral, from chorus, Lat.]

C H O

1. Belonging to or composing a choir or concert.

All sounds on fret by string or golden wire
Temper'd soft tunings intermix'd with voice,
Choral or unison.

Milton, P. L.

Choral symphonies.

2. Singing in a choir.

And choral scraps sung the second day. Amhurst.
CHORALLY.* adv. [from choral.] In the manner of a chorus.

When the words are attended to by the eye, there is a plaintive cast in the strain which makes the well-known anthem, "I call and cry," somewhat affecting; I think, however, a modern composer would judge ill if he chose to set the same words chorally. Mason, Ch. M. p. 116.

CHORD. n. s. [chorda, Lat.] When it signifies a rope or string in general, it is written cord: when its primitive signification is preserved, the h is retained.

1. The string of a musical instrument.

Who mov'd
Their stops and chords, was seen; his volant touch
Instinct thro' all proportions, low and high,
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton, P. L.

2. [In geometry.] A right line, which joins the two ends of any arch of a circle.

To CHORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with strings or chords: to string.

What passion cannot music raise and quell?
When Jubal struck the chorded shell,
His listening brethren stood around. Dryden.

CHORDE'F n. s. [from chorda, Lat.] A contraction of the frenum.

CHOREPISCOPAL.* adj. [from chorepiscopus.] Relating to the power of a suffragan or local bishop.

Desiring his scene of several passages therein contained, relating to the Valentinian heresy, episcopal and chorepiscopal power, and some emergent difficulties concerning them.

Per, Life of Haimon, § 1.

CHOREPISCOPUS.* n. s. [Lat. from choros, a district or country, and episcopus, a bishop.] Formerly, a suffragan or local bishop, delegated to exercise episcopal jurisdiction within certain districts.

CHORIAMBIK.* n. s. [Fr. choriamb, Lat. chorianthus, Gr. χοριαμβος.] The foot of a verse consisting of four syllables, as anictus; two long at each end of the word, and two short in the middle.

CHO'RION. n. s. [χεῖρ, to contain.] The outward membrane that envelops the fetus.

CHO'RIST.* n. s. [old Fr. choriste; our parent word of chorister.] A singing man in a choir. Cotgrave.

CHO'RISTER.* n. s. [from choriste, Fr. See CHO'RIST.] 1. A singer in cathedrals; usually a singer of the lower order; a singing boy.

And let the roaring organs loudly play
The praises of the Lord in hvely notes;
The whiles, with hollow throats,
The choristers the joyous anthem sing. Spenser.

2. A singer in a concert. This sense is, for the most part, confined to poetry.

The new-born phoenix takes his way;
Of airy choristers a numerous train
Attend his progress. Dryden.
The musical voices and accents of the aerial choristers.
Ray on the Creation.

CHOROGRAPHER.* n. s. [from choros, a region, and γράφω, to describe.] He that describes particular regions or countries.

C H O

Places unknown, better harped at in Camden and other chorographers. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. 4.
Nurecia, situated in Umbria, which our modern chorographers call Spoleto. Twissden, p. 5.

CHOROGRAP'HTICAL.* adj. [See CHOROGRAPHER.]

Descriptive of particular regions or countries; laying down the boundaries of countries.

I have added a chorographical description of this terrestrial paradise. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Methinks it would well please any man to look upon — chorographical, topographical delineations; to behold, as it were, all the remote provinces, towns, cities of the world.

Barton, Aut. of Mel. p. 276.

The muse, yet observing her begun course of chorographical longitude, traces eastward the southern shore of the isle.

Selden, on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 2.

CHOROGRAP'HTICALLY.* adv. [from chorographical.]

In a chorographical manner; according to the rule of chorography; in a manner descriptive of particular regions.

I may perhaps be found fault withal, because I do not chorographically place the funeral monuments in this my book. Wetzer, Funeral Monum.

CHORO'GRAPHY.* n. s. [See CHOROGRAPHER.] The art or practice of describing particular regions, or laying down the limits and boundaries of particular provinces. It is less in its object than geography, and greater than topography.

For most of what I use of chorography, join with me in thanks to that most leared nourice of antiquity, my instructing friend, Mr. Camden. Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. Pref.

This I have described to your lordship, because I think there might be good use made of it for chorography; for, otherwise, to make Landships by it were illiberal. Wotton, Rem. p. 350.

We have some evidences of it in our first entrance into it, in this part of the chorography of Egypt. Stillingfl. Orig. Sac.

In delightfull capture we desery,
As in a map, Sion's chorography.
Bp. H. King on Sandys's Psalms.

CHO'RUS.* n. s. [chorus, Latin.]

1. A number of singers; a concert.

Parnes, commenting on the Revelation, divides the whole book as a tragedy, into acts distinguished each by a chorus of heavenly harpings, and song between.

Milt. n. Introd. to Sanson Agonistes.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers; afterwards one actor was intr. duced. Dryden.

Never did a more full and unspotted chorus of human creatures join together in a hymn of devotion. Addison.

In praise so just let every voice be join'd,
And fill the general chorus of mankind! Pope.

2. The persons who are supposed to behold what passes in the acts of a tragedy, and sing their sentiments between the acts.

For supply.

Admit me chorus to this history. Shakspeare.

3. The song between the acts of a tragedy.

Sophocles, the genius of his age,
Increas'd the pomp and beauty of the stage,
Engag'd the chorus in every part.

Sir W. Scott's and Dryden's Art of Poetry.

4. Verses of a song in which the company join the singer.

CHORSE. [the preter tense, and sometimes the participle passive, from To choose.]

Our sovereign here above the rest might stand,
And here be chose again to rule the land. Dryden.

CHO'SEN. [the participle passive, from To choose.]

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakspeare.

CHOUGH. n. s. [ceo, Sax. chonca, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger. Hammer.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws, and choughs. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republic birds. Dryden.

CHOULE. n. s. [commonly pronounced and written jowl.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or sachel.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CHOUSE. † v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French gossier, to laugh at; or joncher, to wheedle; and from the Teutonic kosen, to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Skinner might have given the old Fr. joucher, as well as joncher, which signifies to cog, that is, to cheat. V. Cotgrave in JOUCHER. But Serenius and Ibre consider the Goth. kinsa, to fascinate, as the original of this word; and connect it with the verb cozen, to trick or cheat. It was formerly written chianse or chianze; which countenances Henshaw's opinion, that the word is Turkish. Coles gives to chouse for cozen or deceive, and notices the similarity of sound with the Turkish chianze.] See CHOUSE.

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.

Long practisers in the art, who make themselves sport at others' follies and their own delusions: but our barber on the place is chianze'd, a very pigeon, a younger brother.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. iv. 18.

Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryden.

Our islanders however they may pretend to chouse one another, they make but very awkward rogues. Tutler, No. 213.

From London they came, silly people to chouse,
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And sows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.

CHOUSE. † n. s. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henshaw from kiaus, or chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fool. Dr. Johnson might have added, that the Turkish chians or chiaus is a title of various character. The alai chiaus is a buffoon, who carries a baton tipped with silver, and plays a thousand monkey-tricks, fitter for the entertainment of children than of sensible men. Drummond's Travels, p. 151.]

1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.

A sottish chouse,
Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,
Applies himself to cunning men. Hudibras.

2. A trick or sham.

To CHO'WTER. v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Phillips.

CHRISM. † n. s. [χρῖσμα, an ointment.] Unguent; or unction: it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.

One act never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood, denoted especially by his unction or chrism, refers to.

Hammock, Pract. Catechism.

O Lord, the God of our fathers, do thou bless this oil with power, energy, and illumination of the Holy Spirit, that it may be the chrism against all filthiness.

Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 166.

He solicited the favour of England, by sending Henry a sacred rose, perfumed with musk, and anointed with chrism.

Hume, Hist. of E. II. 8.

CHRISMAL.* adj. [from chrism.] Relating to chrism.

Having thus conjured and prayed, he falls upon singing the praises of this chrismal oil.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Endor, p. 316.

CHRISMATORY.* n. s. [old Fr. chrismatoire.] A little vessel for the oil intended for chrism; and generally, a cruet or vessel.

Censers, chrismatories, corporasses, and chalices, which for thy whorish holiness might not sometime be touched, but will for thy sake be abhorred of all men.

Bule on the Revel. P. II. Bb. viii.

The word is sometimes translated lenticula, a chrismatory, or cruet, or vessel to contain oil; sometimes orbis, a spherical body encompassing others.

Smith's Old Age, p. 215.

CHRISM. † n. s. [See CHRISM.]

1. A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the chrism-cloth, a cloth anointed with holy unguent, which the children anciently wore till they were christened.

When the convulsions were but few, the number of chrisms and infants was greater.

Grout's Bills of Mortality.

2. The cloth itself; with which also women used to shroud the child, if dying within the month.

The godfathers and godmothers shall take and lay their hands upon the child, and the minister shall put upon him his white vesture, commonly called the chrism.

Order of Baptism in K. Edw. VI. time.

As undiscreet as are the phantasms that make a chrism child to smile.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, l. 5. 2.

CHRIST-CROSS-ROW.* n. s. An old term for the alphabet, probably from the cross usually set before it. It is corruptly written, as it is pronounced, chriss-cross-row. Dr. Ash so prints it; and Mr. Mason, criss-cross-row, who absurdly also calls it a cant word.

The cross of Christ, in its second and metaphorical acceptation, is the Christian's burden and badge; that which he is to take up, that which he is to glory in. The one is a paradox, and a smart one, to the flesh; the other to the world; but both, truths to be learnt before ever a letter in the Christian's Christ-cross-row; as being indeed, though none of the letters, as instructive as all the four and twenty.

Whitlock Mann, of the Eng. p. 527.

To CHRIS'TEN. † adj. [Christian, Sax. chrestienner, old Fr.]

1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.

The minister of the parish, where the child was born or christened, shall examine whether the child be lawfully baptized or no.

Private Baptism, Com. Pr. Rubrick.

I am most certain this is the first example in England, since it was first christened.

Bp. Taylor, Discourse on Prayer.

2. To name; to denominate.

Where such evils as these reign, christen the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millenium.

Burnet.

Ere yet the morning shall new christen day.

For. P's Love's Sacrifice.

CHRISTENDOM. n. s. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.

What hath been done, the parts of Christendom most afflicted can best testify.

Hooker.

An older and a better soldier, none.

That Christendom gives out.

Shakspeare.

His computation is universally received over all Christendom.

Holder on Time.

CHRISTENING. n. s. [from the verb.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.

The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old christening, that had staid long for godfathers. Bacon.

We shall insert the causes, why the account of christenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Graunt.

The day of the christening being come, the house was filled with gossipa. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHRISTENING.* adj. [from the subst.] Relating to the christening.

My thoughts no christening dinners' crost,
No children cry'd for butter'd toast.

T. Warton, Progr. of Discontent.

CHRISTIAN.† n. s. [Christianus, Lat. clupren, Sax. old Fr. christian, christien.] A professor of the religion of Christ.

The disciples were called christians first in Antioch.

Acts, xi. 26.

We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable religion in the world. Tillotson.

CHRISTIAN.† adj. Professing the religion of Christ.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors.

Shakspeare.

2. Ecclesiastical.

In briefly recounting the various species of ecclesiastical courts, or, as they are often styled, courts Christian, I shall begin with the lowest. Blackstone.

TO CHRISTIAN.* v. a. The same as TO CHRISTEN, which see.

You allege the practice of all churches christianed to the contrary. Falke against Allen, (1586,) p. 252.

CHRISTIAN-NAME. n. s. The name given at the font, distinct from the gentilitious name, or surname.

CHRISTIANISM.† n. s. [old Fr. christianisme, from christianismus, Lat.]

1. The christian religion.

That I may not seem, rather forcibly, to break out here out of Platonism into Christianism. Merc. Song of the Soul, Pref.

Herein the worst of kings, professing christianism, have by far exceeded him. Milton, Eiconoclast, ch. 1.

To believe antichristianity christianism, and christianity antichristian.

Chillingworth, Pref. to the Auth. of Charity Maintained.

2. The nations professing christianity.

CHRISTIANITY. n. s. [chrétienté, French.] The religion of christians.

God doth will that couples, which are married, both infidels, if either party be converted into christianity, this should not make separation. Hooker.

Every one, who lives in the habitual practice of any voluntary sin, cuts himself off from christianity. Addison.

TO CHRISTIANIZE.† v. a. [old Fr. christianizer.] To make christian; to convert to christianity.

Good dispositions and natural graces, more ready to be advanced by impressions from above, and christianized unto pieties. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 12.

Till this excellent piece of philosophy be, as Clemens saith of the Pagan school, ἐκλυμνω διὰ Χριστοῦ, baptized by that Baptist, christianized by the addition of repentance.

Hammond, Serm. iv.

To christianize them, [the Psalms,] as Dr. Watts has done, would, I presume, deviate too far from the present practice of our establishment. Mason on Church Musick, p. 194.

The principles of platonick philosophy, as it is now christianized.

Dryden.

CHRISTIANLIKE.* adj. [from christian and like.] Becfitting a Christian.

Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most christianlike, laments his death.

Shakspeare, Henry VI. P. II.

In the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise; for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most christianlike fear. Shakspeare, Much Ado, &c.

VOL. I.

CHRISTIANLY.* adj. [from christian.] Becoming a Christian.

To inbreed in us this generous and christianly reverence one of another. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. h. 2.

CHRISTIANLY.† adv. [from christian.] Like a christian; as becomes one who professes the holy religion of Christ.

That they may see their children christianly and virtuously brought up. Office of Matrimony.

Those deep and retired thoughts, which, with every man christianly instructed, ought to be most frequent of God, and of his miraculous ways and works amongst men.

Milton, of Reform. in Eng. b. 1.

CHRISTIANNESS.* n. s. [from christian.] The profession of christianity.

It is very irregular and unreasonable to measure any action by a rule that belongs not to it, to try the exactness of the circle by the square, which should be done by the compass; and in like manner to judge the christianness of an action by the law of natural reason, which can only be judged by its conformity with the law of Christ, superior to that of nature.

Hammond, of Conscience, § 26.

CHRISTIANOGRAPHY.* n. s. [from christianus and γραφω, to describe.] A general description of the nations professing christianity.

In my christianography you may see divers liturgies.

Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 64.

CHRISTMAS.† n. s. [from Christ and mass.]

1. The day on which the nativity of our blessed Saviour is celebrated, by the particular service of the church.

Canons were made by several councils to oblige men to receive the Holy Communion three times a year at least, viz. at Christmas, Easter, and Whitsuntide.

Whalley on the Comm. Prayer.

2. The season of Christmas; the festivity relating to it; the twelve days succeeding Christmas day.

Here was a consent,

(Knowing aforehand of our merriment)

To dash it like a christmas comedy. Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

Is not a community a Christmas gambol, or a tumbling trick?

Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled shows;
• But like of each thing, that in season grows.

Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

The festivity of Christmas was observed much after the same manner, ceremonies, and solemnities, as in Italy.

Brown, Travels, (1685,) p. 151.

CHRISTMAS-BOX. n. s. [from christmas and box.] A box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.

• When time comes round, a Christmas-box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year. Gay's Trivia.

CHRISTMAS-FLOWER. n. s. Hellebore.

CHRIST'S-THORN.† n. s. [So called, as Skinner fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.] A plant.

It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower-cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

The plains, in the finest cultivation, are divided by hedges of aloe, christthorn, or wild pomegranate.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 1.

CHROMATICK. † adj. [χρῶμα, colour.]

1. Relating to colour.

I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chromatick, or colouring. Dryden, Dufrenoy.

2. Relating to a certain species of ancient musick, now unknown.

It was observed he never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick and enharmonick manner. Arbutnot and Pope.

3. Relating to a particular style in musick moving by semitones or half notes.

Those harsh chromatick jars
Of sin that all our musick mars.

Milton, Ode at a Sol. Musick, MS. Reading.

Musick is not designed to please only chromatick ears, but all that are capable of distinguishing harsh from disagreeable notes.

Addison, Spect. No. 29.

CHRONICAL. } adj. [old Fr. chronique, periodical;
CHRONICK. } from χρόνος, time.]

A chronical distemper is of length; as dropsies, asthmas, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration; as, quartan agues, scurvy, wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The lady's use of these excellencies is to divert the old man, when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper.

CHRONICLE. n. s. [chronique, Fr. from χρόνος, time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;

For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,

Not a relation for a breakfast.

Shakspeare.

2. A history.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser on Ireland.

If from the field I should return once more,

I and my sword will earn my chronicle.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know

My faculties nor person, yet will be

The chronicles of my doing.

Shakspeare.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which crowd their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle.

Dryden.

Th CHRONICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into reformation of abuses in that realm.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. To register; to record.

For now the devil, that told me I did well,

Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.

Shakspeare.

Love is your master; for he masters you:

And he that is so yoked by a fool,

Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise.

Shakspeare.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad.

Cong.

CHRONICLER. n. s. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.

Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand

Giddy fantastick poets of each land.

Donne.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers.

Spenser.

This custom was held by the Druids and bards of our ancient Britons, and of latter times by the Irish chroniclers, called rimers.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

CHRONIQUE. * n. s. [Fr.] A chronicle.

The best chronique that can be now compiled of their late changes, must for the most part be collected from some aged grandsire's memory; a frail foundation to support an historical credit.

L. Addison, West Barbary, p. 74.

CHRONOGRAM. † n. s. [χρόνος, time, and γράφω, to write.] An inscription including the date of any action. Of this kind the following is an example.

Gloria lausque Deo, sæcLorVM in sæcLla sunt.

A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year 1660, but numerical letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867.

Howell.

The Spaniards took it [Breda] again; as by inscriptions and chronograms are to be seen in divers places.

Brown, Travels, (1685,) p. 105.

CHRONOGRAMMATICAL. adj. [from chronogram.] Belonging to a chronogram. See the example from Howell in chronogram.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST. n. s. [from chronogram.] A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where, as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist.

Addison on Medals.

CHRONOGRAPHER. * n. s. [χρονος, time, and γράφω, to describe.] He that describes circumstance of past times; a chronologist.

The common printed chronicle — is indeed but an epitome, or deflection, made by Robert of Lorraine, and the numerous rest of our monkish and succeeding chronographers.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. Pref.

The author had before related, out of Pausanias the chronographer, that Sosibius an Antiochian had left, as a legacy to the city of Antioch, the yearly revenue of fifteen talents of gold.

Gregory, Notes on Scripture, p. 106.

CHRONOGRAPHY. * n. s. [Fr. chronographic, from the Gr. See CHRONOGRAPHER.] The description of past time; the arrangement of historical events.

CHRONOLOGER. † n. s. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] He that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epochs.

Holler on Time.

Among the Arabians there hath as yet come to my hands one only chronologer of these times. Gregory's Posthuma, p. 8.

This publication, [his chronology,] bearing the name of the immortal Newton, though highly built upon by subsequent chronologers, is so unspeakably inferior to that great man's other works, that I am almost unwilling to believe its authenticity; and can hardly be persuaded he ever would have published it himself.

Richardson on the Languages, &c. of the East, i. 1.

CHRONOLOGICAL. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

CHRONOLOGICALLY. † adv. [from chronological.] In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology; according to the exact series of time.

Follow them politically, chronologically, and geographically.

Ld. Chesterfield.

CHRONOLOGICK. * adj. [from chronology.] Denoting periods of time.

May chronologick spouts

Retain no cypher legible! T. Warton, Epist. from T. Hearne.

The chronologick classing of those histories which my most sanguine wishes went to.

Pownall on Antiquities, p. 127.

CHRONOLOGIST. n. s. [See CHRONOLOGER.] One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chronologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin that the world should last but six thousand years, has been long disproved.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

All that learned noise and dust of the chronologist is wholly to be avoided. Locke on Education.

CHRONOLOGY. n. s. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages. Holder on Time.

Where I allude to the custom of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian. Prior.

CHRONOMETER. n. s. [χρόνος and μέτρον.] An instrument for the exact measurement of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronometer, a bullet, at its first discharge, flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds. Derham.

CHRY'SALIS. n. s. [from χρῖος, gold, because of the golden colour in the nymphæ of some insects.] A term used by some naturalists for aurelia, or the first apparent change of the maggot of any species of insects. Chambers.

CHRY'SOLITE. n. s. [χρῖος, gold, and λίθος, a stone.] A precious stone of a dusky green, with a cast of yellow. Woodward.

Such another world,
Of one intire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for. Shakspeare.

If metal, part seem'd gold, part silver clear:
If stone, carbuncle most, or chrysolite. Milton, P. L.

CHRY'SOPRASE. n. s. [χρῖος, gold, and prasinus, green.] A precious stone of a yellow colour, approaching to green.

The ninth a topaz, the tenth a chrysoprasus. Rev. xxi. 20.

CHUB. n. s. [from cop, a great head, Skinner.] A river fish. The chevin.

The chub is in prime from Midmay to Candlemas, but best in winter. He is full of small bones: he eats waterish; not firm, but limp and tasteless: nevertheless, he may be so dressed as to make him very good meat. Walton, Angler.

CHUBBED. adj. [from chub.] Big-headed like a chub.

CHUBBY.* } adj. [from chub.] We still use the CHUBFACED. } expression, "a chubby boy," for one having a large or fat face.

I never saw a fool lean; the chub-faced fop Shines sleek with full-cream'd fat of happiness. Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

To CHUCK. v. n. [A word probably formed in imitation of the sound that it expresses; or perhaps corrupted from chick.] To make a noise like a hen, when she calls her chickens.

To CHUCK.† v. a.

1. To call as a hen calls her young.
Then crowing, clapp'd his wings, th' appointed call,
To chuck his wives together in the hall. Dryden, Fables.

2. To give a gentle blow under the chin, so as to make the mouth strike together. [This is probably from chock, a blow. See CHOCK, and the subst. CHUCK.]
Come, chuck the infant under the chin, force a smile, and cry, Ah, the boy takes after his mother's relations. Congreve.

To CHUCK.* v. n. [Ital. scuccherare; Dutch, schucken.] To jeer; to laugh. The parent of our better known word, chuckle.

But, bold-fac'd Satyr, strain not over high,
But laugh and chuck at meaner gullery. Marston, Sat. ii.

To CHUCK.* v. a. To throw, by a quick and dexterous motion, any heavy weight, so that it shall nicely fall in a given place. So carmen and waggoners say, "chuck that sack or parcel down here." This use of the verb seems to be taken from chuck-farthing.

CHUCK.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a hen.

He made the chuck four or five times, that people use to make to chickens when they call them. Temple.

2. A word of endearment, corrupted from chicken or chick.

Come, your promise. — What promise, chuck? Shakspeare.

3. A sudden small noise.

4. A little blow under the chin; written "chock under the chin," in Sherwood's old dictionary. See To CHUCK, in this sense; and also CHOCK.

CHUCK-FARTHING. n. s. [chuck and farthing.] A play, at which the money falls with a chuck into the hole beneath.

He lost his money at chuck-farthing, shuffle-cap, and all fours. Arbuthnot, History of John Bull.

To CHUCKLE.† v. n. [Ital. scuccherare, Dutch schucken.] To laugh vehemently; to laugh convulsively.

What tale shall I to my old father tell?
'Twill make him chuckle thou'rt bestow'd so well. Dryden.

She to intrigues was e'en hard hearted;
She chuck'd when a bawd was carted. Prior.

To CHUCKLE. v. a. [from chuck.]

1. To call as a hen.

I am not far from the women's apartment, I am sure; and if these birds are within distance, here's that will chuckle 'em together. Dryden.

2. To cocker; to fondle.

Your confessor, that parcel of holy guts and garbidge; he must chuckle you, and moan you. Dryden, Spanish Friar.

To CHUD.* [perhaps from To chere.] To chaup or bite.

When she rides, the horse chuds his bit so cheerfully, as if he wished his burthen might grow to his back.

Stafford's Noble dissolv'd into a Niles, p. 119.

CHU'ET. n. s. [probably from To chere.] An old word, as it seems, for forced meat. See CHEWET.

As for chucts, which are likewise minced meat, instead of butter and fat, it were good to moisten them partly with cream, or almond or pistachio milk. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CHUFF.† n. s. [A word of uncertain derivation; perhaps corrupted from chub, or derived from kuf, Welsh, a stock, Dr. Johnson says. Dr. Jamieson considers the Scottish coof or cufe the same as our chuff; and thinks that the Sw. Goth. kufica, to keep under, to insult, or the Iceland. kueif, one who is cowardly or feeble, may be akin to this word. I differ from this. Chuffi, in our old lexicography, is a countryman; rusticus, as in the Prompt. Parv. The Sw. kuffe, from the old Goth. kufe, is a cottage. This seems to suggest in some degree, the etymology of chuff. The phrase says Mr. Steevens, of fat chuffs in Shakspeare, "is a term of contempt always applied to rich and avaricious people, and chuff is probably a corruption of chough, a thievish bird that collects his prey on the sea-shore." This will not be received; and "a rich chuff," and "a fat chuff," which are both mentioned in our old lexicography, are also interpreted "a good rich yeoman," as well as a "big or fat chuff." The old Fr. joffu must not be forgotten, which Cotgrave translates, "chuffie, fat-checked, or putt up in the face," which hitherto has been overlooked; and this meaning of bloated or fat may countenance the Tent. kuffe and the Sax. cýr, a barrel, as the original.] A coarse, fat-headed, blunt clown.

Hang ye, gorbelled knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakspeare.

A less generous chuff than this in the fable, would have hugged his bags to the last. L'Estrange.

CHUFFILY. adv. [from chuffy.] Surlily; stomach-fully.

John answered chuffily. Richardson, Clarissa.

CHUFFINESS. n. s. [from chuffy.] Clownishness; surliness.

CHUFFY. † adj. [from chuff; old Fr. joffu. But see CHUFF.] Blunt; surly; fat.

The goddess drank; a chuffy lad was by,

Who saw the liquor with a grudging eye,

And grinning cries, she's greedily more than dry.

Manswaring, Ovid's Met. B. 5.

CHUM. n. s. [chom, Armorick, to live together.] A chamber fellow; a term used in the universities.

CHUMP. n. s. A thick heavy piece of wood, less than a block.

When one is battered, they can quickly, of a chump of wood, accommodate themselves with another. Morson.

CHURCH. † n. s. [Sax. cýrce, cýric: Germ. kirche; Gr. εκκλησία, from κύριος, the Lord, and αἷα, house.]

1. The collective body of christians, usually termed the catholick church.

The church being a supernatural society, doth differ from natural societies in this; that the persons unto whom we associate ourselves in the one, are men, simply considered as men; but they to whom we be joined in the other, are God, angels, and holy men. Hooker.

2. The body of christians adhering to one particular opinion or form of worship.

The church is a religious assembly, or the large fair building where they meet; and sometimes the same word means a synod of bishops, or of presbyters; and in some places it is the pope and a general council. Watts, Logic.

3. The place which christians consecrate to the worship of God.

It comprehends the whole church, viz. the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel which is even included under the word church. Ayliffe, Parergon.

That churches were consecrated unto none but the Lord only, the very general name chiefly doth sufficiently shew: church doth signify no other thing than the Lord's house. Hooker.

Though you unty the winds, and let them fight Against the churches. Shakspeare.

4. Ecclesiastical authority or power, in contradistinction to the civil power of the state.

Lest I should grow tedious about small matters at a time when such great and weighty concerns are under consideration in church and state, I will come to a conclusion.

Sir G. Wheeler, Descript. of Anc. Churches, p. 128.

The same criminal may be absolved by the church, and condemned by the state; absolved or pardoned by the state, yet censured by the church. Leslie.

5. It is used frequently in conjunction with other words; as church-member, the member of a church; church-power, spiritual or ecclesiastical authority.

TO CHURCH. † v. a. [from the noun.] To perform with any one the office of returning thanks in the church, after any signal deliverance, as from the danger of childbirth.

It was the ancient usage of the church of England for women to come veiled, who came to be church'd.

Wheately on the Common Prayer.

CHURCH-ALE. † n. s. [from church and ale.] A wake, or feast, commemorative of the dedication of the church. See ALE.

For the church-ale, two young men of the parish are yearly chosen to be wardens, who make collection among the parishioners of what provision it pleaseth them to bestow. Carew.

The church-war leus or quest-men, and their assistants, shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, church-ales, drinkings, temporal courts, or leets, lay-injuries, musters, or any other profane usage, to be kept in the church; chapel, or churchyard.

Const. and Canons Ecclesiastical, § 88.

CHURCH-ATTIRE. n. s. The habit in which men officiate at divine service.

These and such like were their discourses, touching that church-attire, which with us for the most part is used in publick prayer. Hooker.

CHURCH-AUTHORITY. n. s. Ecclesiastical power; spiritual jurisdiction.

In this point of church-authority, I have sifted all the little scraps alleged. Alterbury.

CHURCH-BENCH. \ n. s.* The seat in the porch of a church.

Let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed. Shakspeare, Much Ado, &c.

CHURCH-BURIAL. n. s. Burial according to the rites of the church.

The bishop has the care of seeing that all christians, after their deaths, be not denied church-burial according to the usage and custom of the place. Ayliffe, Parergon.

CHURCHING. \ n. s.* [from To church.] The act of returning thanks in the church. See TO CHURCH.

The absurdity, which some would introduce, of stifling their acknowledgments in private houses, and in giving thanks for their recovery and enlargement in no other place than that of their confinement and restraint; is a practice inconsistent with the very name of the office, which is called the churching of women, and consequently implies a ridiculous solecism of being church'd at home. Wheately on the Common Prayer.

CHURCHIDOM. \ n. s.* [from church and dom.] Establishment; government.

Whatsoever church pretendeth to a new beginning, pretendeth at the same time to a new churchdom; and whatsoever is so new, is none. So necessary it is to believe the holy catholick church. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 9.

CHURCH-FOUNDER. n. s. He that builds or endows a church.

Whether emperours or bishops in those days were church-founders, the solemn dedication of churches they thought not to be a work in itself either vain or superstitious. Hooker.

CHURCH-LAND. \ n. s.* Land belonging to churches, religious houses, and benefices.

I shall not here enter into the religious account of church-lands. Sir H. Felce-ton's Pref. to Bp. Morton's Episcopacy.

CHURCHLIKE. \ adj.* [from church and like.] Besitting a churchman.

Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,

Nor hold his scepter in his childish fist,

Nor wear the diadem upon his head,

Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

CHURCHMAN. n. s. [church and man.]

1. An ecclesiastick; a clergyman; one that ministers in sacred things.

If any thing be offered to you touching the church and churchmen, or church-government, rely not only upon yourself. Bacon.

A very difficult work to do, to reform and reduce a church into order, that had been so long neglected, and that was so ill filled by many weak and more wilful churchmen. Clarendon.

Patience in want, and poverty of mind,

These marks of church and churchmen he design'd,

And living taught, and dying left behind. Dryden, Fables.

2. An adherent to the church of England.

CHURCH-MUSICK.* n. s. The service of chant and anthem in churches and cathedrals.

It was anciently customary for men and women of the first quality, ecclesiasticks, and others, who were lovers of church-musick, to be admitted into this corporation, [of parish-clerks.]
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 396.

CHURCH-PREFERMENT.* n. s. Benefice in the church.

For any church-preferment thou hast a mind to.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

He professed some church-preferments in the reign of Edward the sixth.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 240.

CHURCHSHIP.* n. s. Institution of the church.

The Jews were his own also by right of churchship, as selected and inclosed by God, from amidst all other nations, to be the seat of his worship, and the great conservatory of all the sacred oracles, and means of salvation.

South, Sermon on John, i. 11.

CHURCH-WARDENS. n. s. [See WARDEN.] Officers yearly chosen, by the consent of the minister and parishioners, according to the custom of each place, to look to the church, church-yard, and such things as belong to both; and to observe the behaviour of the parishioners, for such faults as appertain to the jurisdiction or censure of the ecclesiastical court. They are a kind of corporation, enabled by law to sue for any thing belonging to their church, or poor of their parish.

Cowel.

There should likewise church-wardens, of the gravest men in the parish, be appointed, as they be here in England.

Spenser on Ireland.

Our church-wardens

Feast on the silver, and give us the farthings.

Gay.

CHURCHWAY.* n. s. The road that leads to the church.

Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite,
In the church-way paths to glide.

Shakspeare, Mids. Night's Dream.

CHURCHWORK.* n. s. An expression applied to work which is carried on slowly.

This siege was church-work; and therefore went on slowly.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 111.

Contrary to the proverb, church-work went on the most speedily.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 36.

CHURCHYARD. n. s. The ground adjoining to the church, in which the dead are buried; a cemetery.

I am almost afraid to stand alone

Here in the churchyard, yet I will adventure.

Shakspeare.

In churchyards, where they bury much, the earth will consume the corps in far shorter time than other earth will.

Bacon.

No place so sacred from such fops is barr'd;

Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard.

Pope.

CHURL.* n. s. [ceopl, Sax. carl, in German, is strong, rusticks being always observed to be strong bodied, Dr. Johnson says. This may apply to the first and second senses which he has given, but not to the third; which belongs to the Goth. karl, an old, and a poor, and mean, man. See also CARLE.]

1. A rustick; a countryman; a labourer.

He holdeth himself a gentleman, and scorneth to work or use any hard labour, which he saith is the life of a peasant or churl.

Spenser on Ireland.

One of the baser sort, which they call churls, being reproved for his oath, answered confidently, that his lord commanded him.

Spenser on Ireland.

Churl, upon thy eyes I throw

All the power this charn doth owe.

Shakspeare

From this light cause the infernal maid prepares

The country churls to mischief, hate, and wars.

Dryden.

2. A rude, surly, ill-bred man.

A churl's courtesy rarely comes, but either for gain or falshood.

Sidney.

3. A miser; a niggard; a selfish or greedy wretch.

The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful.

Isaiah, xxxii. 5.

Poison, I see, hath been his timeless end!

O churl drink all, and leave no friendly drop

To help me after!

Shakspeare.

CHURLISH.* adj. [Sax. ceoplyc.]

1. Rude; brutal; harsh; austere; sour; merciless; unkind; uncivil.

A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears,

Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd.

Shakspeare.

The interruption of their churlish drums

Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand

To parly, or to fight.

Shakspeare.

A lion in love with a lass, desired her father's consent. The answer was churlish enough, He'd never marry his daughter to a brute.

L'Estrange.

He the pursuit of churlish beasts,

Prefer'd to sleeping on her breasts.

Waller.

2. Selfish; avaricious.

The man was churlish and evil in his doings.

1 Sam. xxv. 3.

This sullen churlish thief

Had all his mind plac'd upon Mully's beef.

King.

3. [Of things.] Unpliant; cross-grained; unmanageable; harsh; not yielding.

If there be emission of spirit, the body of the metal will be hard and churlish.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The Cornish were become, like metal often fired and quenched, churlish, and that would sooner break than bow.

Bacon, Henry VII.

Iron, in a quick fire, relents and melts; but, take it out of the furnace, and it grows hard again, nay worse, churlish and unmalleable.

Abp. Sancroft's Sermon, p. 103.

In the hundreds of Essex they have a very churlish blue clay.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Vexatious; obstructive.

Will you again unknot

This churlish knot of all abhorred war?

Shakspeare.

Spain found the war so churlish and longsome, as they found they should consume themselves in an endless war.

Bacon.

Spreads a path clear as the day,

Where no churlish rub says nay.

Crashaw.

CHURLISHLY.* adv. [from churlish.] Rudely; brutally.

A fool will upbraid churlishly.

Ecclus. xviii. 18.

How churlishly I chid Lucetta hence,

When willingly I would have had her here!

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

He was known to have borne himself churlishly and proudly towards Emma his sister

Milton, Hist. of Eng. b. 6.

After he had breathed out a thousand fruitless threats, he assaults the walls with violence; but by Rustan as churlishly answered, and with great loss compelled to retreat.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 82.

To the oak, now remnant, the olive did churlishly put over the son for a reward of the service of his sire.

Howell.

CHURLISHNESS.* n. s. [from churlish; ceoplycenes, Saxon.]

1. Brutality; ruggedness of manner.

Better is the churlishness of a man than a comely woman.

Ecclus. xlii. 14.

In the churlishness of fortune, a poor honest man suffers in this world,

L'Estrange.

2. Difficulty of management. See the third sense of CHURISH.

I do find, Mr. Speaker, that when kingdoms and states are entered into terms and resolutions of hostility, one against the other, yet they are many times restrained from their attempts by four impediments. — The third, when they have conceived an apprehension of the difficulty, and churlishness of the enterprise, and that it is not prepared to their hand.

Bacon, Speech in Parl. 39. Eliz.

CHURLY.* adj. [from churl.] Rude; boisterous; violent.

The ship, where Jonah sleeps,
Is vexed sore, and batter'd on the deeps,
And well nigh split upon the threatening rock,
With many a boisterous brush and *churl*ly knock.

Quarles, Feast for Worms, (1620,) § 2.

CHURME. n. s. [more properly chirm, from the Saxon cýrme, a clamour or noise; as to chirre is to coo as a turtle.] A confused sound; a noise.

He was conveyed to the Tower with the churme of a thousand taunts and reproaches. Bacon.

CHURN.† n. s. [properly chern, from kern, Dut. cepn, cepe, Sax. Goth. kerna, to churn. See QUERN. The Sax. cepe is considered a derivative of cýpan, to turn. All these words, however, may be referred to the Lat. genuis, or the Gr. γυφος.] The vessel in which the butter is, by long and violent agitation, coagulated and separated from the serous parts of the milk.

Her aukward fist did ne'er employ the churn.

Gay, Pastorals.

To CHURN.† v. a. [kernen, Dutch, cepnan, Sax. kerna, Goth. Our elder authors write it cherne. And kern is yet a local word.]

1. To agitate or shake any thing by a violent motion. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Shakspeare, in proof of this meaning; but he reads churning on for German one, the true reading. The passage had been sophisticated by Pope and Warburton, and Johnson preferred erring with them to the adoption of the old and genuine lection, as the alteration here furnished a fancied illustration of this verb.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoam the ground. Dryden.
Churn'd in his teeth, the foamy venom rose. Addison.

The mechanism of nature, in converting our aliment, consists in mixing with it animal juices, and, in the action of the solid parts, churning them together. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To make butter by agitating the milk.

Skim milk: and sometimes labour in the quern;
And bootless make the breathless housewife churn.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.
Have you any churn'd milk, or new cheese.
Woodroffe's Fr. Gr. p. 211.

CHURNING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of making butter.

The churning of milk bringeth forth butter. Prov. xxx. 33.

This is Mab, the mistress fairy,
That doth nightly rob the dairy,

And can hurt or help the churning,
As she please, without discerning. B. Jonson, Entertainments.

You may try the force of imagination, upon staying the coming of butter after the churning. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
I ne'er hurt their churnings. Middleton's Witch, i. 2.

CHURNSTAFF.* n. s. [from churn and staff.] The instrument employed for churning. Sherwood.

CHURRWORM. n. s. [from cýrman, Sax.] An insect that turns about nimbly; called also a fancricket. Skinner. Philips.

To CHUSE. See To CHOOSE.

CHYLA'CEOUS. adj. [from chyle.] Belonging to chyle; consisting of chyle.

When the spirits of the chyle have half fermented the chylaceous mass, it has the state of drink, not ripened by fermentation. Floyer on the Humours.

CHYLE. n. s. [χύλος.] The white juice formed in the stomach by digestion of the aliment, and afterwards changed into blood.

This powerful ferment, mingling with the parts,
The leyen'd mass to milky chyle converts. Blackmore.

The chyle cannot pass through the smallest vessels.

Arbuthnot.

CHYLEA'CTION. n. s. [from chyle.] The act or process of making chyle in the body.

Drinking excessively during the time of chylefaction, stops perspiration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CHYLEA'TIVE. adj. [from chylus and facio, to make, Lat.] Having the power of making chyle.

CHYLOPOE'TICK. adj. [χύλος, and ποιέω.] Having the power, or the office, of forming chyle.

According to the force of the chylopoetick organs, more or less chyle may be extracted from the same food. Arbuthnot.

CHY'LOUS. adj. [from chyle.] Consisting of chyle: partaking of chyle.

Milk is the chylous part of an animal, already prepared. Arbuthnot.

CHY'MICAL. } adj. [Lat. chymicus.]

CHY'MICK. }

1. Made by chymistry.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chymick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

The medicines are ranged in boxes, according to their natures, whether chymical or Galenical preparations. Watts.

2. Relating to chymistry.

Metlinks already, from this chymick flame,
I see a city of more precious mold. Dryden.

With chymick art exalts the mineral powers,
And draws the aromatick souls of flowers. Pope.

CHY'MICK.† n. s. [old Fr. chymique, a chymist. Cotgrave.] A chymist. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson says. While in use, it seems to have been employed rather contemptuously.

Galen mentions in his time but three sects of physicians — we have now a fourth, that go under the name of chymicks, hermetick, or Paracelsians. Hakewill on Providence, p. 244.

He is turned chymick, sirrah; it seems so by his talk. — Here's old turning; these chymicks, seeking to turn lead into gold, turn away all their own silver. Brewer, Targua, iv. 1.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, seem to have resolved it into nobler use: an art now utterly lost, or perchance kept up by a few chymicks. Wotton.

CHY'MICALLY.† adv. [from chymical.] In a chymical manner.

Burgravius — specifies a lamp to be made of man's blood, lucerna vite et mortis index, so he terms it; which, chymically prepared 20 days, and afterward kept in a glass, shall shew all the accidents of his life. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.

I need no muse to give my passion vent,
He brews his tears that studies to lament.
Verse chymically weeps; that pious rain,
Distill'd with art, is but the sweat o' the brain.

Cleveland, Eleg. on Abp. Laud.

CHY'MIST. n. s. [See CHYMISTRY.] A professor of chymistry: a philosopher by fire.

The starving chymist, in his golden views Supremely blest. Pope, Essay on Man.

CHYMI'STICAL.* adj. [old Fr. chymistique.] Relating to chymistry.

Paracelsus, and his chymistical followers, as so many Promethei, will fetch fire from heaven, will cure all manner of diseases, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 377.

CHY'MISTRY.† n. s. [derived by some from χύμος, juice, or χύω, to melt; by others from an oriental word, kemu, black. According to the supposed etymology, it is written with y or e. Some deduce it from the name of a person eminently skilled in the science; whose name, however, is written both Χύμης and Χίμης. Others consider Chémi, the Coptick name of Egypt, which was the cradle of this science, as the original. V. Morin, Dict. Etm. Fr. et Gr. "It is derived originally from chemia, and that word from Cham.—The Egyptians were deeply skilled in astronomy, and geometry; also in chymistry, and physick." Bryant, Anc. Myth. vol. iii. p. 299.]

An art whereby sensible bodies contained in vessels, or capable of being contained therein, are so changed, by means of certain instruments, and principally fire, that their several powers and virtues are thereby discovered, with a view to philosophy, or medicine. Boerhaave.

Operations of chymistry fall short of vital force: no chymist can make milk or blood of grass. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CIBA'RIOUS. adj. [cibarius, Lat. from cibus, food.] Relating to food; useful for food; edible.

CRIBOL. n. s. [ciboule, Fr.] See CHIBBAL. A small sort of onion used in sallads. This word is common in the Scotch dialect; but the l is not pronounced.

Ciboules, or scallions, are a kind of degenerate onions.

CICATRICE, or CICATRIX. n. s. [cicatrix, Lat.]

1. The scar remaining after a wound.

One captain Spurio with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. * Shakspeare.

2. A mark; an impression: so used by Shakspeare less properly.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impression
Thy palm some moments keeps.

Shakspeare.

CICATRISANT. n. s. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRISIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZATION. n. s. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.

A vein bursted, or corroded in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs, tearing the gap wider, and hindering the coagulation and cicatrization of the vein. Harvey.

2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing or the discharge of matter is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last or skimming over cicatrization. Sharp, Surgery.

To CICATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over. Quincey.

The apothecary, or chirurgeon, giveth, with a cruel bill, the lately cicatrized wound a new gash.

Moral State of England, (1670,) p. 54.

2. To heal and induce the skin over a sore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wiseman on Tumours.

CICELY. n. s. [myrrhis.] A sort of herb.

CICERONE.* n. s. [Ital.] plur. cicroni. A word of modern introduction into our speech for a guide.

He had not proceeded many steps from the monument before he beckoned to our cicrone. Shensigue.

One of the greatest vexations a curious person experiences in travelling through Spain, is the scarcity, the non-existence, of tolerable cicroni; those who meet with are generally cobblers, who throw a brown cloak over their ragged apparel, and conduct you to a church or two, where they cannot give you the least satisfactory information concerning antiquities or curiosities. Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 37.

CICERO'NIANISM.* n. s. An imitation of the style of Cicero.

Dwelling too much on cicronianisms. Milton, Arcopagitica.

CICHORACEOUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.

Diureticks evacuate the salt serum; as all acid diureticks, and the testaceous and bitter cichoraceous plants. Poyer.

CICH-PEASE. n. s. [cicer.] A plant.

To CICURATE. v. a. [cicuro, Lat.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, ciculated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CICURATION. n. s. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestick and managete birds; for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild. Ray on the Creation.

CID.* n. s. [Span.] A chief; a commander.

CYDER. n. s. [cidre, Fr. sidre, Ital. sicera, Lat. σικέζα, סידר] Dr. Johnson might have added, that the word is supposed to be originally of Egypt, and denoting an inbriating liquor. In old Fr. cisere is used for ale. The Saxons had the word cibep.]

1. All kind of strong liquours, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.

He schal not drinke wyne xydy. Wicliffe, St. Luke, i.

2. Liquour made of the juice of fruits pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon.

5. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this

Wide universe Silurian cider borne,
Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips.

CIDERIST. n. s. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CIDRINKIN. n. s. [from cider.]

A low word used for the liquor made of the muck or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Philip, World of Words.

Cidrinkin is made for common drinking, and supplies the place of small beer. Mortimer.

CEILING. n. s. See CELLING.

CERGE. n. s. [French.] A candle carried in processions.

CILIARY. adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotick tunics of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.

CILICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, hair-cloth, Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair: that is, made of some texture of that hair, a coarse garment, a cilicious or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerity of his life. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CIMAR. n. s. See CHIMERE, and SIMAR.

CIMBRICK.* n. s. [Lat. Cimbricus.] The language of the Cimbric, people of Jutland and Holstein.

Nor have our old poets borrowed phrases and a multitude of words from the Cimbric only, but from the Franks too.

Wotton's View of Hooker's Thees, by Shelton, p. 17.

CIME'ARCH. n. s. [from κειμηλαρχης.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value belonging to a church; a church-warden. Dict.

CIMETER. n. s. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from chimetir, Turkish. Bluteau's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks; short; heavy; and recurvated, or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt scimitar, and scymiter; as in the following examples.

C I N

By this scimitar,
That slew the sophy and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of sultan Solyman. Shakspeare.
Our armours now may rust, our idle scymiters
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

CYMISS.* n. s. [Lat. cimex, pl. cimices.] A noisome little worm, which raiseth wheals where it biteth; if it be broken, it yieldeth a stinking smell; the bug. Bullockar.

CIMMERIAN.* adj. [from Cimmerii, people of Italy, living in a valley between hills, which the sun, it is pretended, never visited; or, who lived in caves.] Extremely dark.

Let cimmerian darkness be my only habitation. Shakspeare.

Hence, loathed melancholy,—
In dark cimmerian d'spart ever dwell. Milton, L'Alc.

CINCTURE. n. s. [cinctura, Lat.]

1. Something worn round the body.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture
Hold out this tempest. Shakspeare.
Columbus found the American, so girt
With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild. Milton, P. L.
He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope.

2. An inclosure.
The court and prison being within the cincture of one wall. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrills anciently used, to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood-columns. Chambers.

CINDER. n. s. [ceindie, Fr. from cineres, Latin.]

1. A mass ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did but I speak thy deeds! Shakspeare.

There is in smiths cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.
If from adown the hopeful chops
The fat upon a cinder drops,
To stinking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.

CINDER-WENCH. } n. s. [cinder and woman.] A CINDER-WOMAN. } woman whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out's the cinder-woman's trade. Essay on Satire.

She had above five hundred suits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place had banish'd shame. Gay.

CINERATION. n. s. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CINEREOUS.* adj. [Lat. cineus.] Of ash colour. Ray.

The hair is red at the tips, cineous beneath. Pennant.

CINERITIOUS.* adj. [cinericius, Lat.] Having the form or state of ashes.

The nerves arise from the glands of the cineritious part of the brain, and are terminated in all parts of the body. Cheyne.

C I N

Broken and burnt rocks, ruins of buildings, and cineritious earth. Delany, Rev. Exam. ii. 126.

CINERULENT. adj. [from cineres, Lat.] Full of ashes. Dict.

CYNGLE. n. s. [from cingulum, Lat.] A girth for a horse. Dict.

CINNABAR.* n. s. [Fr. cinnabre, or cinabre; from the Gr. κιννάβαρι, Lat. cinnabaris. It is an Indian word, according to Pliny. V. Morin, Dict. Etym. Fr. and Gr.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the factitious cinnabar is called vermillion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter. Woodward's Met. Fossils.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the particles of sulphur, compose cinnabar. Newton, Opt.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON.* n. s. [cinnamomum, Lat. through the Greek, from the Heb. kinnamon.] The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which, as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours. Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet anionum boast. Dryden, Fables.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine. Chambers.

CINQUE.* n. s. [Fr.] A Five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words, Dr. Johnson says. Cinque, however, is not confined to games. It signifies simply a five.

These five cinques, or these 25 round spots, in arms do signify numbers, as some writers have observed.

Potter on the Number 666, (1647), p. 176.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. s. [cinque feuille, Fr.] A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE. n. s. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Wooring, wedding, and repenting is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding, manfully and modest, as a measure, full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-PORTS.* n. s. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect the places where they are have a special governour or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque ports; and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction, their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Seaford, Winchelsea, Rummey, and Hith; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Cowel.

They, that bear
The cloth of state above her, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.
Temptations come in by those cinque-ports, the senses.

Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639,) p. 297.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast

A mole, cinque spotted, like the crimson drops
I' th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakspeare.

C'ION. n. s. [sign, or scion, Fr.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this that you call love, to be a sect or cion. Shakspeare.

The stately Caledonian oak, newly-settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem. Howell.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cion over-ruleth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth alimant, but no motion to the graft. Bacon.

CIPHER. † n. s. [chifre, Fr. zifra, Ital. cifra, low
Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

The cipher of itself implies a privation of value;
but when disposed with other characters on the left of it, in the common arithmetick, it serves to augment each of their values by ten; and in decimal arithmetick, to lessen the value of each figure to the right of it, in the same proportion. Chambers.

Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shakspeare.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flamb'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,
Arms and the Man in golden ciphers shone. Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-shorn vagrant's heaving side,
To stamp the master's cipher, ready stand. Thomson.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures.

Rulegh, Hist. of the World.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

To brachygraphy may be added the writing by zifers, or notæ furtivæ, secret marks for the hiding of the writer's mind from others, save him to whom he writes it; as also the witty invention of dezifring or discovering the most difficult of those secret characters. Hakewill on Providence, p. 261.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleased to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnished with mine several ciphers, in order to it. Denham.

6. A species of juggling.

That body, wheresoever that it light,
May learned be by ciphers, or by magic might.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 45.

With that he circles draws, and squares,
With ciphers, astral characters.

Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down hab-nab at random. Hudibras, ii. iii.

To C'IPHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher: I wonder you never used your pen and ink. Arbutnot.

To CIPHER. † v. a.

VOL. I.

1. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes: his notes he ciphered with Greek characters. Hayward.

2. To designate; to characterise.

The face of either cipher'd either's heart.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Some loathsome dash the herald will contrive

To cipher me, how fondly I did dote.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

CIRC.* n. s. [Fr. cirque, Lat. circus. See CIRCUS.]

An amphitheatrical circle for sports.

Circs of the same sort are still to be seen in Cornwall, so famous at this day for the athletick art.

Marlton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. Diss. 1.

CIRCE'NSIAL, or CIRCE'NSIAN.* adj. [Lat. ludi cir-censes, from the circus, in which the sports were exhibited.] Relating to the exhibitions in the amphitheatres of the Romans.

If the Romans had well known this airy chase, they would have left or less regarded their circensian recreations.

Sir T. Brown's Tracts, p. 117.

The circensian plays may very well include the representations of sea-fights, and sports performed in the amphitheatres.

Kennet, Rom. Antiq. ii. v. 2.

To CIRCINATE. v. d. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINA'TION. n. s. [circinatio, Lat.] An orbicular motion; a turning round; a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CIRCLE. † n. s. [cipcol, cipcul, Sax. circulus, Lat.]
1. A line continued till it ends where it begun, having all its parts equidistant from a common center.

Any thing, that moves round about in a circle, in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle in motion.

Locke.

By a circle I understand not here perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth;
and which as to sense may seem circular.

Newton, Opt.

Then a deeper still,

In circle following circle, gathers round

To close the face of things.

Thomson, Summer.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth.

Isaiah, xi. 22.

4. Compass; inclosure.

A great magician,

Obscured in the circle of the forest.

Shakspeare.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,

Pope, Horace.

And, foremost in the circle, eye a king.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes. Addison.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Tatler.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,

And the year rolls within itself again.

Dryden, Virg.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition is inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glanville, Scripsit.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premises in a syllogism is questioned and opposed, and we intend to prove it by the conclusion. Watts, Logic.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lie
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

Fletcher, Q. of Corinth.

10. CIRCLES of the German empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets.

Trevour.

To CIRCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To inclose; to surround.

What stern ungente hands
Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in? Shakspeare.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove More heavy chains than those of hopeless love. Prior.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,
With darkness circled, and an ambient cloud. Pope.

3. To CIRCLE in. To confine: to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in. Digby on Bodies.

To CIRCLE. v. n. To move circularly; to end where it begins.

The well fraught bowl
Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell
With quavering laugh, and rural jests resounds. Philips.

Now the circling years disclose,
The day predestin'd to reward his woes. Pope, Odyssey.

CIRCLED. adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

The inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb. Shakspeare.

CIRCLES. \ n. s.* [from circle. "Scriptor cyclicus,"

Hor. Ar. Poet.] A mean poet; a circular poet.
See CIRCULAR.

Nor so begin, as did that circle late,
I sing a noble war, and Priam's fate. B. Jonson, Art of Poetry.

CIRCLE. † n. s. [from circle.] A circle; an orb: properly a little circle. Formerly, a wreath, ring, or circle of wicker, to set under a dish, in order to guard the table. Shakspeare.

Certain ladies or countesses, with plain circlets of gold without flowers. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII. Order of Procession.

Then take repast, till Hesperus displayed
His golden circlet in the western shade. Pope, Odys.

CIRCLING. part. adj. [from To circle.] Having the form of a circle; circular; round.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood
So high above the circling canopy
Of night's extended shade. Milton, P. L.

CIRCLY. \ adj.* [from circle.] In the form of a circle or compass. Huloet.

CIRCUIT. † n. s. [from circuit, Fr. circuitus, Lat.]

1. The act of moving round any thing.

There are four moons also perpetually rolling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

He led me up
A woody mountain, whose high top was plain
A circuit wide inclosed. Milton, P. L.

3. Space; extent; measured by travelling round.

He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit. Hooker.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one and twenty miles in circuit. Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
'Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this mad-brain'd flaw. Shakspeare.

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assises.

The circuits, in former times, went put round about the pale; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.

6. The tract of country visited by the judges.

Nobles, bishops, and judges, that have great dioceses, and jurisdictions, and circuits, must read much in God's Book; for they need much honey to feed the people under them with.

Bp. of Chichester, Sermon before the Queen, 1576.

He went from year to year in circuit to Bethel, and Gilgal, and Mizpeth; and judged Israel in all those places. 1 Sam. vii. 16.

7. Long deduction of reason; circumlocution.

Thou hast used no circuit of words. Huloet.
'Up into the watch tower get,
And see all things despoil'd of fallacies;
Thou shalt not peep thro' lattices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' labyrinths of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

CIRCUIT of action. [In law.] Is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for, than is needful. Cowel.

To CIRCUIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To move circularly.

Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,
Quick circuiting. Philips.

To CIRCUIT. \ v. a.* [from the noun.] To move round; to travel round.

He went from year to year in circuit to [in the margin, he circuited] Bethel, and Gilgal, &c. 1 Sam. vii. 16.

At length Geryon, having circuited the air like a falcon towering without prey, deposits his burthen and vanishes.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 246.

CIRCUITER. † n. s. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit. Formerly written circuitier.

Whether the thieves condemned by any circuitier corrupted have done more villanies than their judge.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654), p. 513.
Like your fellow circuitier the sun: you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the iniquities under the heavens. Pope.

CIRCUITION. † n. s. [from circuitio, Lat.]

1. The act of going round any thing.

Kimchi testifieth, that all words which come from the root כסס signify encompassing or circuitio.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii.

2. Compass; maze of argument.

To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not indeed repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circutions of discourse, and depth of judgement, than common ability doth yield. Hooker.

CIRCUITOUS. \ adj.* [from circuit.] Round about.

There is no way to make a connection between the original constituent and the representative, but by circuitous means. Burke.

CIRCUITOUSLY. \ adv.* from circuitous.] In a circuitous manner.

CIRCULABLE. \ adj.* [from circle.] That which may be circulated.

CIRCULAR. † adj. [from circularis, Lat.]

1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular. Spenser, F. Q.

He first inclos'd for lists a level ground;
The form was circular. Dryden, Fables.

Nero's port, composed of huge moles running round it, in a kind of circular figure. Addison on Italy.

2. Successive in order; always returning.

The life of man is a perpetual war,
In misery and sorrow circular.

Sandys, Job, p. 12.

From whence the innumerable race of things,
By circular successive order springs.

Roscommon.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.

Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had Dido?

Dennis.

4. Ending in itself, used of a paralogism, where the second proposition at once proves the first, and is proved by it.

One of Cartes's first principles of reasoning, after he had doubted of every thing, seems to be too circular, to safely build upon; for he is for proving the being of God from the truth of our faculties, and the truth of our faculties from the being of a God.

Baker, Reflect. on Learning.

5. Perfect; complete. Not now used.

In this, sister,

Your wisdom is not circular.

Massinger, Emp. of the East.

6. CIRCULAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies. Modern affectation has changed this expression into the substantive; and we now hear of nothing but circulars from publick offices, and circulars from superintendants of a feast or club.

7. CIRCULAR Lines. Such strait lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants, on the plain scale and sector.

8. CIRCULAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULARITY. n. s. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other; so that from what point soever we compute, the account will be common unto the whole circularity.

Brown.

CIRCULARLY. adv. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.

The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre, or of the several elements cast circularly about each other.

Burnet.

2. With a circular motion.

Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,
Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost.

Dryden.

Every body, moved circularly about any centre, recedes, or endeavours to recede, from that centre of its motion.

Ray.

CIRCULARY.* adj. [from circularis, Lat.] Ending in itself.

Which rule must serve for the better understanding of that, which Damascene hath, touching cross, and circulary speeches, wherein there are attributed to God such things as belong to manhood, and to man such as properly concern the duty of Christ Jesus.

Hooker, Ecc. Pol. v. § 53.

To CIRCULATE. v. n. [from circulus.]

1. To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate,
Our knowledge, like our blood, must circulate.

Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose.

L'Estrange.

2. To be dispersed.

As the mints of calumny are perpetually at work, a great number of curious inventions issued out from time to time, grow current among the party, and circulate through the whole kingdom.

Addison.

To CIRCULATE.† v. a.

1. To travel round.

May I not conclude for certain that this man hath been in the moon, where his head hath been intoxicated with circulating the earth.

Bp. H. Croft, Animadv. on Burnet's Theory, (1685,) Pref.

2. To put about.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted.

Swift.

CIRCULATION.† n. s. [old Fr. circulation.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown till the last age?

Burnet, Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou seest fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries.

K. Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits this continual circulation of human things.

Swift on Modern Education.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle saith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation before-mentioned.

Hooker.

4. Currency of a substitute for money.

It comes with something solid in aid of the credit of the paper circulation.

Burke.

CIRCULATORIOUS.* adj. [Lat. circulatorius.] One that travels in a circuit; one that shows tricks from house to house and from town to town.

Jesus did never make use of such unaccountable methods or instruments, as magical enchanters, diviners, circulatorious jugglers, and such emissaries of the devil, or self seeking impostors are wont to use.

Barrow, Serm. ii. 20.

CIRCULATORY. n. s. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire, is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CIRCULATORY. adj. [from circulate.] Circulatory Letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCULATORY.* adj. The same as circulatorious, in its low sense.

Borde's circulatory peregrinations, in the quality of a quack-doctor, might have furnished more ample materials for an English topography.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 75.

CIRCUM'AMBIENCY. n. s. [from circumambient.] The act of encompassing.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface it conerecteth, or the circumambiency which conformeth it.

Brown.

CIRCUM'AMBIENT.† adj. [from circum and ambio, Latin.] Surrounding; encompassing; enclosing.

Some impute it to the quality of the circumambient air that hangs over the place.

Howell's Lett. i. i. 28.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel, like the second region, cooling and condensing of it.

Wilkins.

To CIRCUM'AMBULATE.† v. n. [from circum and ambulo, Lat.] To walk round about.

Dict.

Why should he circumambulate the vocabulary for another couplet, to talk in harsher diction about glades of turf?

Seward's Letters, i. 345.

CIRCUMCELLIGNES.* n. s. A set of illiterate savage peasants, and desperate ruffians, who adhered to the party of the Donatists, in the fourth century. V. Chambers. The word has passed into our language for an expression of contempt; for in Cockeram's old dictionary, "a circumcellion" is defined "a tavern-hunter."

To CIRCUMCISE.† v. a. [circumcido, Latin.] And our own word was formerly circumcide. "A doubt arose, whether those which came to the faith of the Gentiles should be circumcided." Stapleton's Fort. of Faith, 1565, fol. 139. b.] To cut the prepuce or foreskin, according to the law given to the Jews.

They came to circumcise the child. St. Luke, i. 59.

One is alarmed at the industry of the whigs, in aiming to strengthen their routed party by a reinforcement from the circumcised. Swift, Examiner.

CIRCUMCISER.* n. s. [from circumcise.] He who circumcises.

This conising punishment of circumcisers became a penal law among the Visigoths. Milton, of Cir. Power in Ecc. Cases.

Having gained a competent skill and experience, they set up for circumcisers. Li. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 61.

CIRCUMCISION. n. s. [from circumcise.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind

Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From Gentiles, but by circumcision vain. Milton, P. R.

CIRCUMCURSION.* n. s. [from Lat. circum and cursor.] The act of running up and down.

The address of Felicissimus and Fortunatus to Pope Cornelius was but a factious circumcurSION of desperate wretches.

Barrow, Sermon, i. p. 252.

To CIRCUMDUCT. v. a. [circumduco, Lat.] To contravene; to nullify: a term of civil law.

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and circumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the consent of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Ayliffe, Parergon.

CIRCUMDUCTION.† n. s. [from circumduct.]

1. Nullification; cancellation.

The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circumduction requires. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. A leading about.

By long circumduction perhaps any truth may be derived from any other truth. Hooker.

But thou scorn'st to stay
Under one title: thou hast made thy way
And flight about the isle, well near, by this
In thy admired Periegesis,
Or universal circumduction

Of all that read thy Poly-Olbion. B. Jonson, Epigrams.

CIRCUMFERENCE. n. s. [circumferentia, Latin.]

1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.

Extend thus far thy bounds,

This be thy just circumference, O world! Milton, P. L.

Because the hero is the center of the main action, all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryden.

Fire, moved nimbly in the circumference of a circle, makes the whole circumference appear like a circle of fire. Newton.

2. The space inclosed in a circle.

So was his will

Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,
That shook heav'n's whole circumference, confirm'd.

Milton, P. L.

He first inclos'd for lists a level ground,

The whole circumference a mile around. Dryden, Fables.

3. The external part of an orbicular body.

The bubble, being looked on by the light of the clouds reflected from it, seemed red at its apparent circumference. If the clouds were viewed through it, the colour at its circumference would be blue. Newton, Opticks.

4. An orb; a circle; any thing circular or orbicular.

His pond'rous shield, large and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon.

Milton, P. L.

To CIRCUMFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To include in a circular space. Not proper.

Nor is the vigour of this great body included only in itself, or circumferenced by its surface; but diffused at indeterminate distances. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CIRCUMFERENTIAL.* adj. [from circumference.] Belonging to the circumference; circular; that which surrounds.

How much must the influence of such an authority be upon the circumferential parts of its æccumenical sphere.

Barrow on the Pope's Supremacy.

CIRCUMFERENTOR. n. s. [from circumfero, Lat. to carry about.] An instrument used in surveying, for measuring angles, consisting of a brass circle, an index with sights, and a compass, and mounted on a staff, with a ball and socket. Chambers.

CIVILITY.† n. s. [from civil.]

1. Freedom from barbarity; the state of being civilised.

The English were at first as stout and warlike a people as ever the Irish; and yet are now brought unto that civility, that no nation excelleth them in all goodly conversation, and all the studies of knowledge and humanity.

Spenser on Ireland.

Divers great monarchies have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin.

Davies on Ireland.

Wheresoe'er her conquering eagles fled,
Arts, learning, and civility were spread.

Denham, Poems.

2. Politeness; complaisance; elegance of behaviour.

Art thou thus holden'd, man, by thy distress;

Or else a rude despoiler of good manners,

That in civility thou seem'st so empty?

Shakspeare.

He, by his great civility and affability, wrought very much upon the people.

Clarendon, b. viii.

I should be kept from a publication, did not what your civility calls a request, your greatness, command.

South.

We, in point of civility, yield to others, in our own houses.

Swift.

3. Rule of decency; practice of politeness.

Love taught him shame; and shame, with love at strife,
Soon taught the sweet civilities of life.

Dryden.

4. Partaking of the nature of a civilized state; growing out of the civil law.

As matrimony hath something in it of nature, something of civility, something of divinity, as instituted by God and by Him to be regulated; so sure this last interest ought to overshadow the other two.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iii. 10.

If there were nothing in marriage but meer civility, the magistrate might be meet to be employed in this service.

Ibid. iv. 8.

To CIVILIZE.† v. a. [old Fr. civilizer.] To reclaim from savageness and brutality; to instruct in the arts of regular life.

We send the graces and the muses forth,
To civilize and to instruct the North.

To such a favourite's glass.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsm.

CIZE.† n. s. [perhaps from incisa, Lat. shaped or cut to a certain magnitude.] The quantity of any thing with regard to its external form; often written size.

If no motion can alter bodies, that is, reduce them to some other cize or figure, then there is none of itself to give them the cize and figure which they have.

Grew, Cosmol.

CLACK.† n. s. [klatschen, Germ. to rattle; to make a noise. Dr. Johnson says; but we may refer, more plausibly, to the old Fr. clac, clacquet; or rather to the Teut. klack, a shrill noise. Mr. Tooke pronounces it the past participle of the verb click. But see To CLACK.]

1. Any thing that makes a lasting and importunate noise; generally used, in contempt, for the tongue.

But still his tongue ran on,

And with its everlasting clack,

Set all men's ears upon the rack.

Hudibras.

Can any sober person think it reasonable, that the publick devotions of a whole congregation should be under the conduct and at the mercy of a pert, empty, conceited holderforth, whose chief (if not sole) intent is to vaunt his spiritual clack?

South, Serm. ii. 117.

Fancy flows in, and muse flies high;

He knows not when my clack will lie.

Prior.

2. The CLACK of a Mill. A bell that rings when more corn is required to be put in; or, that which strikes the hopper, and promotes the running of the corn.

Says John, just at the hopper will I stand,
And mark the clack how justly it will sound. Betterton.

To CLACK.† v. n. [old Fr. claquer, claque, cliquer; but some refer it to the Gr. κλάγω, whence the Lat. clangicare; and some to the old Goth. klaka, to make a noise like birds.]

1. To make a chinking noise.

2. To let the tongue run.

To CLACK.† v. a. [qui clachent lains, who clack wool. Kelham, Norm. Dict.] As to clack wool, is to cut off the sheep's mark, which makes it to weigh less, and so yield the less custom to the king.

Cowel.

*CLACK-DISH.* n. s.* [from clack and dish.] A beggar's dish; a wooden dish with a moveable cover, which they clacked, to excite the notice of passengers, or to signify the dish was empty. A custom in some parts of Oxfordshire is not yet extinct for the poor people and children, about Easter, to go a clucking, that is, with wooden bowls, and the like, to make a noise at the houses of their betters, in order to obtain the accustomed donations of money or meat. But see CLAP-DISH.

His use was, to put a ducat in her clack-dish.

Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

*CLACKER.* n. s.* The same as the clack of a mill.

This they find by the noise of those boat mills;—their clackers beat much slower at those times than else.

Blew's Voyage into the Levant, (1650,) p. 18.

*CLACKING.* n. s.* [from the verb.] Prating.

Any thing rather than to weary the world with his foolish clacking. Rp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, § 19.

CLAD.† part. pret. [This participle, which is now referred to claden, seems originally to have belonged to cleden, or some such word, like kleden, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. But clad is the Sax. claden, 3<sup>d</sup> class, clothed.] Clothed; invested; garbed.

So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,

To crammed maws a spratt new stomach brings. Sidney.

He had clad himself with a new garment. 1 Kings, xi. 29.

Beyond

The flowery dale of Sibma, clad with vine, Milton, P. L.

Their prayers clad

With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By their great intercessor. Milton, P. L.

But virtue too, as well as vice, is clad
In flesh and blood. Waller.

To her the weeping heavens become serene;

For her the ground is clad in cheerful green. Dryden.

The courtiers were all most magnificently clad. Swift.

To CLAIM.† v. a. [clamer, Fr.]

1. To demand of right; to require authoritatively; not to beg or accept as favour, but to exact as due.

If only one man hath a divine right to obedience, nobody can claim that obedience but he that can shew his right.

Locke.

We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it. Locke.

Poets have undoubted right to claim
If not the greatest, the most lasting name. Congreve.

2. To call; to name. Written by Spenser, who also uses the substantive in a similar sense, clame. [old Fr. clamer, nommer, appeller.]

Nor all, that else through all the world is named
To all the heathen gods, might like to this be clamed.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 30.

CLAIM.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A demand of any thing, as due.

You, in the right of lady Blanch your wife,
May then make all the claim that Arthur did. Shakespeare.

Forsworn thyself! The traitor's odious name

I first return, and then disprove thy claim. Dryden.

Will he not, therefore, of the two evils chuse the least, by submitting to a master, who hath no immediate claim upon him, rather than to another, who hath already revived several claims upon him. Swift.

2. A title to any privilege or possession in the hands of another.

Either there must have been but one sovereign over them all, or else every father of a family hath been as good a prince, and had as good a claim to royalty as these. Locke.

3. In law.

A demand of any thing that is in the possession of another, or at the least out of his own: as claim by charter, claim by descent. Cowel.

4. The phrases are commonly to make claim, or to lay claim.

The king of Prussia lays in his claim for Neuf-Châtel, as he did for the principality of Orange. Addison on Italy.

If God, by positive grant, gave dominion to any man, primogeniture can lay no claim to it, unless God ordained. Locke.

5. A call. Written by Spenser clame.

I knockt, but no man answerd me by name;

I calld, but no man answerd to my clame.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 11

CLAIMABLE.† adj. [old Fr. clamable.] That which may be demanded as due; challengeable. Cotgrave.

CLAIMANT.† n. s. [old Fr. clamant.] He that demands any thing as unjustly detained by another.

Such claimants might have the true right, but yet, by the death of witnesses or other defect of evidence, be unable to prove it to a jury. Blackstone.

CLAIMER.† n. s. [from claim.] He that makes a demand: he that requires any thing, as unjustly withheld from him.

His funeral was fain to be deferred till an agreement was made, and the value of the ground paid to the claimer.

Temple, Introduction to Hist. of Eng. p. 296.

CLAIR-OBSCUR. n. s. See CLARE-OBSCUR.

*CLAMANT.* adj.* [from clamo, Lat. to cry. A word perhaps coined by Thomson.] Crying; beseeching earnestly.

Instant o'er his shivering thought

Comes winter unprovided, and a train

Of clamant children dear. Thomson, Autumn, ver. 349.

To CLAM.† v. a. [in some provinces, to clam, from clammian, Sax. to glew together. Written also sometimes clm. Germ. klemmen, to tie. Somner gives the Sax. clam, a band or tie. Old Goth. kleima, to besmear. Clammed up is, in some of our provinces, clogged or choaked up. To clm, though sometimes written and pronounced clm, is to hunger-starve. See To CLÉM.] To clog with any glutinous matter.

A swarm of wasps got into a honey-pot, and there they cloyed and clammed themselves, till there was no getting out again. L'Estrange.

The sprigs were all dawbed with lime, and the birds clammed and taken. L'Estrange.

*To CLAM.* v. n.* To be moist.

A chilling sweat, a damp of jealousy,

Hang, on my brows, and clams upon my limbs.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

C L A

To CLAM.* v. n. [perhaps from clamour. See To CLAMOUR.] A term in ringing, which Dr. Johnson, in his remarks on Shakspeare, confounds with buffeting; for, to clam a bell, he says, is to cover the clapper with felt, which drowns the blow and hinders the sound. This is, however, to buffet. See To BUFFER. To clam, is to unite certain sounds in the peal.

Clanming is when each concord strikes together, which being done true, the eight will strike but as four bells, and make a melodious harmony. School of Recreation, 1684.

To CLAMBER. v. n. [probably corrupted from climb; as climber, clamber.] To climb with difficulty; as with both hands and feet.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him. Shakspeare.

When you hear the drum,
Clamber not you up to the easements then. Shakspeare.
The men there do not without some difficulty clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them.

Ray, on the Creation.
They were forced to clamber over so many rocks, and to tread upon the brink of so many precipices, that they were very often in danger of their lives. Addison, Freshwater.

CLAMMINESS. n. s. [from clammy.] Viscosity; viscosity; tenacity; ropiness.

A greasy pipkin will spoil the clamminess of the glew. Moxon.

CLAMMY.* adj. [Dutch klam, clammy; Su. klem-mig.] Viscous; glutinous; tenacious; adhesive; ropy.

Bodies clammy and cleaving, have an appetite, at once, to follow another body, and to hold to themselves.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Neither the brain nor spirits can conserve motion; the former is of such a clammy consistence, it can no more retain it than a quagmire. Glanville, Scep-sis.

Alas! he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweats, in clammy drops, his limbs o'erspread. Dryden.
Joyful thou'lt see

The clammy surface all o'er strown with tribes
Of greedy insects. Philips.

There is an unctuous clammy vapour that arises from the stum of grapes, when they lie mashed together in the vat, which puts out a light, when dipped into it. Addison on Italy.

The continuance of the fever, clammy sweats, paleness, and at last a total cessation of pain, are signs of a gangrene and approaching death. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CLAMOROUS.* adj. [old Fr. clameur.] Vociferous; noisy; turbulent; loud.

It is no sufficient argument to say, that, in urging these ceremonies, none are so clamorous as Papists, and they whom Papists suborn. Hooker, iv. § 9.

He kiss'd her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakspeare.

At my birth
The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds
Were strangely clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shakspeare.

With the clam'rous report of war,
Thus will I drown your exclamations. Shakspeare.

Then various elements against thee joih'd
In one more various animal combin'd,
And fram'd the clam'rous race of busy human kind. Popc.

A pamphlet that will settle the wavering, instruct the ignorant, and inflame the clamorous. Swift.

CLAMOROUSLY.* adv. [from clamorous.] In a violent or noisy manner.

Disturbances and sad rencounters in it do clamorously tell us, we come not into the world to run a race of delight. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 23.

Where a jest, a grin, or a laugh, will carry it off, they are unmerciful and triumph clamorously. Leslie, Sho Meth. wh. Deists, Pref.

CLAMOUR.* n. s. [old Fr. clamour, clameur, clameur; Lat. clamor.]

1. Outcry; noise; exclamation; vociferation.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee, thou do'st evil. Shakspeare.

The people grew then exorbitant in their clamours for justice. King Charles.

The maid
Shall weep the fury of m<sup>e</sup> love decay'd;
And weeping follow me, as thou do'st now,
With idle clamours of a broken vow. Prior.

2. It is used sometimes, but less fitly, of inanimate things.

Here the loud Arno's hoist'rous clamours cease,
That with submissive murmurs glides in peace. Addison.

To CLAMOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make outcries; to exclaim; to vociferate; to roar in turbulence.

The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shakspeare.

To CLAMOUR.* v. a [The following example from Bacon is placed by Dr. Johnson under the verb neuter; under which also he introduces, from Shakspeare, "Clamour your tongues, and not a word more," as seeming to mean actively, to stop from noise; which is a meaning that has been justly disputed; and the passage is yet left open to conjecture.] To stun or overpower with noise.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform them. Bacon, Essays.

To CLAMOUR bells.* A term in ringing, according to Warburton, which other commentators on Shakspeare imagine to be merely his own opinion. It is, however, probable. To encrease the strokes of the clapper on the bell, in falling it.

When bells are at the height, in order to cease them, the repetition of the strokes becomes much quicker than before; this is called clamouring them. Warburton.

CLAMOURER.* n. s. [from clamour.] He who makes an outcry or clamour.

The non-residence therefore of the minister, or even his neglects of duty, are a mere pretence set up against paying tithes; and I am afraid that if he would graciously remit his dues, too many of these clamourers would readily dispense with his residence. Abp. Hort's Charge.

CLAMP. n. s. [clamp, French.]

1. A piece of wood joined to another, as an addition of strength.

2. A quantity of bricks.
To burn a clump of brick of sixteen thousand, they allow seven ton of coals. Mortimer, Husbandry.

To CLAMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

When a piece of board is fitted with the grain to the end of another piece of board cross the grain, the first board is clamped. Thus the ends of tables are commonly clamped to preserve them from warping. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

CLAN.* n. s. [probably of Scottish original; klann, in the Highlands, signifies children.] So far Dr. Johnson. Ir. clann. Mr. Chalmers observes, that it is the general denomination among the Irish, and Scoto-Irish Celts, for the numerous tribes, into which they were divided.]

A nun of the order of St. Clare; called also a Minorette, as their house without Aldgate in which they were settled, when first brought into England about the close of the thirteenth century, was, the Minories. These nuns are sometimes termed "poor Clares." They had, in this country, three other houses besides that in London already noticed.

CLARENCEUX, or CLARENCEUX. n. s. The second king at arms: so named from the dutchy of Clarence.

C L A

CLARE-OBSCURE. n. s. [from clarus, bright, and obscurus, Lat.] Light and shade in painting.

As masters in the clare-obscure,
With various light your eyes allure;
A flaming yellow here they spread,
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours, oddly mix'd,
Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

CLARET. n. s. [claret, Fr.] French wine, of a clear pale-red colour.

Red and white wine are in a trice confounded into claret.
Boyle.

The claret smooth, red as the lips we press
In sparkling fancy, while we drain the bowl. Thomson.

CLARICHORD. n. s. [from clarus and chorda, Latin.] A musical instrument in form of a spinette, but more ancient. It has forty-nine or fifty keys, and seventy strings. Chambers.

The clarichord hath a tunely kynde,
As the wyre is wrested high and low. Skelton, Poems, p. 291.

CLARIFICATION. n. s. [from clarify.] The act of making any thing clear from impurities.

Liquors are, many of them, at the first, thick and troubled; as muste, and wort: to know the means of accelerating clarification, we must know the causes of clarification.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CLARIFY. v. a. [clarifier, French. But see CLAR.]

1. To purify or clear any liquor; to separate from feculences or impurities.

The apothecaries clarify their syrups by whites of eggs, beaten with the juices which they would clarify; which whites of eggs gather all the dregs and grosser parts of the juice to them; and after, the syrup being set on the fire, the whites of eggs themselves harden, and are taken forth.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They cast therein three or four bruised almonds; they, in less than an hour, clarify it like crystal; which effect they have upon no other water. Blount, Voyage into the Levant, p. 105.
Such [places,] as is the general site of Bohemia, the north-wind clarifies. Barton, Anat. of Mel., p. 259.

2. To brighten; to illuminate. This sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites the authority only of South. This meaning, however, seems to have been not uncommon. Formerly the word signified to glorify or make famous: "Fadir, the hour cometh, clarifie thy sonne." Wicliffe, St. John, xvii.

Many boys are muddy-headed, till they be clarified with age; and such afterwards prove the best. Fuller's Holy State, p. 105.

The will was then ductile and pliant to all the motions of right reason: it met the dictates of a clarified understanding half way. South, Sermons.

The Christian religion is the only means that God has sanctified, to set fallen man upon his legs again, to clarify his reason, and to rectify his will. South, Sermons.

Nouns for brevity are sometimes verbalized; as, to complete, to contrary, to experience; sometimes by fy affixed, as, to make clear, to clarify, to beautify.

Instruct. for Oratory, (Ox. 1682,) p. 32.
Our affection being perfectly subdued to the reason of our minds, and drained and clarified from all its gross and carnal love. Scott, Sermon, xxi.

To CLARIFY. v. n. To clear up, to grow bright.

Whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the discoursing with another; he marshalleth his thoughts more orderly, he seeth how they look when they are turned into words. Bacon, Essays.

CLARINET. n. s. [Fr. clarinette.] A kind of hautboy, but of a shriller tone.

C L A

CLARION. n. s. [old Fr. claron; Span. clarin; low Lat. clario, from clarus, loud.] A trumpet; a wind instrument of war.

And after, to his palace he them brings,
With shauins, and trumpets, and with clarions sweet;
And all the way the joyous people sings. Spenser, F. Q.

Then strait commands, that at the warlike sound
Of trumpets loud, and clarions, be uprear'd
The mighty standard. Milton, P. L.

Let fuller notes th' applauding world amaze,
And the loud clarion labour in your praise. Pope.

CLARITUDE. n. s. [Lat. claritudo.] Splendour; any thing bright. Not in use.

Amongst those claritudes which gild the skies.
Beaumont's Psyche, vii. 57.

CLARITY. n. s. [clarté, and clerté, old French; claritas, Latin. Written originally clerite. "The holy cite Jerusalem — having the clerite of God, and the light of it lyke a precious stoon, &c." Wicliffe, Apoc. xxi.] Brightness; splendour.

A light by abundant clarity invisible; an understanding which itself can only comprehend. Sir Walter Raleigh.

Man was not only deceivable in his integrity, but the angels of light in all their clarity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CLARY. n. s. [herminium, Lat.] An herb.

Plants that have circled leaves do all abound with moisture. The weakest kind of curling is roughness: as in clary and barr. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CLARY. v. n. [from the Lat. clarus, shrill.] To make a loud or shrill noise.

The crane that goeth before — if aught be to be avoyded, gives warning thereof by claryng.

A. Golding's Tr. of Solomon, (1587,) ch. 14.

To CLASH. v. n. [klatsen, Dut. to make a noise; or rather from the Germ. klatschen.]

1. To make a noise by mutual collision; to strike one against another.

Three times, as of the clashing sound
Of arms, we heard. Denham.

Those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision. Bentley.

How many candles may send out their light, without clashing upon one another; which argues the smallness of the parts of light, and the largeness of the interstices between particles of air and other bodies. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

2. To act with opposite power, or contrary direction.

Neither was there any quiet-mother who might clash with his counsellors for authority. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Those that are not convinced what help this is to magistracy, would find it, if they should chance to clash. South, Sermons.

3. To contradict, to oppose.

Wherever there are men, there will be clashing sometime or other; and a knock, or a contest, spoils all. L'Estrange.

The absurdity in this instance is obvious; and yet every time that clashing metaphors are put together, this fault is committed. Spectator, No. 395.

To CLASH. v. a. To strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise.

The nodding statue clash'd his arms,
And with a sullen sound and feeble cry,
Half sunk, and half pronounced the word of victory. Dryden.

CLASH. n. s. [from the verb. Germ. also klatsch.]

1. A noisy collision of two bodies.

I heard no words between them, but what their weapons spoke, clash and clatter. Beaumont and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

The clash of arms and voice of men we hear. Denham.

He nobly seiz'd thee in the dire alarms
Of war and slaughter and the clash of arms. Pope.

2. Opposition; contradiction.

Then from the clashes between popes and kings,
Debate, like sparks from flint's collision, springs. Denham.

In the very next line he reconciles the fathers and scripture, and shew there is no clash betwixt them. Atterbury.
CLASHING. * n. s. [from clash.] Opposition; enmity; contradiction.

Good Lord! what fiery clashings we have had lately for a cap and a surplice! Hewell, Lett. iv. 29.

Yet still the man shall find a civil war within himself, a great scuffle and disturbance, his thoughts divided between contrary principles, the clashings of prudence and revenge. South, Sermon. viii. 185.

CLASP. † n. s. [chespe, Dutch, according to Dr. Johnson. Serenius refers to the old Goth. klypa, to bind closely; which may countenance a supposition that clasp may be a corruption of our word clip, to embrace.]

1. A hook to hold any thing close; as a book, or garment.

The scorpion's claw here grasp a wide extent,
 And here the crabs in lesser *clasp*s are bent. Addison.

He took me aside, opening the *clasp*s of the parchment cover. Arbuthnot and Pope.

2. An embrace, in contempt.

Your fair daughter,
 Transported with no worse nor better guard,
 But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
 To the gross *clasp*s of a lascivious Moor. Shakespeare.

To CLASP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut with a clasp.

Sermons are the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and do open the scriptures; which being but read, remain, in comparison, still *clasp*ed. Hooker, v. 22.

There Caxton slept, with Wyntkin at his side,
 One clasp'd in wood, and one in strong cow-hide. Pope.

2. To catch and hold by twining.

Direct

The *clasp*ing ivy where to climb. Milton, P. L.

3. To hold with the hands extended; to inclose between the hands.

Occasion turneth the handle of the bottle first to be received, and after the belly, which is hard to clasp. Bacon, Ess.

4. To embrace.

Thou art a slave, whom fortune's tender arm
 With favour never *clasp*t, but bred a dog. Shakespeare.

Thy suppliant

I beg, and clasp thy knees. Milton, P. L.

He stoop'd below

The flying spear, and shunn'd the promis'd blow;
 Then creeping, clasp'd the heroes knees, and pray'd. Dryden.

Now, now he *clasp*s her to his panting breast;
 Now he devours her with his eager eyes. Smith.

5. To inclose.

Boys, with women's voices,
 Strive to speak big, and clasp their female joints,
 In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown. Shakespeare.

CLASPER. n. s. [from clasp.] The tendrils or threads of creeping plants, by which they cling to other things for support.

The tendrils or claspers of plants are given only to such species as have weak and infirm stalks. Ray on the Creation.

CLASPKNIFE. n. s. [from clasp and knife.] A knife which folds into the handle.

CLASS. † n. s. [old Fr. classe, a rank, order, &c. Cotgrave; Lat. classis.]

1. A rank or order of persons.

Serapis has distinguished the readers of poetry according to their capacity of judging, into three classes. Dryden.

2. An assembly of persons, within a certain division.

Assemblies are either classes or synods; classes are conferences of the lowest ministers of churches, standing near together, as for example of twelve.

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, &c. iii. 13.

The kingdom of England, instead of so many dioceses, was now [during the great rebellion] divided into a certain number of provinces, made up of representatives from the several classes within their respective boundaries. Every parish had a congregational or parochial presbytery for the affairs of its own circle; these parochial presbyteries were combined into classes, which chose representatives for the provincial assembly, as did the provincial for the national. Thus, the city of London being distributed into twelve classes, each class chose two ministers and four lay-elders, to represent them in a provincial assembly. Warton, Notes on Milton's Poems.

2. A number of boys learning the same lesson at the school.

We shall be seized away from this lower class in the school of knowledge, and our conversation shall be with angels and illuminated spirits. Watts on the Mind.

3. A set of beings or things; a number ranged in distribution, under some common denomination.

Among this herd of politicians, any one set make a very considerable class of men. Addison, Freeholder.

Whatever of mongrel, no one class admits
 A wit with dunces, and a dunce with wits. Pope, Dunciad.

To CLASS. v. a. [from the noun.] To range according to some stated method of distribution; to range according to different ranks.

I considered that by the classing and methodizing such passages, I might instruct the reader. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CLASSICAL. † } adj. [old Fr. classique, Lat. classicus.]
CLASSICK. }

1. Relating to antique authors; relating to literature. Addison is supposed to be the first who thus applied the word, and was ridiculed for it.

Poetick fields encompass me around,
 And still I seem to tread on classick ground. Addison.

With them the genius of classick learning dwelleth, and from them it is derived. Felton on the Classics.

2. Of the first order or rank. This is the old meaning of the word; Cotgrave and Bullokar define it approved, orderly, in due or fit rank, authentical, chief. "Authors of best note, and generally applauded, are called classical." Bullokar. ed. 1656. See the subst. CLASSICK.

May his just fame remain a known and classick history, describing him, in his full pourtraiture, among the best of subjects, of friends, of scholars, and of men. Fell's Life of Hammond.

From this standard the value of the Roman weights and coins are deduced: in the settling of which I have followed Mr. Greaves, who may be justly reckoned a classical author on this subject. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. Relating to the order and rules of the presbyterian assemblies. See CLASS.

We perceive it [presbyterian government] aspiring to be a compulsive power upon all without exception in parochial, classical, and provincial hierarchies.

Milton, Observ. Art. of Peace betw. E. of Orm. and Irish.

Surely when we put down bishops and put up presbyters, which the most of them have made use of to enrich and exalt themselves, and turn the first heel against their benefactors, we did not think, that one classick fraternity, so obscure and so remote, should involve us and all state-affairs within the censure and jurisdiction of Belfast, upon pretence of overseeing their own charge.

Milton, Observ. Art. of Peace betw. the E. of Orm. and Irish.

Dare ye for this adjure the civil sword
 To force our consciences that Christ set free,
 And ride us with a classick hierarchy?

Milton on the New Forcers of Conscience.

After they have so long contended for their classical ordination, will they at length submit to any episcopal?

Dryden, Pref. to Hind and Panther.

Mr. Baxter takes great pains to unite the classical and congregational brethren, but claws off the episcopal party as a set of Cassandrian priests. Bp. Nicholson to Mr. Yates, 1699.

CLASSICALLY. * adv. [from classical.] In a classical manner.

CLA'SSICK.† n. s. [classicus, Lat.] An author of the first rank: usually taken for ancient authors. They are called classicks, from the circumstance of the senators, in the comitia centuriata of the Romans, voting first; all other persons, who voted afterwards, being styled infra classem.

The classicks of an age that heard of none. Pope.

CLASSIFICATION.* n. s. [from classis and facio, Lat.] Ranging into classes and divisions.

In the classification of the citizens, the great legislators of antiquity made the greatest display of their powers. Burke.

To CLA'SSIFY.* v. a. [from classis.] To arrange.

CLA'SSIS.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. Order; sort; body.

He had declared his opinion of that classis of men, and did all he could to hinder their growth. Clarendon.

2. A convention or assembly of persons, within a particular district.

Give to your rough gown, wherever they meet it, whether in pulpit, classis, or provincial synod, the precedence and the pre-eminence of deceiving.

Milton, Observ. Art. of Peace betw. E. of Orm. and Irish.

To CLA'TTER.† v. n. [clatpung, a rattle, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. But it is rather from the Teut. klatteren, to make a noise.]

1. To make a noise by knocking two sonorous bodies frequently together.

Now the sprightly trumpet, from afar,
Had round the neighing steeds to scour the fields,
While the fierce riders clattered on their shields. Dryden.

2. To utter a noise by being struck together.

All that night was heard an unwonted clattering of weapons, and of men running to and fro. Knolles's History.
Down sunk the monster-bulk, and press'd the ground;
His arms and clattering shield on the vast body sound. Dryden.
Their clattering arms with the fierce shocks re-sound, Helmets and broken lances spread the ground. Granville.

3. To talk fast and idly.

Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling;
Now, sike, I see thou do'st but clatter;
Harm may come of melling. Spenser, Shep. Cal.
But since he must needs be the loadstar of reformation, as some men clatter, it will be good to see further his knowledge of religion what it was, and by that we may likewise guess at the sincerity of his times in those that were not heretical.

Milton, of Ref. in England.

To CLA'TTER. v. a.

1. To strike any thing so as to make it sound and rattle.

I only with an ouken staff will meet thee,
And raise such overtries on thy clatter'd iron,
That thou oft shalt wish thyself at Gath. Milton, S. A.
When all the bees are gone to settle,
You clatter still your brazen kettle. Swift.

2. To dispute, jar, or clamour. Martin. A low word.

CLA'TTER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A rattling noise made by the frequent and quick collision of sonorous bodies. A clatter is a clash often repeated with great quickness, and seems to convey the idea of a sound sharper and shriller than rattle. See the verb, and its derivation from klatteren. The Sax. cleandup is clatter or clutter.]

I have seen a monkey overthrow all the dishes and plates in a kitchen, merely for the pleasure of seeing them tumble, and hearing the clatter they made in their fall. Swift.

2. It is used for any tumultuous and confused noise.

By this great clatter, one of greatest note Seems bruited. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Grow to be short,
Throw by your clatter,
And handle the matter. R. Jonson, Underwoods.

O Rourke's jolly boys
Ne'er dreamt of the matter,
'Till rous'd by the noise,
And musical clatter.

Swift.

The jumbling particles of matter,

In chaos make not such a clatter.

Swift.

CLA'TTERER.* n. s. [from clatter.]

1. He who makes any noise.

Holy-water, swyngers, and even-song clatterers, with other hypocrites. Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 88. b.

2. One who will disclose any light secret. Hulot.

CLA'TTERING.* n. s. [Sax. clatpunge.] A noise; mere clamour; rattle.

All those airy speculations, which bettered not men's manners, were only a noise and clattering of words.

Decay of Christian Piety.

CLA'VATED. adj. [clavatus, Lat.] Knobbed; set with knobs.

These appear plainly to have been clavated spikes of some kind of echinus ovarius. Woodward on Fossils.

CLA'UDENT. adj. [claudens, Lat.] Shutting; inclosing; confining. Dict.

CLA'UDICANT.* adj. [claudico, Lat.] Limping; halting.

To CLA'UDICATE. v. n. [claudico, Lat.] To halt; to limp. Dict.

CLAUDICATION.† n. s. [old Fr. claudication, from the Lat. claudico.] The act or habit of halting; lameness. Cotgrave.

CLAVE. [the preterite of clavv.] See CLEAVE.

CLA'VELLATED. adj. [clavellatus, low Lat.] Made with burnt tartar. A chymical term. Chambers.

Air, transmitted through clavellated ashes into an exhausted receiver, loses weight as it passes through them. Arbuthnot.

CLA'VER.† n. s. [claypen pyrr, Sax.] This is now universally written claver, though not so properly. See CLOVER. Mr. Pegge pronounces clavv, however, to be a corruption of pronunciation for claver; which is so far from being the case, that clavv is more analogous to the etymology, and is also used by an author of good note.

The desert with sweet clavv fills,
And richly shades the joyfull hills. Sandys, Ps. p. 101.

CLA'VICHORD.* n. s. [from clavis and chorda, Lat.] An instrument having many strings of one sound, saving that, with small pieces of cloth, the sound is distinct. Barret's Alv. 1580. Another name, perhaps, for the clurichord, which see.

CLA'VICLE.† n. s. [old Fr. clavicule, from clavicula, Lat.] The collar bone.

Some quadrupeds can bring their fore feet unto their mouths; as most that have clavicles, or collar bones. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A girl was brought with angry wheel down her neck, towards the clavicle. Wise man, Surgery.

CLAUSE.† n. s. [old Fr. clause, from the Lat. part. clausa of claudere, to shut up or close. This substantive formerly signified an end or conclusion, a close; and is so used by Chaucer.]

1. A sentence; a single part of a discourse; a subdivision of a larger sentence; so much of a sentence as is to be construed together.

God may be glorified by obedience, and obeyed by performance of his will, although no special clause or sentence of scripture be in every such action set before men's eyes to warrant it. Hooker, ii. § 2.

2. An article or particular stipulation.

The clause is untrue concerning the bishop. Hooker, iv. § 4.

When, after his death, they were sent both to Jews and Gentiles, we find not this clause in their commission. South.

CLAUSURAL.† adj. [old Fr. claustral, from the Lat. claustrum: “prieur claustral,” Cotgrave.] Relating to a cloister, or religious house.

Claustal priors are such as preside over monasteries, next to the abbot or chief governour in such religious houses.

This Dunstane—compelled men and women to vow chastity and to kepe claustrale obedience.

Bale, Eng. Volaries, P. i. fol. 62.

This might better be verified of claustral monks and nuns.

Fulke's Apology, (1586,) p. 19.

CLAUSTRUM. n. s. [claustrum, Lat.] Confinement; the act of shutting; the state of being shut.

In some monasteries the severity of the claustrum is hard to be born.

Geddes.

CLAW.† n. s. [clap, Saxon; klaw, German.]

1. The foot of a beast or bird, armed with sharp nails; or the pincers or holders of a shell fish.

I saw her range abroad to seek her food,
T' embrace her teeth and claws with lukewarm blood.

Spenser, Vis. of Belloy.

What's justice to a man, or laws,
That never comes within their claws?

Hudibras.

He softens the harsh rigour of the laws,
Blunts their keen edge, and grinds their harpy claws.

Gaith.

2. Sometimes a hand, in contempt.

To CLAW.† v. a. [clapan, Sax.]

1. To tear with nails or claws.

Look, if the wither'd elder hath not his poll claw'd like a parrot.

Shakespeare.

2. To pull, as with the nails.

I am afraid we shall not easily claw off that name.

South.

3. To tear or scratch in general.

For Age with stealing steps

Hath claw'd me with his crutch.

Old Ballad in Lord Surrey's Poems.

But we must claw ourselves with shameful

And heathen stripes, by their example.

Hudibras.

They for their own opinions stand fast,

Only to have them claw'd, and carv'd.

Hudibras.

Oh, the folly of us poor creatures, who, in the midst of our distresses, or escapes, are ready to claw or caress one another, upon matters that so seldom depend on our wisdom or our weakness, on our good or evil conduct towards each other.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

4. To flatter; which Dr. Johnson calls an obsolete sense, and of which he gives no example; but produces, under a definition of “to scratch or tickle,” the passage of Shakspeare cited in the present sense, which is the true meaning of the word. This word is indeed frequently thus employed by our old authors.

I will claw him, and saye, well might he fare!

Wilson on Usury, (1571,) p. 141.

Using your clawing colour, because some and such do not observe the said injunctions.

Anderson, Expos. of Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 65. b.

Thus golden asses claw'd by clawbacks are.

Daves, Wittes Pilgrimage, O. 4.

I laugh when I am merry, and claw no man in his humour.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Men—who have dealt with king Richard, as some trivial clawing pamphleters, and historical parasites, with the magnificent prelate, Thomas Wolsey.

Sir G. Bark, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 78.

5. To claw off, or away. To scold; to rail at.

Mr. Baxter takes great pains to unite the classical and congregational brethren, but claws off the episcopal party as a set of Cassandrian priests.

Bp. Newson to Mr. Yates.

You think the place where you found money; but the jade Fortune is to be claw'd away for't, if you should lose it.

L'Estrange.

6. To claw off, in naval language. To beat or turn to windward from a lee shore, so as to escape the danger of shipwreck.

Chambers.

CLAWBACK.† n. s. [from claw and back.] A flatterer; a sycophant; a wheeler. See the 4th sense of TO CLAW. Our old lexicography renders this word adulateur.

The miserable clawbacks of our countrie, not regarding what absurdities they commit, so that their wicked heresy may take place.

Stapleton's Portr. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 146. b.

The overweening of thy wits does make thy foes to smile,
Thy friends to weepe, and clawbacks thee with roothings to beguile.

Warner, Albion's England, (1597.)

Misgovern'd both my kingdome and my life,

I gave my selfe to ease, to sleepe, and sinne:

And I had clawbacks even at court full rife,

Which sought by outrage golden gaines to winne.

Mir. for Mag. p. 73.

CLAWBACK.* adj. [from the subst.] Flattering; behaving in the manner of a clawback.

Like a claw-back parasite.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

CLAWED. adj. [from claw.] Furnished or armed with claws.

Among quadrupeds, of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest.

Grew, Cosmol.

CLAY.† n. s. [clai, Cimbr. and Welsh; kley, Dutch; clay, claya, Sax.]

1. Unctuous and tenacious earth, such as will mould into a certain form.

Clays are earths firmly coherent, weighty and compact, still viscid, and ductile to a great degree, while moist; smooth to the touch, not easily breaking between the fingers, nor readily dissoluble in water; and, when mixed, not readily subsiding from it.

Deep Acheron,

Whose troubled eddies, thick with coze and clay,

Are whirl'd aloft.

Dryden.

Expose the clay to the rain, to drain it from salts, that the bricks may be more durable.

Woodward on Fossils.

The sun, which softens wax, will harden clay.

Watts.

Clover is the best way of improving clays, where manure is scarce.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. [In poetry.] Earth in general; the terrestrial element.

Why should our clay

Over our spirits so much sway?

Donne.

3. Dirt, or moistened earth.

When he had spoken thus, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle.

St. John. ix. 6.

To CLAY.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with clay; to manure with clay. This is an old verb in our language; “clayen, to dress with clay.”

Huloet.

This manuring lasts fifty years: then the ground must be clayed again.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CLAY-COLD.† adj. [clay and cold.] Lifeless; cold as the unanimated earth. Formerly key-cold was used in the same sense. See KEY-COLD.

Numb. xvi. 31.

He cut the clearing sky,

And in a moment vanish'd from her eye.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. To suffer division.

It cleaves with a glossy polite substance, not plane, but with some little unevenness.

Newton, Opticks.

CLEAVER. n. s. [from cleave.]

1. A butcher's instrument to cut animals into joints.

You, gentlemen, keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night, with huzzas and hunting-horns, and ringing 'the changes on butchers cleavers.

Arbuthnot.

Though arm'd with all thy cleavers, knives,

And axes made to hew down lives.

Mudibras.

2. A weed. Improperly written CLIVER.

CLEDGE. * n. s. A name given by miners to the upper part of the stratum of fullers' earth.

Chambers.

CLEES. † n. s. The two parts of the foot of beasts which are cloven-footed. Skinner. It is a country word, and probably corrupted from claves, Dr. Johnson says. Nevertheless, this word is found in our old lexicography; as in Barret's Alv. "of a disease in cattell betwixt the clees of their feete." Gower has the "cat's clees," Conf. Am. B. 4. Clays is still the Warwickshire pronunciation of claws.

CLEF. n. s. [from clef, key, Fr.] In musick, a mark at the beginning of the lines of a song, which shews the tone or key in which the piece is to begin.

C L E

Chambers.

CLEFT. part. pass. [from cleave.] Divided; parted asunder.

On the cleft wood,
I never did on cleft Parnassus dream,
Nor taste the sacred Heliconian stream.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

CLEFT. † n. s. [from cleave.] See CLIFT.

1. A space made by the separation of parts; a crack; a crevice.

To go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks.

Isaiah, ii. 21.

He will suite the great house with breaches, and the little house with clefts.

Amos, vi. 11.

The cascades seem to break through the clefts and cracks of rocks.

Addison, Guardian.

The extremity of this cape has a long cleft in it, which was enlarged and cut into shape by Agrippa, who made this the great port for the Roman fleet.

Addison on Italy.

The rest of it, being more gross and ponderous, does not move far; but lodges in the clefts, crags, and sides of the rocks, near the bottoms of them.

Woodward.

2. In furriery.

Clefts appear on the bough of the pasterns, and are caused by a sharp and malignant humour, which frets the skin; and it is accompanied with pain, and a noisom stench.

Farrier's Dict.

His horse it is the heralds wolt;
No, 'tis a mare, and hath a cleft.

B. Jonson.

To CLEFTGRAFT. v. a. [cleft and graft.] To engraft by cleaving the stock of a tree, and inserting a branch.

Filbert may be cleftgrafted on the common nut.

Mortimer.

CLEG. \ n. s.* [Dan. klaeg.] A cleg-fly, solipuga. Barret. It is the horse-fly; still called by this name in the north of England.

To CLUM. \ v. a.* [written also cleum, and clam.] Goth. klamma; Germ. klemmen; to pinch, to squeeze. But see to CLAM. To starve.

What will he clum me and my followers? Ask him an' he will clum me.

B. Jonson, Puckster.

Chaw'd or clamm'd, starved; because, by famine, the guts and bowels are, as it were, clamm'd or stuck together.

Ray, N. C. Words.

To CLEM. \ v. n.* To starve.

Hard is the choice, when the valiant must eat their arms, or clum.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

CLEMENCY. † n. s. [clemence, Fr. clementia, Lat. Spenser has once adopted clemence from the French, F. Q. v. vii. 22.]

1. Mercy; remission of severity; willingness to spare; tenderness in punishing.

Be careful for the country, and our nation which is pressed on every side, according to the clemency, that thou readily shewest unto all.

2 Macc. xiv. 9.

I pray thee that thou wouldst hear us, of thy clemency, a few words.

Acts, xxiv. 4.

For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency,
We beg the hearing patiently.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I have stated the true notion of clemency, mercy, compassion, good-nature, humanity, or whatever else it may be called, so far as is consistent with wisdom.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. Mildness; softness.

Then in the clemency of upward air,
We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder scar.

Dryden.

CLEMENT. † adj. [old Fr. clement, from clemens, Latin.] Mild; gentle; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate.

C L E

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take a third,
Letting them thrive again on the abatement.
No patron, intercessor none! now past
The sweet, the clement, mediatorial hour.

Shakespeare.

Young, Night Th. 9.

CLEMENTINE. \ adj.*

1. Relating to the compilations made by St. Clement.

In the Clementine liturgy, the bread and wine in the Eucharist are said to be antitype, correspondent types, figures, and images of the precious body and blood of Christ.

Ep. Bull, Corrupt, of the

2. Relating to the constitutions made by pope Clement the fifth, which form part of the canon law.

Gratian's decree, Gregory's decretal, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the body of the Roman canon law.

Blackstone.

CLEMENTEY. \ adv.* [from clement.] In a mild or merciful manner.

O Mary Magdalen, hear our prayers, which are full of praises, and most clemently reconcile this company unto Christ!

Ep. Taylor, Dissuade from Popery, ii. 9.

CLENCU. † [old Fr. clenche, the latch of a door. Lacombe.] See CLINCII.

To CLEPE. † v. a. [Clypian, Saxon.] To call. Obsolete. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Shakespeare, where the true reading is clap, in the sense of clap hands, or plight troth. It is therefore removed for the following example.

They clepe us drunkards.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To CLEPE. \ v. n.* To call.

To the gods I clepe

For true record of this my faithful speech. Such a one's Corbado.

CLEPSYDRA. \ n. s.* [Lat. from the Gr. κλεψύδρα, to form, and ὕδωρ, water.]

1. A kind of clock among the ancients, which told the hours by water; that is, measuring the space of time by the fall of a certain quantity of water; hence the application of the word to an hour-glass of sand. See Phil. Trans. vol. xlv. p. 171. And Greenhill's Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 231.

2. A chymical vessel.

CLERICAL. \ adj.* [from clergy. Chaucer has clergial for learned.] Relating to the clergy.

Constantine might have done more justly to have punished those clerical faults which he could not conceal, than to leave them unpunished that they remain concealed.

Milton, Annals, Rom. Def.

CLERGY. n. s. [clerga, Fr. clerus, Lat. κλήρως, Gr.] The body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God.

We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a church upon earth, necessary, by the plain word of God himself; a state wherunto the rest of God's people must be subject, as touching things that appertain to their soul's health.

Hooker, b. iii.

The convocation give a greater sum,
Than ever, at one time, the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Shakespeare.

CLERGYABLE. \ adj.* [from clergy.] The term applied to felonies within benefit of clergy; which are called clergyable offences, clergyable felonies.

Chambers, and Blackstone.

CLERGYMAN. n. s. [clergy and man.] A man in holy orders; a man set apart for ministration of holy things; not a laick.

How I have sped among the clergymen,

The sums I have collected shall express.

Shakespeare.

It seems to be in the power of a reasonable clergyman to make the most ignorant man comprehend

CLE'RICAL. † adj. [old Fr. clericat, from clericus, Lat.]
Relating to the clergy: as, a clerical man; a man in orders.

I cannot subscribe to the counsel of Leonardus Lessius, that it were meet for clerical and religious persons rather to suffer death than to kill a murderer; since no reason can be shewed, why their life should not be as dear to them as others.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, ii. 1.

Sir P.P. having observed many to look with an evil eye on the clerical revenue, his lordship sent him in a letter the following paper.

Bp. Barlow's Remains, p. 271.

CLE'RIC. * n. s. [Sax. clepic, Lat. clericus.] A clergyman.

What means the profession furnishes, the cleric who is the most intent upon its proper duties, the most addicted to a life of study and devotion, is the least qualified to improve.

Bp. Horsley, Sermon for Sons of the Clergy, (1786.)

CLE'RIC. * adj. Relating to the character of a clergyman.

CLERK. † n. s. [old Fr. clerc, scavant, instruit;
and, for the clergy, clerc, clerkus; Sax. clepic;
Lat. clericus.] Formerly clerk was the usual term for a scholar; most situations of trust or talent being filled by the clergy. See Blackstone's Comment, vol. i. Introduct. Thus clergie, in old French, is a general term for science.]

1. A clergyman.

All persons were stiled clerks that served in the church of Christ, whether they were bishops, priests, or deacons. Ayliffe.

2. A scholar; a man of letters.

They might talk of book-learning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks were. Sidney.

The greatest clerks being not always the honestest, any more than the wisest men. South.

3. A man employed under another as a writer.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine. Shakspeare.
My friend was in doubt whether he could not exert the justice upon such a vagrant; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor, he let the thought drop.

Addison.

4. A petty writer in publick offices: an officer of various kinds.

Take a just view, how many may remark
Who's now a lord, his grand-sire was a clerk. Graville.
It may seem difficult to make out the bills of fare for the suppers of Vitellids. I question not but an expert clerk of a kitchen can do it. Arbutnot.

5. The layman who reads the responses to the congregation in the church, to direct the rest.

By the clerks in the rubrick of the Common-Prayer-Book, (which was first inserted in the second book of K. Edw. VI.) I suppose were meant such persons as were appointed, at the beginning of the Reformation, to attend the incumbent in his performance of the offices; and such are still in some cathedral and collegiate churches, which have lay-clerks to look out the lessons, name the anthem, set the psalms, and the like; of which sort I take our parish-clerks to be, though we have now seldom more than one to a church.

Wheatly on Comm. Pr. ii. § 17.

CLERK-ALE. * n. s. [from clerk and ale.] The feast of the parish clerk. See ALE.

Clerk-ale occurs in Aubrey's manuscript History of Wiltshire.
"In the Easter holidays was the clerks-ale for his private benefit and the solace of the neighbourhood."

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 129.

CLE'RLIKE. * adj. [from clerk and like.] Accomplished as a clerk or learned person.

You are certainly a gentleman; thereto,
Clerk-like, experient'd. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

CLE'RLY. * adj. [from clerk.] Clever; scholar-like;
cunning.

I have answered to your clerly dialogue between the scholler and the rude man. Abp. Cramer to Bp. Gardner, fol. 393.

Thou art clerly, thou art clerly, Sir John.

Shakspeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

CLE'RLY. * adv. In an ingenious or learned manner.

They [the poets] did clerly, in figures, set before us sundry tales. Cascoigne, Delic. Dict for Drunkards.

Ignominious words, though clerly couch'd.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Then practis'd they by proclamation spread,
Nought to forget, that might defame him dead;
Which was so curious, and so clerly penn'd.

Mir. for Mag. p. 431.

CLE'RKSHIP. † n. s. [from clerk.]

1. Scholarship.

I have heard that Abraham was a great scholar; what portion of clerkship he hath otherwise and upon other occasions exprest, I know not. Hales, Rem. Sermon at the Close, p. 6.

How many shrewd men have you known and very well accomplished in most parts of conversation, that never had any great matter of clerkship!

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference, P. i.

2. The office of a clerk of any kind.

Of these clerkships your majesty had formerly granted two reversions. Sir H. Wotton, Letters.

He sold the clerkship of his parish, when it became vacant.

Swift, Miscellanies.

CLEVE. } In composition, at the beginning or end of CLIF. } the proper name of a place, denotes it to CLIVE. } be situated on the side of a rock or hill;
as Cleveland, Clifton, Standiff.

CLEVER. † adj. [of no certain etymology, Dr.
Johnson says. It may be an abbreviation or corruption of our old adjective delivier, nimble, active, (so used by Spenser's contemporary commentator,) from the old Fr. "delivre de sa personne, an active wight, one that can wield his limbs at pleasure;"
Cotgrave: and hence perhaps, in our sense of clever, one that can turn his hand to any thing, dexterous.]

1. Dexterous; skilful.

It was the cleverer mockery of the two. L'Estrange.
I read Dyer's letter more for the stile than the news. The man has a clever pen, it must be owned. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.

I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
To me, and to my heirs for ever.

Pope.

3. Well-shaped; handsome.

She call'd him gundy-guts, and he call'd her lousy Peg, tho' the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbutnot.

4. This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in burlesque or conversation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a settled meaning.

CLE'VERLY. adv. [from clever.] Dexterously; fitly;
handsomely.

These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
And sometimes catch them with a snap,

As cleverly as th' ablest trap.

Hudibras, ii. 1.

A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly as the executioner. South.

CLE'VERNESS. n. s. [from clever.] Dexterity; skill; accomplishment.

CLEW. n. s. [clÿpe, cleop, Sax. klouwen, Dutch.]

1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.

Elfsouls untwisting his deceitful claw;

He gan to weave a web of wicked guile.

Spenser, F. Q.

While guided by some claw of heav'nly thread,

The perplex'd labyrinth we backward tread.

Roscommon.

They see small clews draw vastest weights along,
Not in their bulk but in their order strong. Dryden.

2. A guide; a direction: because men direct themselves by a claw of thread in a labyrinth.

This alphabet must be your own claw to guide you. Holdgr.
Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light?

No claw to guide me thro' this gloomy maze,
To clear my honour, yet preserve my faith? Smith.

The reader knows not how to transport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of some claw, or connecting idea, to lay hold of. Watts, Logick.

3. CLEW of the sail of a Ship, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that caring where the tackles and sheets are fastened. Harris.

To CLEW. v. a. [from claw, a sea-term.]

To claw the Sails, is to raise them, in order to be furled, which is done by a rope fastened to the claw of a sail, called the claw-garnet. Harris.

To CLEW. * v. a. [from the noun.] To direct; to guide as by a thread.

Direct and claw me out the way to happiness.

Beaum. and Fl. Women pleas'd.

To CLICK. † v. n. [cliken, Dut. cliqueter, French; or perhaps the diminutive of clack. Dr. Johnson says. He might have added that the old Fr.
cliquer and cliquer is to click.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.

The solemn death-watch click'd, the hour she dy'd;
And shrilling crickets in the chimney cry'd. Gay.

To CLICK. * v. a. [Sax. gelacecan, to snatch.] To catch or snatch hastily; yet used in the north of England.

CLICK. * n. s. [old Fr. clique, i. e. clichet or cliquet.
See CLICKET.] The latch of a door.

CLICKER. n. s. [from click.] A low word for the servant of a salesman, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLICKET. † n. s. [old Fr. cliquet.]

1. The ring, knocker, or hammer of a door.
Cotgrave and Skinner.

2. Formerly, a key.

This freshe May of which I spake of yore,
In warm wax hath enprinted the cliket
That January bare of the smal wicket. Chaucer, March. Tale.

CLIENT. † n. s. [Fr. client; Lat. cliens, cluo, from the Gr. κλώω, to hear.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel. Bacon, Ess.

Advocates must deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true state of their case. Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to disturb you. B. Jonson.

CLIENTAL. * adj. [from client.] Dependant.

In order to continue the cliental bond, and not to break up an old and strong confederacy and thereby disperse the tribe.

Burke, Artific. Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

CLIENTED. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers, do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

CLIENTELE. † n. s. [old Fr. clientele, Lat. clientela.]

The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used, Dr. Johnson says, citing the authority only, of Ben Jonson. It is, however, repeatedly used by a better writer than the facetious bard.

Those of the Roman clientele are not more careful and punctual in scanning and observing the rules and practice of their espousals, than ours here are incurious in both.

Lp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 6.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;

And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted.

B. Jonson.

CLIENTSHIP. n. s. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientship among the Romans always descended: the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF. † n. s. [clivus, Lat. clif; cliof, Saxon, part. cleoped from cleopan, to cleave; Icel. klínfa, the same; Goth. klifft, a segment. "In our ancient language, the cut-off or broken mountains on the sea-sides are more rightly and properly called cliffs, than by the name of rocks or hills; that appellation being more fitting unto the inland mountains; but the name of cliff, coming from our verb to cleave, is unto these more aptly given, for that they seem unto our view as cleft or clowen from the part that sometime belonged unto them. And albeit many cliffs are in many places of the sea-shore to be seen, as well as at Dover; yet are they not seen so to be answered, and corresponded unto by others right over against them." Verstegan, Restit. of Dec.
Intell. ch. 4.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Where-ever 'tis so found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs their cabots.

Woodward.

2. The name of a character in musick. Properly
CLEF. [Fr.]

A bird

Whom art had never taught cliffs, moods, or notes.

Ford, Lover's Melancholy.

Cliff is a mark in musick at the beginning of the lines of a song; and is the indication of the pitch, and bespeaks what kind of voice, as base, tenour, or treble, it is proper for.

Sir J. Hawkins.

CLIFFY. * adj. [from cliff.] Broken; craggy.

Calling them craggy or cliffy mountains, as being full of down-falls and hollow places.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587) p. 301.

Beneath the shade of Vecta's cliffy isle. Dyer.

CLIFT. † n. s.

1. The same with CLIFF; now disused, Dr. Johnson says; and he notices only the usage of it by Spenser.
It has, however, another meaning.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenser, F. Q.

2. A crack; a fissure.

I will put thee in a clift of the rock. Erod. xxxiii. 24.

CLIFTED. * adj. [from clift.] Broken.

The swarming populace spread every wall,
And cling, as if with claws they did enforce
Their hold, thro' clifted stones, stretching and staring,
As if they were all eyes, and every limb
Would feed its faculty of admiration.

Congreve, Mourning Bride 3.

O nation, that thou couldst remove!
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth thee about. Shakspeare.
Enter the city, clip your wives; your friends,
Tell them your feats. Shakspeare.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare.

The oak's not envious of the sailing cedar,
The lusty vine not jealous of the ivy,
Because she clips the elm. Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

The male resteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by inclosing and embracing. The
Sax. clýpan also is to clip or cut.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame. Suckling.
He clips hope's wings, whose airy bliss
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryden, Fables.
If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheist may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them. Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head, where late it grew. Pope.
He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.
We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve. Bentley, Serm.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping.
Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

That they added, changed, or clipped any thing from the tenor of their commission.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587), p. 401.

All my reports go with the modest truth,
Nor more, nor clip, but so. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Mrs. Mayoress clipp'd the king's English. Addison, Spect.
Even in London, they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain.

Where is he living, clipt in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

To CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Streight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

CLIP. * n. s. [from the verb.] An embrace.

Finding these northern climes do coldly him embrace,
Not us'd to frozen clips, he strave to find some part,
Where with most ease and warmth he might employ his art.
Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

CLIPPER. † n. s. [from clip.]

1. One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut
French crowns, and to-morrow the king
Unass'd will be a clipper. Shakspeare.
No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had pass'd through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

2. A barber.

Huot.

 The many to them 'longing, have put off
 The spinsters, curdres, fullers, weavers. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

His commissioners should cause clothiers to take wool, paying only two parts of the price. Hayward.
 They shall only spoil the clothier's wool, and beggar the present spinner, at best. Craut's Bills of Mortality.

CLO'THING. n. s. [from To clothe.] Dress: vesture; garments.

Thy bosom might receive my yielded spright,
 And thine with it, in heav'n's pure clothing drest,
 Through clearest skies might take united flight. Fairfax.
 Your bread and clothing, and every necessary of life, entirely depend upon it. Swift.

CLO'THSHEARER. n. s. [from cloth and shear.] One who trims the cloth, and levels the nap.

My father is a poor man, and by his occupation a cloth-shearer. Hakewill on Providence, p. 436.

CLO'THWORKER.* n. s. [from cloth and work.] A maker of cloth.

Clothworkers, plaisterers, and other inferior trades, in their policy this way exceed those of a higher rank. Scott's Essay on Drapery, &c. (1635.) p. 162.

CLO'TPOLL. n. s. [from clot and poll.]

1. Thickskull; blockhead.

What says the fellow, there? call the clotpoll back. Shakspeare.

2. Head, in scorn.

I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream,
 In embassy to his mother. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

To CLO'TTER. v. n. [klottern, Dutch.] To congregate; to coagulate; to gather into lumps.

He dragg'd the trembling sire,
 Sliddering through clot'd blood and holy mire. Dryd. Æn.

CLO'TTRY. adj. [from clot.] Full of clods; concreted; full of concretions.

The matter expectorated is thin, and mixed with thick, clotty, bluish streaks. Harvey on Consumptions.
 Where land is clotty, and a shower of rain soaks through, you may make use of a roll to break it. Mortimer.

CLOUD.† n. s. [The derivation is not known.

Minshew derives it from claudo, to shut; Somner from clod; Casaubon from αχλὺς, darkness; Skinner from kladde, Dutch, a spot. So far Dr. Johnson. To these may be added Junius, who derives it from the Gr. κλύδων, a wave, because of the resemblance of a cloud to a wave. Serenius cites the old Goth. gläte, a clear vapour; and laud, moisture. But Mr. H. Tooke thinks it is the Sax.

participle ge-hlob, covered; the word being thus formed, gehloud, gloud, cloud.]

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds that lower'd upon our house,
 In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, 'till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Grew's Cosmol.

Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke, Elem. Nat. Philos.

How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky;
 And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
 And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

2. The veins, marks, or stains in stones, or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness.

Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud
 Not of war only, but detractions rude, &c. Milton, Sonn. xvi.

Though poets may of inspiration boast,
 Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost. Waller.

The bishop of London did cut down a noble cloud of trees at Fulham: the lord chancellor told him that he was "a good expounder of dark places."

Aubrey, Relat. of Id. Bacon's Apophthegms.

How can I see the brave and young,
 Fall in the cloud of war, and fall unsung? Addison.

4. Any thing that spreads wide; as a croud, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this, that amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation. Atterbury.

To CLOUD.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken with clouds; to cover with clouds; to obscure.

2. To make of sullen and gloomy appearance.

Be not dishearten'd then, nor cloud those looks,
 That wont to be more cheerful and serene. Milton, P. L.

What sullen fury clouds his scowful brow? Pope, Statius.

3. To obscure; to make less evident.

If men would not exhale vapours to cloud and darken the clearest truths, no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

4. To variegate with dark veins.

The handle smooth and plain
 Made of the clouded olive's easy grain. Pope, Odyssey.

5. To sully; to defame.

I would not be a stander-by to hear
 My sovereign mistress clouded so. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

To CLOUD.† v. n. To grow cloudy; to grow dark with clouds.

[Her] beams upon his hairless face are fix'd,
 As if from thence they borrow'd all their shine:

Were never four such lamps together mix'd,
 Had not his clouded with his brows' repine;

But her's, which through the crystal tears gave light,
 Shone like the moon, in water seen by night.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adonis.

CLO'UDBERRY. n. s. [from cloud and berry; chamaemorus.] The name of a plant, called also knotberry.

Miller.

CLO'UDASCENDING.* adj. [from cloud and ascend.]

Like tall cedars mounted on

Cloud-ascending Lebanon.

Sandys, Ps. 92.

C L O

CLO'UNBORN.* adj. [from cloud and born.] Born of a cloud.

Like cloud-born centaurs, from the mountain's height
With rapid course descending to the fight,
They rush along; the rattling woods give way;
The branches bend before the sweepy sway.

Dryden, Virg. Æn. 7.

CLO'UDCAPT. adj. [from cloud and cap.] Topped with clouds; touching the clouds.

The cloudcapt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherits, shall dissolve.

Shakespeare.

CLO'UDCOMPELLING.† adj. [A word formed in imitation of νεφέλη ἐγγενης, ill understood.]

1. An epithet of Jupiter, by whom clouds were supposed to be collected.

Health to both kings, attended with a roar
Of cannons, echo'd from the affrighted shore;
With loud resemblance of his thunder, prove
Bacchus the seed of cloudcompelling Jove.

Waller.

Supplicating move

Thy just complaint to cloudcompelling Jove.

Dryden.

2. Simply, collecting clouds.

Abyssinia's cloud-compelling cliffs.

Thomson, Autumn.

CLO'UDCOVERED.* adj. [from cloud, and cover?]

Wrapt in clouds.

Witness, thou Sinai! whose cloud-cover'd height,
And shaken basis, own'd the present God.

Young, Night Th. 7.

CLO'UDECLIPSED.* adj. [from cloud and eclipse.]

Eclipsed by the intervention of a cloud.

Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with woe.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

CLO'UDDISPELLING.* adj. [from cloud and dispel.]

Having power to disperse.

The northern breath, that freezes floods, he binds,
With all the race of cloud-dispelling winds.

Dryden, Ovid.

CLO'UKISSING.* adj. [from cloud and kiss.]

Touching, as it were the clouds.

Threatening cloud-kissing Ilium with annoy.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

At length we gain

A steepe cloud-kissing rocke, whose horned crowne
With proud imperiall looke beholds the maine.

Mir. for Mag. p. 65c.

CLO'UDTOPT.* adj. [from cloud and top.] Having the top covered with clouds.

Mountains, ye mourn in vain
Modred, whose magick song
Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topt head.

Gray, The Bard.

CLO'UDTOUCHING.* adj. [from cloud and touch.]

Ascending, as it were, to the clouds.

Cloud-touching mountains to new seats are borne
From their foundations, by his fury torne.

Sandys, Job. p. 14.

Propt by thy hand,

Cloud-touching mountains steadfast stand.

Sandys, Ps. p. 101.

CLO'UDILY. adv. [from cloudy.]

1. With clouds; darkly.

2. Obscurely; not perspicuously.

Some had rather have good discipline delivered plainly, by way of precepts, than cloudily enwrapped in allegories.

Spenser, on Ireland.

He was commanded to write so cloudily by Cornutus.

Dryden.

CLO'UDINESS. n. s. [from cloudy.]

1. The state of being covered with clouds; darkness.*

You have such a February face,
So full of frost, of storm and cloudiness.

Shakespeare.

The situation of this island exposes it to a continual cloudiness, which in the summer renders the air colder, and in the winter warm.

Harvey on Consumptions.

C L O

2. Want of brightness.

I saw a cloudy Hungarian diamond made clearer by lying in a cold liquor; wherein, he affirmed, that upon keeping it longer, the stone would lose more of its cloudiness.

Boyle.

CLO'UBLESS.† adj. [from cloud.] Without clouds; clear; unclouded; bright; luminous; lightsome; pure; undarkened.

As the morning light,

The cloudless morning, so should be thine house.

Peele, David and Bethsabe, 1599.

This Partridge soon shall view in cloudless skies,

When next he looks thro' Galileo's eyes.

Pope.

How many such there must be in the vast extent of space, a naked eye in a cloudless night may give us some faint glimpse.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

CLO'UDY.† adj. [from cloud.]

1. Covered with clouds; obscured with clouds; consisting of clouds.

As Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door.

Exodus, xxxiii. 9.

At last his sail-broad vans

He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoke

Uplifted spurns the ground; thence many a league,

As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides.

Milton, P. L.

2. Dark; obscure; not intelligible.

Is you content yourself frequently with words instead of ideas, or with cloudy and confused notions of things, how impenetrable will that darkness be?

Watts on the Mund.

3. Gloomy of look, not open, nor cheerful.

So my storm-beaten heart likewise is cheer'd

With that sun-shine, when cloudy looks are clear'd.

Spenser.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,

Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath

Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Shakespeare.

4. Marked with spots or veins.

5. Not bright; wanting lustre, or clearness.

I saw a cloudy diamond.

Boyle.

Before the wine grows cloudy, shake the hog'shead, and carry a glass of it to your master.

Swift, Direct. to the Butler.

CLOVE. the preterite of cleave. See TO CLEAVE.

Gyon's angry blade so fierce did clay

On the other's helmet, which as Titus shone,

That quite it clove his plumed crest in tway.

Spenser, F. Q.

CLOVE.† n. s. [clou, Fr. a nail, from the similitude of a clove to a nail, Dr. Johnson says; but it is perhaps from the Sax. clufe.]

1. A valuable spice brought from Ternate in the East Indies. It is the fruit or seed of a very large tree.

Clove seems to be the rudiment or beginning of a fruit growing upon clove-trees.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Some of the parts into which garlick separates, when the outer skin is torn off. [In this sense it is derived from clove, the preterite of cleave.]

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;

Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r.

Tate's Juvenal.

CLOVE-GILLYFLOWER. n. s. [from its smelling like cloves.]

This genus may be divided into three classes:

1. The clove-gillyflower, or carnation. 2. The pink. 3. The sweet William. The carnation, or clove-gillyflower, are distinguished into four classes.

The first, called flakes, having two colours only,

and their stripes large, going quite through the leaves. The second, called bizars, have flowers striped, or variegated with three or four different colours. The third are piquetts: these flowers have always a white ground, and are spotted with scarlet, red, purple, or other colours. The fourth are called painted ladies: these have their petals of a red or purple colour on the upper side, and are white underneath. Of each of these classes there are numerous varieties. The true clove-gillyflower has been long in use for making a cordial syrup. There are two or three varieties commonly brought to the markets, which differ greatly in goodness; some having very little scent, when compared with the true sort. Miller.

C L O

CLOVEN.† part. pret. [from cleave. Sax. clopen.] See TO CLEAVE.

There is Anfidius, list you what work he makes Among your cloven army. Shakespeare.

Now, heap'd high,
The cloven oaks and lofty pines do lie. Waller.

A chap-fallen beaver, loosely hanging by
The cloven helm, and arch of victory. Dryden.

CLOVEN-FOOT.* adj. [Sax. clipen-foet.] Relating to a foot divided into two parts. See CLOVEN-FOOTED.

I think there are two more trusty characters to distinguish the apparition of an evil from a good angel, than the cloven-foot vulgar opinion affixeth to the devil.

Spencer on Prodigies, p. 231.

CLOVEN-FOOTED. } adj. [cloven and foot, or hoof.]
CLOVEN-HOOFED. } Having the foot divided into two parts; not a round hoof; bisulcous.

There are the his ulcous or cloven-hoof; as camels and beavers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The cloven-footed fiend is banish'd from us. Dryden.

Great variety of water fowl, both whole and cloven-footed, frequent the waters. Ray on the Creation.

CLOVER.

CLOVER-FLOWER.* } n. s. [more properly claver, clafep, Sax. klaver, Dutch.

CLOVER-GRASS. } See CLOVER. The Sax. exhibits also clýep. The word is, no doubt, from the verb clepan, to cleave, from the appearance of the cleaved leaves.]

1. A species of trefoil.

The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover. Shakespeare.
Nature shall provide

Green grass and fatt'ning clover for their fare. Dryden, Virg.
Clover improves land, by the great quantity of cattle it maintains. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The crow-flower, and thereby the clover-flower they stick. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

My Blouzelinda is the blissest lass,
Than primrose sweeter, or the clover-grass. Gay.

2. To live in CLOVER, is to live luxuriously; clover being extremely delicious and fattening to cattle.

Well, Laurent, was the night in clover spent. Ogle.

CLOVERED.† adj. [from clover.] Covered with clover.

Flocks thick-nibbling thro' the clover'd vale. Thomson, Summer.

Through the deep groves I hear the chaunting birds,
And through the clover'd vale the various lowing herds.

T. Warton, Ode 8.

CLOUGH.† n. s. [clough, Saxon; cloiche, Irish, a rock.] The cleft of a hill; a cliff. In composition a hilly place, Dr. Johnson says. In Northumberland, it means a valley between two hills; a narrow glen. The old Norm. or Fr. clough is a valley, whence perhaps the introduction of the word into Domesday Book.

A clough, or clough, is a kind of breach or valley down a slope from the side of a hill.

Verslegan, Restit. of Decayed Intell. ch. 9.

CLOUGH. n. s. [in commerce.] An allowance of two pounds in every hundred weight for the turn of the scale, that the commodity may hold out weight when sold by retail.

C L O

CLOUT.† n. s. [clut, Saxon.]

1. A cloth for any mean use.

His garment, nought but many ragged clouds,
With thorns together pinn'd, and patched was.

Spenser, F. Q.

A clout upon that head,
Where late the diadem stood. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

In power of spittle and a clout,
When-e'er he please to blot it out. Swift.

2. A patch on a shoe or coat.

No man putteth a clout of boistous cloth into an olde clothing, for it doth away the fulnesse of the cloth, and a worse brekyng is made. Wicliffe, St. Matt. ix.

3. Anciently, the mark of white cloth at which archers shot.

He drew a good bow: he shot a fine shoot: he would have clapt in the clout at twelve score. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

4. An iron plate to keep an axle-tree from wearing.

5. A blow; as, a clout on the ear: a vulgarism. But see TO CLOUT.

TO CLOUT.† v. a. [from the noun. "To sette peeces to a thyng, or clowten." Prompt. Parv. To clout boots, or shoes, is to strengthen them with clout or hob-nails, old Fr. clou, clouit, a little nail; and sometimes with a thin plate of iron, called a clout.]

1. To patch; to mend coarsely.

Can you clout me a payre of hoes? —
I wolde have them well underlayed, and easily,
For I use alwaye to goe on the one side.

Old Morality of Hycke Scorne.

Wyndchester, when he either preacheth or disputeth, how he clouteth the old broken holes with patches of papistry.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 98. b.

I thought he slept, and put
My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose rudeness
Answer'd my steps too loud. Shakespeare, Cymb.

The dull swain
Treads on it daily with his clouted shoon. Milton, Com.

2. To cover with a cloth.

Milk some unhappy ewe,
Whose clouted leg her hurt doth shew. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

3. To join awkwardly or coarsely together.

All their divine service is notably patched up and clouted therewith, [idolatory.] Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. p. 412.
Many sentences of one meaning clouted up together.

Ascham.

TO CLOUT.* v. a. [perhaps from the Dutch, klouen, a blow or stroke, most properly with the fist: klouwen, to strike or bang.] To beat; to strike.

I wis, with his fist he wolde all-to clout you.
Old Morality of Hycke Scorne.

Pay him o'er the pate, clout him for all his courtesies.

The late queen of Spain took off one of her chapines, and clouted Olivarez about the noddle with it. Howell, Lett. ii. 43.

CLOUTED.† participial adj. Congealed; coagulated: corruptly used for clotted.

With flaws, and clouted cream, and country dainties stored.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 14.

I've seen her skim the clouted cream,
And press from spongy curds the milky stream. Gay.

CLOUTERLY.† adj. [probably by corruption from louterly, Dr. Johnson says. But it is rather from the Teut. klote, a stupid fellow.] Clumsy; awkward: as, a clouterly fellow.

The single wheel plough is a very clouterly sort.

Mortimer's Husbandry.
Let us observe Spenser with all his rusty, obsolete words; with all his rough-hewn, clouterly verses; yet take him throughout, and we shall find in him a graceful and poetick majesty.

C L O

Philips, Theatr. Poet. 1675, Pref.

CLOWN.† n. s. [imagined by Skinner and Junius to be contracted from colonus. It seems rather a Saxon word, corrupted from loewen; loew, Dutch, a word nearly of the same import. Lyc, in his additions to Junius, deduces it from the Cimbr. luin, idle, stupid, slow. Scerepius proposes the old Goth. klunna, rude, and hlemne, a slave.]

1. A rustick; a country fellow; a churl.

He came with all his clowns, horst upon cart-jades. Sidney.

The clowns, a boist'rous, rude, ungovern'd crew,
With furious haste to the loud summons flew. Dryden.

2. A coarse ill-bred man.

In youth a coxcomb, and in age a clown. Spectator.

A country squire, represented with no other vice but that of being a clown, and having the provincial accent. Swift.

3. Formerly, a domestick fool, or licensed jester; an eccentric character in the old mysteries and moralities; the buffoon of the morris dance; the fool in the ancient exhibitions; or dumb shews, at fairs; and thence perhaps, in modern times, the laughter-stirring clumisy mimick in our pantomimes.

To CLOWN.* v. n. To affect the behaviour of a clown.

Beshrew me, he clowns it properly indeed.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

CLOWNAGE.* n. s. [from clown.] The behaviour of a clown.

And he to serve me thus! ingratitude,
Beyond the coarseness yet of any clownage
Shewn to a lady! B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.

CLOWNERY.† n. s. [from clown.] Ill-breeding; churlishness; rudeness; brutality.

That's a court indeed,

Not mix'd with clowneries us'd in common houses.

Chapman's Bussy D'Ambois.

The fool's conceit had both clownery and ill-nature.

L'Estrange.

CLOWNISH.† adj. [from clown.]

1. Consisting of rusticks or clowns; relating to them.

I come not to eat with ye, and to surfeit

In these poor clownish pleasures. Beaumont and Fletcher, The Prophetess.

Young Silvia beats her breast, and cries aloud

For succour from the clownish neighbourhood. Dryden.

2. Coarse; rough; rugged.

But with his clownish hands their tender wings

He brusheth oft. Spenser, P. Q. i. i. 23.

3. Uncivil; ill-bred; ill-mannered.

What if we essay'd to steal

The clownish fool out of your father's court? Shakespeare.

4. Clumsy; ungainly.

There was amongst his nearest attendants, one Henry Cuffe, a man of secret ambitious ends of his own, and of proportionate counsels smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Wotton, Parallel, &c.

With a grave look, in this odd equipage,

The clownish mimick traverses the stage. Prior.

CLOWNISHLY.† adv. [from clownish.] Coarsely; rudely; brutally. Sherwood.

CLOWNISHNESS.† n. s. [from clownish.]

1. Rusticity; coarseness; unpolished rudeness.

Even his Dorick dialect has an incomparable sweetness in its clownishness. Dryden.

If the boy should not make legs very gracefully, a dancing master will cure that defect, and wipe off that plainness which the a-la-mode people call clownishness. Locke.

2. Incivility; brutality.

'Tis clownishness, they say, to reject any,
And folly too. Fanshawe, Past. Fid. i. 2.

CLOWN'S MUSTARD. n. s. An herb. Dict.

To CLOY.† v. a. [enclouer, Fr. from the Lat. claudere, to shut, i. e. so to fill, as that there is no place left for any more. To cloy with pleasure, is common; but to cloy with woe, not so. Yet Milton uses the latter expression.] To nail up; to stop up.

C L U

1. To satiate; to sate; to fill beyond desire; to surfeit; to fill to loathing.

The length of those speeches had not cloyed Pyrocles, though he were very impatient of long deliberations. Sidney.

The very creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, are reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker, v. § 42.

Who can cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast! Shakespeare.

For cloy'd with woes and trouble store,
Surcharg'd my soul doth lie. Milton, P. s. lxxxviii.

Continually varying the same sense, and taking up what he had more than enough inculcated before, he sometimes cloy's his readers instead of satisfying them. Dryden.

Whose little store her well taught mind does please,
Nor pinch'd with want, nor cloy'd with wanton ease. Roscommon.

Intemperance in eating and drinking, instead of delighting and satisfying nature, doth but load and cloy it. Tillotson.

Settle, cloy'd with custard and with praise,
Is gather'd to the dull of ancient days. Pope.

2. It seems to have, in the following passage, another sense: perhaps to strike the beak together, Dr. Johnson says. But it means to claw the beak, an accustomed action. Mr. Stevens says, with hawks and eagles. Cloy is used for cley, which, as well as clee, in our old language, is the same as claw. See CLEES.

His royal bird

Prunes the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shakespeare.

3. To nail up guns, by striking a spike into the touch-hole. It is also a term used among farriers, when a horse is pricked with a nail in shoeing. Kersey. [old Fr. cloier, to prick.] To the latter of these senses may be referred the following passage in Spenser.

That toe of his, [the boar,]

Which with his cruel tuske him deadly cloy'd.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 48.

CLOYLESS. adj. [from cloy.] That of which too much cannot be had; that which cannot cause satiety.

Epicurean cooks

Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite. Shakespeare.

CLOYMENT. n. s. [from cloy.] Satiety; repletion beyond appetite.

Alas! their love may be call'd appetite:

No motion of the liver, but the palate,
That suffers surfeit, cloyment, and revolt. Shakespeare.

CLUB.† n. s. [clappa, Welsh; klup, Dutch.]

1. A heavy stick: a staff intended for offence.

He strove his combred club to quit

Out of the earth. Spenser, F. Q.

As he pulled off his helmet, a butcher slew him with the stroak of a club. Hagyard.

Arm'd with a knotty club another came. Dryden.

2. The name of one of the suits of cards.

The club, black tyrant first her victim died,
Spite of his haughty mien and bar'rous pride. Pope.

3. [From cleoan, to divide. Skinner.] The shot or dividend of a reckoning, paid by the company in just proportions.

A fuddling couple sold ale: their humour was to drink drunk, upon their own liquor: they laid down their club, and this they called forcing a trade. L'Estrange.

4. An assembly of good fellows, meeting under certain conditions, Dr. Johnson says; and he cites, in proof of this, only the example from Dryden; in which factionous clubs, however, can hardly be said to consist of good fellows. Nor is club of so confined a meaning as Dr. Johnson represents. For, under the adjective good, he describes "good fellows as companionable, sociable, merry fellows;" such, we may suppose as Goldsmith's "club of choice spirits" consisted of, and not as members of the "humdrum club, where a man might sit in silence," Goldsmith's Ess. 4. In short, a club is not always an "assembly of good fellows" in Dr. Johnson's meaning; but an association of persons subjected to particular rules.

What right has any man to meet in factionous clubs to vilify the government? Dryden's Medal, Dedication.

The end of our club is to advance conversation and friendship, and to reward deserved persons with our interest and our recommendations. We admit none but men of wit and interest. Swift, Letters.

This club of duellists, consisting only of men of honour, did not continue long, most of the members of it being put to the sword, or hanged, soon after its institution. Spectator, No. 9.

The club of ugly faces was instituted originally at Cambridge, in the merry reign of Charles II. Spect. No. 78.

Soon after his [Johnson's] return to London, which was in February 1764, was founded that club which existed long without a name, but at Mr. Garrick's funeral became distinguished by the title of THE LITERARY CLUB. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

5. Concurrence; contribution; joint charge.

He's bound to vouch them for his own,
Though got by implicate generation,
And general club of all the nation. Hudibras.

6. An old term for a booby. Grose's Glossary, under Hertfordshire clubs and clouted shoon. See also CLUBBISH.

To CLUB.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To contribute to a common expence in settled proportions.

This — was in a less proportion than what was paid by the inhabitants, who were chiefly concerned to pay for their own case: I should not, my lord, be against the parson's continuing to club with them. Bp. Nicholson to the E. of Thanet, 1706.

2. To join to one effect; to contribute separate powers to one end.

'Till grosser atoms, tumbling in the stream
Of fancy, madly met, and clubb'd into a dream. Dryden.

Every part of the body seems to club and contribute to the seed, else why should parents, born blind or deaf, sometimes generate children with the same imperfections? Ray.

Let sugar, wine, and cream together club,
To make that gentle viand, syllabub. King.
The owl, the raven, and the bat,
Clubb'd for a feather to his hat. Swift.

To CLUB. v. a. To pay to a common reckoning.

Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take your life. Pope.
Fibres being distinct, and impregnated by distinct spirits, how should they club their particular informations into a common idea? Collier on Thought.

CLUBBED.* adj. [from club.] Heavy, like a club.

When I bete my knives,
She bringeth me the grete clubbed staves. Chaucer, Monkes Tale, Prol.

CLUBBER.* n. s. See CLUBBIST.

CLUBBISH.* adj. [from club.] An old adjective for clownish. Sherwood. Rustick.

The highest trees be soonest blown downe:
Ten kings do die before one clubbush clowne. Mir. for Mag. p. 231.

CLUBBIST.* n. s. [from club.] He who belongs to a particular association. The word is, modern; it was formerly a clubber, forgotten and disused; as in Characters annexed to two Essaies on Love and Marriage, 1657.

The difference between the clubbists and the old adherents to the monarchy of this country is hardly worth a scuffle. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

CLUBFIST.* n. s. [from club and fist.] A large fist; applied contemptuously to persons.

The rascall rude, the rogue, the clubfist gript
My slender arme, and pluckt me on in hast. Mir. for Mag. p. 40.

CLUBFISTED.* adj. [from clubfist.] Having a large fist.

As Logick is clubfisted and crabbed, so she is terrible at first sight. Howell's Lett. i. v. 9.

Small clubheaded antenae. Derham.

CLUBLA'W. n. s. [club and law.] Regulation by force; the law of arms.

The enemies of our happy establishment seem to have recourse to the laudable method of clublaw, when they find all other means for enforcing the absurdity of their opinions to be ineffectual. Addison, Frecholder.

CLUBMAN.* n. s. [from club and man.] One who carries a club.

Alcides, furnam'd Hercules,
The only clubman of his time. Trag. of Soliman and Perseda.

CLUBROOM. n. s. [club and room.] The room in which a club or company assembles.

These ladies resolved to give the pictures of their deceased husbands to the clubroom. Addison, Spectator.

To CLUCK. v. n. [cloccian, Welsh; clochat, Armoric; cloccan, Saxon; kloeken, Dutch.] To call chickens; as a hen.

She, poor hen, fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Ducklings, though hatched by a hen, if she brings them to a river, in they go, though the hen clucks and calls to keep them out. Ray on the Creation.

To CLUCK.* v. a. To call, as a hen calls chickens. The following example has been given by Dr. Johnson under the verb neuter. See also To CLOCK.

She, poor hen, fond of no second brood,
Has cluck'd thee to the wars. Shakspeare, Coriol.

CLUE.* n. s. The same as CLEW, which see. "A clue of yarn or thread."

Huloet.

Speak, is't so?
If it be not, you have wound a goodly clue. Shakspeare, All's Well.

CLUMP.† n. s. [formed from lump, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Germ. klump, a mass, a clod. The Su. klamp is also an unshapen piece of wood. Both perhaps from the Icel. klimpa.]

1. A shapeless piece of wood, or other matter, nearly equal in its dimensions.
2. A cluster of trees; a tuft of trees or shrubs: anciently a plump.

The small and circular clumps of firs, which I see planted upon some fine large swells, put me often in mind of a coronet placed on an elephant's or camel's back. Shenstone.

To CLUMPER.* v. a. [Germ. klumpfern.] To form into clumps or masses.

Vapours which now themselves consort
In several parts, and closely do conspire,
Clumper'd in balls of clouds. More, Song of the Soul, Infin. of Worlds.

CLUMPS.† n. s. A numbscull. Skinner. In Lincolnshire, clumps is idle, lazy, unhandy. Grose. Perhaps a corruption of clumsy, which see. But chumperton was formerly our word for a clown. Sherwood. Clumpse is defined both by Sherwood and Cotgrave asleep, benumbed.

CLUMSILY. adv. [from clumsy.] Awkwardly; without readiness; without nimbleness; without grace.

He walks very clumsily and ridiculously. Ray on Creation.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when affected. Collier on Pride.

CLUMSINESS. n. s. [from clumsy.] Awkwardness; ungainliness; want of readiness, nimbleness, or dexterity.

The drudging part of life is chiefly owing to clumsiness and ignorance, which either wants proper tools, or skill to use them. Collier on Fame.

CLUMSY.† adj. [This word, omitted in other etymologists, is rightly derived by Bailey from lompseh, Dutch, stupid. In English, lump, clump, lumpish, clumpish, clumpishly, clumsily, clumsy. Still we may go to the Germ. klump, as the original; and not omit the Su. klampig, which means clumsy.] Awkward; heavy; artless; unhandy; without dexterity, readiness or grace. It is used either of persons, or actions, or things.

The matter ductile and sequacious, apt to be moulded into such shapes and machines, even by clumsy fingers. Ray.

But thou in clumsy verse, unlik'd, unpainted, Hast shamefully def'd. Dryden.

That clumsy outside of a porter, How could it thus conceal a courtier? Swift.

CLUNG.† The preterite and participle of cling, formerly also written clung. [Sax. zeclunzue.]

CLUNG.† adj. [clunzū, Sax.] Wasted with leanness; shrunk up with cold. See the citation from Shakespeare's Macbeth in To CLING. The word is yet used in the north of England for any thing shrivelled or shrunk. It is the past part. of cling, rather than an adjective.

To CLUNG.† v. n. [clunzan, Sax.]

1. To dry as wood does, when it is laid up after it is cut. See To CLING.

2. To adhere; to remain fixed.

Globes entire

Of cruddled smoke, and heavy clung mists.

More, Song of the Soul, Tiffin. of Worlds.

CLU'NIACK.* n. s. [Lat. Cluniacensis, from Cluni in Burgundy, where this order of monks is said to have been first instituted.] One of a reformed order of Benedictine monks.

In 912, Oden, abbot of Cluny, took upon him to correct their [the Benedictines] abuses, and gave rise to the Cluniacs. Summary of Religious Houses.

CLU'NIACK.* adj. Belonging to the order of Cluny.

A Cluniack monk allegorised all the habit, and ornaments of the order. Gough.

CLUSTER. n. s. [clýrteþ, clurteþ, Sax. klister, Dutch.]

1. A bunch; a number of things of the same kind growing or joined together.

Grapes will continue fresh and moist all winter, if you hang them cluster by cluster in the roof of a warm room. Bacon.

A swelling knot is rais'd;

Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows, And from earth's moisture, mixt with sun-beams, grows. Denham.

The saline corpuscles of one liquor do variously act upon the tinging corpuscles of another, so as to make many of them associate into a cluster, whereby two transparent liquors may compose a coloured one. Newton.

C L U

An elm was near, to whose embraces led, The curling vine her swelling clusters spread. Pope.

2. A number of animals gathered together.

As bees

Pour forth their populous youth about the hive In clusters.

Milton, P. L.

There with their clasping feet together clung, And a long cluster from the laurel hung.

Dryden.

3. A body of people collected: used in contempt.

We lov'd him; but like beasts

And coward nobles, gave way to your clusters,

Who did hoot him out o' the city.

Shakespeare.

My friend took his station among a cluster of mob, who were making themselves merry with their betters. Addison.

To CLUSTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow in bunches; to gather into bunches, to congregate.

Forth flourish'd thick the clustering vine. Milton, P. L.

Great father Bacchus to my song repair;

For clustering grapes are thy peculiar care. Dryden.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CLUSTERY.† adj. [from cluster.] Growing in clusters; full of clusters.

Cotgrave and Sherwood.

To CLUTCH.† v. a. [Of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is from the Sax. ze-læccan, to snatch, to seize; zeclht hand is the hand closed, the grasp or seizure having been made.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe; to grasp.

Is this a dagger that I see before me,

The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I'll trust the sea first,

When with her hollow murmurs she invites me

And clutches in her storms. Beaumont and Fletcher, False One.

They,

Like moles within us, heave and cast about;

And, 'till they foot and clutch their prey,

They never cool.

Herbert.

2. To comprize; to grasp.

A man may set the poles together in his head, and clutch the whole globe at one intellectual grasp. Collier on Thought.

3. To contract; to double the hand, so as to seize and hold fast.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,

• When his fair angels would salute my palm.

Shakespeare, K. John.

CLUTCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe; grasp; seizure.

His cloak hangs on his shoulders much like a fiddler's;— and he fears to touch the sides on't, or give it a wipe under his arm, for fear his dirty clutch should grease it.

Characters about 1661, 12mo.

2. Generally, in the plural, the paws, the talons.

It was the hard fortune of a cock to fall into the clutches of a cat. L'Estrange.

3. Hands, in a sense of rapacity and cruelty.

Your greedy slav'ring to devour,

Before 'twas in your clutches pow'r.

Hudibras.

Set up the covenant on crutches,

'Gainst those who have us in their clutches.

Hudibras.

I must have great leisure, and little care of myself, if I ever more come near the clutches of such a giant. Stillingfleet.

CLUTTER.† n. s. [See CLATTER. Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. Serenius gives the old Goth.

klutr, debate, dispute. The Teut. verb kloteren or kleuteren, to beat or knock often, may be looked upon as more nearly allied to our word.] A noise; a bustle; a busy tumult; a hurry; a clamour. A low word.

He saw what a clutter there was with huge, over-grown pots, pans, and spits. L'Estrange.

The favourite child that just begins to prattle, is very humorous, and makes great clutter, 'Till he has windows on his bread and butter. King.

Prithoe, Tim, why all this clutter? Swift.
Why ever in these raging fits?

TO CLUTTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a noise, or bustle.

CLYSTER. † n. s. [Fr. clystère, (Gr. κλύσις from κλύω, to wash.) A liquid remedy, or injection, introduced into the intestines by the fundament.

If nature relieves by a diarrhoea, without sinking the strength of the patient, it is not to be stopt, but promoted gently by emollient clysters. Arbuthnot.

CLYSTER-PIPE. \ n. s.* The tube or pipe, by which a clyster is injected. "A certain bird, called Ibis, about the banks of the Nile, first taught the Egyptians the way of administering clysters; for this bird has been often observed, by means of his crooked bill intronitted into the anus, to inject salt water, as with a syringe, into its own bowels, and thereby to exonerate its paunch when too much obstructed." Greenhill's Art of Embalming, 1705, p. 232. Shakspeare uses the word clyster-pipe, in a contemptuous sense.

TO CLYSTERIZE. \ v. n.* [old Fr. clysteriser.] To apply a clyster. Cotgrave and Sherwood.

CLYSTERWISE. \ adv.* In the manner of a clyster. Grant an entire efficacy to this balsamick liquor, thus clysterwise immitted into the intestines. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 273.

TO COACERVATE. † v. a. [coacervo, Latin.] To heap up together.]

The collocation of the spirits in bodies, whether the spirits be coacervate or diffused. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If you could pry into my memory, you should discover there a huge magazine of your favours you have been pleased to do me, present and absent, safely stored up and coacervated, to preserve them from mouldering away in oblivion. Howell, Lett. i. i. 33.

COACERVATION. † n. s. [old Fr. coacervation.] The act of heaping, or state of being heaped together.

The fixing of it is the equal spreading of the tangible parts, and the close coacervation of them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COACH. † n. s. [coche, Fr. koczy, among the Hungarians, by whom this vehicle is said to have been invented. Minshew. Formerly written coch, see COACHMAKER; and, soon after its general use in this country, called quitch. "He kept his coach, which was rare in those days, [in the time of queen Elizabeth:] they then vulgarly called it a quitch." Aubrey's relation of Dr. Aubrey, Anecd. ii. 219. Burton seems to distinguish the coach from a caroche. "They shall have gowns, tires, jewels, coaches, and caroches." Anat. of Mel. p. 500. See CARRIAGE.] A carriage of pleasure or state, distinguished from a chariot by having seats fronting each other.

Basilus attended for her in a coach, to carry her abroad to see some sports. Sidney.

A better would you fix? Pope.
Then give humility a coach and six.

Suppose that last week my coach was within an inch of overturning in a smooth even way, and drawn by very gentle horses. Swift.

TO COACH. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To carry in a coach.

When I run,
Ride, sail, am coach'd, know I how far I have gone;
And my mind's motion not? B. Jonson, Underwoods.

The needy poet sticks to all he meets,
Coach'd, carted, trod upon; now loose, now fast,
And carry'd off in some flog's tail at last. Pope.

2. To draw together, as horses harnessed to a coach.
For wit, ye may be coach'd together.

Every Woman in her Humour, 1609.

COACHBOX. n. s. [coach and box.] The seat on which the driver of the coach sits.

Her father had two coachmen: when one was in the coach-box, if the coach swung but the least to one side, she used to shriek. Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

COACHFUL. \ n. s.* [from coach and full.] A coach filled with persons.

Under the first are comprehended all those who are carried down in coachfuls to Westminster Hall.

Addison, Spect. No. 21.

COACH-HIRE. n. s. Money paid for the use of a hired coach.

You exclaim as loud as those that praise,
For scraps and coach-hire, a young noble's plays. Dryden.
My expences in coach-hire make no small article. Spectator.

COACH-HORSE. \ n. s.* [coach and horse.] A horse designed principally for drawing a coach.]

They drew together like coach-horses.

Narrative of the King's Entertainment, 1603.

'Tis the swaggering coach-horse Annaides, that draws with him there. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

COACH-HOUSE. n. s. [coach and house.] The house in which the coach is kept from the weather.

Let him lie in the stable or the coach-house. Swift.

COACHMAKER. † n. s. [coach and maker. Formerly coachwright. "Our only and true Salomon, who hath devised and built this coach by his trusty and faithful coachwrights and carpenters." Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. p. 364.] The artificer whose trade is to make coaches.

Her chariot is an empty hazel-nut,
Made by the joyner, Squirrel, or old Grub;
Time out of mind, the fairies coach-makers. Shakspeare.

Take care of your wheels: get a new set bought, and probably the coach-maker will consider you. Swift.

COACHMAN. † n. s. [from coach and man.] The old word was coacher. "His coche was pluckt in pieces by evil cochers." Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. p. 375.] The driver of a coach.

*Thy nags, the leanest things alive,
So jery hard thou lov'st to drive;
I heard thy anxious coachman say,
It cost thee more in whips than hay. Prior.

She commanded her trembling coachman to drive her chariot near the body of her king. South.

COACHMANSHIP. \ n. s.* [from coachman.] The skill of a coachman.

In two or three years he acquired the usual advantages of this sort of education, such as the arts of sporting, billiards, and coachmanship. Jenyns.

TO COACT. † v. n. [from con and act.] To act together; to act in concert. Not used.

But if I tell how these two did coact,
Shall I not lie in publishing a truth? Shakspeare.

COACTED. \ part. adj.* [Lat. coactus.] Forced.

Speak to him, fellow, speak to him. I'll have none of this coacted, unnatural dumbness in my house, in a family where I govern. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

COA'CTION.† n. s. [old Fr. coaction.] Compulsion; force, either restraining or impelling.

Christ left all men in liberty to marry, if they list; forbidding all men firmly to make any law of coaction or of separation, where God hath set freedom in marriage.

Bale, Acts of Eng. Notaries, (1560.) i. 16.
Feed the flocks of Christ, as much as in you lyeth; not taking care thereof by coaction, but willingly.

Woolton's Christian Manuall, (1576.) D. ii.
All outward coaction is contrary to the nature of liberty.

Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.
His services not flowing naturally from propensity and inclination, but being drawn and forced from him by terror and coaction.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coaction, and despotical. South.

COA'CTIVE.† adj. [from coact.]

1. Having the force of restraining or impelling; compulsory; restrictive.

The Levitical priests in the old law, never arrogated unto themselves any temporal or coactive power. Raleigh.

They do all intend coactive jurisdiction in the exterior court of the church. Bp. Bramhall, Schisme Guarded, p. 136.

There may be considered in them the power of jurisdiction; in foro externo, and coactive. Bp. Barlow, Remains, p. 612.

2. Acting in concurrence. Obsolete.

Imagination,
With what's unreal thou coactive art. Shakspeare.

COA'CTIVELY.* adv. [from coactive.] In a compulsory or restrictive manner.

All legislative, judiciary, and dispensative power, coactively, in the exterior court of the church over English subjects.

Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, p. 177.

Thracius coadjutant, and the roar
Of fierce Buroclydon. Philips.

COADJU'TOR.† n. s. [old Fr. coadjuteur.]

1. A fellow-helper; an assistant; an associate; one engaged in the assistance of another.

I should not succeed in a project, whereof I have had no hint from my predecessors the poets, or their seconds or coadjutors the critics. Dryden.

Away the friendly coadjutor flies. Garth's Dispensary.

A gownman of a different make,
Whom Pallas, once Vanessa's tutor,
Had fix'd on for her coadjutor. Swift.

2. [In the canon law.] One who is empowered or appointed to perform the duties of another.

A bishop that is unprofitable to his diocese ought to be deposed, and no coadjutor assigned him. Ayliff.

Valerius progressed Augustine in his life-time to be designed bishop of Hippo, and to be joined fellow-bishop with himself, though it was flatly against the canons. For a coadjutor commonly proves an hinderer; and, by his envious clashing, doth often dig his partner's grave with whom he is joined.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 273.

I find a learned and late canonist has very much about coadjutors; but it is for coadjutors to archdeacons, and dignified men, below the order of bishops. Bp. Barlow, Remains, p. 160.

COADJU'TRIX.* n. s. [from coadjutor.] She who is a fellow-helper.

She is admirably qualified to be his companion, confidant, counsellor, and coadjutrix. Smollett.

COADJU'VANCY. n. s. [from con and adjuvo, Lat.] Help; concurrent help; contribution of help; co-operation.

Crystal is a mineral body, in the difference of stones, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof, owing to the coldness of the earth, some concurrence, and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency. Brown, Vulg. Err.
VOL. I.

COADU'NITION. n. s. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of, or corruption from the coadunition of particles endued with contrary qualities.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

COADVE'NTURER.* n. s. [from con and adventurer.] A fellow-adventurer.

There is a worthy captain in this town, who was coadventurer in that expedition. Howell, Lett. ii. 61.

TO COAFFO'REST.* v. a. [from con and afforest.] To convert ground into forest.

Henry Fitz-Empresse (viz. the second) did coafforest much land, which continued all his reign, though much complained of. Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

Unfortunate Druina, and all her coafforested territories.

Ibid. iv. 23.

COA'GENT.* n. s. [con and agent.]. An associate; one co-operating with another.

Your doom is then

To marry this coagent of your mischiefs.

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta.

TO COAGME'NT.† v. a. [old Fr. coagmenter, from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

COAGMENTA'TION. n. s. [from coagment.] Collection, or coacervation into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third is the skin and coat, which rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words; when as it is smooth, gentle, and sweet, &c. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

COA'GULABLE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain-water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol. Boyle.

TO COA'GULATE. v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'erized with coagulate gore. Shakspeare.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the rumen, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum. Arbuthnot.

TO COA'GULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulateth little, but ningleth, and the spirit swims not above. Bacon.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coagulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. coagulation.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

From insensible attractions of most minute particles at the smallest distance, are derived cohesion, dissolution, coagulation, animal secretion, fermentation, and all chemical operations.

Rp. Berkeley, Siris, § 236.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulations is not merely saline, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbuthnot.

COA'GULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That which has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol.

Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. s. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrassating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents.

Arbuthnot.

COAK. n. s. See COKE.

COAL. † n. s. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphurous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for fuel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit coal is called cannel, or canole coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze 'till it be burnt out.

Chambers.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy hue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes.

Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforc'd, falls by her own consent;

As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent.

Dehnam.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whosoever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth.

Bacon.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,

Or hailstones in the sun.

Shakspeare.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me.

Shakspeare.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,

And his face kindled like a burning coal.

Dryden.

4. To call over the coals. An expression, not yet disused, signifying to call to a severe account; in allusion perhaps to the ancient ordeal of the burning ploughshare.

To COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost, in buying the wood for this service, felling, frathing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways.

Carver, Surv. of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal.

Bacon.

2. To delineate with a coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhimes upon the wall, near to the picture.

Camden.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of a coal.

As burning Ætna, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrap in coal-black clouds and filthy smook.

Spenser, F. Q.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous effluences, and complexional tinctures.

Brown.

Coal-black his colour, but like jet it shone;

His legs and flowing tail were white alone.

Dryden.

COAL-BOX. n. s. [coal and box.] A box to carry coals to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unightly things.

Swift.

COAL-FISH. n. s. [asellus niger.] A species of beardless gadus.

COAL-HOUSE. \ n. s.* [from coal and house.] A place to put coals in.

Bonner's conscience made his palace a coal-house, and a dungeon.

Junius, Sin Stigmatized, p. 812.

COAL-MINE. n. s. [from coal and mine.] A mine in which coals are dug; a coal-pit.

Springs injure land, that flow from coal-mines.

Mortimer.

COAL-MINER. \ n. s.* [from coal and mine.] One who works in a coal mine.

Like coalminers about a line, when the candles burning blue tell the damp cometh, they will fasten upon the bait.

Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 295.

COAL-PIT. n. s. [from coal and pit.] A pit made in the earth, generally to a great depth, for digging coals.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit.

Woodward.

COAL-SHIP. \ n. s.* [from coal and ship.] A ship that carries coals; what is now termed a collier.

The pirate never spends his shot upon coal-ships, but lets fly at the rich merchant.

Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 389.

COAL-STONE. n. s. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and enlures the fire much longer than coal.

Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. s. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coals are found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence authors may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines.

Fulton.

COALERY. n. s. [from coal.] A place where coals are dug.

Two fine stalactitæ were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery.

Woodward.

To COALF'SCE. † v. n. [old Fr. coalescer, coalesco, Latin]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours.

Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALESCENCE. † n. s. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

That he should not be aware of the future coalescence of these bodies into one.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, ch. 2.

But in the second consideration it is symptoma morbi, nempe solutio unitatis, when by reason of the breaking of the Golden Bowl, and shrinking up into itself, there immediately follows a coalescence of all the vessels thereof.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 224.

From these modes of natural coalescence arises the grammatical regimen of the verb by its nominative, of the accusative by its verb.

Harris, Hermes, ii. §. 3.

COALITION. n. s. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties.

Glanville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great; they provide laws for their present exigence.

Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses: without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity.

Bentley.

CO'ALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coaly Tine, or ancient hallow'd Dec.

Milton, Vac. E.

COAPTA'TION. n. s. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed by virtue of the size, shape, bigness, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Broome.

To COA'RCT.* } v. a. [coarcto, Latin; coarcter,
To COA'RCTATE. } old Fr.]

1. To straighten; to confine into a narrow compass.

Rancour coarcted, and long detained in a narrow room, at the last brasteth out with intolerable violence, and bringeth all to confusion. Sir T. Flyot, Gov. fol. 6.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.

If a man coarcts himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself that he has thus coarcted or straightened himself so far. Ayliffe.

COARCTA'TION. n. s. [from coarct; old Fr. coartacion.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound. Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straighten the artery never so much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat below, or beyond the coarctation. Ray.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coercion, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bp. Bramhall.

COARSE. † adj. [The Goth. kaurids, heavy, depressed, seems akin to this word. "kauridai slepa, they were heavy with sleep," St. Luke, ix. 32.]

1. Not refined; not separated from impurities or baser parts.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are molded. Shakespeare.

2. Not soft or fine; used of cloth, of which the threads are large.

In cloth is to be considered wool, the matter of it, whether it be coarse or fine. Scott's Essay on Drapery, (1635) p. 5.

3. Rude; uncivil; rough of manners.

Those who have been polished in France, make use of the most coarse uncivilized words in our language, and utter themselves often in such a manner as a clown would blush to hear. Addison, Spect. No. 119.

4. Gross; not delicate.

'Tis not the coarser tie of human law
That binds their peace. Thomson, Spring.

5. Inelegant; rude; unpolished.

Praise of Virgil is against myself, for presuming to copy, in my coarse English, his beautiful expressions. Dryden.

6. Not nicely expert; unfinished by art or education.

Practical rules may be useful to such as are remote from advice, and to coarse practitioners, which they are obliged to make use of. Arbutnot on Aliments.

7. Mean; not nice; not elegant; vile.

Ill consort, and a coarse perfume,
Disgrace the delicacy of a feast. Roscommon.

A coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, to rot just as it grows. Olway, Orphan.

From this coarse mixture of terrestrial parts,
Desire and fear by turns possess their hearts. Dryden, Virg.

COARSELY. † adv. [from coarse.]

1. Without fineness; without refinement.

2. Meanly; not elegantly.

John came neither eating nor drinking, but fared coarsely and poorly, according to the apparel he wore. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Rudely; not civilly.

The good cannot be too much honoured, nor the bad too coarsely used. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

4. Inelegantly.

Be pleased to accept the rudiments of Virgil's poetry, coarsely translated; but which yet retains some beauties of the author. Dryden, Virg. Ded.

5. Not delicately; grossly.

There is a gentleman, that serves the count,
Reports but coarsely of her. Shakespeare, All's Well.

CO'ARSENESS. n. s. [from coarse.]

1. Impurity; unrefined state.

First know the materials whereof the glass is made; then consider what the reason is of the coarseness or clearness. Bacon, Essays.

2. Roughness; want of fineness.

3. Grossness; want of delicacy.

Friends (pardon the coarseness of the illustration) as dogs in couples, should be of the same size. L'Estrange.

4. Roughness; rudeness of manners.

A base wild olive he remains:
The shrub the coarseness of the clown retains. Garth.

5. Meanness; want of nicety;

Consider the penuriousness of the Hollanders, the coarseness of their food and raiment, and their little indulgences of pleasure. Addison on the War.

To COASSU'ME.* v. a. [from con and assume.] To take upon one's self.

Was it not enough to assume our nature, and the properties belonging to that nature, and the actions arising from those properties, but thou must coassume the weaknesses of nature, of properties, of actions?

Walsall, Life and Death of Christ, (1615,) B. 6. b.

COAST. † n. s. [coste, Fr. costa, Lat.]

1. The edge or margin of the land next the sea; the shore. It is not used for the banks of less waters.

He sees in English ships the Holland coast. Dryden.

2. The border, limit, or frontier of a country. This meaning is given in our ancient lexicography; and what our present version of the N. Test. renders coasts, Wicliffe renders countries or ends. This sense is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.

The four coasts and quarters of the world. Hulcot.

Herod — slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof. St. Matt. ii. 16.

The Jews — raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. Acts, xiii. 50.

3. It seems to be taken by Newton for side, like the French coste. It was likewise so used by Bacon. And we still use the expression of a coast of mutton.

The south-east is found to be better for ripening of trees than the south-west; though the south-west be the hottest coast. Bacon.

Some kind of virtue, lodged in some sides of the crystal, inclines and bends the rays towards the coast, of unusual refraction; otherwise the rays would not be refracted towards that coast rather than any other coast, both at their incidence and at their emergence, so as to emerge by a contrary situation of the coast. Newton, Opt.

4. The Coast is clear. A proverbial expression. The danger is over; the enemies have marched off.

Going out, and seeing that the coast was clear, Zephane dismissed Musidorus. Sidney.

The royal spy, when now the coast was clear,
Sought not the garden, but retired unseen. Dryden.

To COAST. † v. n. [old Fr. costoyer, old Eng. costay, Ch.]

1. To sail close by the coast; to sail within sight of land.

But steer my vessel with a steady hand,
And coast along the shore in sight of land. Dryden, Virgil.

The ancients coasted only in their navigation, seldom taking the open sea. Arbutnot on Coins

2. To approach; to draw near. See To ACCOST.

Where towards me a sorry wight did coast.

Spenser, Daphnida.
And all in haste she coasteth to the cry.
Shakespeare, Ven. and Adonis.

To COAST.† v. a.

1. To sail by; to sail near to.

Nearchus, the admiral of Alexander, not knowing the compass, was fain to coast that shore. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The greatest entertainment we found in coasting it, were the several prospects of woods, vineyards, meadows, and corn fields, which lie on the borders of it. Adrian on Italy.

2. To keep close to; to pursue.

William Douglas still coasted the Englishmen, doing them what damage he might. Holished's Chron. iii. 352.

We'll gallop to Segovia,
And if we light of no news there, hear nothing;
We'll e'en turn fairly home, and coast the other side.
Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

My lord is coasted one way,
My father, though his hurts forbade his travel,
Hath took another. Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

COASTER. n. s. [from coast.] He that sails near the shore.

In our small skiff we must not launch too far;
We here but coasters, not discoverers are. Dryden.

COAT.† n. s. [cotte, Fr. cotta, Ital. Dr. Johnson says. To these may be added the Germ. cutt, probably from the Celt. kutten, to cover; Goth. kot. The Armorick cod is a garment which covers the breast. The Lat. cota is termed a coat: "Interior tunica cota vocatur," Poggii Facetiae, p. 462. Low Lat. cota and cotta. V. Du Cange.]

1. The upper garment.

He was armed with a coat of mail, and the weight of the coat was five thousand shekels of brass. 1 Sam. xvi. 5.
The coat of many colours they brought to their father, and said, This have we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or no. Genesis, xxxvii. 30.

2. Petticoat; the habit of a boy in his infancy; the lower part of a woman's dress.

A friend's younger son, a child in coats, was not easily brought to his book. Locke.

3. The habit or vesture, as demonstrative of the office. For his intermeddling with arms, he is the more excuseable, because many of his coat, in those times, are not only martial directors, but commanders. Howell, Vocal Forest.

Men of his coat should be minding their prayers,
And not among ladies to give themselves airs. Swift.

4. The hair or fur of a beast; the covering of any animal. So a hawk of the first coat, two years old.

He clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts; or slain,
Or, as the snake, with youthful coat repaid;
And thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton, P. E.
Give your horse some powder of brimstone in his oats, and it will make his coat lie fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

You have given us milk
In luscious streams, and lent us your own coat
Against the winter's cold. Thomson, Spring.

5. Any tegument; tunick; or covering.

The eye is defended with four coats or skins. Peacham.
The optick nerves have their medullary parts terminating in the brain, their teguments terminating in the coats of the eye. Derham, Physico-Theol.

Amber is a nodule, invested with a coat, called rock-amber. Woodward on Fossils.

6. That on which the ensigns armorial are portrayed. [allied to the Gr. σχιος, a shield.]

The herald of love's mighty king,
In whose coat armour richly are display'd
All sorts of flowers the which on earth do spring. Spenser.
Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. 1.

Those other glorious notes,
Inscribed in touch, or marble, or the coats
Painted or carv'd upon our great men's tombs,
Or in their windows, do but prove the wombs
That bred them graves. B. Jonson, Forest.

At each trumpet was a banner bound,
Which, waving in the wind, display'd at large
Their master's coat of arms and knightly charge. Dryden.

7. A card, called rightly a coat-card, and corruptly a court-card. See COAT-CARD.

Some may be coats, as in the cards. B. Jonson, New Inn.
O, Gnotho, how is't? here's a trick of discarded cards of us!
We were rank'd with coats, as long as old master lived. Massinger, Old Law.

To COAT.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cover; to invest; to overspread; as, to coat a retort; to coat a ceiling.

The ill man rides through all confidently; he is coated and booted for it. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A victor he, from the deep phalanx pierc'd
Of iron-coated Macedon. Thomson, Liberty, iii. 262.

COAT-CARD.* n. s. This expression is taken from the dress or coat, in which the king, queen, and knave, principal cards, are represented; and not from court, as it has often been pretended. See 7th sense of COAT.

Mad. We call'd him a coat-card
O' the last order.

Pen. jun. What's that? a knave?
Mad. Some readings have it so; my manuscript
Doth speak it varlet. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To COAX.† v. a. [B. Jonson writes it cokes. It may be a corruption of our word cock or cocker. But bishop Kennet and Lye think it formed from cog, a boat; whence cogciones, and cociones; and so applying the custom of sailors begging money by pretences of shipwreck and other losses to coaxing or wheedling men out of their charity. This will hardly be received. Lye applies the same to the verb Cog. Coaxation has been adopted from the sound or usage of many words. To coax is indeed to employ, in low language, much croaking. The Lat. coaxo, and the old Fr. coaxer is, to croak like a frog; and in imitation of this word, derived from Aristophanes's chorus of frogs chanting χοαχ, χοαχ, Featley has coined coaxation, which however he uses ambiguously, or at least contemptuously. "Now that I have set up a light on the banks, and clearly discovered both them [the Anabaptists] and their errors; I hope we shall see no more of their frog-galliards, nor hear of their harsh croaking and coaxation either in the pulpit or the press." Featley, Dippers Dipt, p. 227.] To wheedle; to flatter; to humour. A low word.

The nurse had changed her note; she was nuzzling and coaxing the child; that's a good dear, says she. L'Estrange.
I coax! I wheedle! I'm above it. Farquhar, Rec. Officer.

COAX.* n. s. [from the verb.] A dupe.

Go! you're a brainless coax, a toy, a fop.
Beaum. and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

Why, we will make a cokes of this wise master,
We will, my mistress, an absolute fine coker,
And mock, to air, all the deep diligences
Of such a solemn and effectual ass. B. Jonson, The Devil is an Ass.

COAXATION.* n. s. [from coax.] The art of coaxing, or flattering for any particular purpose. See To COAX.

COAXER. n. s. [from the verb.] A wheedler; a flatterer.

COB

COB. A word often used in the composition of low terms; corrupted from copp, Sax. kopp, Germ. the head or top.

COB. † n. s.

1. A sort of sea fowl, called also sea-cob; the sea-mew. Phillips.
2. In some provinces, and probably in old language, a spider; whence cobweb. [Dutch, cob, a spider.]
3. A horse not castrated. In our northern dialect, cob is a testicle.
4. A coin, so called perhaps from its roundness: so cob-nut, a corruption of the Sax. copp, a head.
He then drew out a large leathern bag, and poured out the contents, which were silver cobs, upon the table. Sheridan's Life of Swift, § 1.

CO'BALT. n. s. A marcasite frequent in Saxony.

Cobalt is plentifully impregnated with arsenick; contains copper and some silver. Being sublimed, the flores are of a blue colour: these German mineralists call zaffir. Woodward.

Cobalt is a dense, compact, and ponderous mineral, very bright and shining, and much resembling some of the antimonial ores. It is found in Germany, Saxony, Bohemia, and England; but ours is a poor kind. From cobalt are produced the three sorts of arsenick, white, yellow, and red; as also zaffre and smalt. Hill on Fossils.

TO COBBLE. v. a. [kobler, Danish.]

1. To mend any thing coarsely; used generally of shoes.
If you be out, sir, I can mend you. — Why, sir, cobble you. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i'th' capitol; making parties strong,
And feeble such as stand not in their liking,
Below their cobbled shoes. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Many underlayers, when they could not live upon their trade, have raised themselves from cobbling to flunting. J. Strange.

2. To do or make any thing clumsily, or unhandily.

Reject the nauseous praises of the times;
Give thy base poets back their cobbled rhimes. Dryden.

Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment and tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are since continually ordered and disposed for the best, and that principally for the benefit and pleasure of man; than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering;—nothing effected for any purpose or design, but all ill favouredly cobbled and jumbled together? Bentley, Sermon 1.

COBBLE, OR CO'BLE.* n. s.

1. A fishing boat. [Sax. cwopele.]
Every day the cobles, or little fishing boats, are drawn on shore. Pennant.

2. A pebble; still used in this sense, in the north of England. "As hard as a cobble."
Their hands shook swords, their slings held cobbles round. Fairfax, Tasso, xx. 29.

CO'BBLER. n. s. [from cobble.]

1. A mender of old shoes.
Not many years ago it happened that a cobbler had the casting vote for the life of a criminal. Addison on Italy.

2. A clumsy workman in general.
What trade are you?—

Truly, sir, in respect of a fine workman, I am but, as you would say, a cobbler. Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.

3. In a kind of proverbial sense, any mean person.
Think you the great prerogative t' enjoy
Of doing ill, by virtue of that race;
As if what we esteem in cobblers base,
Would the high family of Brutus grace? Dryden, Juu.

CO'BCOALS.* n. s. Large round coals. Grose.

COB

CO'BIRONS. n. s. [cob and iron.] Irons with a knob at the upper end.

The implements of the kitchen; as spits, ranges, cobirons, and pots. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

CO'BISHOP. n. s. [cob and bishop.] A coadjutant bishop.

Valerius, advanced in years, and a Grecian by birth, not qualified to preach in the Latin tongue, made use of Austin as a cobishop, for the benefit of the church of Hippo. Ayliffe.

CO'BLOAF.* n. s. A crusty uneven loaf. North.

Shakspeare applies the word contemptuously to personal appearance, where Ajax calls Thersites "a cobloaf," Tr. and Cressida. A corruption of cop; a loaf with a large head.

CO'BNUT.† n. s. [cob and nut.]

1. A boy's game; the conquering nut.
2. A large nut; what some now call the nut of the Barcelona hazle, and what was formerly "the name of a walnut." Barret.

COBO'B.* n. s. See CABOB.

CO'BSTONES.* n. s. Large stones. North. Grose.

CO'BSWAN.† n. s. [cob, and swan.] The head or leading swan; Dr. Johnson says. I should rather suppose the male swan. See COB.

I'm not taken
With a cobswan, or a high-mounting buil,
As foolish Leda and Europa were. B. Jonson, Catiline.

CO'BWEB.† n. s. [kopweb, Dutch; atpen-coppa, Sax. atpen-cop, Cumb. the spider's web.]

1. The web or net of a spider: from cob, a spider. [See COB.]

The luckless Clarion,
With violent swift flight, forth carried
Into the cursed cobweb, which his foe
Had framed for his final overthrow. Spenser.

Is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewed, and cobwebs swept? Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

The spider in the house of a burgher, fell presently to her net-work of drawing cobwebs up and down. J. Strange.

2. Any snare, or trap; implying insidiousness and weakness.

For he a rope of sand could twist,
As tough as learned Sorbonist;
And weave fine cobwebs fit for scull
That's empty, when the moon is full. Hudibras.

Laws are like cobwebs, which may catch small flies; but let wasps and hornets break through. Swift.

CO'BWEB.* adj. This word is often used adjectively, both simply and figuratively, denoting any thing fine, slight, or flimsy; whence the application of it to lawn, a fashionable article of female dress in elder times. In Norfolk, a cobweb morning is a misty morning.

Break through such tender cobweb niceties,
That oft entangle these blind buzzing flies. Mure, Philos. Poems, p. 319.

Item, a charm surrounding fearfully
Your partic-per-pale picture one half drawn
In solemn cyprus, th' other cobweb lawn. B. Jonson, Epig.
The worst are good enough for such a trifle,
Such a proud piece of cobweb lawn. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

Chronology at best is but a cobweb law, and he broke through it with his weight. Dryden.

Opinion's feeble coverings, and the veil
Spun from the cobweb fashion of the times
To hide the feeling heart. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

CO'BWEBBED.* adj. [from cobweb. Employed by one of our forgotten poets, and borrowed by Young.] Covered with the webs of spiders.

Who lov'd the golden mean, doth safely want
A cobwebb'd cot, and wrongs entail'd upon't. Lovelace, Lucasta, Posth. p. 57.

The cowbell'd cottage, with its ragged wall
Of mouldering mud, is royalty to me. Young, Night Th. 1.
COCA. See CACAO, and COTOA.

COCCI'FEROUS. adj. [from κόκκος, and fero, Lat.]
All plants or trees are so called that have berries.

COCCULUS INDICUS.* [Lat.] A poisonous narcotick berry, known mostly now to poachers, who have got a trick of intoxicating fish therewith, so as to take them out of the water with their hands; for which reason these berries are called baccæ piscatoriae, fisher-berries. Chambers.

COCCYX.* n. s. [Lat. coccyx, the cuckoo.] In anatomy, a bone joined to the extremity of the os sacrum; so called, as some think, from its resemblance to the beak of a cuckoo.

CO'CHINEAL. n. s. [cochinilla, Span. a woodlouse.]
An insect gathered upon the opuntia, and dried: from which a beautiful red colour is extracted.

CO'CHLEARY. adj. [from cochlea, Lat. a screw.] Screw-form; in the form of a screw.

That at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spire, and cochleary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'CHLEATED. adj. [from cochlea, Lat.] Of a screwed or turbinated form.

Two pieces of stone, struck forth of the cavity of the umbilici of shells, of the same sort with the foregoing: they are of a cochleated figure. Woodward on Fossils.

COCK.† n. s. [cocc, Saxon; coq, French; κόκκυξ, Gr. whence κόκκυξω, to crow like a cock.]

1. The male to the hen; a domestick fowl, remarkable for his gallantry, pride, and courage.

Cocks have great combs and spurs; hens, little or none. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

True cocks o' th' game,
That never ask for what, or whom, they fight;
But turn 'em out, and shew 'em but a foe,
Cry liberty, and that's a cause of quarrel. Dryden.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around,
Fed and defended by the fearless cock. Thomson, Spring.

2. The male of any small birds.

Calves and philosophers, tigers and statesmen, cock sparrows and coquets, exactly resemble one another in the formation of the pineal gland. Arbutnot and Pope.

3. The weathercock, that shews the direction of the wind by turning.

You cataracts and hurricanoes spout,
'Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks! Shakespeare.

4. A spout to let out water at will, by turning the stop. The handle had probably a cock on the top. Things that were contrived to turn seem anciently to have had that form, whatever was the reason.

When every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy,
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow. Shakespeare.

It were good there were a little cock made in the belly of the upper glass. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thus the small jett, which hasty hands unlock,
Spirits in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

5. The notch of an arrow.

6. The part of the lock of a gun that strikes with the flint. [From cacca, Ital. the notch of an arrow. Skinner. Perhaps from the action, like that of a cock pecking; but it was, I think, so called when it had not its present form.]

With hasty rage he snatch'd
His gunshot, that in holsters watch'd,
And bending cock, he levell'd full
Against th' outside of Talgol's skull.

Hudibras.
A seven-shot gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges. Under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder from the box to a funnel at the further end of the lock. Grew.

7. A conquerour; a leader; a governing man.

Sir Andrew is the cock of the club since he left us. Addison.
My schoolmaster call'd me a dunce and a fool;
But at cuffs I was always the cock of the school. Swift.

8. Cockrowing; a note of the time in a morning.

We were carousing till the second cock. Shakespeare.
He begins at curfew, and goes 'till the first cock. Shakespeare.

9. A cockboat; a small boat.

They take view of all sized cocks, barges, and fisherboats hovering on the coast. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy,
Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare.

10. A small heap of hay. [Properly cop.]

As soon as the dew is off the ground, spread the hay again, and turn it, that it may wither on the other side: then handle it, and, if you find it dry, make it up into cocks. Mortimer.

11. The form of a hat. [From the comb of the cock.]

You see many a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, moulding it into several different cocks. Addison.

12. The style or gnomon of a dial. Chambers.

13. The needle of a balance.

14. Cock on the Hoop. Triumphant; exulting. [Some think that this expression is taken from one who madly draws the cock out of a barrel, and lays it on the hoop or top of the cask, letting all the liquor run to waste. But Cotgrave, under the old Fr. adjective lupé, gives us "copped, crested; hence also, proud, cocket, lofty, statelié, that bears himself high, that thinks well of himself." This etymology will probably be preferred.]

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Camden, Remains.

You'll make a mutiny among my guests!
You will set cock a hoop! Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

For Hudibras, who thought h' had won
The field, as certain as a gun,
And having routed the whole troop,
With victory was cock a hoop. Hudibras.

15. Cock and a Bull. An expression yet in use, though unnoticed in our dictionaries; denoting tedious, unmeaning stories; mere babble.

Some men's sole delight is, to take tobacco, and drink all day long in a tavern or ale-house, to discourse, sing, jest, roar, talk of a cock and a bull over a pot, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 272.

To Cock. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To set erect; to hold bolt upright, as a cock holds his head.

This is that muscle which performs the motion so often mentioned by the Latin poets, when they talk of a man's cocking his nose, or playing the rhinoceros. Addison.

Our Lightfoot barks, and cocks his ears;
O'er yonder stile see Lubberkin appears. Gay, Pastorals.

Dick would cock his nose in scorn,
But Tom was kind and loving. Swift.

2. To set up the hat with an air of petulance and pertness.

Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
Here strok'd his chin and cock'd his hat. Prior.

An alert young fellow cock'd his hat upon a friend of his who entered. Addison, Spectator.

3 To mould the form of the hat.

4 To fix the cock of a gun ready for a discharge.

Some of them holding up their pistols cocked, near the door of the house, which they kept open. Dryden, Ded. ZEn.

5 To raise hay in small heaps.

*Sike'mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay.* Spenser, Shep. Cal.

To COCK.† v. n.

1. To strut; to hold up the head, and look big, or menacing, or pert.

Now in our times—war is made as much by money as by sword; and he that may longest pay his soldiers, goeth victor away. And if they be both disposed to cock it thoroughly, yet when they both be made bankrupts, then they must needs conclude a peace. Sir T. Smith, Orat. III. Append. to his Life.

Belshazzar was found wanting of days attainable by his age and constitution, in that he was found cocking up against God. Archdeacon Arneay's Alurum, (1661,) p. 161.

Sir Fopling is a fool so nicely writ,
The ladies would mistake him for a wit;
And when he sings, talks loud, and cocks, would cry,
I vow, methinks, he's pretty company. Dryden.

Every one cocks and struts upon it, and pretends to overlook us. Addison, Guardian.

2. To train or use fighting cocks.

Cries out 'gainst cocking, since he cannot bet. B. Jonson.

3. To cocker; to indulge too much.

Where cocking dads make sawcie lads
In youth to rage, to beg in age. Tusser, in his own Life, p. 162.

COCK, in composition, signifies small or little.

COCKADE.† n. s. [from cock.] A ribband worn in the hat.

Pert infidelity is wit's cockade. Young, Night Th. 7.

COCKADEN.* adj. [from cockade.] Wearing a cockade in the hat.

A pamper'd spendthrift, whose fantastick air,
Well-fashion'd figure, and cockaded brow,
He took in change. Young, Night Th. 5.

COCKAL.* n. s. Formerly used for the die itself, and for a game similar to that at dice; the "play at the huckle bone," as Barret calls it.

The ancients used to play at cockal, or casting of huckle-bones, which is done with smooth sheep's bones.

Kinder's Sanct. of Salvation, (1658,) p. 368.

Cockals, which the Dutch call teelings, are different from dice; for they are square with four sides, and dice have six. Ibid.

COCKATO.O.* n. s. [probably from the Fr. caqueteur, a prattler; though Sir T. Herbert offers a punning, but not admissible, etymology.] A bird of the parrot kind.

Here are also—in the Mauritius herons white and beautiful;—cacatoes, a sort of parrot, whose nature may well take name from cacato air, it is so fierce and so indomitable. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

She had two little dogs on a cushion in her lap, and a cockatoo on her shoulder. Gray, Lett. to Dr. Warton.

COCKATRICE.† n. s. [from cock and atrep, Sax. a serpent; or rather from the old Fr. cocatrice.] A serpent supposed to rise from a cock's egg.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

This was the end of this little cockatrice of a king, that was able to destroy those that did not espy him first. Bacon.

This cockatrice is soonest crushed in the shell; but, if it grows, it turns to a serpent and a dragon. Bp. Taylor.

My wife! 'tis she, the very cockatrice! Congreve.

COCKBOAT.† n. s. A small boat belonging to a ship. Formerly cogboat. See Cog. And sometimes cocket. [low Lat. coca; Armor. coket.]

That invincible armada, which having not fired a cottage of ours at land, nor taken a cockboat of ours at sea, wandered through the wilderness of the northern seas. Bacon.

Did they think it less dishonour to God to be like a brute, or a plant, or a cockboat, than to be like a man. Stillingfleet.

COCKBRAINED.* adj. Giddy; rash; hairbrained.

His instances out of the common law are all so quite beside the matter which he would prove, as may be a warning to all clients how they venture their business with such a cock-brained solicitor. Milton, Colasterion.

COCKBROTH. n. s. Broth made by boiling a cock.

Diet upon spoon-meats; as veal or cockbroths prepared with French barley. Harvey on Consumptions.

COCKCROWING. n. s. [cock and crow.] The time at which cocks crow; the morning.

Ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning. St. Mark, xiii. 35.

To COCKER.† v. a. [coqueline, French, Dr. Johnson says. It may, however, be a word of northern origin. Goth. bikukjan, to kiss. "Ni swaif bikukjan fotuns meinans," St. Luke, vii. 45. Hath not ceased to kiss my feet.] To cede; to fondle; to indulge.

Cocker thy child, and he shall make thee afraid.

Eccles. xxx. 9.

Shall a heedless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton brave our fields? Shakespeare, K. John.

What should I do,
But cocker up my genius, and live free? B. Jonson, For.

He that will give his son sugar-plums to make him learn, does but authorize his love of pleasure, and cocker up that propensity which he ought to subdue, Locke on Education.

Bred a fondling and an heiress;
Dress'd like any lady may'ress,
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

COCKER. n. s. [from cock.] One who follows the sport of cockfighting.

COCKER.* n. s. A sort of spatterdash. The word is yet used in the north of England.

Now doth he only scorn his Kendal green,
And his patch'd cockers now despised been. Bp. Hall, Sat. B. 4. S. 6.

COCKEREL. n. s. [from cock.] A young cock.

Which of them first begins to crow?—
The old cock?—The cockerel. Shakespeare.

What wilt thou be, young cockerel, when thy spurs
Are grown to sharpness? Dryden.

COCKERING.* n. s. [from cocker.] Indulgence.

Barret, and Sherwood.
What discipline is this, Parents, to nourish violent affections in youth, by cockering and wanton indulgencies, and to chastise them in mature age with a boyish rod of correction.

Milton, Doct. and Dico. of Divorce
Most children's constitutions are spoiled by cockering and tenderness. Locke on Education.

COCKET.* adj. [from To cock.] Brisk; pert; "to wax cocket." Sherwood.

COCKET.† n. s. [Of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says. Possibly, in the sense of acquittance, the warrant being delivered to the merchant, from "quo quietus recessit," according to the form of acquittances or discharges given at the Exchequer, usually concluding, abinde recessit quietus.]

1. A seal belonging to the king's customhouse: likewise a scroll of parchment, sealed and delivered by the officers of the customhouse to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandize is entered. Cowel.

The greatest profit did arise by the cocket of hides; for wool and woolsells were ever of little value in this kingdom. Davies.

2. A cock-boat. [old Fr. cocquet. See Cock-Boat.] Sherwood.

CO'CKFIGHT. † } n. s. [cock and fight.] A battle or CO'CKFIGHTING. } match of cocks.

In cockfights, to make one cock more hardy, and the other more cowardly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

All we have seen compar'd to his experience,
 Has been but cudgel-play or cock-fighting.

Beaum. and Fl. The Captain.

At the seasons of foot ball and cockfighting, these little republics reassume their national hatred to each other.

Addison.

CO'CKHORSE. adj. [cock and horse.] On horseback; triumphant; exulting.

Alma, they strenuously maintain,

Sits cockhorse on her throne, the brain.

Prior.

CO'CKING.* n. s. [from To cock.] The sport of cockfighting.

The cocking holds at Derby.

Bénum. and Fl. Monsieur Thomas.

CO'CKLE. † n. s. [coquille, French, cocklea, Lat.

κόχλος, Gr. from κόχλω, to turn round. Dr.

Johnson has given a second definition of this word, viz. a little or young cock, of which he gives a pretended example from Spenser's Shep. Calendar:

"as cockle on his dunghill &c." But, in truth,

Spenser has no such word. The true reading is, "as cocke on his dunghill crowing crancke,"

Septemb. ver. 46.] A small testaceous fish.

It is a cockle, or a walnut shell. Shakspeare.

We may, I think, from the make of an oyster, or cockle, reasonably conclude, that it has not so many, nor so quick senses, as a man. Locke.

Three common cockle shells, out of gravel pits. Woodward.

CO'CKLE-STAIRS. n. s. Winding or spiral stairs.

Chambers.

CO'CKLE. † n. s. [coccel, Saxon; lolium, zizania, Lat.] A weed that grows in corn. The same with cornrose; a species of poppy.

Let thistles grow instead of wheat, and cockle instead of barley. Joh. xxxi. 40.

You make mountains not of mole-hills, but of motes; long harvest for a small deal not of corn, but of cockle; and (as one said at the shearing of hogs) great cry for a little, and that not very fine, wool. Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, ch. 7.

In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,

The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakspeare.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys

The soil's disease, and into cockle strays. Dante.

To CO'CKLE. † v. a. [from cockle.] To contract into wrinkles like the shell of a cockle; "to crumple."

Sherwood.

Showers soon drench the camblet's cockled grain. Gay.

CO'CKLED. adj. [from cockle.] Shelled; or perhaps cochleate, turbinated.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,

Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakspeare.

CO'CKLER.* n. s. [from cockle.] One whose trade it is to take and sell cockles. Used in the north of England.

An old fisherman, mending his nets, told me a moving story; how a brother of the trade, a cockler, as he styled him, driving a little cart with two daughters, &c.

Gray, Lett. to Dr. Warton.

CO'CKLOFT. † n. s. [cock and loft.] The room over the garret, in which fowls are supposed to roost, unless it be rather corrupted from coploft, the cop or top of the house. It is written colloft by Fuller in his Holy State, and cockleloft repeatedly by Anthony Wood in his life of himself.

The word canaculum in the most usual and latest Roman sense is still meant of the garret, or cockloft as we call it; which was indeed the most contemptible part of the house, and of no better use than to be hired out to very ordinary and common people. Gregory's Notes on Scripture, p. 16.

If the lowest floors already burn,
Cocklofts and garrets soon will take their turn. Dryden, Juv.
 My garrets, or rather my cocklofts indeed, are very indifferently furnished; but they are rooms to lay lumber in.

Swift

CO'CKMASTER. n. s. [cock and master.] One that breeds game cocks.

A cockmaster bought a partridge, and turned it among the fighting cocks. L'Estrange.

CO'CKMATCH. n. s. [cock and match.] Cockfight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties preserve towards one another an outward shew of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Addison.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbutnot and Pope.

CO'CKNEY. † n. s. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, Pais de Cocaigne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un pais de Cocaigne.

Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in see by west Spayng,

Is a lond yhoce Cocaýng.

On which Dr. Hicckes has this remark: "Nunc coquin, coquine. Quæ olim apud Gallas otio, gulæ & ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem significabant. Hinc urbanos utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam, & desidiosam advocatos pagani nostri olim cocaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et poëta hic noster in monachos, & moniales, ut segue genus hominum, qui desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur, monasteria & monasticam vitam, in descriptione terræ Cockainæ, parabolyce perstringens." So far Dr. Johnson.—The etymology of this word has indeed exercised the conjectures of the learned in various ways. Meric Casaubon would refer it to the Greek οικογενής, (oicogenes,) one born and bred at home. Gratifying as such an origin must be, in point of classical antiquity, to those who are still called cockneys, it would now be difficult to find a believer in this imposing and sonorous etymon!—One of our oldest lexicographers thus defines a cockney, "molliculus, ineptus, delicatus, qui nescit res discernere, et qui se inaniter jactat," an effeminate, foolish fellow, who knows not how to distinguish things, and who is also very conceited, Huloet; who, in a similar manner, explains to play the cockney, to play the fool. After him comes Barret, late in the reign of Elizabeth, who defines a cockney, "a child tenderly brought up, a darling." This may seem to countenance the opinion of those, who derive the word from cocker or cock; and which Decker, a writer contemporary with Barret, in his "Knight's Conjuring," boldly affirms to be the derivation. "'Tis not their fault, but our mothers', our cockering mothers', who for their labour make us to be called cockneys." Pegge, in his Anecdotes of the Eng. Language, inclines to this etymology; deducing it, however, from the old Fr. coqueliner, to fondle, particip. coqueliné, whence, by dropping the penultimate, coquené. Mr. Douce thinks, that the word may have once been a term of fondness used towards male children, (in London more particularly,) as pigsney in like manner has been applied to a woman. Mr. Ellis, in his specimens of the Early English Poets, deduces it, in conformity to a remark made by Mr. Tyrwhitt that the word is probably borrowed originally from the kitchen, i. e. from coquina; and he cites a passage from Pierce Plowman's Visions, "I have no salt bacon, ne no cokeney, collops for to make," to shew that cockney means a cook, and that therefore the intelligence which the inhabitants of the metropolis displayed in the culinary art might have procured them the appellation of cockneys from the uplandish or country-men. But cokeney, in the passage which he cites, unfortunately, means nothing more than a little cock,* as Mr. Douce also has observed; the dish to be prepared, but not the cook to dress it. The authority of Bishop Percy and Mr. Tyrwhitt in thus also assigning, in the old ballad of The Turnament of Tottenham, the meaning of cook to cockney, has been rightly questioned by Mr. Douce.

At that feast were they served in rich array,

Every five and five had a cokeney :

Where it signifies a little cock, or perhaps a peacock, a favourite dish among our ancestors. Cotgrave, under the word COQUINE, calls a "cockney a simper-de-cookit, a nice thing." The citation of Camden in his Britannia,

Were I in my castle of Bungey

Upon the river of Wavency

I would ne care for the king of Cockney ;

shews, whencesoever the triplet comes, that London was known by this name; and hence a cockney might be assumed for a Londoner. After all, there is most reason to believe, that this contemptuous or satirical expression originates in that imaginary region of luxury and idleness formerly called Cocaigne, or Plenty; as in the poem cited by Hickes. Probably the festival of the Cocagna at Naples may have suggested the poem as well as the word. See Keyser's Trav. vol. ii. p. 369. Hobbes, in allusion to the old poem, has "the land of Cockany, where fowls ready roasted cry, come and eat me;" for, among the delicacies of this happy country, ready roasted geese fly into the house, exclaiming, all hot, all hot !

The gees irosted on the spitte,

Flee to that abbaï, god hit wot,

And gredith, [crieth,] Gees al hote !

Perhaps, no apology is necessary for so long a remark on cockney; which, however, is now falling into little use.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' the pasty alive. Shakespeare, King Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,

Proud of the plenty of the southern part,

To scorn that union, by which we may

Boast 'twas his countryman that writ this play ? Dorset.

Hence I believe it was, that that synod's geography was as ridiculous as a cockney's, to whom all is Barbary beyond Brainford, and Christendome endeth at Greenwich.

VOL. I.

Whitlock, Mem. of the English, (1654.) p. 221.

The cockney travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber, the world, will prove a cockney.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

COCKNEYLIKE.* adj. Resembling the manners or character of a cockney.

Some again draw this mischief on their heads by too ceremonious and strict diet, being over precise, cockney-like, and curious in their observations of meats, times, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 76.

COCKPIT. n. s. [cock and pit.]

1. The area where cocks fight.

Can this cockpit hold,

The vasty field of France ?

Shakespeare.

And now have I gained the cockpit of the western world, and academy of arms, for many years. Howell, Vocal Forest.

2. A place on the lower deck of a man of war, where are sub-divisions for the purser, the surgeon, and his mates. Harris.

COCKSCOMB. n. s. [cock and comb.] A plant.

COCK'SHEAD. n. s. A plant, named also sainfoin

Miller.

COCKSHUT.† n. s. [from cock and shut.] The close of the evening, at which time poultry go to roost, Dr. Johnson says. Minshew calls it twilight, either in the morning, or the evening. See Minsh. In TWILIGHT. In like manner cock-leet (cock-light) is day-break, and sometimes the dusk of the evening, in some parts of the west of England.

Surrey and himself,

Much about cockshut time, from troop to troop,

Went through the army.

Shakespeare.

COCKSPUR. n. s. Virginian hawthorn. A species of medlar. Miller.

COCKSURE.† adj. Confidently certain; without fear or diffidence. A word of contempt, Dr. Johnson says. But it seems not to have been used as such originally; but in the present sense of safe, sure, beyond doubt or danger. The word is also not an adverb as Dr. Johnson states, but an adjective. See, under SURE, To make sure.

While the red hat doth endure,

He maketh himself cocksure ;

The red hat with his lure Bringeth all things under cure.

Skelton.

A few priests, men in white rockets, ruled all; who with setting up of six-foot roods, and rebuilding of rood-lofts, thought to make all cocksure.

Sir T. Smith, Orat. IV. Append. to his Life.

We steal, as in a castle, cocksure.

Shakespeare.

I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me.

Pope, Letters.

COCKSWAIN.† n. s. [cozzypaine; Saxon.] The officer who has the command of the cockboat. Corruptly COXON.

Their majesties, lord Carteret, and Sir John Norris, embarked in Sir John's barge, and his captain steered the boat as cockswain.

Drummond's Travels, p. 70.

COCKWEED. n. s. [from cock and weed.] The name of a plant, called also Dittander, or Peppertwort.

CO'COA. n. s. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.]

A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure, is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fattish to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles; and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness, when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this fruit are lodged the cocoa nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Medica.

Amid those orchards of the sun,
Give me to drain the cocoa's milky bowl,
And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Thomson.

CO'CTILE. adj. [coctilis, Lat.] Made by baking, as a brick.

CO'CTION. n. s. [coctio, Lat.] The act of boiling.

The disease is sometimes attended with expectoration from the lungs, and that is taken off by a coction and resolution of the feverish matter, or terminates in suppurations or a gangrene. Arbuthnot on Diet.

COD.† } n. s. [asellus,] A sea fish.

She that in wisdom never was so frail,
To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail. Shakespeare, Othello.

COD.† n. s. [codbe, Sax.]

1. Any case or husk in which seeds are lodged.

I remember the wooing of a peasecod instead of her; from whom I took two cods, and giving her them again, said, Wear these for my sake. Shakespeare, As you Like it.

Thy corn thou there may'st safely sow,
Where in full cods last year rich pease did grow. May.

They let pease lie in small heaps as they are reaped, 'till they find the hawm and cod dry. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A pillow. [Goth. kodde; Sax. codbe; cneopan on his mycele codbe, to consult his pillow. Sax. Chron. Lye, edit. Manning.] The word is yet used in the north of England for a cushion or pillow.

To COD. v. n. [from the noun.] To inclose in a cod.

All codded grain being a destroyer of weeds, an improver of land, and a preparer of it for other crops. Mortimer.

CO'DDERS. n. s. [from cod.] Gatherers of pease. Dict.

CO'DDY.* adj. [from cod.] Husky. Sherwood.

CO'DGER.* n. s. [perhaps from the Span. coger, "to gather, to get as he can," Minshew; whence cogedor, a gatherer. Laf. colligere.] Contemptuously used for a miser, one who rakes together all he can.

CODE. n. s. [codex, Lat.]

1. A book.

2. A book of the civil law.

We find in the Theodosian and Justinian code the interest of trade very well provided for. Arbuthnot on Coins.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves; and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope, Sat.

CO'DICIL. n. s. [codicillus, Lat.] An appendage to a will.

The man suspects his lady's crying,
Was but to gain him to appoint her,
By codicil, a larger jointure. Prior.

COD'ILLE. n. s. [codille, Fr. codillo, Span.] A term at ombre, when the game is won.

She sees, and trembles at the approaching ill,
Just in the jaws of ruin, and codille. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

To COD'DLE.† v. a. [coquo, coctulo, Lat. Skinner.] To parboil; to soften by the heat of water.

Dear prince Pippin,
Down with your noble blood; or, as I live,
I'll have you cod'dled. Braun, and Fl. Philaster.

To CO'DLE.* v. a. [perhaps from the old Fr. cadeler, to breed up tenderly; or a corruption of coll. See To COLL.] To make much of.

CO'DLING.† n. s. [from To codle.] An apple, generally codled, to be mixed with milk, Dr. Johnson says; and, it may be added, an apple not quite ripe. The fruit, at present styled a codling, is said to have been unknown to our gardens in the time of queen Elizabeth.

In July come gilliflowers of all varieties, early pears and plums in fruit, gennittings and codlings. Bacon, Essays.

Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before 'tis a peasecod, or a codling when 'tis almost an apple. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

Their entertainment at the height,
In cream and codlings rev'ling with delight. King's Cookery.
He let it lie all winter in a gravel walk, south of a codling hedge. Mortimer, Husbandry.

A codling, ere it went his lip in,
Won'd strait become a golden pippin. Swift.

COEFFICACY. n. s. [con and efficacia, Lat.] The power of several things acting together to produce an effect.

We cannot in general infer the efficacy of those stars, or coefficient particular in medications. Brown, Vulg. Err.

COEFFICIENCY. n. s. [con and efficio, Lat.] Co-operation; the state of acting together to some single end.

The managing and carrying on of this work, by the spirit's instrumental coefficient, requires, that they be kept together, without distinction or dissipation. Glanville, Scopsis.

COEFFICIENT.† n. s. [con and efficiens, Lat.]

1. That which unites its action with the action of another.

2. [In algebra.] Such numbers, or given quantities, that are put before letters, or unknown quantities, into which letters they are supposed to be multiplied, and so do make a rectangle, or product with the letters; as 4 a, b x, c xx; where 4 is the coefficient of 4 a; b of b x, and c of c xx. Chambers.

3. In fluxions.
The coefficient of any generating term (in fluxions) is the quantity arising by the division of that term, by the generated quantity. Chambers.

From thence are derived rules for obtaining the fluxions of all other products and powers; be the coefficients or the indexes what they will, integers or fractions, rational or surd. Bp. Berkely, Analyst, § ix.

COEFFICIENTLY.* adv. [from coefficient.] In a co-operating manner.

COE'LDER.* n. s. [from con and elder.] An elder of the same rank.

The elders which are among you I exhort, who also am an elder, 1 Pet. v. 1. He exhorts, not commands: He also is an elder, i. e. as others are. In the original it is ἐπὶ πρεσβυτέρους, coelder.

Trapp's Popery truly stated, P. i. § 3.

CO'ELIACK *Passion.** [old Fr. codiaque, from Gr. κοιλία, the belly.] A diarrhoea, or flux, that arises from the indigestion or putrefaction of food in the stomach and bowels, whereby the aliment comes away little altered from what it was when eaten, or changed like corrupted stinking flesh. Quincy.

CÆMETERY. See CEMETERY.

COE'MPTION. n. s. [coemptio, Lat.] The act of buying up the whole quantity of any thing.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon, Essays.

CENOBY.* See CENOBY.

To COENJO'Y.* v. a. [from con and enjoy.] * To enjoy together.

I wish my soul no other felicity, when she hath shaken off these rags of flesh, than to ascend to his, and co-enjoy the same bliss. Howell, Lett. i. vi. p.

CO'EQUAL. adj. [from con and equalis, Lat.] Equal; being of the same rank or dignity with another.

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophecy,

If once he came to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap coequal with the crown.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

COEQUA'LITY.* n. s. [from coequal.] The state of being equal.

The co-equality and co-eternity of the Son with the Father was denied. Hooker, Eccl. Pol.

The Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity is to be worshipped; namely, on account of their perfect co-eternity and co-equality. Waterland on the Ath. Creed.

To COER'CE. v. a. [coerceo, Lat.] To restrain; to keep in order by force.

Punishments are manifold, that they may coerce this profligate sort. Ayliffe, Parergon.

COER'CIBLE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That may be restrained.
2. That ought to be restrained.

COER'CION.* n. s. [old Fr. cohercion, coërtion.] Penal restraint; check.

The coercion or execution of the sentence in ecclesiastical courts, is only by excommunication of the person contumacious. Hale, Common Law.

Government has coercion and animadversion upon such as neglect their duty; without which coercive power, all government is toothless and precarious. South.

COER'CIVE. adj. [from coerce.]

1. That which has the power of laying restraint.
All things on the surface spread, are bound
By their coercive vigour to the ground. Blackmore.
2. That which has the authority of restraining by punishment.

For ministers to seek that themselves might have coercive power over the church, would have been hardly construed. Hooker, Preface.

The virtues of a general, or a king, are prudence, counsel, active fortitude, coercive power, awful command, and the exercise of magnanimity, as well as justice. Dryden.

COESSENTIAL. adj. [con and essentia, Lat.] Participating of the same essence.

The Lord our God is but one God, in which indivisible unity we adore the Father, as being altogether of himself; we glorify that consubstantial word which is the Son; we bless and magnify that coessential Spirit eternally proceeding from both, which is the Holy Ghost. Hooker.

COESSENTIA'LITY.* n. s. [from coessential.] Participation of the same essence.

The appellation of the Son of God, assumed by him, [Christ.] implies the same kind of relation to him, as that of a man to his father; that is, it implies coessentiality with God, and therefore equality of nature, and consequently divinity in its full extent.

Burgess, Sermon on the Divinity of Christ, (1790,) p. 41.

COESSE'NTIALLY.* adv. [from coessential.] In a co-essential manner.

COES'TABLISHMENT.* n. s. [from con and establish.] Joint establishment.

The morals of the community will be better secured by an exclusive establishment, at the publick expence, of the teachers of one sect, than by a coestablishment of the teachers of different sects of christians.

Bp. of Landaff's (Watson's) Charge, (1791,) p. 11.

COETA'NEAN.* n. s. [from con and ætas.] One of the same time or age with another.

Old major Stansby, of Hans, a most intimate friend and neighbour, and coetaneous of the late earle of Southampton.

Aubrey, Anecd. of Sir W. Raleigh, ii. 516.

COETA'NEOUS. adj. [con and ætas, Lat.] Of the same age with another; with to.

Eye was old as Adam, and Cain their son coetaneous unto both. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Every fault hath penal effects, coetaneous to the act.

Government of the Tongue, § 6.

Through the body every member sustains another; and all are coetaneous, because none can subsist alone. Bentley, Sermon.

COETER'NAL.* adj. [old Fr. coëternel, from con and æternas, Lat.] Equally eternal with another.

Or of the eternal coeternal beam! Milton, P. L.

COETE'RNALLY. adv. [from coeternal.] In a state of equal eternity with another.

Arius had dishonoured his coeternally begotten Son.

Hooker, v. § 52.

COETE'RNITY.* n. s. [from coeternal.] Having existence from eternity equal with another eternal being.

The eternity of the Son's generation, and his coeternity and consubstantiality with the Father, when he came down from heaven, and was incarnate. Hammond, Fundamentals.

Vain therefore was that opinion of a real matter coeval with God as necessary for production of the world by way of subject, as the Eternal and Almighty God by way of efficient.— This coeternity of matter opposeth God's independency.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. I.

COE'VAL. adj. [coævus, Lat.]

1. Of the same age.

Even his teeth and white, like a young flock,
Coeval, and new shorn, from the clear brook Recent.

Prior.

2. Of the same age with another; followed by with.

This religion cannot pretend to be coeval with man.

Hale, Origin of Mankind.

The monthly revolutions of the moon, or the diurnal of the earth upon its own axis, by the very hypothesis are coeval with the former. Bentley.

Silence! coeval with eternity;

Thou wert, ere nature first began to be:

'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slept fast in thee! Pope.

3. Sometimes by to.

Although we had no monuments of religion ancienter than idolatry, we have no reason to conclude, that idolatrous religion was coeval to mankind. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

COE'VAL.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A contemporary; but properly one not only living at the same time, but of the same time of life.

Even Tully himself was taunted at by his coevals.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 29.

As it were not enough to have outdone all your coevals in wit, you will excel them in good nature. Pope.

COE'VOUS. adj. [coævus, Lat.] One of the same age.

Then it should not have been the first, as supposing some other things coerous to it. South, Serm.

COEXIST. v. n. [con and existo, Lat.]

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never *coex*ted. Locke.

COEXISTENCE. n. s. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Grew, Cosmol.

COEXISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but coexistent with the act. Bp. Bramhall, Answer to Hobbes.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley.

TO COEXTEND. v. a. [con and extendo, Latin.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Grew, Cosmol.

Has your English language one single word that is coextended through all these significations? Bentley, Phil. Laps. ii. § 35.

COEXTENSION. n. s. [from coextend.] The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

COEXTENSIVE. \ adj.* [from con and extensive.] Having the same extent.

The objects of the society are coextensive with the true spirit of christian charity. Bp. Wulchester, (North,) Serm. (1790.)

COEXTENSIVELY. \ adv.* [from coextensive.] In a coextensive manner.

COFFEE. v. n. s. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced caheu by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs; and by us formerly written coffa, and cauphé. See Blount's Voyage to the Levant, p. 27, and Burton's Anat. of Mel. p. 397. See also COFFEE-HOUSE.] The tree is a species of Arabick jessamine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in their native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

Coffee denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffeeeman, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink comforteth the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon. Pope.

COFFEEHOUSE. v. n. s. [coffee and house.] A house of entertainment where coffee is sold, and the guests are supplied with newspapers. Burton is one of the earliest users of this compound. Coffee, however, was still a novelty in England so late as 1650, as the remark of Anthony Wood shews.

They [the Turks] spend much time in those coffee-houses, which are somewhat like our alehouses and taverns. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 397.

This year (1650) Jacob a Jew opened a coffee house at the Angel in the parish of S. Peter in the East, Oxon; and there it was by some, with delighted in novelty, drank. Life of A. Wood, p. 65.

At ten, from coffeehouse or play,

Returning, finishes the day. Prior.

It is a point they do not concern themselves about, farther than perhaps as a subject in a coffeehouse. Swift.

COFFEE-MAN. n. s. [coffee and man.] One that keeps a coffeehouse.

Consider your enemies the Laodemonians; did ever you hear that they preferred a coffee-man to Agesi-laus? Addison.

COFFEE-POT. v. n. s. [coffee and pot.] The covered pot in which coffee is boiled; or the pot into which the coffee, when boiled, is poured.

It is doubtless as hard to make a coffee-pot shine in poetry, as a plough. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

COFFER. v. n. s. [coffe, Saxon; coffe, old Fr. a chest; Lat. cophinus; Gr. κῆπιος, a basket.]

1. A chest generally for keeping money.

Two iron coffers hung on either side,

With precious metal full as they could hold. Spenser, F. Q.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

If you destroy your governor that is wealthy, you must chuse another, who will fill his coffers out of what is left. L'Estrange.

2. Treasure.

He would discharge it without any burthen to the queen's coffers, for honour sake. Bacon, Advice to Valier.

3. [In architecture.] A square depression in each interval between the modillions of the Corinthian cornice, usually filled with some enrichment. Chambers.

4. [In fortification.] A hollow lodgement across a dry moat, from six to seven foot deep, and from sixteen to eighteen broad; the upper part being made of pieces of timber, raised two foot above the level of the moat; which little elevation has hurdles laden with earth for its covering, and serves as a parapet with embrasures. Chambers.

TO COFFER. v. a. [old Fr. coffier.] To treasure up in chests.

Treasure, as a war might draw forth, so a peace succeeding might coffer up. Bacon, Henry VII.

COFFERER. \ n. s.* [from coffer.] He who places treasure in a chest or coffer.

Ye fortune's coffers, ye powers of wealth,
You do your rent-rolls most felonious wrong!

Young, Night Th. 2.

CO'FFERER of the King's Household. † n. s. A principal officer of his majesty's court, next under the comptroller, that, in the comptinghouse and elsewhere, hath a special oversight of other officers of the household, for their good demeanour in their offices. Coxcel.

He [Sir T. Pope] is likewise said to have been appointed cofferer to the household. Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 41.

CO'FFIN. † n. s. [coffin, Fr. cophinus, Lat. κόφινος, Gr. a basket; which is the ancient application of our word. "Yit understanden not ye, neither han mynde of fyve looves unto lyve thousynde men; and how many coffyns ye taken?" Wicliffe, St. Matt. xvi. Barret writes the word cophin, under BIER.]

1. The box or chest in which dead bodies are put into the ground. It is used both of wood and other matter.

He went as if he had been the coffin that carried himself to his sepulchre. Sidney.

Not a flower sweet
On my black coffin let there be strown.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

One fate they have,

The ship their coffin, and the sea their grave. Wallcy.

The joiner is fitting screws to your coffin. Swift.

2. A mould of paste for a pye.

Of the paste a coffin will I rear,

And make two pasties of your shameful heads. Titus Andron.

3. A paper case, in form of a cone, used by grocers.

4. In farriery.

CO'FFIN of a horse, is the whole hoof of the foot above the coronet, including the coffin bone. The coffin bone is a small spongy bone, inclosed in the midst of the hoof, and possessing the whole form of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

To CO'FFIN. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose in a coffin.

Would'st thou have laugh'd, had I come coffin'd home,
That weep'd to see me triumph? Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Let me lie

In prison, and here be coffin'd, when I die. Donne.

2. Simply, to enclose; to confine.

Devotion is not coffin'd in a cell,

Nor chok'd by wealth. John Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 59.

3. To cover, as with paste for a pye. See COFFIN.

And coffin'd in crust 'till now she was hoary.

B. Jonson, Masque of Gipsies Metamorph.

CO'FFINMAKER. n. s. [coffin and maker.] One whose trade is to make coffins.

Where will be your sextons, coffinmakers, and plumbers?

Tatler.

COFO'UNDER.* n. s. A joint founder.*

The ancestors of sir E. Sackville, knight of the Bath and earl of Dorset, were great benefactors, or rather cofounders of this religious structure. Weever, Fun. Monum. p. 613.

COG.* n. s. See TO COG. A piece of deceit; prevarication; trick.

So letting it pass for an ordinary cog amongst them, a half-witted man may see there is nothing makes for them or their advantage.

Watson's Quodlibets of Religion and State, (1602,) p. 338.

To COG. † v. a. [A word of uncertain original, derived by Skinner from coqueliner, French; by Lye from cogge. See TO COAX.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to sooth by adulatory speeches.

I'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home below'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

He plays the most notorious hobby-horse, jesting and frisking in the luxury of his nonsense with such poor fetches to cog a lauditer from us. Milton, Colasterion.

But if some fortune cog them into love,
In what a fifteenth sphere then do they move!

John Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 11.

To COG a die. To secure it, so as to direct its fall; to falsify.

Notwithstanding this cogged number of his provincial synods, and private decrees, (as Volusion terms them,) all the time of the first 700 years, the freedom of this practice continued in many parts of the Christian world.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 248.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dexterously to throw the lucky sice. Dryden, Pers. Sat.

For guineas in other men's breeches,
Your gamesters will palm and will cog. Swift.

Ye gallants of Newgate, whose fingers are nice

In diving in pockets, or cogging of dice. Swift.

3. To obtrude by falsehood.

The outcry is, that I abuse, his demonstration by a falsification, by cogging in the word. Tillotson, Preface.

I have cogged in the word to serve my turn. Stillingfleet.

Fustian tragedies, or insipid comedies, have, by concerted applauses, been cogged upon the town for masterpieces. Dennis.

To COG. v. n. To lie; to wheedle.

Now stealeth he, now will he crave,

And now will he cosen and cog. Tusser.

Mrs. Ford, I cannot cog; I cannot prate, Mrs. Ford: now shall I sin in my wish. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

COG. † n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. cogo, to force.]

The tooth of a wheel, by which it acts upon another wheel.

He cannot adapt the cogs of his wheels, his screws, his pulleys
Dean Tucker's Cui Bono.

To COG. v. a. [from the noun.] To fix cogs in a wheel.

COG.* n. s. [Goth. kogge; Tent. kogge, a light boat; Welsh, crech, a boat; low Lat. cogo, "navigii genus quod cogs Anglici dicunt, Galli coquets." Du Cange. This word cogo is also written coggo, cogga, coca, cocka. Hence our cock-boat. Chaucer gives the old word cogge; and it is yet used on the Yorkshire coast.] A cock-boat; a little boat.

And for the cogg was narrow, small, and strait,
Alone he row'd, and bade his squires there wait.

Fairfax, Tass. xiv. 58.

CO'GENCY. n. s. [from cogent.] Force; strength; power of compelling; conviction.

Maxims and axioms, principles of science, because they are self-evident, have been supposed innate; although nobody ever shewed the foundation of their clearness and cogency. Locke.

COGE'NAL.* adj. [from con and genus.] The same as congenial, which see.] Cognate; kindred.

Cocceus is often cited by Rabelais, a writer of a cogential cast.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. ii. 357.

CO'GENT. † adj. [old Fr. cogent; cogens, Latin.]

Forcible; resistless; convincing; powerful; having the power to compel conviction.

Such is the cogent force of nature.

Prior.

They have contrived methods of deceit, one repugnant to another, to evade, if possible, this most cogent proof of a Deity.

Bentley.

CO'GENTLY. adv. [from cogent.] With resistless force; forcibly; so as to force conviction.

They forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious, which our own existence, and the sensible parts of the universe, offer so clearly and cogently to our thoughts. Locke.

CO'GGER. † n. s. [from To cog.] A flatterer; a wheedler.

Sherwood.

CO'GGERY.* n. s. [from cog.] Trick; falsehood; deceit.

This is a second false surmise or coggerie of the Jesuits to keep the ignorant in error.

Watson's Quodlibets of Religion and State, (1602,) p. 192.

Therefore can I not but often smile in my sleeve to hear and see the Jesuits' cogger in every thing. Ibid. p. 221.

CO'GGING.* n. s. [from cog.] Cheat; fallacy; imposture. Sherrwood.

Nay, nay, I do beseech you leave your cogging.

Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

There is nothing in all this peremptory and colourable flourish of his, but meer cogging or misprision.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of Married Clergy, iii. § 2.

CO'GGLESTONE. n. s. [cugolo, Ital.] A little stone; a small pebble. Skinner.

CO'GNABLE. adj. [from cogito, Latin.] That which may be thought on; what may be the subject of thought.

To CO'GITATE.† v. n. [cogito, Lat.] To think.

As the life of the body is entertained in still cogitating, so is our spirit nourished in reducing to memory her functions.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633,) p. 101.

COGITATION. n. s. [cogitatio, Latin.]

1. Thought; the act of thinking.

Having their cogitations darkened, and being strangers from the life of God, from the ignorance which is in them. Hooker.

A picture puts me in mind of a friend: the intention of the mind in seeing, is carried to the object represented, which is no more than simple cogitation or apprehension of the person. Stillfleet.

This Descartes proves, that brutes have no cogitation, because they could never be brought to signify their thoughts by any artificial signs. Ray on the Creation.

These powers of cogitation, and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it. Bentley.

2. Purpose; reflection previous to action.

The king, perceiving that his desires were intemperate, and his cogitations vast and irregular, began not to brook him well. Bacon, Henry VII.

3. Meditation; contemplation; mental speculation.

On some great charge employ'd
He seem'd, or fixt in cogitation deep. Milton, P. L.

CO'GITATIVE.† adj. [from cogito, Latin.]

1. Having the power of thought and reflection.

And though the philosophers have usually distinguished them into more, as into the common sense, the phansie, both estimative, and cogitative; yet really and truly they are but one. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 42.

If these powers of cogitation and sensation are neither inherent in matter, nor acquirable to matter, they proceed from some cogitative substance, which we call spirit and soul. Bentley.

2. Given to thought and deep meditation.

The earl had the closer and more reserved countenance, being by nature somewhat more cogitative.

Wolton, Parallel of Lords Essex and Buckingham.

COGNATE.* adj. [Lat. cognatus.] Kindred; partaking of the same nature.

Which atoms are still hovering up and down, and never rest till they meet with some pores proportionable and cognate to their figures, where they acquiesce. Howell, Lett. iv. 50.

Some neuter cognate substantive.

Johnson's Noctes Nottinghamicae, p. 81.

Imbrute, I believe, is a word of Milton's coinage. So was the cognate compound "imparadised" supposed to be, till Bentley brought an instance from Sidney's Arcadia.

Warton, Notes on Milton's Smaller Poems.

COGNATION.† n. s. [cognatio, Latin; cognition, old Fr.]

1. Kindred; descent from the same original.

Much moved hereto upon the account of his cognition with the Aeacides and kings of Molossus.

Sir T. Brown's Miscell. Tracts, p. 159.

As by our cognition to the body of the first Adam we took in death, so by our union with the body of the second Adam we shall have the inheritance of life.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 4.

Truth hath a cognition with the soul.

Cudworth, Sermon, p. 81.

Two vices I shall mention, as being of near cognition to ingratitude, pride, and hard-heartedness, or want of compassion.

South.

Let the critics tell me what certain sense they could put upon either of these four words, by their mere cognition with each other. Watts on the Mind.

2. Relation; participation of the same nature.

For as much as a priest is to have a cognition or conjunction of nature with those for whom he is to offer sacrifices.

South, Sermon, viii. 275.

He induceth us to ascribe effects unto causes of no cognition.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

COGNISE'E. n. s. [In law.] He to whom a fine in lands or tenements is acknowledged. Cowell.

CO'GNISOUR. n. s. [In law.] Is he that passeth or acknowledgeth a fine in lands or tenements to another. Cowell.

COGNITION. n. s. [cognitio, Latin.] Knowledge; complete conviction.

I will not be myself nor have cognition
Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.

God, as he created all things, so is he beyond and in them all, not only in power, as under his subjection, or in his presence, as in his cognition; but in their very essence, as in the soul of their causalities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'GNITIVE. adj. [from cognitus, Latin.] Having the power of knowing.

Unless the understanding employ and exercise its cognitive or apprehensive power about these terms, there can be no actual apprehension of them. South, Sermon.

CO'GNIZABLE. adj. [cognisable, French.]

1. That falls under judicial notice.

2. Liable to be tried, judged, or examined.

Some are merely of ecclesiastical cognizance, others of a mixed nature, such as are cognizable both in the ecclesiastical and secular courts. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CO'GNIZANCE.† n. s. [old Fr. cognizance.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority.

It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Estrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon, Hen. VII.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown, Vulg. Err.

All believing persons, and all churches congregated in the name of Christ, washed in the same laver of regeneration, eating of the same bread, and drinking of the same cup, are united in the same cognizance, and so known to be the same church. Pearson on the Creed, Art. IX.

3. Knowledge by recollection. Not now in use.

Who, soon as on that knight his eye did glance,
Eftsoones of him had perfect cognizance.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 31.

COGNO'MINAL.† adj. [cognomen, Latin.]

1. Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the constellations which pass under animal names in heaven; nor the dogfish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or namesake in the heavens. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Belonging to the surname.

The first of these two [names] is Pontius, the name descended to him from the original of his family;—the second, Pilatus, as a cognominal addition distinguishing from the rest descending from the same original. Pearson on the Creed, Art. IV.

To COGNO'MINATE.* v. a. [Lat. cognomino.] To give a name. Cockram.

COGNOMINATION. n. s. [cognomen, Latin.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.

2. A name added from any accident or quality.

Pompey deserved the name Great: Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

COGNO'SCENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. cognoissance, from cognosco, Latin.] Knowledge; the state or act of knowing. Dict.

And yet of that near object have no cognoscence.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 51.

COGNO'SCIBLE.† adj. [cognosco, Latin.]

1. That may be known; being the object of knowledge.

In matters cognoscible, and framed for our disquisition, our industry must be our oracle.

Sir T. Brown's Miscell. Tracts, p. 179.

God is naturally cognoscible by intellectual means.

Bp. Barlow's Remains, p. 546.

The same that is said for the redundancy of matters intelligible and cognoscible in things natural, may be applied to things artificial. Hale, Origin of Mankind.

2. That falls under judicial notice.

When a witness is called before a judge, to give evidence upon oath concerning a third person, in a matter cognoscible by that jurisdiction, he is bound to swear in truth, in judgement, and in righteousness.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. D. ii. C. 5.

Here the mayor and magistrates of Gloucester did that which was no way warrantable by their charter, in which case they may be accountable, all or some: but in the high-commission we meddled with no cause not cognoscible there.

Abp. Laud's Diary, &c. i. 333.

COGNO'SCITIVE.* adj. [old Fr. cognoscitive.] Having the power of knowing.

I suppose prescience to be an act of the understanding, (as likewise all science,) which alone is cognoscitive.

Bp. Barlow's Remains, p. 573.

To COHABIT.† v. n. [cohabito, Latin.]

1. To dwell with another in the same place.

The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army: they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.

2. To live together as husband and wife.

He knew her not to be his own wife, and yet had a design to cohabit with her as such. Fiddes, Sermons.

COHABITANT.† n. s. [from cohabit.] An inhabitant of the same place.

We receive fashions and conditions of our companions; and as diseases pass from one body to another by touching, every so doth the mind pour her infection into her neighbour. The drunkard leadech his guests into drunkenness. Effeminate men and softlings cause the stout man to wax tender. Covetousness transferreth her poison into cohabitants.

Woolton's Christian Manuall, (1576,) l. 6.th

The oppressed Indians protest against that heaven where the Spaniards are to be their cohabitants. Decay of Piety.

COHABITATION.† n. s. [from cohabit.]

1. The act or state of inhabiting the same place with another.

Nestorius granted two natures in Christ, yet not, as you said, from his nativity, nor by adunation, but by cohabitation or inhabitation, so that he made but one Christ.

Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 353.

There shall be a cohabitation of the spirit with flesh, in a mystical or moral sense. More, Conj. Cabalist, p. 218.

Those colonies and legions that had so long cohabitation and coalition with them. Howell, Instruct. for Trav. p. 147.

They agreed together, by pacts and covenants, neither to do nor suffer injury; but to submit to rules of equality, and make laws by compact; in order to their peaceable cohabitation.

Hallywell's Excell. of Moral Virtue, p. 79.

2. The state of living together as married persons.

Which defect, though it could not evacuate a marriage after cohabitation, and actual consummation, yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon, Hen. VII.

But how the peace and perpetual cohabitation of marriage can be kept, how that benevolent and intimate communion of body can be held with one that must be hated with a most operative hatred, must he forsaken, and yet continually dwell with and accompanied.

Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce.

Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred and two years, died for love of his wife, who was ninety-two at her death, after seventy years cohabitation. Taller, No. 56.

COHEIR. n. s. [coheres, Lat.] One of several among whom an inheritance is divided.

Married persons, and widows and virgins, are all coheirs in the inheritance of Jesus, if they live within the laws of their estate. Bp. Taylor's Holy Living.

COHEIRESS.† n. s. [from coheir.] A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with other women.

Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, in default of male issue, made his three sisters coheiresses. Ashmole, Ber. ii. 276.

To COHERE.† v. n. [old Fr. coherer, Lat. coherreo.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, polite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

None want a place for all their center found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglomb'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope, Dunciad.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

They have been inserted, where they best seemed to cohere. Burke, Thoughts on Scarcity, Pref.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakspeare.

4. To agree.

He [Vortigern] was at length burnt in his tower by fire from Heaven, at the prayer, as some say, of German; but that coheres not; as others, by Ambrosius Aurelianus.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. iii.

COHERENCE. } n. s. [coherentia, Latin.]

COHERENCY. }
1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist divulsion and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooker, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects?

Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.
4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke, Preface to St. Paul's Epistles.

COHE'RENT, adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.
By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their part more or less coherent. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Where all must full, or not coherent be;
And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope, Essay on Man.

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter,
That time and place, with this deceit so lawful,
May prove coherent. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts, Logic.

COHE'SION, n. s. [old Fr. coesion.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles, heaped together, touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton's Opt.
Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find?
What props support, what chains the fabrick bind?
Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion, come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHE'SIVE, adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHE'SIVELY, adv. [from cohesive.] In a connected or dependent manner.

COHE'SIVENESS, n. s. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive: the quality of resisting separation.

To COHIBIT, v. a. [cohibeo, Lat.] To restrain; to hinder. Dict.

To COHOBATE, v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distil it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cohabated, being excreted and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Pour upon it [powder of antimony] the rectified oil, which abstract and cohabate seven times, till such time as the powder has imbibed all the oil, and is quite dry.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705) p. 354.

COHOBATION, n. s. [from cohabate.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it was drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it more impregnated with their virtues.

Quincy.

Cohobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cohabation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the sensitive faculty. Grew's Museum.

CO'HORT, n. s. [cohorte; old Fr. cohors, Lat.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many cohorts, companies, and ensigns from hence as from any of their provinces. Camden.

2. [In poetical language.] A body of warriors.

The arch-angel's Power prepar'd
For swift descent; with him the cohort bright
Of watchful Cherubim. Milton, P. I.
Here Churchill, not so prompt
To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd
With Eugene. Philips, Blenheim.

COHORTATION, n. s. [cohortatio, Lat.] Encouragement by words; incitement. Dict.

COIF, n. s. [coiffe, Fr. from cofca, for cucufa, low Lat.] The head-dress; a lady's cap; the serjeant's cap.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coif, yet are they considerable. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

No less a man than a brother of the coif began his suit, before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple.

Addison, Spectator.

Instead of home-spun coifs were seen,
Good pinner edg'd with colbertine. Swift.

To COIF, v. a. [Fr. coiffer.] To dress with a coif.

She is clothed like a nun, coifed like a puppy, lame of one arm, crooked of one foot. Wodroephe, Fr. Gr. (1623) p. 291.

Whilst wanton boys of Paphos' court
In myrtles hide my staff for sport,
And coif me, where I'm bald, with flowers. Cooper.

CO'IFED, adj. [Fr. coiffé.] Wearing a coif.

It is from you, eloquent oyster-merchants of Billingsgate (just ready to be called to the bar, and coifed like your sister-serjeants) that we expect the shortening of the time and lessening the expenses of law-suits. Arbuthnot and Pope, Martin, Scrib.

CO'IFFURE, n. s. [coiffure, Fr.] Head-dress.

His head was adorned with a royal bonnet, upon which was set a mitre of incomparable beauty, together drawing up the coiffure to a highness royal.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, (1633) p. 68.

I am pleased with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shews the good sense of the valuable part of the sex. Addison.

COIGNE, n. s. [An Irish term, as it seems.] See To COIGNE.

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horsemeat and man's meat, and money, at pleasure. Davies on Ireland.

I need not fear that any such unlawful exaction as coigne should be required at my hand.

Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, (1606) p. 157.

To COIGNE, or COINY, v. n. [from the noun.] To live by extortion.

Though they came not armed like soldiers to be cessed upon me, yet their purpose was to coigne upon me, and to eat me out of house and home. Bryskett, Disc. of Civil Life, p. 157.

COIGNE, n. s. [old Fr. cogn; low Lat. cognus; Gr. γωνία, an angle; Irish, cuinne, a corner. Our word is now often written coin.

1. A corner.

No jutting frieze,
Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

See you yond' coigne o' the capitol, yond' corner stone?
Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. A wooden wedge used by printers.

To COIL, v. a. [old Fr. coillir, mod. cuellir; from the Lat. colligere, to gather.] To gather into a narrow compass; as to coil a rope, to wind it in a

Coil'd up in a cable, like salt cels.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.

The lurking particles of air so expanding themselves, must necessarily plump out the sides of the bladder, and so keep them turgid, until the pressure of the air, that at first coiled them, be readmitted to do the same thing again. Boyle.

Shun Folly's haunts, and vicious company,
Lest from true goodness they thy steps entice,
And Pleasure coil thee in her dangerous snare.

Edwards, Can. of Criticism, Sonn. xxxiv.

COIL. † n. s. [Teut. kollern or kollerren, to scold, from the idea of taking a person by the collar. Skinner. Fr. cuillir, Ital. cogliere, Lyc. And hence from the noise made in coiling up any thing. But, as "to keep a coil" means to make a noise, the word has been referred to call, Heb. col, the voice. See Whiter's Etym. Mag.]

1. Tumult; turmoil: bustle; stir; hurry; confusion.

Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil
Would not infect his reason? Shakspeare, Tempest.

You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Shakspeare.

In that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,

Must give us pause. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Your son and 't please you, Sir, is now cashiered yonder,
Cast from his mistress' favour; and such a coil there is;
Such fending, and such proving. Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieut.

2. A rope wound into a ring.

COIN. n. s. [coigne, Fr.] A corner; any thing standing out angularly; a square brick cut diagonally; called often quoin or quinc.

COIN. † n. s. [by 'some imagined to come from cuneus, a wedge, because metal is cut in wedges to be coined, Dr. Johnson says. "A cudendo dictum censet Cokus ad Littletonem, sect. 335. Alii à cunei figura, et probabilius." Du Cange. Fr. coin, Ital. conio.]

1. Money stamped with a legal impression.

He gave Dametas a good sum of gold in ready coin, which Menelaus had bequeathed. Sidney.

You have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

I cannot tell how the poets will succeed in the explication of coins, to which they are generally very great strangers. Addison.

She now contracts her vast design,

And all her triumphs shrink into a coin. Pope.

2. Payment of any kind.

The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood, is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond, Fundamentals.

To COIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mint or stamp metals for money.

They cannot touch me for coining: I am the king. Shakspeare.

They never put in practice a thing so necessary as coined money is. Peacham of Antiquities.

Tenants cannot coin rent just at quarter-day, but must gather it by degrees. Locke.

Can we be sure that this medal was really coined by an artificer, or is but a product of the soil from whence it was taken? Bentley.

2. To make or invent.

My lungs

Coin words 'till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

3. To make or forge any thing, in an ill sense.

Never coin a formal lye on't,

To make the knight overcome the giant. Hudibras.

Those motives induced Virgil to coin his fable. Dryden.

Some tale, some new pretence, he daily coin'd,

To sooth his sister, and delude her mind. Dryden, Virgil.

A term is coined to make the conveyance easy. Atterbury.

COINAGE. n. s. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.

VOL. I.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a publick trial as we solemnly practise in this country. Arbutnot.

2. Coin: money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of Christians, who first began that portrait. Brown.

Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him. Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

5. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain;

This bodiless creation ecstasy

Is very cunning in.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To COINCIDE. v. n. [coincido, Lat.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.

If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless. Chryne.

2. To concur; to be consistent with.

The rules of right judgement, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other. Watts, Logick.

COINCIDENCE. n. s. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.

An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centers, can never be naturally acquired. Bentley.

2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end; occurrence of many things at the same time.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries a great weight. Hale.

3. It is followed by with.

The coincidence of the planes of this rotation with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is very near the truth. Chryne, Phil. Prin.

COINCIDENCY.* n. s. [from coincide.] Tendency of several things to the same end.

These be the eight kinds of St. Barnard's unity; wherein I will not censure either any impropriety, or any coincidence; because they may all well pass for several kinds of unity in the popular capacity. Fotherby, Athcom. p. 303.

COINCIDENT. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.

These circles I viewed through a prism; and as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident. Newton, Opt.

2. Concurrent; consistent; equivalent: followed by with.

Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly suitable to and coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous and well inclined man. South.

These words of our apostle are exactly coincident with that controverted passage in his discourse to the Athenians. Bentley.

COINCIDER.* n. s. [from coincide.] That which coincides with another thing.

From its [the verb's] readiness to coincide with its noun in completing the sentence, they [the Stoicks] called it συμβαμα, a coincider. Harris's Hermes, i. § 9.

Something less than a coincider, or less than a predicable. Ibid.

COINDICATION. n. s. [from con and indico, Latin.]

Many symptoms betokening the same cause.

COINER. n. s. [from coin.]

1. A maker of money; a minter; a stamper of coin.

My father was I know not where

When I was stamp'd: some coiner with his tools

Made me a counterfeit. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

It is easy to find designs that never entered into the thoughts of the sculptor or the coiner. Addison on Medals.

There are only two patents referred to, both less advantageous to the coiner than this of Wood. Swift.

2. A counterfeiter of the king's stamp; a maker of base money.
3. An inventor.

Dionysius, a Greek coiner of etymologies, is commended by Athenæus. Camden's Remains.

TO COINQUINATE.* v. a. [old Fr. coinquiner, Lat. coinquino.] To pollute; to defile; and also, to defame. Cotgrave.

That would coinquinate,

It would contaminate.

Skelton, Poems, p. 199.

TO COJOIN. v. n. [conjungo, Lat.] To join with another in the same office.

Thou may'st cojoin with something, and thou dost,

And that beyond commission. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

COISTRIL. n. s. - A coward; a runaway: corrupted from kestrel, a mean or degenerate hawk.

He's a coward and a coistril, that will not drink to my niece. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

COIT. n. s. [hote, a die, Dutch.] A thing thrown at a certain mark. See QUOIT.

The time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

TO COIT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To throw any thing, as at the game of coits. Coit it to me, is yet used in the north of England.

COITING.* n. s. [from coit.] The act of playing at coits. Some men would say that in mediocrity, which I have so much praised in shooting, why should not bowlyng, claspynnes, and coiting, be as much commended. Sir T. Elyot, Govern. fol. 82. b.

COITION. n. s. [coitio, Lat.]

1. Copulation; the act of generation. *

I cannot but admire that philosophers should imagine frogs to fall from the clouds, considering how openly they act their coition, produce spawn, tadpoles and frogs. Ray on Creation.

He is not made productive of his kind, but by coition with a female. Grew's Cosmol.

2. The act by which two bodies come together.

By Gilbertus this motion is termed coition, not made by any faculty attractive of one, but a syndrome and concurrence of each. Brown, Vulg. Err.

COJUROR.* n. s. [Lat. con and juror.] He who bears his testimony to the credibility of another.

The solemn forms of oaths: of compurgator, or cojuror, which kind of oath was very much used by the Anglo-Saxons: The form of this oath is this: "I swear by God, that the oath which N. swore is honest and true."

Wotton's View of Hicler's Thesaur. by Shelton, p. 59.

COKE. n. s. [perhaps from coquo, Skinner.] Fewel made by burning pit-coal under earth, and quenching the cinders; as charcoal is made with wood. It is frequently used in drying malt.

COLANDER. n. s. [colo, to strain, Lat.] A sieve either of hair, twigs or metal, through which a mixture to be separated is poured, and which retains the thicker parts; a strainer.

Take a thick woven osier colander,

Through which the pressed wines are strained clear. May.

All the viscera of the body are but as so many colanders to separate several juices from the blood. Ray on the Creation.

The brains from nose and mouth, and either ear, Came issuing forth, as through a colander The curdled milk. Dryden.

COLATION. n. s. [from colo, Lat.] The art of filtering or straining.

COLATURE.* n. s. [old Fr. colature, from colo, Lat.]

1. The act of straining; filtration. Cotgrave.

The virtue thereof may be derived to it through a colature of natural earth. Evelyn.

2. The matter strained. Cotgrave.

COLBERTINE.* n. s. A kind of lace worn by women, Dr. Johnson says. It is termed "a lace resembling network, of the fabrick of Mons. Colbert, superintendant of the French king's manufactures," in the Fop's Dictionary of 1690.

Go, hang out an old frisoner gorget, with a yard of yellow colbertine again. Congreve's Way of the World.

Diff'rence rose between

Mechlin, the queen of lace, and Colbertine. Young.

COLCOTHAR. n. s. A term in chymistry.

Colcothar is the dry substance which remains after distillation, but commonly the caput mortuum of vitriol. Quincy.

Colcothar, or vitriol burnt, though unto a redness, containing the fixed salt, will make good ink. Brown.

COLD.* adj. [kaldu, Goth. colb, Saxon; kalt, German; kaald, Dan. See also ACOLD.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The aggregated soil

Death, with life's mace petrified, cold, and dry,

As with a trident, smote. Milton, P. L.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be solid; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Bids us seek

Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish

Our limbs benumm'd, ere this diurnal star

Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams

Reflected, may with matter sere foment. Milton, P. L.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,

With half their force, the full power of France;

And let another half stand laughing by,

All out of work, and cold for action. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unactive; unconcerned; wanting ardour. Hence the compound, and now frequent, expression, cold-hearted. See COLD-HEARTED.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull. Hooker, Preface.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Ascham.

Temperately proceed to what you would

Thus violently redress. — Sir, these cold ways,

That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous. Shakespeare.

New dated letters these,

Their cold intent, tenour and substance thus;

Here doth he wish his person, and his power,

The which he could not levy. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threat'ned

Our prisoners with the sword. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

To see a world in flames, and a host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator. Burnet, Pref. to Theory of the Earth.

No drum or trumpet needs

To inspire the coward, or to warm the cold,

His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,

And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Rowe.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison, Frecholder.

6. Unaffected; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. B. Jonson.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a disguise; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene. Addison on Itchy.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks.
Among you. Shakespeare, King Lear.

The commissioners grew more reserved and colder towards each other. Clarendon.

8. Chaste; not heated by vitious appetite.

You may

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink:
We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

9. Not welcome; not received with kindness or warmth of affection.

My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love.
Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

10. Not hasty; not violent.

11. Not affecting the scent strongly.

She made it good

At the hedge corner, in the colddest fault. Shakespeare.

12. Not having the scent strongly affected.

Smell this business with a sense as cold

As is a dead man's nose. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

COLD. † n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorific power.

Fair-lined slippers for the cold. Shakespeare.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby she chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold we must stay 'till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains; and when all is done, we cannot obtain it in any great degree. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sun

Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat,
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call
Decrepit winter, from the south to bring

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; chillness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran shivering to her heart. Dryden, Fob.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration. This is an Italian expression. "Pigliare una calda, i. e. pigliare una scarmiana." Vocab. Della Crusca. in V. CALDA. The same as our phrase, to catch cold.

What disease hast thou? —

A whoreson cold, sir; a cough. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Let no ungentle cold destroy

All taste we have of heavenly joy. Roscommon.

Those rains, so covering the earth, might providentially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores, and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

- COLD-BLOODED. * adj. [from cold and blood.] Without feeling or concern.

Thou cold-blooded slave,

Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?

And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Shakespeare, R. John.

- COLD-HEARTED. * adj. [from cold and heart.] Indifferent; wanting passion; unconcerned.

Cleop.

Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleop. Ah, dear, if I be so,

From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
And poison it in the source. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Oh, ye cold-hearted, frozen formalists!

On such a theme, 'tis impious to be calm. Young, Night Th. 4.

CO'LDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; negligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;

We coldly pause for thee. Shakespeare, King John.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,

Nor would believe my lord had sent;

So never offer'd once to stir,

But coldly said, your servant, sir. Swift.

CO'LDNESS. n. s. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle, Experiments.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse

Form, order, beauty through the universe;

While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,

All that we have, and that we are subsists. Denham.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotlier prosecuted: for as much as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably construed. Hooker, Dedicat.

If upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbuthnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise

Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom. Addison, Cato.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chuse,

Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Prior.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,

For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope, Windsor Forest.

COLE. † n. s. [Celt. caul; Welsh, caul; Sax. capl; old Fr. caul and caulet; Ital. and Span. caulo; Lat. caulis.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

CO'LESEED. n. s. [from cole and seed.] Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but colesseed or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

CO'LEWORT. n. s. [caplpynt, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got

From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot);

She stript the stalks of all their leaves; the best

She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,

And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay.

CO'LICK. † n. s. [colique, n. s. old Fr. colicus, Lat.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatulences and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component-fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places streightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuthnot.

CO'LI'CK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, colick pangs. Milton, P. L.

To COLL.* v. a. [old Fr. coller, and accoller; "dare brachia cervici," says Barret, in translating this word, i. e. to embrace round the neck, collum; and thus the word is equal to our old expression, "fell on the neck and kissed him." See St. Luke, xv. 20.] To embrace. See COLLING.

So having said, her twixt her arms twaine
She streightly strain'd, and colled tenderly.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 34.

To COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Lat.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

In consumptions and atrophy the liquids are exhausted, and the sides of the canals collapse; therefore the attrition is increased, and consequently the heat. Arbuthnot on Diet.

COLLA'PSED.* adj. [Lat. collapsus.] Withered; ruined; fallen down.

What else do our papists, but, by keeping the people in ignorance, vent and broach all their new ceremonies and traditions, when they conceal the Scriptura, read it in Latine, and to some few alone, feeding the slavish people in the mean time with tales out of legends, and such like fabulous narrations? Whom do they begin with—but collapsed ladies, some few tradesmen, superstitious old folks, illiterate persons, weak women, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 655.

Let the boiling pleasures of the rebellious flesh evaporate a little, and let me drain my boggy soul from those corrupted inbred humours of collapsed nature.

Quarles, Judg. and Mercy, The Procrastinator.

COLLA'PSION.† n. s. [from collapse.]

1. The act of closing or collapsing.

The mark remains in some degree visible in the collapsion of the skin after death. Russell on Indian Serpents, p. 7.

2. The state of vessels closed.

CO'LLAR.† n. s. [Span. collar; old Fr. coeler; Lat. collare.]

1. A ring of metal put round the neck.

That's nothing, says the dog, but the fretting of my collar: nay, says the wolf, if there be a collar in the case, I know better things than to sell my liberty. L'Estrange.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds,
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,
And collars of the same their neck surround. Dryden, Fab.

2. The part of the harness that is fastened about the horse's neck.

Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners legs,
The traces of the smallest spider's web,
The collars of the moonshine's watry beams. Shakspeare.

3. The part of the dress that surrounds the neck.

It binds me about as the collar of my coat, Job, xxx. 18.

4. To slip the COLLAR. To get free; to escape; to disentangle himself from any engagement or difficulty.

When as the ape him heard so much to talk
Of labour, that did from his liking baulk,
He would have slipped the collar handsomely.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

5. A COLLAR of Brawn, is the quantity bound up in one parcel.

There is history in words as well as etymology. Thus brawn, being made of the collar or breast part of the boar, is termed a collar of brawn. The brawn or boar begets collar; which being rolled up, conveys the idea to any thing else; and eel, so dressed, takes the name of collared eel; as does also collared beef, &c. So that every thing rolled bears the name and arms of collar. Pegge, Anec. of the Eng. Language.

CO'LLAR-BONE. n. s. [from collar and bone.] The clavicle; the bones on each side of the neck.

A page riding behind the coach, fell down, bruised his face, and broke his right collarbone. Wiseman's Surg.

To CO'LLAR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To seize by the collar; to take by the throat.

2. To COLLAR Beef, or other meat; to roll it up, and bind it hard and close with a string or collar, Dr. Johnson says. But see the fifth sense of collar, where the example better explains this use of the word, and presents also collar'd.

CO'LLARED.* adj. [from collar.] In heraldry, still used for any animal having a collar about its neck. Such are Chancer's dogs.

Collared with gold, and torettes filed round.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

To COLLA'TE.† v. a. [confero, collatum, Latin.]

1. To compare one thing of the same kind with another.

Knowledge will be ever a wandering and indigested thing, if it be but a commixture of a few notions that are at hand and occur, and not excited from a sufficient number of instances, and those well collated. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They could not relinquish their Judaism, and embrace Christianity, without considering, weighing, and collating both religions. South.

2. To collate books; to examine if nothing be wanting.

Having some years before collated several Greek copies of the New Testament. Fell's Life of Hammond, § 1.

3. To bestow; to confer.

The significance of the sacrament disposes the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God, there con-signed, exhibited, and collated. Bp. Taylor, Communicant.

4. With to. To place in an ecclesiastical benefice.

See COLLATION.

If a patron shall neglect to present unto a benefice, void above six months, the bishop may collate thereunto. Ayliffe.

He thrust out the invader, and collated Aunsdorf to the benefice: Luther performed the consecration. Atterbury.

COLLA'TERAL.† adj. [old Fr. collateral, from con and latus, Lat.]

1. Side to side.

In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere. Shakspeare.

Thus saying, from his radiant seat he rose,
O high collateral glory. Milton, P. I.

2. Running parallel.

3. Diffused on either side.

But man by number is to manifest
His single imperfection; and beget
Like of his like, his image multiplied;
In unity defective, which requires
Collateral love, and dearest amity.

Milton, P. I.

4. In genealogy, those that stand in equal relation to some common ancestor.

The estate and inheritance of a person dying intestate, is by right of devolution, according to the civil law, given to such as are allied to him ex latere, commonly stiled collaterals, if there be no ascendants or descendants surviving at the time of his death. Ayliffe, Paragon.

5. Not direct; not immediate.

They shall hear and judge 'twixt you and me,
If by direct or by collateral hand!
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give
To you in satisfaction. Shakespeare.

6. Concurrent.

A collateral bond, is a bond with sufficient surties. Hudnot.
All the force of the motive lies within itself: it receives no collateral strength from external considerations. Atterbury.

COLLA'TERALLY. adv. [from collateral.]

1. Side by side.

These pullies may be multiplied according to sundry different situations, not only when they are subordinate, but also when they are placed collaterally. Watkins.

2. Indirectly.

By asserting the scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have created two enemies: the papists more directly, because they have kept the scripture from us; and the fanatics more collaterally, because they have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit. Dryden.

3. In collateral relation.

COLLA'TERALNESS.* n. s. [from collateral.] A state of collateral relation or connexion. Cotgrave.

COLLA'TION.* n. s. [collation, old Fr. collatio, Lat.]

1. The act of conferring or bestowing; gift.

Neither are we to give thanks alone for the first collation of these benefits, but also for their preservation. Ray on the Creation.

2. Comparison of one copy, or one thing of the same kind, with another.

Let us now see how God revenged himself upon sinners, and by way of collation apply it to ourselves. Spekman, Hist. of Sacrilege, i. § 1.

In the disquisition of truth, a ready fancy is of great use; provided that collation doth its office. Greene, Cosm.

I return you your Milton, which upon collation, I find to be revised and augmented in several places. Pope.

3. In law.

Collation is the bestowing of a benefice, by the bishop that hath it in his own gift or patronage; and differs from institution in this, that institution into a benefice is performed by the bishop at the presentation of another who is patron, or hath the patron's right for the time. Cave.

Bishops should be placed by collation of the king under his letters patent, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.

4. A repast; a treat less than a feast; formerly, "a drinking between dinner and supper." Hudnot.

When I came, I found such a collation of wine and sweetmeats prepared, as little corresponded to the terms of the invitation. Whiston's Memoirs, p. 272.

5. Discourse. [old Fr. colacion, harangue, discours.]

No parson, vicar, curate, or lecturer, shall preach any sermon or collation hereafter, but upon some part of the catechism, &c. Abp. Canterbury's Direct. conc. Preachers, 1622.
Sermons, and other collations, and lectures. Const. and Can. Eccl. i.

No book was more read in the following ages than Cussian's Collations. Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

6. Collection; shot or dividend contributed.

It [the Apostle's Creed] is called symbolum from συμβολισμός, that signifies to put together, and to cast in money to make up a sum or reckoning. Hence the word symbolum signifies a shot, a badge, a collation, or the word given to the soldiers in war. 1. A shot or collation, because every particular apostle did cast in and collate his article, to make up this sum; at least the whole doth arise out of their common writings. Bp. Nicholson, Expos. of the Catechism, (1662.) p. 25.

COLLAT'IOUS. adj. [collatitius, Lat.] Done by the contribution of many. Dict.

COLLA'TIVE.* adj. [from collate.] In law, an advowson collative is, where the bishop and the patron are one and the same person. Blackstone.

COLLA'TOR.* n. s. [from collate.]

1. One that compares copies, or manuscripts.

To read the titles they give an editor, or collator of a manuscript, you would take him for the glory of letters. Addison.

2. One who presents to an ecclesiastical benefice.

A mandatory cannot interrupt an ordinary collator. If a month is expired from the day of presentation. Ayliffe.

3. One that bestows any gift.

Well-placed benefits redound to the collator's honour.

Fitzham's Resolves, ii. 16.

To COLLA'UD.* v. a. [collaudo, Lat.] To join in praising.

Beasts, wild and tame,

Whom lodgings yield

House, den, or field;

Collaud his name. Howell, Lett. i. v. 11.

COLLEAGUE.* n. s. [old Fr. colleague, from collega, Lat.] A partner in office or employment. Anciently accented on the last syllable; but not always.

Easy it might be seen that I intend

Mercy colleague with justice, sending thee. Milton, P. L.

Not must wit

Be colleague to religion, till he it. Denne, Poems, p. 180.

The regents, upon demise of the crown, would keep the peace without colleaguus. Swift.

To COLLE'AGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite with.

Collegued with this dream of his advantage,

He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,

Importing the surrender of those lands. Shakespeare, Ham.

COLLEAGUESHIP.* n. s. [from colleague.] Partnership.

The outward duties of a friendship, or a colleagueship in the same family, or in the same journey. Milton, Tetrachordon.

To COLLECT.* v. a. [old Fr. collecter, from collico, collectura, Lat.]

1. To gather together: to bring into one place.

'Tis memory alone that enriches the mind, by preserving what our labour and industry daily collect. Watts.

2. To draw many units, or numbers, into one sum.

Let a man collect into one sum as great a number as he pleases, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it. Locke.

3. To gain by observation.

The reverent care I bear unto my lord,
Make me collect these dangers in the duke. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. To infer as a consequence; to gather from premises.

How great the force of erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's premonition to his disciples. Dec. Priety.

They conclude they can have no idea of infinite space, because they can have no idea of infinite matter; which consequence, I conceive, is very ill collected. Locke.

5. To COLLECT himself. To recover from surprise; to gain command over his thoughts; to assemble his sentiments.

Be collected;

No more amazement.

Affrighted much,

I did in time collect myself, and thought

This was so, and no slumber. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

Pro-perity unexpected often maketh men careless and remiss; whereas they who receive a wound, become more vigilant and collected. Hayward.

As when of old some orator renown'd

In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence

Flourish'd, since mute, to some great cause address'd,

Stood in himself collected, while each part,
Motion, each act won audience, ere the tongue
Sometimes in highth began, as no delay
Of preface brooking through his zeal of right. Milton, P. L.

COLLECT. † n. s. [collecta, low Lat.] "Some ritualists think, because the word collect is sometimes used both in the vulgar Latin Bible, and by the ancient fathers, to denote the gathering together of the people into religious assemblies; that therefore the prayers are called collects, as being repeated when the people are collected together. Others think they are so named, upon account of their comprehensive brevity; the minister collecting into short forms the petitions of the people, which had before been divided between him and them by versicles and responses; and for this reason God is desired in some of them to hear the prayers and supplications of the people. Though I think it is very probable, that the collects for the Sundays and Holydays bear that name, upon account that a great many of them are evidently collected out of the epistles and gospels." Wheatly on the Comm. Prayer, ch. 3. § 19. A short comprehensive prayer, used at the sacrament; any short prayer.

Then let your devotion be humbly to say over proper collects.
Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

COLLECTANEOUS. adj. [collectaneus, Lat.] Gathered up together; collected; notes compiled from various books.

If once we descend unto probable collections, we are then in the territory where free and arbitrary determinations, the territory where human laws take place. Hooker, i. § 8.

Thou shalt not peep thro' lattices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' labyrinths of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

4. A corollary; a conseqtary deduced from premises; deduction; consequence.

It should be a weak collection, if whereas we say, that when Christ had overcome the sharpness of death, he then opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers; a thing in such sort affirmed with circumstances, were taken as insinuating an opposite denial before that circumstance be accomplished. Hooker.

This label
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

When she, from sundry arts, one skill doth draw;
Gathering from divers fights, one act of war;

From many cases like, one rule of law:
These her collections, not the senses are. Davies.

COLLOCUTOR.* n. s. [from the Lat. collocutus.] A dialogist; one of the speakers in a dialogue.

Licentius, one of the collocutors in that dialogue, doth tell us of one Albicrius, a notable diviner.

M. Casaubon of Credulity, &c. p. 148.

In his Tusculan Questions the collocutor, proving the soul to be of a divine nature, argues from this contrivance of Archimedes. Derham.

TO COLLO'GUE.† v. n. [probably from colloquor, Lat.]

To wheedle; to flatter; to please with kind words.

A low word, Dr. Johnson says; but he gives no example, by which we may judge of its usage. It does not appear to have been considered as a low word, but as current and as usual, as flatter or wheedle.

They do apply themselves to the times, to lie, dissimble, collogue, and flatter their lieges. Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 327.

They will crack, counterfeit, and collogue as well as the best. Ibid. p. 301.

Such base flattery, parasitical fawning and colloguing, &c, it would ask an expert Vesalius to anatomize every member

Burton, Anal. of Mel. Pref.

CO'LOP.† n. s. [It is derived by Minshew from coal and op, a rasher broiled upon the coals; a carb-nade. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement. Other whimsical etymologies have been offered, as in Brand's Popular Antiquities. But the old Fr. colp, to cut off, has hitherto been overlooked.]

1. A small slice of meat.

Sweetbread and collops were with skewers prick'd

About the sides.

Dryden, Fables.

A cook perhaps has mighty things profess'd;

Then sent up but two dishes nicely drest:

What signifies Scotch collops to a feast? King's Cookery.

2. A piece of any animal.

He covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

Job xv. 27.

Take notice what plight you find me in, if there want but a collop or a steak o' me, look to't.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

The lion is upon his death-bed: not an enemy that does not apply for a collop of him. Il' Estrange.

3. In burlesque language, a child.

Come, sir page,

Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain,

Most dear'st, my collop. Shakspeare, Winter's Tale.

Thou art a collop of my flesh,

And for thy sake I have shed many a tear.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

COLLO'QUIAL.† adj. [from colloquy.] Whatever relates to common conversation.

The seventh epistle of the first book of Horace, and the sixth satire of the second, are here imitated in a style and manner different from the former imitations, in the burlesque and colloquial style and measure of Swift.

CO'LLOQUIST.* n. s. [from colloquy.] A speaker in a dialogue. See COLLOCUTOR.

The colloquists in this dialogue being all real persons, though concealed under feigned names. Malone, Life of Dryden.

COLLOQUY.† n. s. [colloquium, Lat.] The earliest example of this word which Dr. Johnson gives is from Taylor, or Milton; who, however, did not introduce the word into our language. Donne writes it colloquium.] Conference; conversation; alternate discourse; talk.

Solomon so elegantly characterizeth the drowsy-headed sluggards, that no character in Theophrastus is more graphically described; which he hath done in the form of a short colloquy or dialogue. Fotherby, Athcom. (1622,) p. 200.

All that was alleged and acted in that twenty and colloquy was approved.

Sir G. Buck's Hist. of K. Rich. III. (1646,) p. 23.

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,

In that celestial colloquy sublime,

As with an object that excels the sense,

Dazzled, and spent, sunk down.

Milton, P. L.

In retirement make frequent colloquies, or short discourses, between God and thy own soul. Bp. Taylor.

CO'LLOW.† n. s. [More properly colly, from coal, Dr. Johnson says. But we had formerly the verb collow, to mark or black with coal. Sherwood.]

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals, or wood.

Woodward on Fossils.

COLLU'CTANCY. n. s. [colluctor, Lat.] A tendency to contest; opposition of nature.

COLLU'CTA'TION.† n. s. [colluctatio, Lat.] Contest; struggle; contrariety; opposition; spite.

Arriving to a state of command over a man's self, and freedom from such colluctations and collisions as are found in the working seas. More, Conj. Cabbalist. (1653.) p. 55.

The thermal, natural baths, or hot springs, do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To COLLU'DE.† v. n. [colluder, old Fr. colludo, Lat.] To conspire in a fraud; to act in concert; to play into the hand of each other.

One notorious, singular, mischievous Antichrist may arise, towards the final consummation of the world; who in fraudulent, colluding, malicious craftiness,—shall go beyond all other that ever lived in the world. Mountagu, App. to Cæsar, p. 159.

COLLU'DER.* n. s. [from collude.] He, who conspires in a fraud or trick.

Colluders yourselves, as violent to this law of God by your unmerciful binding, as the Pharisees by their unbounded loosening! Milton, Tetrachordon.

COLLU'DING.* n. s. [from collude.] Trick; secret management of deceit.

Your goodly glozings, and time-serving colludings with the state, are but like watermen upon the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way. Mountagu, App. to Cæsar, p. 43.

COLLU'SION.† n. s. [collusio, Lat.]

Collusion is, in our common law, a deceitful agreement or compact between two or more, for the one part to bring an action against the other to some evil purpose; as to defraud a third of his right.

Cowel.

But most the foxe, maister of collusion;
For he has vowed thy last confusion.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

By the ignorance of the merchants, or dishonesty of weavers, or the collusion of both, the ware was bad, and the price excessive. Swift.

COLLU'SIVE.† adj. [from collude.] •Fraudulently concerted.

The ministers of justice have no opportunity to be collusive, as being free from the great allurements of dealing falsely; for bribery is not known amongst them.

L. Addison, W. Barb. p. 177.

Be strictly upon your guard against all collusive and sophistical arguings whatsoever.

Trapp's Popery truly stated, P. iii. § 2.

COLLU'SIVELY.† adv. [from collusive.] In a manner fraudulently concerted.

If this had been permitted, the land might have been aliened collusively without the consent of the superiour. Blackstone.

COLLU'SIVENESS.* n. s. [from collusive.] Fraudulent concert.

COLLU'SORY. adj. [from colludo, Lat.] Carrying on a fraud by secret concert.

COLLY. n. s. [from coal.] The smut of coal.

Suppose thou saw her dressed in some old hirsute attire, out of fashion, coarse raiment besmeared with soot, colly, perfumed with opopanax. Burton on Melancholy.

To COLLY.† v. a. To grime with coal; to smut with coal.

Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a speen, unfolds both heav'n and earth;
And, ere a man hath pow'r to say behold,
The jaws of darkness do devour it up. Shakespeare.

Thou hast not collied thy face enough. B. Jonson, Poetaste.

COLLY'RUM.† n. s. [Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but no further. It is, in fact, the Gr. καλλύριον, from καλλύρα, which, according to Scaliger, signifies bread sopped, first used as a medicine for the eyes: afterwards all medicines for the eyes, whether ointments or washes, received this name. Our old lexicography has collyrie for this word.] An ointment for the eyes.

VOL. I.

COLMAR. n. s. [Fr.] A sort of pear.

CO'LOCYNTH.* n. s. [old Fr. colocinthe, Lat. colocynthis.] Coloquintida; bitter apple. See COLO-QUINTIDA.

If they were masters of our affairs, they would suffer nothing to grow but their own colocynths and gourds.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, J. 1. c. 1.

CO'LOGN Earth. n. s. Is a deep brown, very light bastard ochre, which is no pure native fossil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth. Hill on Fossils.

CO'LOM. n. s. [κῶλον, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed, nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the semicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction; as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never for bear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long. It begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney, on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place: then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum, in the rectum.

Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound.

Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits.

Floyer on the Humours.

CO'LOMEL.† n. s. [Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columnæ; exercitus columnæ. Each is plausible, Dr. Johnson says. But he has omitted to notice, that this word is by our old and good authors written also coronel; as by B. Jonson, "He might have been serjeant-major, if not lieutenant-coronel to the regiment." Every Man out of his Humour. And by Beaumont and Fletcher, "There is no end of wealth, coronel." Colgrave also writes it coronel. It is therefore probable, that our word is from the Spanish coronel, who is the commander of a regiment; and his company is the coronela; low Lat. coronellus, chiliarchus, tribunus: Du Cange. Probably from the Lat. corona, a ring or company of men. Milton sounds colonel with three distinct syllables.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally sounded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison. Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,
If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.

Milton, Sonnet.

CO'LONELSHIP. n. s. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him. Swift.

COLO'NIAL.* adj. [from colony.] Relating to a colony.

A colony ambassador in London will be at all your meetings of West India merchants and planters, and, in effect, in all our colonial councils. Burke on a Decade Peace.

COLO'NICAL.* adj. [from colonus, Lat.] Relating to husbandmen.

Colonial services were those, which were done by the peasants and serfs (that is, husbandmen) to their lords. Spelman.

CO'LOLIST.* n. s. [from colony.] One departed from the mother-country to inhabit some distant place.

The colonists carry out with them a knowledge of agriculture and of other useful arts, superiour to what can grow up of its own accord in the course of many centuries among savage and barbarous nations.

A. Smith, Wealth of Nations, iv. 7.

The colonists emigrated from you.

Burke on Conciliation with America.

To CO'LOITIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand-drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the Christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention.

Bacon, Holy War.

Druina hath advantage by aspect of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily. Howell, Vocal Forest.

COLONIZATION.* n. s. [from colonize.] This word Mr. Malone believes to have been introduced into our language by the right hon. C. Townshend, chancellor of the exchequer. The act of planting with inhabitants, or forming colonies.

Our ministers are of opinion, that the increase of our trade and manufactures, that our growth by colonization, and by consequence, have concurred to accumulate immense wealth in the hands of some individuals. Burke on the Cause of Discontents.

CO'LOINIZING.* n. s. The same as colonization.

If the dominions of Spain in the New World had been of such moderate extent, as bore any proportion to the parent state, the progress of her colonizing might have been attended with the same benefit, as that of other nations. Robertson.

COLONNA'DE. n. s. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure, or a series of columns, disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dict.

Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,
And here the marble statues breathe in rows.

Addison.

2. Any series or range of pillars.

For you my colonnades extend their wings.

Pope.

CO'LONY. n. s. [colonia, Lat.]

1. A body of people drawn from the mother-country to inhabit some distant place.

To these now inhabitants and colonies he gave the same law under which they were born and bred. Spenser on Ireland.

Rooting out these two rebellious sects, he placed English colonies in their rooms. Davies on Ireland.

Osiris, or the Bacchus of the ancients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, planting colonies and building cities.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The country planted; a plantation.

The rising city, which from far you see,
Is Carthage; and a Tyrian colony. Dryden, Virg.

CO'LOPHON.* n. s. [Lat.] The conclusion of a book, generally containing the place or the year, or both, of its publication.

They are closed with the following epilogue and colophon.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. g. 2.

CO'LOPHONY. n. s. [from Colophon, a city whence it came.] Rosin.

Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony. Boyle.

Turpentine and oils leave a colophony, upon a separation of their thinner oil. Floyer on the Humours.

COLOQU'NTIDA.† n. s. [colocynthis, Lat. κολοκυνθίς.]

The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicine.

Chambers.

The food that to him is now as lucious as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as colocynthis. Shakspeare, Othello.

If our famished appetites hear of meat, they fear no colocynthis. Bp. Rainbow, Sermon (1635) p. 2.

God put in a little colocynthis, which spoiled the whole mess. South, Sermon viii. 216.

CO'LORATE. adj. [coloratus, Lat.] Coloured; died; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunics and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays from visible objects would have been stopt. Ray.

COLORATION. n. s. [coloro, Lat.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.

Some bodies have a more deperable nature than others, as is evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tint more than a great quantity of brazil. Bacon.

2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preeminence.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COLOR'IFICK. adj. [colorificus, Latin.] That which has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opt.

COLOSS.† } n. s. [old Fr. colosse, Lat. colossus.]

COLOSSUS. } A statue of enormous magnitude.

That colossus [of Rhodes] was of gilded brass, and eighty cubits high. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 267.

In that isle he also defaced an hundred other colossuses. Ibid.
Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

There huge colosses rose, with trophies crown'd,
And runic characters were grav'd around.

Pope.

COLOSSAL.* adj. [old Fr. colossal, which Cotgrave renders colossus-like; and Shakspeare, we may observe, has colossus-wise; but colossal is of recent date in our language.] Gigantick; like a colossus.

This colossal statue of the celebrated Eastern tyrant is strongly imagined.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

Looking up to this great colossal system of empire thus founded on commerce.

Pownall on the Study of Antiq. p. 95.

COLOSSE'AN. adj. [colosseus, Lat.] In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

Among others he mentions the colossean statue of Juno.

Harris, Philol. Inquiries.

COLO'SSIANS. n. s. Christians of Colosse, a considerable city of Phrygia in Asia Minor; to whom St. Paul addressed an epistle. The Rhodians, from the circumstance of their colossus, were also called, by the ancient poets, Colossians.

He [St. Paul] requires his Colossians to forsake those things, [the vicious practices of the Gnosticks,] and to be renewed to that which the Gnosticks have not attained to, θεωρηματα, to acknowledgement, or discerning, that is, the experimental, practical knowledge of God's goodness to us, (which is more than the first creating,) in regenerating us after his own image, to live according to the divine pattern which he hath set us.

Hammond on the N. T. Test. Col. iv. 10.

COLO'SSICK. adj. [from colossus.] Though colossick is modern, this adjective is one of our old words, and is employed with good effect in a very forcible passage, written by Chapman, the dramatist, and translator of Homer.] Large, like a colossus.

Men merely great

In their affected gravity of voice,
Sourness of countenance, manners' cruelty,
Authority, wealth, and all the spawn of fortune,
Think they bear all the kingdom's worth before them;
Yet differ not from those colossick statues,
Which, with heroic forms without o'erspread,
Within are nought but mortar, flint, and lead.

Chapman's Trag. of Bussy D'Anbois.

COLO'SSUS-WISE. adv. In the manner of a colossus; astride, as the Colossus at Rhodes stood.

Bastard Margarelon

Hath Doreus prisoner;
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the pashed corpses of the kings.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

COLOUR. n. s. [color, Lat.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed.

Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakespeare.

For though our eyes can naught but colours see,
Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight.

Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet.

Newton's Opt.

2. The freshness; or appearance of blood in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live,
The treacherous colours the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away.

Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences.

Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false shew.

Under the colour of commending him,

I have access my own love to prefer. Shakespeare.

Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laden with corn, under the colour of the sale whereof they rose; all that was done in the city.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

7. Kind; species; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war; they say the colours of the foot, and standard of the horse.

He at Venice gave

His body to that pleasant country's earth,

And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,

Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Against all cheeks, rebukes, and manners,

I must advance the colours of my love,

And not retire.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

The banks were filled with companies, passing all along the river under their colours, with trumpets sounding.

Knolles.

9. Colours is used singularly by Addison.

An author compares a ragged coin to a tattered colours.

Addison.

TO COLOUR. v. a. [coloro, Lat.]

1. To mark with some hue, or die.

The rays, to speak properly, are not coloured: in them there is nothing else than a certain power and disposition to stir up a sensation of this or that colour.

Newton's Opt.

2. To palliate; to excuse; to dress in specious colours, or fair appearances.

I told him, that I would not favour or colour in any sort his former folly.

Raleigh, Essays.

He colours the falshood of Æneas by an express command from Jupiter to forsake the queen.

Dryden, Dedic. Æn.

3. To make plausible.

We have scarce heard of an insurrection that was not coloured with grievances of the highest kind, or countenanced by one or more branches of the legislature.

Addison, Freeholder.

4. To COLOUR a stranger's goods, is when a freeman allows a foreigner to enter goods at the custom-house in his name; so that the foreigner pays but single duty, when he ought to pay double.

Phillips.

TO COLOUR. v. n. To blush. A low word, only used in conversation.

COLOURABLE. adj. [from colour.] Specious; plausible. It is now little used.

They have now a colourable pretence to withstand innovations, having accepted of other laws and rules already.

Spenser on Ireland.

They were glad to lay hold on so colourable a matter, and to traduce him as an author of suspicious innovation.

Hooker.

Had I sacrificed ecclesiastical government and revenues to their covetousness and ambition, they would have found no colourable necessity of an army.

King Charles.

We hope the mercy of God will consider us unto some ministration of our offences; yet had not the sincerity of our parents so colourable expectations.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

COLOURABLENESS. n. s. [from colourable.] That which is made plausible.

You oppose figure to pluniness and colourableness.

Fulke against Allen, (1586,) p. 83.

COL

The process, howsoever colourably awarded, hath not hit the very mark whereat it was directed. Bacon.

COLOURED. participial adj. [from colour.] Streaked; diversified with variety of hues.

The coloured are coarser juiced, and therefore not so well, and equally concocted. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COLOURING. n. s. [from colour.] The part of the painter's art that teaches to lay on his colours with propriety and beauty.

All which amounts to no more than a verbal painting or oral colouring. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 95.

But as the slightest sketch if justly trac'd,
Is by ill colouring but the more disgrac'd,
So by false learning is good sense defac'd. Pope.

All these amazing incidents do the inspired historians relate nakedly and plainly, without any of the colourings and heightenings of rhetoric. West on the Resurrection, p. 356.

COLOURIST. n. s. [from colours.] A painter who excels in giving the proper colours to his designs.

Titian, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck, and the rest of the good colourists, have come nearest to nature. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

COLOURLESS. adj. [from colours.] Without colour: not distinguished by any hue; transparent.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, and air, when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherways formed into plates, exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness; although, at a greater thickness, they appear very clear and colourless. Newton's Opt.

Pellucid colourless glass or water, by being beaten into a powder or froth, do acquire a very intense whiteness. Bentley.

COLSTAFF.* n. s. A large staff, on which a burthen is carried between two on their shoulders.

Whether they [witches] can bewitch cattle to death, ride in the air upon a colstaff, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 59.

COLUMBINE.* n. s. The name of the mistress of Harlequin, in our pantomimes.

COLUMBO Root.* This root derives its name from Columbo, a town in the island of Ceylon, whither it was transplanted from Asia. — It is brought into Europe in circular pieces, about three inches thick, covered with a wrinkled bark of a dark brown hue, and internally it is of a light yellow. It has an aromattick smell, and is bitter, and slightly pungent to the taste. It is reckoned almost a specifick in the cholera morbus, nausea, indigestion, bilious fever, diarrhæa, dysentery, and most disorders of the stomach and bowels. — A tincture is made of it by infusing an ounce in a pint of brandy. — An extract likewise is prepared. Chambers.

COLUMN. n. s. [columna, Latin.]

1. A round pillar. The word appears to have been not familiar, till late in the reign of Elizabeth; for Sir H. Wotton, in his Elements of Architecture, thus remarks: "Pillars, which we may likewise call columnes; for the word among artificers is almost naturalized." Rem. p. 21.

Some of the old Greek columns, and altars were brought from the ruins of Apollo's temple at Delos. Peacham.

Round broken columns clasping ivy twin'd.

Pope.

Our best castor is from Russia; the great and principal use whereof, is in hysterical and comatose cases. Grew.

COMB in the end, and COMP in the beginning of names, seem to be derived from the British cwm, which signifies a low situation. Gibson's Camden.

COMB, in Cornish, signifies a valley, and had the same meaning anciently in the French tongue.

COMB.* n. s. [Sax. comb; and Welsh and old French, as Gibson and Johnson have observed, may be cited. They owe their origin perhaps to the Gr. κύμβος, a hollow.] Properly, a valley surrounded with hills.

'Till round the world, in sounding combe and plain,
The last of them tell it the first again.

Browne, Brit. Pastorals.

COMB.† n. s. [camb, Saxon; kam, Dutch.]

1. An instrument to separate and adjust the hair.

By fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks,
Sleeking her soft alluring locks.

Milton, Comus.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth, being in number sixteen, were about an inch and a half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton.

C O M

2. The top or crest of a cock, so called from its pectinated indentures.

Cocks have great combs and spurs, hens little or none.

Bacon.

High was his comb, and coral-red withal,
With dents embattl'd, like a castle-wall.

Dryden.

3. The cavities in which the bees lodge their honey. Perhaps from the same word which makes the termination of towns, and signifies hollow or deep. [Gr. κύμβος.]

This in affairs of state,
Employ'd at home, abides within the gate,
To fortify the combs, to build the wall,
To prop the ruins, lest the fabrick fall.

Dryden, Virg.

4. A dry measure. A comb of corn is half a quarter, or four bushels. See COOMB.

To COMB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide, and clean, and adjust the hair with a comb.

Her care shall be

To comb your noddle with a three-legg'd stool. Shakespeare.

Divers with us, that are grown grey, and yet would appear young, find means to make their hair black, by combing it, as they say, with a leaden comb, or the like. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She with ribbons tied

His tender neck, and comb'd his silken hide. Dryden, Jen.

There was a sort of engine, from which were extended twenty long poles, wherewith the man-mountain combs his head. Swift.

To COMBAT. v. n. [combattre, Fr.]

1. To fight; generally in a duel, or hand to hand. Pardon me, I will not combat in my shirt. Shakespeare.
2. To act in opposition, as the acid and alkali combat.

Two planets rushing from aspect malign

Of fiercest opposition in mid sky,

Should combat, and their jarring spheres confound.

Milton, P. L.

To Co'MBAT. v. a. To oppose; to fight.

Their oppressors have changed the scene, and combated the opinions in their true shape. Decay of Petty.

Love yields at last, thus combated by pride,

And she submits to be the Roman's bride. Granville.

Co'MBAT.† n. s. [old Fr. combat.] Contest; battle; duel: strife; opposition generally between two; but sometimes it is used for battle.

Those regions were full both of cruel monsters and monstrous men; all which, by private combats, they delivered the countries of. Sidney.

The noble combat that, 'twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.

Shakespeare.

The combat now by courage must be try'd.

Dryden.

Co'MBATANT. n. s. [combattant, French.]

1. He that fights with another; duellist; antagonist in arms.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown.

Milton, P. L.

Who, single combatant,
Duel'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army.

Milton, S. A.

He with his sword unsheath'd, on pain of life,
Commands both combatants to cease their strife. Dryden.

Like despairing combatants they strive against you, as if they had beheld unveiled the magical shield of Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness. Dryden.

2. A champion.

When any of those combatants strips his terms of ambiguity, I shall think him a champion for knowledge. Locke.

3. With for before the thing defended.

Men become combatants for those opinions. Locke.

COMBATANT.* adj. Disposed to quarrel.

Their valours are not yet so combatant,

Or truly antagonistic, as to fight,

But may admit to hear of some divisions.

Of fortitude, may put 'em off their quarrel.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

COMBATER.* n. s. [from combat.] He who fights.

her marriage dowry; with both, her combine husband, this well seeming Angelo. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

COMBINATION. n. s. [from combine.]

1. Union for some certain purpose; association; league. A combination is of private persons, a confederacy of states or sovereigns.

This cunning cardinal

The articles of the combination drew,
As himself pleas'd. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. It is now generally used in an ill sense, but was formerly indifferent.

They aim to subdue all to their own will and power, under the disguises of holy combinations. K. Charles.

3. Union of bodies, or qualities; commixture; conjunction.

These natures, from the moment of their first combination, have been and are for ever inseparable. Hooker.

Resolution of compound bodies by fire, does not so much enrich mankind as it divides the bodies; as upon the score of its making new compounds by new combinations. Boyle.

Ingratitude is always in combination with pride and hardheartedness. S. ult.

4. Copulation of ideas in the mind.

They never suffer any ideas to be joined in their understandings, in any other or stronger combination than what their own nature and correspondence give them. Locke.

5. COMBINATION is used in mathematicks, to denote the variation or alteration of any number of quantities, letters, sounds, or the like, in all the different manners possible. Thus the number of possible changes or combinations of the twenty-four letters of the alphabet, taken first two by two, then three by three, &c. amount to 1,391,724,288,887,

252,999,425,128,493,402,200. Chambers.

TO COMBINE. v. a. [combiner, Fr. binos jungere.]

Prior.

COMELY. adj. [from become; or from cpeman, Sax. to please.]

1. Graceful; decent; having dignity or grandeur of mien or look. Comeliness seems to be that species of beauty which excites respect rather than pleasure.

If the principal part of beauty is in decent motion, no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable; for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness.

Bacon, Ess. 44.

He that is comely when old and decrepit, surely was very beautiful when he was young.

South.

Thou art a comely, young, and valiant knight.

Dryden.

2. Used of things: decent; according to propriety.

Oh! what a world is this, when what is comely.

Envenoms him that hears it.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

This is a happier and more comely time,

Than when these fellows ran about the streets,

Crying confusion.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

COMELY. † adv. [from the adjective. It should be comelily, which is indeed in our old lexicography, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it. See COMELILY.]

1. Handsomely; gracefully.

To ride comely, to play at all weapons, to dance comely, he very necessary for a courtly gentleman. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

2. Decently; with propriety.

Those things that either God was honoured with, or his people edified, are decently retained, and in our churches comely practised.

Homily, of the Time and Place of Prayer, P. ii.

COMER. n. s. [from come.] One that comes.

Time is like a fashionable host,

That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;

But with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,

Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,

And farewell goes out sighing. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

Yourselves, renowned prince, then stood as fair

As any comer I have look'd on yet,

For my affection.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

Plants move upwards; but if the sap puts up too fast, it maketh a slender stalk, which will not support the weight, and therefore these are all swift and hasty comers.

Bacon.

It is natural to be kind to the last comer.

I. E. Strange.

Now leave those joys unsuited to thy age,

To a fresh comer, and resign the stage.

Dryden.

The renowned champion of our lady of Loretto, and the miraculous translation of her chapel, about which he hath published a defiance to the world, and offers to prove it against all comers.

Stillingfleet.

There it is not strange that the mind should give itself up to the common opinion, or render itself to the first comer.

Locke.

House and heart are open for a friend; the passage is easy, and not only admits but even invites the comer.

South.

COMESSATION. * n. s. [Lat. comessatio, from the Gr. κωμῳδία, which is from Κῶμος, the heathen deity of revelry. The word seems to have been used by Hales, as a derivative of the Lat. comedo, to eat, and thus to signify a surfeiting; but it is finely employed, in a passage of uncommon eloquence and just indignation at the times, by Bishop Hall, while confined in the Tower, in its original meaning.] Revelling.

For me, I do not envy, but wonder at the licentious freedom, which these men think themselves happy to enjoy; and hold it a weakness in those minds, which cannot find more advantage in confinement and retiredness. Is it a small benefit that I am placed there, where no darts, no blasphemies beat my ears? where my eyes are in no peril of wounding objects? where I hear no invectives, no false doctrines, no sermocinations of ironmongers, feltmakers, cobblers, broom-men, grooms, or any other of those inspired ignorants? no curses, no ribaldries? where I see no drunken commensations, no rebellious routs, no violent oppressions, no obscene rejoicings, nor aught else that may either vex or affright my soul? This, this is my liberty, who whiles I sit here quietly locked up by my keeper, can pity the tumults and distempers abroad, and bless my own immunity from those too common evils.

Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, Works, iii. 489.

The world is apt upon all occasions to fall upon unnecessary commensation and computations.

Hales, Sermon, at the close of his Rem. p. 30.

COMESTIBLE.* adj. [Fr. comestible, Lat. comedo, from the Gr. σύν with, and ἔδω to eat.] Eatable.

His markets [were] the best ordered for prices of comestible ware; where, in all his towns, a man might have sent out a child for any flesh or fish, at a rated price every morning.

Wotton, Rem. p. 246.

COMET.* n. s. [Fr. comète, Sax. cometa, Lat. cometa, Gr. κομήτης, from κόμη, a bush of hair.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit, like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the center of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comets, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomena of the several. Thus when the comet is eastward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, barbatus, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood of the sun, and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations, all that moisture which is spent in vegetation and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids; and turn by putrefaction into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at Midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet, was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

Treatise, and Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or an unusual prodigy.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Such his fell glances, as the fatal light
Of staring comets.

Crashaw.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty.

Addison, Guard. No. 103.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright.

Prior.

COMET-LIKE.* adj. Resembling a comet; exciting wonder and amazement.

I am a maid,

My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on, comet-like.

Shakespeare, Peric.

COMET.* n. s. A game at cards.

What say you to a poule at comet at my house?

Southern, Maid's L. Prayer.

COMETARY.* adj. [from comet.] Relating to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

COMETOGRAPHY.* n. s. [Fr. cometographie, from κομήτης, and γράφω to describe.] A description or treatise of comets.

COMFIT.* n. s. [bellaria arida, Lat. confit, Dutch. It should seem that both are formed by hasty pronunciation from confect.] A dry sweatmeat; any kind of fruit or root, preserved with sugar, and dried.

By feeding me on beans and pease,

He stuns in nasty crevices,

And turns to comfits by his arts,

To make me relish for desserts.

Hudibras, iii. i.

TO COMFIT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve dry with sugar.

The fruit that does so quickly waste,

Men scarce can see it, much less taste,

Thou comfist in streets to make it last.

Cowley.

COMFITURE.* n. s. [from confit, or confection.] Sweetmeat.

From country grass to comfitures of court,

Or city's queelque-choses, let not report

My mind transport.

Denne, Poems, p. 8.

TO COMFORT.* v. a. [comfarto, low Lat. "Salvia confortat nervos," Schol. Sal. Old Fr. conforter. "Conforter une playe, to corroborate a wound by fomentations, &c." Cotgrave.]

1. To strengthen; to enliven; to invigorate.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason, concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hooker, b. i.

Light excelleth in comforting the spirits of men : light varied doth the same effect, with more novelty. This is the cause why precious stones comfort. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some of the abbots had been guilty of comforting and assisting the rebels. Lyliffe, Parergon.

2. To console; to strengthen the mind under the pressure of calamity.

They benighted him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him. Job, xlii. 11.

Co'MFORT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Support; assistance; countenance.

Poyning made a wild chace upon the wild Irish; where, in respect of the mountains and fastnesses, he did little good, which he would needs impute unto the comfort that the rebels should receive underhand from the earl of Kildare. Bacon.

The king did also appoint commissioners for the fining of all such as were of any value, and had any hand or partaking in the aid or comfort of Perkins, or the Cornishmen. Bacon.

2. Consolation; support under calamity or danger.

Her soul heaven's queen, whose name she bears,

In comfort of her mother's fears,
Hath plac'd among her virgin train. B. Jonson.

As they have no apprehension of those things, so they need no comfort against them. Tillotson.

3. That which gives consolation or support in calamity.

I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
Your children were vexation to your youth,
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

We need not fear
To pass commodiously this life, sustained
By him with many comforts, till we end,
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton, P. L.

Co'MFORTABLE. adj. [from comfort.]

1. Receiving comfort; susceptible of comfort; cheerful: of persons. Not in use.

For my sake be comfortable; hold death
A while at the arm's end. Shakspeare, As you like it.

My lord leans wond'rously to discontent;
His comfortable temper has forsook him:
He is much out of health. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

2. Admitting comfort: of condition.

What can promise him a comfortable appearance before his dreadful judge? South.

3. Dispensing comfort; having the power of giving comfort.

He had no brother, which, though it be comfortable for kings to have, yet draweth the subjects eyes aside. Bacon, Hen. VII.

The lives of many miserable men were saved, and a comfortable provision made for their subsistence. Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

Co'MFORTABLENESS. n. s. [from comfortable.] A state of comfort; a dispensation of comfort.

We know a playing wit can praise the discretion of an ass, the comfortableness of being in debt, and the jolly commodities of being sick of the plague! Sidney, Def. of Poetry.

Quiet serenity and comfortableness usually attends a virtuous course of life. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. ii.

The fruitfulness of the vine; the pleasantness of the grape; the comfortableness of the wine. Wallis, Sermon at Oxf. 1682. p. 5.

Co'MFORTABLY. adv. [from comfortable.] In a comfortable manner; with cheerfulness; without despair.

Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith the Lord. Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned. Isaiah, xl. 2.

Upon view of the sincerity of that performance, hope comfortably and cheerfully for God's performance. Hammond.

Co'MFORTER. n. s. [from comfort.]

1. One that administers consolation in misfortunes; one that strengthens and supports the mind in misery or danger.

This very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him, as comforters in his agony. Hooker, v. § 48.

The heav'ns have blest you with a goodly son,

To be a comforter when he is gone. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Nineveh is laid waste; who will bemoen her? whence shall I seek comforters for thee? Neh. iii. 7.

2. The title of the Third Person of the Holy Trinity.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things. St. John, xiv. 26.

From heaven

He to his own a Comforter will send,

The promise of the Father, who shall dwell

His Spirit within them, Milton, P. L. xii. 486.

Co'MFORTFUL. adj. Full of comfort. Obsolete.

Huloet.

Co'MFORTLESS. adj. [from comfort.] Wanting comfort; being without any thing to allay misfortune: used of persons as well as things.

Yet shall not my death be comfortless, receiving it by your sentence. Sidney, b. ii.

Where was a cave, yvrought with wond'rous art,
Deep, dark, uneasy, doleful, comfortless. Spenser, F. Q.

News fitting to the night;
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible. Shakspeare, King John.

On thy feet thou stood'st at last,
Though comfortless, as when a father mourns
His children, all in view destroyed at once. Milton, P. L.
That unsociable comfortless deafness had not quite tired me. Swift.

Co'MFORTRESS. n. s. [from comforter.] She who administers consolation or support.

To be your comfortress, and to preserve you. B. Jonson, For.

Co'MFREY. n. s. [consolida, Lat. comfrie, French.] A plant. Miller.

Campana here he crops, approved wondrous good:
As comfrey unto him that's bruised, spetting blood. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

Get thee some wholesome broth with sage, and comfrey.
Beaumont and Fl. Knight of the Burning Pestle.

Co'MICAL. adj. [comicus, Latin.]

1. Raising mirth; merry; diverting.

The greatest resemblance of our author is in the familiar stile and pleasing way of relating comical adventures of that nature. Dryden, Fab. Preface.

Something so comical in the voice and gestures, that a man can hardly forbear being pleased. Addison on Italy.

2. Relating to comedy; befitting comedy; not tragical.

That all might appear to be knit up in a comical conclusion, the duke's daughter was afterwards joined in marriage to the lord Lisle. Hayward.

They deny it to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.

Co'MICALLY. adv. [from comical.]

1. In such a manner as raises mirth.

This, I confess, is comically spoken. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 570.

The ladies have laugh'd at thee most comically. B. Jonson, Epicoene.

2. In a manner befitting comedy.

In this tragicomedy of love to act several parts, some satirically, some comically, some in a mixt tone. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 416.

C O M

COMICK. adj. [comicus, Lat. comique, French.]

1. Relating to comedy; not tragick.

I never yet the tragick muse essay'd,
Deter'd by thy inimitable maid;
And when I venture at the comick stile,
Thy scornful lady seems to mock my toil. Wallce.
A comick subject loves an humble verse,
Thyestes scorns a low and comick stile;
Yet comedy sometimes may raise his voice. Roscommon.
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep. Dryden.

2. Raising mirth.

Stately triumphs, mirthful comick shows,
Such as befit the pleasure. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

CO'MING. n. s. [from To come.]

1. The act of coming; approach.

Where art thou, Adam! wont with joy to meet
My coming, seen far off? Milton, P. L.
Sweet the coming on
Of grateful ev'ning mild. Milton, P. L.

2. State of being come; arrival.

May't please you, noble madam, to withdraw
Into your private chamber; we shall give you
The full cause of our coming. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.
Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others. Locke.

Latin.]

1. To govern; to give orders to; to hold in subjection or obedience: correlative to obey.

Look, this feather,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Christ could command legions of angels to his rescue. Dec. Piety.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To servile duties. Dryden, Pers. Sat. 5.
The queen commands, and we'll obey,
Over the hills, and far away. Old Song.

2. To order; to direct to, be done: contrary to prohibit.

My conscience bids me ask, wherefore you have Commanded of me these most poisonous compounds. Shakspeare.
We will sacrifice to the Lord our God, as he shall command us. Ex. viii. 27.

Whatever hypocrites austere talk
Of purity and place and innocence,
Defaming as impure, what God declares
Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all,
Our Maker bids increase. Who bids abstain
But our destroyer, foe to God and man? Milton, P. L.

3. To have in power.

If the strong cane support thy walking hand,
Chairmen no longer shall the wall command. Gay's Trivia.

4. To overlook; to have so subject as that it may be seen or annoyed.

Up to the Eastern tower,
Whose height commands as subject all the vale,
To see the sight. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
His eye might there command, wherever stood
City, of old or modern fame; the seat
Of mightiest empire. Milton, P. L.
One side commands a view of the finest garden in the world. Addison, Guard No. 101.

Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To COMMA'ND. v. n. To have the supreme authority;
to possess the chief power; to govern.

Those two commanding powers of the soul, the understanding or the will. South, Sermon.

COMMA'ND. n. s. [from the verb. And old Fr.
command.]

1. The right of commanding; power; having a thing in one's power; supreme authority. It is used in military affairs, as magistracy or government in civil life: with over.

Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet my soldiers are in my command.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

With lightning fill her awful hand,
And make the clouds seem all at her command. Waller.
He assumed an absolute command over his readers. Dryden.
Not that God wanted the command of gold and silver.

Tillotson, Posth. Sermon. ii. 9.

2. Cogent authority; despotism.

Command and force may often create, but can never cure, an aversion; and whatever any one is brought to by compulsion, he will leave as soon as he can. Locke on Education.

3. The act of commanding; the mandate uttered; order given.

Of this tree we may not taste nor touch;
God so commanded, and left that command
Sole daughter of his voice. Milton, P. L.

As there is no prohibition of it, so no command for it.

Bp. Taylor.

The captain gives command, the joyful train
Glide through the gloomy shade, and leave the main.

Dryden.

4. The power of overlooking, or surveying any place.

The steepy stand,
Which overlooks the vale with wide command. Dryden, Æn.

COMMANDANT.* n. s. [Fr.] A chief commanding a place or a body of troops.

The commandant cautioned us, as a friend, against returning to the cavern. Smollett, Tr. of Gil Blas.

One would expect, that a serious inquiry would be made into the murder of commandants in the view of their soldiers.

Burke.

COMMA'NDATORY.* adj. [from command.] Having the full force of command.

How commandatory the apostolical authority was, is best discernible by the Apostle's mandates into the churches upon several occasions, as to the Thessalonians, We command the brethren.

Bp. Morton, Episcopacy Asserted, p. 73.

COMMA'NDER. n. s. [from command.]

1. He that has the supreme authority; a general; a leader; a chief.

We'll do thee homage, and be rul'd by thee,
Love thee as our commander and our king. Shakspeare.
I have given him for a leader and commander to the people.

Isaiah, lv. 4.

The Romans, when commanders in war, spake to their army, and styled them, My soldiers. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Charles, Henry, and Francis of France, often adventured rather as soldiers than as commanders. Hayward.

Sir Phelim O'Neil appeared as their commander in chief.

Clarendon.

Supreme commander both of sea and land. Waller.

The heroic action of some great commander, enterprised for the common good, and honour of the Christian cause.

Dryden, Jur. Dcd.

Their great commanders, by credit in their armies, fell into the scales as a counterpoise to the people.

Swift.

2. A paving beetle, or a very great wooden mallet, with an handle about three foot long, to use in both hands.

Moxon.

1. A body of the knights of Malta, belonging to the same nation.

2. The residence of a body of knights.

My next excursion was to see the ruins of a very magnificent structure — said to have been a monastery. I rather suppose it to have been the grand commanderie of the island, [Cyprus,] for it is built in the palatial style of those days.

Drummond's Travels, p. 271.

COMMA'NDINGLY.* adv. [from To command.] In a commanding or powerful manner.

His practices are so commandingly exemplary, that they do even force and ravish the most maidenly tender conscience.

Hammond's Works, iv. 566.

COMMA'NDMENT. n. s. [commandement, Fr.]

1. Mandate; command; order; precept.

They plainly require some special commandment for that which is exacted at their hands. Hooker, iii. § 7.

Say, you chose him more after our commandment,
Than guided by your own affections. Shakspeare, Coriol.

By the easy commandment by God given to Adam, to forbear to feed thereon, it pleased God to make trial of his obedience.

Raleigh, History of the World.

2. Authority; coercive power.

I thought that all things had been savage here,
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment. Shakspeare, As you like it.

3. By way of eminence, the precepts of the decalogue given by God to Moses.

And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant and the ten commandments. Exod. xxxiv. 28.

COMMA'NDRESS.† n. s. [old Fr. commanderesse.] A woman vested with supreme authority.

To prescribe the order of doing in all things is a peculiar prerogative, which wisdom hath, as queen or sovereign commandress, over all other virtues. Hooker, v. § 8.

Be you commandress therefore, princess, queen
Of all our forces, be thy word a law.

She knows not why she is intitled sole empress of the best parts of Asia, commandress of so much men and treasure.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 94.

Let me adore this second Hecate,
This great commandress of the fatal sisters.

Bacon, and Fl. Custom of the Country.

COMMARK.* n. s. [old Fr. commarque, commarchie; low Lat. commarchia.] A frontier of a country.

He was indeed an Andalusian, and of the commark of S. Lucar's, no less thievish than Cacus. Skelton, Dou Quix. i. 2.

COMMATE'RIAL. adj. [from con and materia.] Consisting of the same matter with another thing.

The beaks in birds are commaterial with teeth. Bacon.

The body adjacent and ambient is not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body to be preserved. Bacon.

COMMATERIA'LITY. n. s. [from commaterial.] Participation of the same matter.

COMMATISM.* n. s. [from command.] Conciseness; briefness.

The parallelism in many parts of Hosea is imperfect, interrupted, and obscure; an effect perhaps of the commatism of the style.

Bp. Horsley's Hosea, p. 43.

COMME'ASURABLE.* adj. [old Fr. commesurable.] Reducible to the same measure with another thing.

She being now removed by death, a commesurable grief took as full possession of him as joy had done.

Walton, Life of Donne.

COMMELINE. n. s. [commelina, Latin.] A plant.

Miller.

COMMEMORABLE.† adj. [old Fr. commemorabile.] Deserving to be mentioned with honour; worthy to be kept in remembrance.

COMMEMORATE. v. a. [con and memorari, Lat.] To preserve the memory by some publick act; to celebrate solemnly.

Such is the divine mercy, which we now commemorate; and if we commemorate it, we shall rejoice in the Lord.

Fiddes.

COMMEMORATION. n. s. [from commemorate.] An act of public celebration; solemnization of the memory of any thing.

That which is daily offered in the church, is a daily commemoration of that one sacrifice offered on the cross.

Bp. Taylor.

St. Austin believed that the martyrs, when the commemorations were made at their own sepulchres, did join their prayers with the churches, in behalf of those who there put up their supplications to God.

Stillfleet.

Commemoration was formerly made with thanksgiving, in honour of good men departed this world.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

COMMEMORATIVE. adj. [from commemorate.] Tending to preserve memory of any thing.

The annual offering of the paschal lamb was commemorative of that first paschal lamb.

Atterbury.

The original use of sacrifice was commemorative of the original revelation, a sort of daily memorial or record of what God declared, and man believed.

Forbes.

COMMEMORATORY. \ adj.* [from commemorate.] Preserving the memory of persons or things.

The succeeding paschal sacrifices, though commemorative of the first, yet varied something from it.

Hooker on Lent, p. 271.

TO COMMENCE. † v. n. [commence, Fr.]

1. To begin; to take beginning.

Why hath it given me earnest of success,

Commencing in a truth.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Man, conscious of his immortality, cannot be without concern for that state that is to commence after this life.

Rogers.

2. To take a new character.

If wit so much from ignorance undergo,

Ah! let not learning too commence its foe!

Pope.

3. To take an academical degree, at Cambridge; in which sense the word is found in our old lexicography, and often used by our elder writers. See also COMMENCEMENT.

Come, doctor Andrew, without disputation,

Thou shalt commence in the cellar.

Beaumont and Fl., Elder Brother.

Many of our English gentlemen do thus commence, as it were, and take degrees in ignorance and vanity.

Ellis's Gentle Sinner, (1672,) p. 225.

TO COMMENCE. v. a. To begin; to make a beginning of; as, to commence a suit.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,

Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Shakspeare.

COMMENCEMENT. † n. s. [from commence.]

1. Beginning; date.

The waters were gathered together into one place, the third day from the commencement of the creation.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. The first Tuesday in July at Cambridge, when masters of arts, and doctors in all the faculties, complete their degrees.

Barrow preached a sermon at the commencement, which was practical, and much commended.

Worthington to Hartlib, Ep. 22.

At this commencement, in the year 1617, he was created doctor.

A. Philips, Life of Abp. Williams, p. 48.

TO COMMEND. v. a. [commend, Lat.]

1. To represent as worthy of notice, regard, or kindness; to recommend.

After Barbarossa was arrived, it was known how effectually the chief bassa had commended him to Solymán.

Knolles's History.

Among the objects of knowledge, two especially commend themselves to our contemplation; the knowledge of God, and the knowledge of ourselves.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Vain-glory is a principle I commend to no man.

Decay of Piety.

2. To deliver up with confidence.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping and waking, O defend me still.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit.

St. Luke, xxiii. 46.

3. To praise; to mention with approbation.

Who is Silvia? What is she,
That all our swains commend her?

Holy, fair, and wise is she.

Shakspeare.

Old men do most exceed in this point of folly, commending the days of their youth they scarce remembered, at least well understood not.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

He lov'd my worthless rhymes; and, like a friend,

Would find out something to commend.

Cowley.

Historians commend Alexander for weeping when he read the actions of Achilles.

Dryden, Virg. Æn. Ded.

Each finding, like a friend,

Something to blame, and something to commend.

Pope.

4. To mention by way of keeping in memory; to recommend to remembrance.

Signior Antonio

Commends him to you, —

— Ere I ope his letter,

I pray you tell me how my good friend doth.

Shakspeare, Mer. of Ven.

5. To produce to favourable notice.

The chorus was only to give the young ladies an occasion of entertaining the French king with vocal music, and of commending their own voices.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

6. To send.

These draw the chariot which Latinus sends,

And the rich present to the prince commends.

Dryden, Æn.

COMMEND. † n. s. [from the verb.] Commendation.

Not now in use, Dr. Johnson says: citing only the example from Shakspeare's Richard the Second. Shakspeare repeatedly uses it; and it is not yet wholly obsolete in some parts.

Tell her I send to her my kind commends:

Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

With my hearty commends, and much endeared love unto you.

Howell, Lett. i. ii. 18.

COMMENDABLE. adj. [from commend.] Laudable; worthy of praise. Anciently accented on the first syllable.

And power, unto itself most commendable,

Hath not a tomb so evident, as a chair

T'extol what it hath done.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Order and decent ceremonies in the church, are not only comely, but commendable.

Baron, Advice to Villars.

Many heroes, and most worthy persons, being sufficiently commendable from true and unquestionable merit, have received advancement from falsehood.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Britannia is not drawn, like other countries, in a soft caecful posture; but is adorned with emblems, that mark out the military genius of her inhabitants. This is, I think, the only commendable quality that the old poets have touched upon in the description of our country.

Addison on Med.

COMMENDABLY. † adv. [from commendable.] Laudably; in a manner worthy of commendation.

Of preachers the shire holdeth a number, all commendably labouring in their vocation.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Neither have there been wanting such as have written, and that very commendably, the lives of particular men.

Hakewell on Providence, p. 252.

He might perhaps act very rightly and commendably in so doing.

Lowth, Life of Wykeham, p. 309.

COMMENDAM. [commenda, low Latin.] See COMMENDATOR. Commendam is a benefice, which, being void, is commended to the charge and care of some sufficient clerk to be supplied until it be conveniently provided of a pastor.

Cowel.

It had been once mentioned to him, that his peace should be made, if he would resign his bishoprick, and deanery of Westminster; for he had that in commendam. Clarendon.

COMMENDATARY.† n. s. [old Fr. commendataire.]

One who holds a living in commendam.

COMMENDATION. n. s. [from commend.]

1. Recommendation; favourable representation.

This jewel and my gold are your's, provided I have your commendation for my more free entertainment.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

The choice of them should be by the commendation of the great officers of the kingdom. Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

2. Praise; declaration of esteem.

His fame would not get so sweet and noble an air to fly in as in your breath, so could not you find a fitter subject of commendation? Sidney, b. ii.

3. Ground of praise.

Good-nature is the most godlike commendation of a man.

Dryden, Juv. Ded.

4. Message of love.

Mrs. Page has her hearty commendations to you too.

Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Hark you, Margaret,

No princely commendations to my king! —

— Such commendations as become a maid,

A virgin, and his servant, say to him. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

COMMENDATOR.* n. s. [from the old Fr. commendataire.] He who holds a benefice or ecclesiastical dignity in commendam; usually with a bishoprick.

The other [surrender] was of Bisham [abbey] in Berkshire, made by Barlow, bishop of St. David's, that was commendator of it, and a great promoter of the Reformation.

Burnet, Hist. of the Ref. i. 3.

COMMENDATORY.† adj. [from commend.]

1. Favourably representative; containing praise.

It doth much add to a man's reputation, and is like perpetual letters commendatory, to have good forms; to attain them, it almost sufficeth not to despise them. Bacon, Essays.

We bestow the flourish of poetry on those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency of this creature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

If I can think that neither he nor you despise me, it is a greater honour to me, by far, than if all the house of lords writ commendatory verses upon me. Pope.

2. Delivering up with pious hope. Dr. Johnson notices only the first sense. See To COMMEND.

Between seven and eight a clock the rattle began, the commendatory prayer was said for him, and, as it ended, he [K. William III.] died, in the 52d year of his age.

Burnet, Hist. of his own Time.

3. Holding in commendam.

Call those possessors bishops, or canons, or commendatory abbots, or monks, or what you please.

Burke, on the Fr. Revolution.

COMMENDATORY.* n. s. [from commend.] A commendation; eulogy; declaration of esteem.

To sooth and flatter such persons, would be just as if Cicero had spoke commendatories of Antony, or made panegyrics upon Catiline. South, Sermon. viii. 189.

COMMENDER.† n. s. [from commend.] Praiser.

The only commender of this lady's virtues, is Time.

Bacon, Collect. concern. Q. Eliz.

We think in conclusion ill both of the commender and the commended.

Burlton, Anat. of Mel. p. 138.

Such a concurrence of two extremes, by most of the same commanders and disprovers.

Wotton, Life and Death of D. of Buckingham.

Unqualified to understand one single page of Cicero, [he] presumes to set up for his commender and patron.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. p. 241.

COMMENSAL.* n. s. [old Fr. commensal, Lat. commensalis.] A companion at table; one that eats at the same table. Not now in use.

O where hast thou be so long commensal, that hast so mikel eten of the potages of forgetfulness, and dronken so of ignorance! Chaucer, Test. of Love, b. i.

COMMENSALITY.† n. s. [old Fr. commensalite.]

Fellowship of table; the custom of eating together.

They being enjoined and prohibited certain foods, thereby to avoid community with the Gentiles, upon promiscuous commensality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

COMMENSATION.* n. s. [from the Lat. con and mensa, a table.] Eating at the same table.

When Daniel would not pollute himself with the diet of the Babylonians, he probably declined pagan commensation, or to eat of meats forbidden to the Jews.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. Tracts, p. 15.

COMMENSURABILITY. n. s. [from commensurable.]

Capacity of being compared with another, as to the measure; or of being measured by another. Thus an inch and a yard are commensurable, a yard containing a certain number of inches. The diameter and circumference of a circle are incommensurable, not being reducible to any common measure. Proportion.

Some place the essence thereof in the proportion of parts, conceiving it to consist in a comely commensurability of the whole unto the parts, and the parts between themselves.

Brown.

COMMENSURABLE.† adj. [old Fr. commensurable, from con and mensura, Lat.] Reducible to some common measure; as a yard and a foot are measured by an inch. See COMMENSURABLE.

Nor as if those things which are seen, were in equal latitude commensurable with the worlds which were framed.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

If we say, the diameter of the square is incommensurable with its side, we do not intend by IS that it is incommensurable now, having been formerly commensurable.

Harris's Hermes, i. § 6.

COMMENSURABLENESS. n. s. [from commensurable.]

Commensurability; proportion.

There is no commensurableness between this object and a created understanding, yet there is a congruity and connaturality.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To COMMENSURATE.† v. a. [con and mensura, Lat.] To reduce to some common measure.

That division is not natural, but artificial, and by agreement, as the aptest terms to commensurate the longitude of places.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The rare temper and proportion, which the church of England useth in commensurating the forms of absolution to the degrees of preparation and necessity, is to be observed.

Puller, Moderat. of the Church of Eng. p. 319.

COMMENSURATE.† adj. [from the verb. Heylin reckons this adjective, among uncouth and unusual words, in 1656. Nor are any of the examples, given by Dr. Johnson, from works so far back as that date. That from Smith, which I add, is somewhat nearer to the time.]

1. Reducible to some common measure.

They permitted no intelligence between them, other than by the mediation of some organ equally commensurate to soul and body. Government of the Tongue.

2. Equal; proportionable to each other.

The second signification of the word is aeuum, seculum, an age, a certain long space of time, that is commensurate with the duration of the thing that is spoken of.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 191.

Is our knowledge adequately commensurate with the nature of things?

Glanville's Scepis.

Those who are persuaded that they shall continue for ever, cannot chuse but aspire after a happiness commensurate to their duration.

Tillotson.

Nothing commensurate to the desires of human nature, on which it could fix as its ultimate end, without being carried on with any further desire. Rogers, Sermons.

Matter and gravity are always commensurate. Bentley.

COMMENSURATELY. adv. [from commensurate.] With the capacity of measuring, or being measured by some other thing.

We are constrained to make the day serve to measure the year as well as we can, though not commensurately to each year; but by collecting the fraction of days in several years, till they amount to an even day. Holder on Time.

COMMENSURATION. n. s. [from commensurate.] Proportion; reduction of some things to some common measure.

A body over great, or over small, will not be thrown so far as a body of a middle size; so that, it seemeth, there must be a commensuration or proportion between the body moved and the force, to make it move well. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

All fitness lies in a particular commensuration, or proportion of one thing to another. South.

To COMMENT. v. n. [commentor, Lat.]

1. To annotate; to write notes upon an author; to expound; to explain: with upon before the thing explained.

Such are thy secrets, which my life makes good,
And comments on thee; for in ev'ry thing
Thy words do find me out, and parallels bring,
And in another make me understand. Herbert.

Criticks having first taken a liking to one of these poets, proceed to comment on him, and illustrate him.

They have contented themselves only to comment upon those texts, and make the best copies they could after those originals. Dryden, Jur. Med.

Indeed I hate that any man should be idle, while I must translate and comment. Temple.

2. To make remarks; to make observations.

Enter his chamber, view his lifeless corps,
And comment then upon his sudden death. Pope.

To COMMENT.* v. a.

1. To explain.

In speaking, she studiously avoids all suspicious expressions, which wanton apprehensions may colourably comment into obscurity. Fidler's Holy State, p. 33.

This was the text commented by Chrysostom and Theodoret. Reeves, Collat. of the Psalms, p. 18.

2. To devise; to feign.

Where were ye born? Some say in Crete by name,
Others in Thebes, and others elsewhere;
But, wheresoever they comment the same,
They all consent that ye begotten were
And born here in this world. Spenser, F. Q. vi. vii. 53.

COMMENT.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Annotations on an author; notes; explanation; exposition; remarks.

I have laboured to bring in all the most obscure passages of Scripture in their proper places, that so the due citation and alleging of them might be as a comment and clear apprehension of their meaning.

Hartlib, Tr. of Comenius's Ref. of Schools, (1642.) p. 50.
Adam came into the world a philosopher, which appeared by his writing the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South, Sermons.

All the volumes of philosophy,
With all their comments, never could invent
So politic an instrument. Prior.

Proper gestures, and vehement exertions of the voice, are a kind of comment to what he utters. Addison, Spect.

Still with itself compar'd, his text peruse;
And let your comment be the Mantuan muse. Pope.

2. Remarks; observation.

In such a time as this, it is not meet,
That every nice offence should bear its comment. Shakespeare.

Forgive the comment that my passion made Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind.

Shakespeare, K. John.

All that is behind will be by way of comment on that part of the church of England's charity. Hammond's Fundamentals.

COMMENTARY.* n. s. [commentarius, Latin.]

1. An exposition; book of annotations or remarks.

The same things also were reported in the writings and commentaries of Neemias. 2 Macc. ii. 13.

In religion, scripture is the best rule; and the church's universal practice, the best commentary. King Charles.

2. Memoir; narrative in familiar manner.

The emperor spoke seldom openly, but out of a commentary, that is to say, that he had before provided and written, to the intent that he would speak no more nor less than he had provided. Sir T. Elgot, Gen. Rel. 90. b.

Verè, in a private commentary which he wrote of that service, testified that eight hundred were slain. Bacon.

They show still the ruins of Caesar's wall, that reached eighteen miles in length, as he has declared it in the first book of his commentaries. Addison on Italy.

To COMMENTATE.* v. n. [from comment.] To annotate; to write notes upon.

Must I for Shakespeare no compassion feel,
Almost eat up by commentating zeal? Pursuits of Literature.

COMMENTATOR.* n. s. [old Fr. commentateur, "a commentator." Cotgrave.] It was therefore in use long before Dryden wrote, from whom Dr. Johnson's earliest example is taken. Featley also in 1645 thus plays upon the word, in reference to the Lat. commentum, a falsehood as well as an exposition. "They shall give us leave to esteem them no prophets, but enthusiasts; no inspired men, but distracted; no seers, but dreamers; no expositors, but impostors; no commentators, but commenters, nay rather commentibys!" Dippers Dipt, p. 227.]

Expositor; annotator.

I have made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

Some of the commentators tell us, that Marsyn was a lawyer who had lost his cause. Addison on Italy.

Galen's commentator tells us, that bitter substances engender choler, and burn the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

No commentator can more slyly pass
O'er a learn'd unintelligible place. Pope.

COMMENTER.* n. s. [from comment.] One that writes comments; an explainer; an annotator.

With reverence to great Caesar, worthy Romans,
Observe but this ridiculous commenter. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

As sly as any commenter goes by Hard words or sense. Donne, Poems, p. 124.

The fourth means are commenters and fathers, who have handled the places controverted, which the parson by no means refuseth. Herbert, Country Parson, c. 4.

COMMENTITIOUS.* adj. [commentitius, Lat.] Invented; fictitious; imaginary.

But to mark how corruption and apostasy crept in by degrees, and to gather up wherever we find the remaining sparks of original truth, wherewith to stop the mouths of our adversaries, and to bridle them with their own curb, who willingly pass by that which is orthodoxal in them, and studiously cull out that which is commentitious, and best for their turns; not weighing the Fathers in the balance of Scripture, but Scripture in the balance of the Fathers. Milton, of Prelatical Episcopacy.

It is easy to draw a parallelism between that ancient and this modern nothing, and make good its resemblance to that commentitious inanity. Glanville's Scepsis.

COMMERCE.* n. s. [commercium, Latin.] It was anciently accented on the last syllable. See also To COMMERCE.]

1. Intercourse; exchange of one thing for another; interchange of any thing; trade; traffick.

Places of public resort being thus provided, our repair thither is especially for mutual conference, and, as it were, commerce to be had between God and us. Hooker, v. § 17.

How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
But by degrees stand in authentick place?

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Instructed ships shall sail to quick commerce,

By which remotest regions are ally'd:

Which make one city of the universe,

Where some may gain, and all may be supply'd. Dryden.

These people had not any commerce with the other known parts of the world. Tillotson.

In any country, that hath commerce with the rest of the world, it is almost impossible now to be without the use of silver coin. Locke.

2. Common or familiar intercourse.

Good-nature which consists in overlooking of faults is to be exercised only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce and occurrences of life. Addison.

3. A game at cards.

TO COMMERCE† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick.

Ezekiel in the description of Tyre and of the exceeding trade that it had with the East, as the only mart town, reciteth both the people with whom they commerce, and also what commodities every country yielded. Raleigh.

When they might not converse or commerce with any civil men; whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild manner. St. J. Davies.

Beware you commerce not with bankrupts.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. To hold intercourse with.

Since great Talbot's gone
Down to thy silence, I commerce with none.

Come, but keep thy wonted state,

With even step and musing gait,

And looks commencing with the skies,

Thy rapt' soul sitting in thine eyes. Milton, Il Pens.

COMMERCE† adj. [from commerce.] Relating to commerce or traffick. This word is of modern introduction into our language; at least is not perhaps of a century's age.

One circumstance prevented commerce and intercourse with nations from ceasing altogether. Robertson.

We are now members for a rich commercial city; this city, however, is but a part of a rich commercial nation, the interests of which are various, multiform, and intricate.

Burke, Speech at Bristol, 1774.

COMMERCIALLY* adv. [from commercial.] In a commercial view.

I consider the stopping of the distillery, economically, financially, commercially, medicinally, and in some degree morally too, as a measure rather well meant than well considered.

Burke, Thoughts on Scarcity.

TO COMMIGRATE v. n. [from com and migro, Latin.]

To remove in a body, or by consent, from one country to another.

COMMIGRATION n. s. [from commigrate.] A removal of a large body of people from one country to another.

Both the inhabitants of that and of our world lost all memory of their commigration hence. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

COMMINATION† n. s. [from comminatio, Lat. comminatio, old Fr.]

1. A threat; a denunciation of punishment, or of vengeance.

It is likely that when Christ not only commanded Peter to put up his sword, drawn with greater zeal in passion than judgement upon deliberation, but added also to that charge a commination in generality, That whosoever drew the sword should perish by the sword, his purpose was to bind the hands of his apostles, but yet to leave the passions of those that should succeed them at full liberty?

Id. Northampton, Proceed. against Garnet, li. 3.

Speaks the rude carter to the wagon slow
With threatening words, or to the beasts that draw?

Surely unto the beasts that eas'ly go:

For there's the principle of motion—

Which, though it mov'd by commination,

So stiffly strives, yet from itself it strives;

Bears itself forth with stout contention;

And ever and anon the whip revives

That inward life, so bravely on the rustick drives.

More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 39.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us, to fence them not only by precept and commination, but with difficulty and impossibilities. Decay of Piety.

2. The recital of God's threatenings on stated days.

In the last review of our Liturgy, a clause was added for the sake of explaining the word commination; and the appointing of the times, on which it should be used, left to the discretion of the bishop or ordinary. So that the whole title, as it stands now, run thus: "A commination, or denouncing of God's anger and judgements against sinners, with certain prayers to be used on the first day of Lent, and at other times, as the ordinary shall appoint." The ordinaries indeed seldom or never make use of the power here given them, except that sometimes they appoint part of the office, viz. from the 51st Psalm to the end, to be used upon solemn days of fasting and humiliation. But as to the whole office, it is never used entirely, but upon the day mentioned in the title of it, viz. the first day of Lent.

Wheatly on the Com. Pr. ch. 14. Introd.

COMMINATORY† adj. [old Fr. comminatoire.] Denunciatory: threatening.

Half-hearted creatures, as these are,—

On two or three comminatory terms,

Would run their fears to any hole of shelter.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

TO COMMINGLE v. a. [from commisco, Latin.] To mix into one mass; to unite intimately; to mix; to blend.

Blest are those,

Whose blood and judgement are so well commingled,

That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger,

To sound what stop she please. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

TO COMMINGLE v. n. To unite one with another.

Dissolutions of gum tragacanth and oil of sweet almonds do not commingle, the oil remaining on the top 'till they be stirred. Bacon, Physical Rem.

TO COMMINUATE* v. a. [Lat. comminuo, old Fr. comminuer. See TO COMMUNITE.] To grind.

The more solid food which needs greater manducation, cannot be sufficiently communuated for chyle, or ground low enough for the stomach, until these teeth have done this work upon it. Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 82.

It will communuate things of so hard a substance that no mill can break. Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 104.

COMMUNIBLE adj. [from comminuere.] Frangible; reducible to powder; susceptible of pulverisation.

The best diamonds are communible, and are so far from breaking hammers, that they submit unto pestilation, and resist not any ordinary pestle. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO COMMUNITE v. a. [from comminuo, Latin.] To grind; to pulverise; to break into small parts.

Parchment, skins, and cloth drink in liquors, though themselves be intire bodies, and not communited, as sand and ashes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COMMUNITION n. s. [from comminuere.]

1. The act of grinding into small parts; pulverisation.

The jaw in men and animals furnished with grinders, hath an oblique or transverse motion, necessary for comminution of the meat. Ray on the Creation.

This smiting of the steel with the flint doth only make a commination, and a very rapid whirling and melting of some particles; but that idea of flame is wholly in us. Bentley.

2. Attenuation.

Causes of fixation are the even spreading of the spirits and tangible parts, the closeness of the tangible parts, and the jeuneness or extreme commination of spirits; of which the two first may be joined with a nature liquefiable. Bacon.

COMMISERABLE. adj. [from commiserate.] Worthy of compassion; pitiable; such as must excite sympathy or sorrow.

It is the sinfulness thing in the world to destitute a plantation once in forwardness: for, besides the dishonour, it is the guiltiness of blood of many commiserable persons. Bacon, Ess.

This was the end of this noble and commiserable person, Edward eldest son to the duke of Clarence. Bacon, Hen. VII.

7to COMMISERATE. v. a. [con and misericor, Lat.]

To pity; to look on with compassion; to compassionate.

Then we must those, who groan beneath the weight Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.

We should commiserate our mutual ignorance, and endeavour to remove it. Locke.

COMMISERATION. n. s. [from commiserate.] Pity; compassion; tenderness, or concern for another's pains.

These poor seduced creatures, whom I can neither speak nor think of but with much commiseration and pity. Hooker.

Live, and hereafter say
A mad man's mercy had thee run away.

— I do defy thy commiseration,

And apprehend thee for a felon here.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.

God knows with how much commiseration, and solicitous caution, I carried on that business, that I might neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the Protestants. K. Charles.

She ended weeping; and her lovely plight
Inmorable, till peace obtain'd from fault
Acknowledg'd and deplor'd, in Adam wrought
Commiseration.

From you their estate may expect effectual comfort, there are none from whom it may not deserve commiseration. Sprat.

No where fewer beggars appear to charm up commiseration yet no where is there greater charity.

Grann's Bills of Mortality.

prevailed with myself to go and see him, partly out of misericor, and partly out of curiosity? Swift.

COMMISERATIVE.* adj. [from commiserate.] Having pity or concern for another's sufferings.

COMMISERATIVELY.* adv. [from commiserative.] Out of compassion.

He hath divided his soul from the case of his soul, whose weakness he assists no otherwise than commiseratively, not that it is his, but that it is. Overbury's Characters.

COMMISERATOR.* n. s. [from commiserate.] He who has mercy or compassion.

Deaf unto the thunder of the laws, and rocks unto the cries of charitable commiserators. Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 6.

COMMISSARIAT.* n. s. [Fr.] A body of persons, attending an army, who are commissioned to regulate the procuration and conveyance of ammunition or provision. See COMMISSARY. The word is derived from modern warfare.

COMMISSARISHIP. n. s. [from commissary.] The office of a commissary.

A commissariship is not grantable for life, so as to bind the succeeding bishop, though it should be confirmed by the dean and chapter. Ayliffe's Parergon.

COMMISSARY.† n. s. [commissarius, low Latin; commissaire, old Fr.]

1. An officer made occasionally for a certain purpose; a delegate; a deputy.

Great Destiny the Commissary of God,
That hast mark'd out a path and period
For every thing, who, where we off-spring took,
Our ways and ends, seest at one instant.

Donne, Poems, p. 294.

2. It is a title of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, appertaining to such as exercises spiritual jurisdiction (at least so far as his commission permits) in places of the diocese so far distant from the chief city, as the chancellor cannot call the subjects. Cowel.

The commissaries of bishops have authority only in some certain place of the diocese, and in some certain causes of the jurisdiction limited to them by the bishop's commission.

Ayliffe.

3. An officer who draws up lists of the numbers of an army, and regulates the procuration and conveyance of provision or ammunition.

But is it thus you English bards compose?

With Runick lays thus tag insipid prose?

And when you should your heroes deeds rehearse,

Give us a commissary's list in verse?

Prior.

COMMISSION.† n. s. [commissio, low Lat. old Fr. commissio.]

1. The act of entrusting any thing.

2. A trust; a warrant by which any trust is held, or authority exercised.

Commission is the warrant, or letters patent, that all men exercising jurisdiction, either ordinary or extraordinary, have for their power. Cowel.

Omission to do what is necessary,
Seals a commission to a blank of danger.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

The subjects grief

Comes through commissions, which compel from each

The sixth part of his substance, to be levied

Without delay. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

He led our powers;

Bore the commission of my place and person;

The which immediacy may well stand up,

And call itself your brother.

Shakespeare, King Lear.

He would have them fully acquainted with the nature and extent of their office, and so he joins commission with instruction: by one he conveys power, by the other knowledge.

South.

3. A warrant by which a military officer is constituted.

Solyman, filled with the vain hope of the conquest of Persia, gave out his commissions into all parts of his empire, for the raising of a mighty army. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

I was made a colonel; though I gained my commission by the horse's virtues, having leapt over a six-bar gate.

Addison, Freeholder.

He for his son a gay commission buys,

Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies.

Pope.

4. Charge; mandate; office; employment.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men, in the midst of their own blood, and being so furiously assailed, to hold their hands contrary to the laws of nature and necessity. Baron, War with Spain.

Such commission from above

I have receiv'd, to answer thy desire

Of knowledge within bounds.

Milton, P. L.

At his command the storms invade;

The winds by his commission blow;

Till with a nod he bids them cease.

Dryden.

He bore his great commission in his look;

But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. Act of committing a crime; perpetration. Sins of commission are distinguished in theology from sins of omission.

Every commission of sin introduces into the soul a certain degree of hardness. South, Sermon.

He indulges himself in the habit of known sin, whether commission of something which God hath forbidden, or the omission of something commanded. Rogers, Serm.

6. A number of people joined in a trust or office.
7. The state of that which is intrusted to a number of joint officers; as, the great seal was put into commission.
8. [In commerce.] The order by which a factor trades for another person.

To COMMISSION. v. a. [from commission.]

1. To empower; to appoint.
2. To send with mandate or authority.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threatening embassy.

Dryden, Æn.

COMMISSIONAL. * adj. [from commission.] Appointing by a warrant of authority.

By virtue of the king's letters commissional.

COMMISSIONARY. * adj. [from commission.] Appointed by a warrant of authority.

By virtue of that delegate or commissiionary authority, which is by Christ intrusted with them.

Hp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To COMMISSIONATE. † v. a. [from commission.] To commission: to empower.

As he was thus sent by his father, so also were the apostles solemnly commissioned by him to preach to the Gentile world, who, with indefatigable industry and resolute sufferings, pursued the charge; and sure this is competent evidence, that the design was of the most weighty importance. Decay of Picty.

Our Lord commissiionated his disciples to heal the sick.

Whitby on St. James, v. 14.

COMMISSIONER. n. s. [from commission.] One included in a warrant of authority.

A commissioner is one who hath commission, as letters patents, or other lawful warrant, to execute any publick office. Corael.

One article they stood upon, which I with your commissioners have agreed upon. Sidney.

These commissioners came into England, with whom governants were concluded. Hayward.

The archbishop was made one of the commissioners of the treasury. Clarendon.

Suppose itinerary commissioners to inspect, throughout the kingdom, into the conduct of men in office, with respect to morals and religion as well as abilities. Swift.

Like are their merits, like rewards they share,
That shines a consul, this commissiioner. Pope, Dunciad.

COMMISSURE. † n. s. [old Fr. commissure, from commissura, Lat.] Joint: a place where one part is joined to another.

All these inducements cannot countervail the sole inconvenience of shaking and disjoining the commissures with so many strokes of the chisel. Wotton, Architecture.

This animal is covered with a strong shell, jointed like armour by four transverse commissures in the middle of the body, connected by tough membranes. Ray on the Creation.

To COMMIT. v. a. [committo, Lat.]

1. To intrust; to give in trust; to put into the hands of another.

It is not for your health thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw, cold morning. Shakspeare.

2. To put in any place to be kept safe.

They who are desirous to commit to memory, might have case. Mac. ii. 25.

Is my muse controul'd
By servile awe? Born free, and not by bold!
At least I'll dig a hole within the ground,
And to the trusty earth commit the sound. Dryden, Pers.

3. To send to prison; to imprison.

Here comes the nobleman that committed the prince, for striking him about Bardolph. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

They two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty.

Clarendon.

So though my ankle she has quitted,
My heart continues still committed;
And, like a bail'd and main-priz'd lover,
Although at large, I am bound over.

Hudibras.

4. To perpetrate; to do a fault; to be guilty of a crime.

Keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Letters out of Ulster gave him notice of the inhumane murders committed there upon a multitude of the Protestants.

Clarendon.

A creeping young fellow committed matrimony with a brisk gamesome lass. L'Estrange.

'Tis policy

For son and father to take different sides;
Then lands and tenements commit no treason.

Dryden.

5. To put together for a contest: a latinism.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator. More's Divine Dial.

6. To place in a state of hostility or incongruity: a latinism.

Harry whose careful and well measured song,
First taught our English musick how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, committing short and long.

Milton.

COMMITMENT. † n. s. [from commit.]

1. An act of sending to prison; imprisonment.

It did not appear by any new examinations or commitments, that any other person was discovered or apprehended.

Baron, Hen. VII.

They were glad to compound for his bare commitment to the Tower, whence he was within few days enlarged. Clarendon.

I have been considering, ever since my commitment, what it might be proper to deliver upon this occasion. Swift.

2. An order for sending to prison.

3. A parliamentary expression, when a bill is referred to a committee.

The parliament—which thought this petition worthy, not only of receiving, but of voting to a commitment, after it had been advocated, and moved for, by some honourable and learned gentlemen of the house. Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

COMMITTEE. † n. s. [from commit.]

1. Those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, either by some court to whom it belongs, or by consent of parties. As in parliament, after a bill is read, it is either agreed to and passed, or not agreed to; or neither of these, but referred to the consideration of some appointed by the house, to examine it farther, who thereupon are called a committee. Corael.

Manchester had orders to march thither, having a committee of the parliament with him, as there was another committee of the Scottish parliament always in that army; there being also now a committee of both kingdoms residing at London, for the carrying on the war. Clarendon.

All corners were filled with covenanters, confusion, committee men, and soldiers, serving each other to their ends of revenge, or power, or profit; and these committee men and soldiers were possess with this covenant. Walton.

2. The person to whom the care of an idiot or lunatick, or of an idiot's or lunatick's estate, is committed. Pronounced with the accent on the last syllable.

The lord chancellor usually commits the care of his person to some friend, who is then called his committee.—The heir is generally made the manager or committee of the estate. Blackstone.

COMMITTEESHIP. * n. s. [from committee.] The office and profit of committees.

Trusted with committeeships and other gainful offices.

Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. i.

COMMITTER. † n. s. [from commit.] Perpetrator; he that commits.

Such as defile or pollute them, be committers of sacrilege.

Martin on the Marriage of Priests, (1554,) P. 1.

To prove, that the committer of such wickednesses commeth of the will of those men that charge him [the devil] withal.

Crowley's Apolog. of English Writers, (1766,) p. 54. b.

Such an one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but also a deriver of the whole intire guilt of them to himself; and yet so as to leave the committer of them as full of guilt as he was before.

South, Sermon. ii. 198.

COMMITTABLE. † adj. [from commit.] Liable to be committed.

Besides the mistakes committable in the solary compute, the difference of chronology disturbs his computes.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

There is no sin committable by man, as to the kind of it, but by circumstances is capable of being made a sin of presumption.

South, Sermon. vii. 215.

TO COMMIX. v. a. [commisceo, Lat.] To mingle; to blend; to mix; to unite with things in one mass.

A dram of gold, dissolved in aqua regia, with a dram of copper in aqua fortis commix'd, gave a great colour.

Bacon.

I have written against the spontaneous generation of frogs in the clouds; or, on the earth, out of dust and rain water commix'd.

Ray on the Creation.

It is manifest by this experiment, that the commix'd impressions of all the colours do stir up and beget a sensation of white; that is, that whiteness is compounded of all the colours.

Newton, Opticks.

TO COMMIX.* v. n. To unite.

Or, self-conceited, play the humorous Platonist,
Which boldly dares affirm, that spirits themselves supply
With bodies, to commix with frail mortalities.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 5.

The smile mocking the sigh, that it would fly

From so divine a temple, to commix

With winds that sailors rail at.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

COMMIXION. † n. s. [from commix.] Mixture; incorporation of different ingredients.

Were thy commixion Greek and Trojan, so

That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

We seldom see different dispositions entirely loving; for grows the height of friendship, when two similiary souls do blend in their commixions.

Junius, Son Stigmatiz'd, (1639,) p. 834.

COMMIXTION. † n. s. [from commix.] Mixture; incorporation; union of various substances in one mass.

Some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of birds and beasts, as bats, and some few others, so conformed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a commixtion of both in the whole, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

By the which word, adultery, although it be properly understood of the unlawful commixtion or joining together of a married man with any woman beside his wife, &c.

Horilices, i. 28.

This commixtion of things, so contrary, doth not tend to the defacing, but adorning, of the world; as concords and discords do, unto the better tempering of the harmony in singing.

Fotherby's Athcom. p. 334.

If both natures were not preserved complete and distinct in Christ, it must either be by the conversion and transubstantiation of one into the other, or by commixtion and confusion of both into one.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii.

COMMIXTURE. n. s. [from commix.]

1. The act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation; union in one mass.

In the commixture of any thing that is more oily or sweet, such bodies are least apt to putrefy, the air working little upon them.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things: composition; compound.

Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in the bud;

Or angels veil'd in clouds: are roses blown,

Dismask'd, their daisies sweet commixture shewn. Shakespeare.

My love and fear glow'd many friends to thee;

And now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt,

Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud York. Shakespeare.

There is scarcely any rising but by a commixture of good and evil arts.

Bacon, Ess. 15.

All the circumstances and respect of religion and state intermixed together in that commixture, will better become a royal history, or a council-table, than a single life.

Wotton, Life, &c. of D. of Buckingham.

COMMO'DE. † n. s. [French.] The word appears to have been adopted from the block, on which the dress was shaped. For, in the Fop's Dictionary, or Terms of the Art Cosmetick, printed in 1690, the commode is this: "A frame of wire, covered with silk, on which the whole head-attire is adjusted at once upon a bust, or property of wood, carved to the breasts, like that which peruke-makers set upon their stalls." The head-dress of women.

Let them reflect how they would be affected, should they meet with a man on horseback, in his breeches and jack-boot, dressed up in a commode and a night-trail. Spectator, No. 435.

She has contrived to shew her principles by the setting of her commode; so that it will be impossible for any woman that is disaffected to be in the fashion. Addison, Preacher.

She, like some pensive statesman, walks demure,

And smiles, and hugs, to make destruction sure;

Or under high commodes, with looks erect,

Barefac'd devours, in gaudy colours deck'd.

Granville

COMMO'DIOUS. adj. [commodus, Lat.]

1. Convenient; suitable; accommodate to any purpose; fit; proper; free from hindrance or uneasiness.

Such a place cannot be commodious to live in: for being o near the moon, it had been too near the sun. Raleigh's Hist.

To that recess, commodious for surprize,

When purple light shall next suffuse the skies,

With one repair.

Pope, Odys. iv. 550.

2. Useful: suited to wants or necessities.

If they think we ought to prove the ceremonies commodious, they do greatly deceive themselves. Hooker, iv. 4.

Bacchus had found out the making of wine, and many things else commodious for mankind.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World, i. vi. 5.

The gods have done their part,

By sending this commodious plague. Dryden and Lee, Oedipus.

Maro's muse,

Thrice sacred muse, commodious precepts gives,

Instructive to the swains.

Philips.

COMMO'DIOUSLY. adv. [from commodious.]

1. Conveniently.

At the large foot of an old hollow tree,

In a deep cave seated commodiously,

His ancient and hereditary house

There dwelt a good substantial country mouse.

Cowley.

2. Without distress.

We need not fear

To pass commodiously this life, sustain'd

By him, with many comforts, till we end

In dust; our final rest, and native home.

Milton, P. L.

3. Suitably to a certain purpose.

Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends. Hooker, v. § 42.

Galen, upon the consideration of the body, challenges any one to find how the least fibre might be more commodiously placed for use or comeliness.

South, Sermon.

COMMO'DIOUSNESS. n. s. [from commodious.] Convenience; advantage.

The place requireth many circumstances; as the situation near the sea, for the commodiousness of an intercourse with England. Bacon.

Of cities, the greatness and riches increase according to the commodiousness of their situation in fertile countries, or upon rivers and havens. Temple.

COMMODYTY.† n. s. [old Fr. commodité, from commoditas, Lat.]

1. Interest; advantage; profit.

They knew, that howsoever men may seek their own commodity, yet if this were done with injury unto other, it was not to be suffered. Hooker, v. § 10.

Commodity, the bias of the world,
The world, which of itself is poised well,
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent.

Shakespeare, K. John.

After much debatement of the commodities or discommodities like to ensue, they concluded. Hayward.

2. Convenience, particular advantage.

There came into her head certain verses, which, if she had had present commodity, she would have adjoined as a retraction to the other. Saunders, b. ii.

She demanded leave, not to lose this long sought-for commodity of time, to ease her heart. Sidney.

Travellers turn out of the highway, drawn either by the commodity of a foot-path, or the delicacy or the freshness of the field. B. Jonson, Discern.

It had been difficult to make such a mole where they had not so natural a commodity as the earth of Puzzuola, which immediately hardens in the water. Addison on Italy.

3. Wares; merchandise; goods for traffick.

All my fortunes are at sea;

Nor have I money, nor commodity
To raise a present sum. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
Commodities are moveables, valuable by money, the common measure. Locke.

Of money in the commerce and traffick of mankind, the principal use is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

COMMODORE.† n. s. [probably corrupted from the Spanish comandador. Now pronounced, I think, with the accent on the first syllable.]

1. The captain who commands a squadron of ships; a temporary admiral.

2. A select ship in a fleet of merchantmen, which leads the van in the time of war. Both usages of the word seem to have been adopted in imitation of admiral, which bears two senses; but in both, the employment of commodore is of no great date in our language. It is unnoticed in our dictionaries at the beginning of the last century.

COMMULATION.* n. s. [Lat. con and modulatio.] Measure; agreement.

If they hold that symmetry, and commutation, as Vitruvius calls it, which they ought, from the proportion of the head, the hand, &c. may the dimensions of the whole body be infallibly collected. Hakeuill on Providence, p. 190.

COMMOIGNE.* n. s. [Fr.] A monk of the same order or convent.

Ioffred Abbot of Crowland, with one Gilbert his commoigne, and III other monks came to his manor of Coteatham.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. II.

COMMON. adj. [communis, Latin.]

1. Belonging equally to more than one.

Though life and sense be common, to man and brutes, and their operations in many things alike; yet by this form he lives the life of a man, and not of a brute, and hath the sense of a man, and not of a brute. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He who hath received damage, has, besides the right of punishment common to him with other men, a particular right to seek reparation. Locke.

2. Having no possessor or owner.

Where no kindred are to be found, we see the possessions of a private man revert to the community, and so become again perfectly common, nor can any one have a property in them, otherwise than in other things common by nature. Locke.

3. Vulgar; mean; not distinguished by any excellence; often seen; easy to be had; of little value; not rare; not scarce.

Or as the man whom princes do advance,
Upon their gracious mercy-seat to sit,
Doth common things, of course and circumstance,
To the reports of common men commit. Davies.

4. Publick; general; serving the use of all.

He was advised by a parliament-man not to be strict in reading all the common prayer, but make some variation. Walt.

I need not mention the old common shore of Rome, which ran from all parts of the town, with the current and violence of an ordinary river. Addison on Italy.

5. Of no rank; mean; without birth or descent.

Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Flying bullets now,
To execute his rage, appear too slow;
They miss, or sweep but common souls away,
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.

6. Frequent; usual; ordinary.

There is an evil which I have seen common among men. Eccles. vi. 1.

The Papists were the most common place, and the butt against whom all the arrows were directed. Clarendon.

Neither is it strange that there should be mysteries in divinity, as well as in the commonest operations in nature. Swift.

7. Prostitute.

'Tis a strange thing, the impudence of some women! was the word of a dame, who herself was common. L'Estrange.
Hipparchus was going to marry a common woman, but consulted Philander upon the occasion. Spectator, No. 475.

8. [In grammar.] Such verbs as signify both action and passion are called common; as aspersion, I despise, or am despised; and also such nouns as are both masculine and feminine, as parens.

CO'MMON. n. s. [from the adjective.] An open ground equally used by many persons.

Then take we down his load, and turn him off,
Like to the empty ass, to shake his ears,
And graze in commons. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.

Is not the separate property of a thing the great cause of its endearment? Does any one respect a common as much as he does his garden? South.

CO'MMON. adv. [from the adjective.] Commonly; ordinarily.

I am more than common tall. Shakespeare, As you like it.

In CO'MMON.†

1. Equally to be participated by a certain number.

By making an explicate consent of every commoner necessary to any one's appropriating to himself any part of what is given in common, children or servants could not cut the meat which their father or master had provided for them in common, without assigning to every one his peculiar part. Locke.

2. Equally with another; indiscriminately.

In a work of this nature it is impossible to avoid puerilities, it having that in common with dictionaries, and books of antiquities. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. In law, a distinction of tenancy.

Estates may be held in four different ways; in severalty, in joint tenancy, in coparcenary, and in common. Blackstone.

Tenants in common are such as hold by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession. Ibid.

To CO'MMON. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a joint right with others in some common ground.

COMMON-COUNCIL-MAN.* n. s. One who communicates in council with others; a name yet retained among a part of the citizens of London.

I, who am no common-council-man,
Knew injuries of that dark nature done.

B. Jonson, Mortimer's Fall.

COMMON-CRYER.* n. s. The officer by whom notice is given of things lost. See CRYER.

I will have her cry'd

By the common-cryer, through all the ward;

But I will find her.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

COMMON-HALL.* n. s. The place, in which the inhabitants of a city or town assemble.

All the citizens, who were met together in the common-hall, or place of public assemblies. Bp. Patrick on Genesis, xxxiv. 24.

COMMON LAW contains those customs and usages which have, by long prescription, obtained in this nation the force of laws. It is distinguished from the statute law, which owes its authority to acts of parliament.

COMMON-LAWYER.* n. s. He who is versed in the Common Law.

Canonists, civilians, and common-lawyers do all admit this distinction. Spelman.

COMMON PLEAS. The king's court now held in Westminster-hall; but anciently moveable. Gwin observes, that 'till Henry III. granted the magna charta, there were but two courts, the exchequer, and the king's bench, so called because it followed the king; but upon the grant of that charter, the court of common pleas was erected, and settled at Westminster. All civil causes, both real and personal, are, or were formerly, tried in this court, according to the strict laws of the realm; and Fortescue represents it as the only court for real causes. The chief judge is called the lord chief justice of the common pleas, and he is assisted by three or four associates, created by letters patent from the king. Coxe.

COMMONABLE.* adj. [from common.]

1. What is held in common.

Much good land might be gained from forests and chases, and from other commonable places, so as there be care taken that the poor commoners have no injury. Bacon to Villiers.

2. Allowable to be turned on the common.

Commonable beasts are beasts of the plough, or such as manure the ground. Blackstone.

Common appurtenant is where the owner of land has a right to put in other beasts, besides such as are generally commonable, as hogs, goats, and the like. Ibid.

COMMONAGE.* n. s. [old Fr. commuage.] The right of feeding on a common; the joint right of using any thing in common with others.

They have wronged poor people of their commonage, which of right belonged to them. Fuller's Holy State, p. 286.

COMMONALTY.* n. s. [communauté, French.] South writes it commonality.]

1. The common people; the people of the lower rank.

Bid him strive

To gain the love o' the commonalty; the duke Shall govern England. Shakspeare.

There is in every state, as we know, two portions of subjects, the nobles and the commonalty. Bacon, Ess. 16.

The emmet joined in her popular tribes

Of commonalty. Milton, P. L. vii. 489.

All gentlemen are almost obliged to it; and I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England, to be foremost in brave actions.

Dryden, Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

The whole nobility, gentry, and all the sober commonality of the nation. South, Sermon. v. 47.

2. The bulk of mankind.

I myself too will use the secret acknowledgement of the commonalty bearing record of the God of gods. Hooker, b. iii.

COMMONALITY.* See COMMONALTY.

COMMONER.* n. s. [from common.]

1. One of the common people; a man of low rank; of mean condition.

Doubt not

The commoners, for whom we stand, but they,

Upon their ancient malice, will forget. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

His great men durst not pay their court to him, 'till he had satiated his thirst of blood by the death of some of his loyal commoners. Addison, Frecholder.

2. A man not noble.

Here comes the king's constable,

And with him a right worshipful commoner,

My good friend, master Gilthead. B. Jonson, the Dev. is an Ass.

This commoner has worth and parts,

Is prais'd for arms, or lov'd for arts:

His head aches for a coronet;

And who is bless'd, that is not great?

Prior.

3. A member of the house of commons.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

4. One who has a joint right in common ground.

Much land might be gained from commonable places, so as there be care taken that the poor commoners have no injury. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

5. A student of the second rank at the university of Oxford; one that eats at the common table.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner, (or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge,) and eighty pounds per annum for a fellow-commoner, was looked on as a sufficient maintenance.

Life of Dr. Prideaux, Lett. to Ld. Townshend in 1715.

6. A prostitute.

Behold this ring,

Whose high respect, and rich validity,

Did lack a parallel: yet, for all that,

He gave it to a commoner of the camp.

Shakspeare.

7. A partaker; a sharer in common.

Lewis would not leave them, that they might not leave him; but resolved to be a commoner with them in weal or woe; disdaining to be such a niggard of his life, as not to spend it in a good cause in so good company. Fuller's Holy War, p. 196.

COMMONITION.* n. s. [communio, Latin.] Advice; warning; instruction.

COMMONITIVE.* adj. [from commonition.] Advising; warning.

For here's a strong and sweating devil here,

That commonly rebels.

Shakspeare, Othello.

A great disease may change the frame of a body, though, if it lives to recover strength, it commonly returns to its natural constitution. Temple.

2. Jointly; in a sociable manner. [Lat. communiter.]

The blessed angels to and fro descend

From highest heaven in gladsome compaign,

And with great joy into that city wend,

As commonly as friend does with his friend.

Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 56.

COMMONNESS.* n. s. [from common.]

1. Equal participation among many.

Nor can the commonness of the guilt obviate the censure, there being nothing more frequent than for men to accuse their own faults in other persons. Government of the Tongue.

2. Frequent occurrence; frequency.

Blot out that maxim, res nolunt diu male administrari: the commonness makes me not know who is the author; but sure he must be some modern. Swift.

COMMONPLACE.* n. s. A memorandum; an ordinary or common topic. See also COMMON-PLACE-BOOK. Johnson uses this substantive in his unfair criticism on Gray, though in his dictionary he has not noticed it.

This being read both in his [Peter Martyr's] commonplaces, and on the first to the Corinthians. Milton, Tetrachordon.

In both of them I have made use of the commonplaces of Satire. Dryden, Pref. to Hind and Panther.

COMMONPLACE-BOOK.† n. s. A book in which things to be remembered are ranged under general heads.

I know some have a common-place against common-place-books, and yet perchance will privately make use of what publicly they declaim against. A common-place-book contains many notions in garrison, whence the owner may draw out an army into the field on competent warning.

Feller's Holy State, p. 164.

I turned to my common-place-book, and found his case under the word coquette. Tatler, No. 107.

To COMMONPLACE. v. a. To reduce to general heads.

I do not apprehend any difficulty in collecting and common-placing an universal history from the historians. Felton.

COMMONS.† n. s.

1. The vulgar; the lower people; those who inherit no honours. [Fr. commune.] And so Chaucer employs the word, agreeably to its French acceptation.

Yeomen on foot, and commons many one
With shorte staves. Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

Little office

The hateful commons will perform for us;
Except, like curs, to tear us all in pieces.

Shakespeare, Richard II.

Hath he not pass'd the nobles and the commons?

Shakespeare.

These three to kings and chiefs their scenes display,
The rest before the ignoble commons play. Dryden, Fables.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can: the nobler sort,
With winding doors wide open, front the court. Dryden.

2. The lower house of parliament, by which the people are represented, and of which the members are chosen by the people.

My good lord,

How now for mitigation of this bill

Urg'd by the commons? Doth his majesty

Incline to it, or no?

COMMONWEALTH. } wealth.

1. A polity; an established form of civil life.

Two foundations bear up public societies; the one inclination, whereby all men desire sociable life; the other an order agreed upon, touching the manner of their union in living together: the latter is that which we call the law of a commonweal. Hooker.

It was impossible to make a commonweal in Ireland, without settling of all the estates and possessions throughout the kingdom. Davies on Ireland.

A continual parliament would but keep the commonweal in tune, by preserving laws in their vigour. King Charles.

There is no body in the commonwealth of learning who does not profess himself a lover of truth. Locke.

2. The publick; the general body of the people.

Such a prince,

So kind a father of the commonweal. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Their sons are well tutored by you: you are a good member of the commonwealth. Shakespeare, Love's Labour Lost.

3. A government in which the supreme power is lodged in the people; a republic.

Did he, or do yet any of them, imagine

The gods would sleep to such a Stygian practice,

Against that commonwealth which they have founded.

B. Jonson.

Commonwealths were nothing more, in their original, but free cities; though sometimes, by force of orders and discipline, they have extended themselves into mighty dominions.

Temple.

COMMONWEALTHSMAN.* n. s. [from commonwealth.]

One who sides with a republican form of government.

Thomas Parnell was the son of a commonwealthsman of the same name, who, at the restoration, left Congleton in Cheshire, where the family had been established for several centuries.

2. Common possession; the state contrary to property or appropriation.

Sit up and revel, Call all the great, the fair and spirited dames Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion Of freedom and community.

The undistinction of many in the community of name, or misapplication of the act of one unto the other, hath made some doubt thereof. B. Jonson. Brown, Vulg. Err.

This text is far from proving Adam sole proprietor, it is a confirmation of the original community of all things. Locke.

3. Frequency; commonness. Not in use.

He was but, as the cuckow is in June, Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes, As, sick and blunted with community, Afford no extraordinary gaze. Shakspeare.

COMMUTABILITY. n. s. [from commutabile.] The quality of being capable of exchange.

COMMUTABLE. adj. [from commute.] That may be exchanged for something else; that may be bought off, or ransomed.

COMMUTATION. n. s. [from commute.]

1. Change; alteration.

An innocent nature could hate nothing that was innocent: in a word, so great is the commutation, that the soul then hated only that which now only it loves, i. e. sin. South, Sermons.

2. Exchange; the act of giving one thing for another.

The whole universe is supported by giving and returning, by commerce and commutation. South, Sermon.

According to the present temper of mankind, it is absolutely necessary that there be some method and means of commutation, as that of money. Ray on the Creation.

The use of money in the commerce and traffick of mankind, is that of saving the commutation of more bulky commodities. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. Ransom: the act of exchanging a corporal for a pecuniary punishment.

The law of God had allowed an evasion, that is, by way of commutation or redemption. Brown, Vulg. Err.

COMMUTATIVE. † adj. [old Fr. commutatif.] Relative to exchange; as commutative justice, that honesty which is exercised in traffick, and which is contrary to fraud in bargains.

Justice, although it be but one entire virtue, yet is described in two kinds — one, named justice distributive, which is in distribution of honour, money, benefice, or other thing semblable: the other is called commutative, or by exchange.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 142.

Commutative justice requires that every man should have his own.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. i. 7.
The Essenes, like the Pythagoreans, did not buy or sell among themselves, but each supplied the other's wants by a kind of commutative bartering.

Godwyn's Moses and Aaron, i. 1.
COMMUTATIVELY.* adv. [from commutative.] In the way of exchange.

Those institutions which God designed for means to further men in holiness, they look upon as a privilege to serve instead of it, and to commute for it.

South, Sermon.
COMMUTUAL. adj. [con and mutual.] Mutual; reciprocal: used only in poetry.

Love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands,
Unite commutual in most sacred bands. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

There, with commutual zeal, we both had strove
In acts of dear benevolence and love;
Brothers in peace, not rivals in command. * Pope, Odyssey.

COMPACT.† n. s. [pactum, Lat.]

1. A contract: an accord; an agreement; a mutual and settled appointment between two or more, to do or to forbear something. It had anciently the accent on the last syllable.

I hope the King made peace with all of us; *
And the compact is firm and true in me. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

In the beginnings of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such words, voices, or gestures should be signs whereby they would express their thoughts.

South.
2. Structure; compacture. Not in use.

He was of a mean or low compact, but without disproportion and unevenness either in lineaments or parts.

Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship. Shakespeare, Timon.

2. Fellowship; association.

If it be honour in your wars, to seem
The same you are not, which, for your best ends,
You call your policy; how is't less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour as in war. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

COMPANY.* n. s. [compagnie, French; either from cost and pagus, one of the same town; or con and panis, one that eats of the same mess, Dr. Johnson says. I prefer the derivation from the Lat. compago, abl. case compagine, a junction.]

1. Persons assembled together; a body of men.

Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;

Take all his company along with him.

Shakespeare, Henry IV.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife. Shakespeare.

2. Persons assembled for the entertainment of each other; an assembly of pleasure.

COMPA'RATIVE.† adj. [comparativus, Lat.]

1. Estimated by comparison; not positive; not absolute.

Thou wert dignified enough,
Ev'n to the point of envy, if 'twere made
Comparative for your virtues, to be stiled
The under hangman of his realm.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

There resteth the comparative that is, granted that it is either lawful or binding; yet whether other things be not to be preferred before the extirpation of heresies.

Bacon.

The blossom is a positive good; although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good.

Bacon.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluid that incloses it, would necessarily ascend to the top.

Bentley.

2. Having the power of comparing different things.

Beauty is not known by an eye or nose: it consists in a symmetry, and it is the comparative faculty which notes it.

Glanville, Seep. Scient.

3. In grammar, the degree so called.

When it [the adjective] is expressed with augmentation, or with reference to a less degree of the same, it is called the comparative; as, wiser, greater.

Louth, Int. Eng. Gram.

C O M

COMPA'RATIVE.* n. s. [from the adjective.] One that is fond of making comparisons, or that makes himself another's equal. Not now in use.

To laugh at glibing boys, and stand the push

Of every beardless vain comparative. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P.I.

Gerard ever was

His full comparative.

Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in Org.

COMPA'RATIVELY. adv. [from comparative.] In a state of comparison; according to estimate made by comparison; not positively.

The good or evil which is removed may be esteemed good, or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

Bacon.

In this world whatever is called good is comparatively with other things of its kind, or with the evil mingled in its composition; so he is a good man that is better than men commonly are, or in whom the good qualities are more than the bad.

Temple.

The vegetables being comparatively lighter than the ordinary terrestrial matter of the globe, subsided last.

Woodward.

But how few, comparatively, are the instances of this wise application!

Rogers.

To COMPARE. v. a. [comparo, Lat.]

1. To make one thing the measure of another; to estimate the relative goodness or badness, or other qualities of any one thing, by observing how it differs from something else.

I will hear Brutus speak.

I will hear Cassius, and compare their reasons. Shakespeare.

They measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise.

2 Cor. x. 12.

No man can think it grievous who considers the pleasure and sweetness of love, and the glorious victory of overcoming evil with good; and then compares these with the restless torment, and perpetual tumults, of a malicious and revengeful spirit.

Tillotson.

He that has got the ideas of numbers, and hath taken the pains to compare one, two, and three to six, cannot choose but know they are equal.

Locke.

Thus much of the wrong judgment men make of present, and future pleasure and pain, when they are compared together, and so the absent considered as future.

Locke.

2. It may be observed, that when the comparison intends only similitude or illustration by likeness, we use to before the thing brought for illustration; as, he compared anger to a fire.

Solon compared the people unto the sea, and orators and counsellors to the winds; for that the sea would be calm and quiet, if the winds did not trouble it.

Bacon, Apophthegms.

3. When two persons or things are compared, to discover their relative proportion of any quality, with is used before the thing used as a measure.

Black Macbeth

Will seem as pure as snow, being compar'd

With my confineless harms. Shakespeare, Much.

Addison, Spect.

4. To compare is, in Spenser, used after the Lat. comparo, for to get: to procure; to obtain.

But, both from back and belly, still did spare

To fill his bags, and riches to compare.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 28

To COMPARE.* v. n. To vie.

And, with her beantie, bonnie did compare,

Whether of them in her should have the greater share.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 39.

COMPA'RE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The state of being compared; comparative estimate; comparison; possibility of entering into comparison.

COM

COM

- There I the rarest things have seen,
Oh, things without compare.
As their small galleys may not hold compare
With our tall ships.
Beyond compare the Son of God was seen
Most glorious. Milton, P. L.
2. Simile; similitude; illustration by comparison.
True swains in love shall in the world to come,
Approve their truths by Troilus; when their rhimes,
Full of protest, and oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
3. COMPAREMENT. n. s. [from compare.] He who makes a comparison or estimate.
It was the comparer's purpose to discover Mr. Whitefield's enthusiasms. Bp. Lavington, Enth. of Meth. and Pap. compared.
- COMPARING. n. s. [from compare.] The act of forming comparison.
In the comparings, we may not look that all should answer in equality. Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 409.
- COMPARISON. n. s. [comparaison, Fr.]
- The act of comparing.
Natalis Comes, comparing his parts with those of a man, reckons his claws among them, which are much more like those of a lion: so easy it is to drive on the comparison too far, to make it good. Grew, Muscum.
Our author saves me the comparison with tragedy; for he says, that herein he is to imitate the tragick poet. Dryden.
  - The state of being compared.
If we will rightly estimate what we call good and evil, we shall find it lies much in comparison. Locke.
Objects near our view are apt to be thought greater than those of a larger size that are more remote; and so it is with pleasure and pain: the present is apt to carry it, and those at a distance have the disadvantage in the comparison. Locke.
  - A comparative estimate; proportion.
If men would live as religion requires, the world would be a most lovely and desirable place, in comparison of what now it is. Tillotson.
One can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled, in comparison of what it once was. Addison on Italy.
  - A simile in writing or speaking; an illustration by similitude.
As fair and as good a kind of hand in hand comparison, had been something too fair and too good for any lady. Shakspeare.
  - [In grammar.] The formation of an adjective through its various degrees of signification; as,
strong, stronger, strongest.

partir, Lat.] To divide; to mark out a general design into its various parts and subdivisions.
I make haste to the casting and comparting of the whole work. Watton, Architecture.
- COMPART. n. s. [from the verb.] Member.
What a continual hell must this create in the soul, to be perpetually worried with so many black and rabid passions; to have all its inferiour parts and affections, like those of the monster Scylla, whom the poets talk of as so many dogs, continually barking and snarling at one another, and yet remain unsepara-ble, as being comparts of the same substance. Scott, Practic. Disc. xxii.
- COMPARTIMENT. n. s. [compartiment, Fr.] A division of picture or design.
The circumference is divided into twelve compartiments, each containing a complete picture. Pope.
- COMPARTITION. n. s. [from compart.]
- The act of comparting or dividing.
I will come to the compartition, by which the authours of this art understand a graceful and useful distribution of the whole ground plot, both for rooms of office and entertainment.

separate part of a design.
The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, and buildings. Peacham on Drawing.
- COMPARTNER. n. s. [from con and partner. See COPARTNER.] A partaker; a sharer.
It is part of the honour and worship due unto God, to accept of no compartner with him. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.
- To COMPASS. v. a. [compasser, Fr. compassare, Ital. passibus metiri, Lat.]
- To encircle; to environ; to surround; to inclose;
it has sometimes around, or about, added.
A darksome way,
That deep descended through the hollow ground,
And was with dread and horror compassed around.
Spenser, F. Q.
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's peers,
That speak my salutation in their minds. Shakspeare, Macb.
Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about! Shakspeare, Temp.
The shady trees cover him with their shadow; the willows of the brook compass him about. Job, xl. 22.
Observe the crowds that compass him around. Dryden, Fag.
To dare that death, I will approach yet nigher;
Thus, wert thou compass'd with circling fire. Dryden.
  - To walk round any thing.
I come, said he, from compassing the earth,
Their travels seen who spring from human birth.
Soudys, Job, p. 4.
By night he fled, and at midnight return'd
From compassing the earth. Milton, P. L. ix. 59.
Old Chormicus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round. Dryden, En.
  - To beleaguer; to besiege; to block; sometimes with in.
And it was told the Gazites, saying, Samson is come hither.
And they compass'd him in, and laid wait for him all night in the gate of the city. Judges, xvi. 2.
Thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side. St. Luke, xix. 43.
  - To grasp; to inclose in the arms; to seize.
  - To obtain; to procure; to attain; to have in the power.
That which by wisdom he saw to be requisite for that people, was by as great wisdom compass'd. Hooker, Pref.
His master being one of great regard, in court to compass any suit not hard. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. Shakspeare.
How can you hope to compass your designs,
And not dissemble them? Denham's Sophy.
He had a mind to make himself master of Weymouth, if he could compass it without engaging his army before it.
Clarendon.
The church of Rome createth titular patriarchs of Constantinople and Alexandria; so loth is the pope to lose the remembrance of any title that he had once compass'd. Brerewood.
Lavention is the first part, and absolutely necessary to them both: yet no rule ever was, or ever can be given, how to compass it. Dryden, Dufresnoy.
The knowledge of what is good and what is evil, what ought and what ought not to be done, is a thing too large to be compass'd, and too hard to be mastered, without brains and study, parts and contemplation. South.
In every work regard the writer's end,
Since none can compass more than they intend. Pope.
  - [In law.] To take measures preparatory to any thing; as, to compass the death of the king.
- COMPASS. n. s. [from the verb.]
- Circle; round.
This day I breathed first; time is come round;
And where I did begin, there shall I end:
My life is run its compass. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

2. Extent; reach; grasp.

O, Juliet, I already know thy grief;

It strains me past the compass of my wits.

That which is out of the compass of any man's power, is to that man impossible.

How few there are may be justly bewailed, the compass of them extending but from the time of Hippocrates to that of Marcus Antoninus.

Animals in their generation are wiser than the sons of men; but their wisdom is confined to a few particulars, and lies in a very narrow compass.

This author hath tried the force and compass of our language with much success.

3. Space; room; limits, either of time or space.

No less than the compass of twelve books is taken up in these.

You have heard what hath been here done for the poor by the five hospitals and the workhouse, within the compass of one year, and towards the end of a long, expensive war.

4. Enclosure; circumference.

And their mount Palatine,

The imperial palace, compass huge, and high
The structure.

Old Rome from such a race deriv'd her birth,
Which now on seven high hills triumphant reigns,
And in that compass all the world contains.

5. A departure from the right line; an indirect advance; as, to fetch a compass round the camp.

6. Moderate space; moderation; due limits.

Certain it is, that in two hundred years before (I speak within compass) no such commission had been executed in either of the provinces.

Nothing is likelier to keep a man within compass than the having constantly before his eyes the state of his affairs, in a regular course of account.

7. The power of the voice to express the notes of music.

You would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;

From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man.

8. [This is rarely used in the singular.] The instrument with which circles are drawn.

If they be two, they are two so,
As still twin compasses are two;
Thy soul, the first foot, make no show
To move; but doth, if th' other do.

In his hand
He took the golden compasses, prepar'd
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe, and all created things.

To fix one foot of their compass, wherever they think fit, and extend the other to such terrible lengths, without describing any circumference at all, is to leave us and ourselves in a very uncertain state.

9. The instrument composed of a needle and card, whereby mariners steer.

The breath of religion fills the sails, profit is the compass by which factions men steer their course.

Rude as their ships was navigation then;
No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no North but when the pole-star shone.

With equal force the tempest blows by turns,
From every corner of the seamen's compass.

He that first discovered the use of the compass, did more for the supplying and increase of useful commodities than those who built workhouses.

10. In old language there was a phrase to come in compass, to be brought round.COMPASS-SAW. n. s.

The compass-saw should not have its teeth set, as other saws have; but the edge of it should be made so broad, and the back so thin, that it may easily follow the broad edge: its office is to cut a round, and therefore the edge must be made broad, and the back thin, that the back may have a wide kerf to turn it.

COMPA'SSION.† n. s. 'compassion, Fr. from con and pation, Lat. Our word is not often used in the plural, which Dr. Johnson might have noticed; but our version of the bible presents two instances.] Pity; commiseration; sorrow for the sufferings of others; painful sympathy.

Ye had compassion of me in my bonds.

It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

Show mercy and compassion to every man to his brother.

Their compassion hand.

My brothers hold, and vengeance take the wret;

This pleads compassion, and repeats the fact.

The good-natured man is apt to be moved with compassion for those misfortunes or infirmities, which another would turn into ridicule.

To COMPA'SSION.† v. a. [from the noun.] To pity; to compassionate; to commiserate. A word scarcely used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Tit. Andronicus.

O, heavens! can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him?

She wept bitterly, and tenderly compassioned so great outrage done, &c.

Wisdom and worth are sacred names; rever'd,
Where not embrac'd; applauded, deify'd;
Why not compassion'd too?

COMPA'SSIONABLE.† adj. [from compassion.] Deserving of compassion.

The judge should tender the party's case as compassionable, and desire that he may be delivered from the evil threatening him.

COMPA'SSIONARY.* adj. [old Fr. compassionnaire.] Compassionate.COMPA'SSIONATE.† adj. [from compassion.]

1. Inclined to compassion; inclined to pity; merciful; tender; melting; soft; easily affected with sorrow by the misery of others.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing, woe that it reveals by surprise.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate.

2. Exciting compassion; plaintive; pitiable. But this is hardly proper.

It boots not to be compassionate;
After our sentence planning comes too late.

Slavery, the most compassionate and miserable circumstance of life.

To COMPA'SSIONATE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To pity; to commiserate.

Experience layeth princes torn estates before their eyes, and withal persuades them to compassionate themselves.

Compassionates my pains, and pities me!

What is compassion, when 'tis void of love?

COMPA'SSIONATELY. adv. [from compassionate.] Mercifully; tenderly.

The fines were assigned to the rebuilding St. Paul's, and thought therefore to be the more severely imposed, and the less compassionately reduced and excused. Clarendon.

COMPATERNITY. n. s. [con and paternitas, 'Latin.] The relation of godfather to the person for whom he answers.

Gossiped, or compaterinity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and a juror that was gossip to either of the parties might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent by our law. Davies, State of Ireland.

COMPATIBILITY. † n. s. [old Fr. compatibilité.] Consistency; the power of co-existing with something else; agreement with any thing.

COMPATIBLE. † adj. [corrupted, by an unskilful compliance with pronunciation, from competible, from competo, Latin, 'to suit, to agree.' Competible is found in good writers, and ought always to be used. To this remark of Dr. Johnson it may, however, be added that the old French word compatible is 'probably the parent of our word.]

1. Suitable to; fit for; consistent with; not incongruous to.

The object of the will is such a good as is compatible to an intellectual nature. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Consistent; agreeable.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

A portrait, with which one of Titian's could not come in competition. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Though what produces any degree of pleasure, be in itself good, and what is apt to produce any degree of pain be evil, yet often we do not call it so, when it comes in competition: the degrees also of pleasure and pain have a preference. Locke.

We should be ashamed to rival inferiours, and dishonour our nature by so degrading a competition. Rogers.

2. Double claim; claim of more than one to one thing: anciently with to.

Competition to the crown there is none, nor can be. Bacon.

3. Now with for.

The prize of beauty was disputed 'till you were seen; but now all pretenders have withdrawn their claims: there is no competition but for the second place. Dryden.

COMPETITOR. n. s. [old Fr. competeur, from con and petitor, Latin.]

1. One that has a claim opposite to another's; a rival: with for before the thing claimed.

How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love.

Shakspeare, Tit. Andron.

Some undertake suits with purpose to let them fall, to gratify the competitor. Bacon, Ess. 50.

Cicereus and Scipio were competitors for the office of prætor. Taller, No. 86.

He who trusts in God has the advantage in present felicity; and, when we take futurity into the account, stands alone, and is acknowledged to have no competitor. Rogers, Sermon. 15.

2. It had formerly of before the thing claimed.

Selymes, king of Algiers, was in arms against his brother Mechemetes, competitor of the kingdom.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. In Shakspeare it seems to signify only an opponent, Dr. Johnson says. The fact is, it means just the reverse in the passage cited by Dr. Johnson, and in several others occurring in Shakspeare; it is an associate.

The Guilfords are in arms,

And every hour more competitors

Flock to the rebels.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

COMPETITRESS. n. s. [from competitor.] She who is a rival.

COMPOSER. n. s. [from compose.]

1. An author; a writer.

Now will be the right season of forming them to be able writers and composers in every excellent matter.

Milton.

If the thoughts of such authors have nothing in them, they at least do no harm, and shew an honest industry and a good intention in the compose.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. He that adapts the musick to words; he that forms a tune.

For the truth of the theory I am in no wise concerned, the composer of it must look to that.

Woodward.

For composition I prefer neat Ludovico, a most judicious and sweet composer.

Pearham on Musick.

The composer has so expressed my sense, where I intended to move the passions, that he seems to have been the poet as well as the composer.

Dryden, Alb. and Alban. Pref.

3. A compositor; he that adjusts the types for the printing. This word, unknown to Dr. Johnson, is better than the modern term compositor.

The beginning of such a work will be very difficult, as also the procuring of a sufficient composer, and corrector, for the Eastern languages.

Abp. Laud, to the Vice Ch. of Ox. 1637.

4. One who composes or adjusts a thing.

To be the composers, contrivers, or assistants, in concluding of any ecclesiastical law.

Bp. of Ossory, (Williams,) Rights of Kings, (1662,) p. 43.

COMPOSITE. adj. [compositus, Lat.]

The composite order in architecture is the last of the five orders of columns; so named because its capital is composed out of those of the other orders; and it is also called the Roman and Italic order.

Harris.

Some are of opinion, that the composite pillars of this arch were in imitation of the pillars of Solomon's temple.

Addison on Italy.

COMPOSITION. n. s. [compositio, Latin; composition, Fr.]

1. The act of forming an integral of various dissimilar parts.

Ipecacas, which, besides the nature and strength of the wine itself, hath by the composition and confection of men, mingling many spices with the same, great power in it, and pleasantness also by the smell.

Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 234.

We have exact forms of composition, whereby they incorporate almost as they were natural simples.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

In the time of the Incas reign of Peru, no composition was allowed by the laws to be used in point of medicine, but only simples proper to each disease.

Temple.

2. The act of bringing simple ideas into complication, opposed to analysis, or the separation of complex notions.

The investigation of difficult things, by the method of analysis, ought ever to precede the method of composition.

Newton, Opticks.

3. A mass formed by mingling different ingredients.

Heat and vivacity in age, is an excellent composition for business.

Bacon, Ess. 43.

Vast pillars of stone, cased over with a composition, that looks the most like marble of any thing our eyes can imagine.

Addison.

Jove mix'd up all, and his best clay employ'd,

Then call'd the happy composition Floyd.

Swift.

4. The state of being compounded; union; conjunction; combination.

Neither shall ye make any other [oil] like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you. Whosoever compoundeth any like it,—shall even be cut off from his people.

Exod. xxx. 32.

Contemplate things first in their own simple natures, and afterwards view them in composition with other things.

Watts.

5. The arrangement of various figures in a picture.

The disposition in a picture is an assembling of many parts, is also called the composition, by which is meant the distribution and orderly placing of things, both in general and in particular.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

6. Written work. Mr. Malone considers Sir H. Wotton's usage of composition, in a letter dated in 1636, as the first instance of its denoting a written work. But Barret's Alvarie of 1580 presents, under the word COMPACTE, "composition, placing or compacting of wordes together, verborum structura;" so that there can be no question of the age also of this meaning of composition.

Writers are divided concerning the authority of the greater part of those compositions that pass in his name.

J. Exrange.

That divine prayer has always been looked upon as a composition fit to have proceeded from the wisest of men.

Addison.

When I read rules of criticism, I enquire after the works of the author, and by that means discover what he likes in a composition.

Addison, Guardian.

7. Adjustment; regulation.

A preacher in the invention of matter, election of words, composition of gesture, look, pronunciation, motion, useth all these faculties at once. B. Jonson, Discov.

8. Compact; agreement; terms on which differences are settled.

To take away all such mutual grievances, injuries, and wrongs, there was no way but only by going upon composition and agreement amongst themselves. And again, all publick regiment, of what kind soever, seemeth evidently to have arisen from deliberate advice, consultation, and composition between men, judging it convenient and behoveful. Hooker.

Thus we are agreed;

I crave our composition may be written,
And seal'd between us. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Their courage droops, and, hopeless now, they wish
For composition with th' unconquer'd fish. Waller.

9. The act of discharging a debt by paying part; the sum paid.

Persons who have been once cleared by composition with their creditors, or bankruptcy, and afterwards become bankrupts again, unless they pay full fifteen shillings in the pound, are only thereby indemnified as to the confinement of their bodies. Blackstone.

10. Consistency; congruity.

There is no composition in these news,
That gives them credit.

— Indeed they are disproportion'd. Shakespeare, Othello.

11. [In grammar.] The joining of two words together, or the prefixing a particle to another word, to augment, diminish, or change its signification.

12. A certain method of demonstration, in mathematicks, which is the reverse of the analytical method, or of resolution. It proceeds upon principles in themselves self-evident, on definitions, postulates and axioms, and a previously demonstrated series of propositions, step by step, 'till it gives a clear knowledge of the thing to be demonstrated. This is called the synthetical method, and is used by Euclid in his Elements. Harris.

13. [In printing.] The arranging of several letters or types in the composing-stick.

14. [In law.] Satisfaction for tithes. See MODUS.

COMPO'SITIVE. adj [from compose.] Compounded; or having the power of compounding. Dict.

COMPO'SITOR. n. s. [from compose.]

1. He that ranges and adjusts the types in printing; distinguished from the pressman, who makes the impression upon paper. See COMPOSER, and CORRECTOR. But our old language has compositor in a general sense, which Dr. Johnson seems not to have known.

The compositor was Mr. Manning, a decent sensible man, who had composed about one half of his [Johnson's] Dictionary, when in Mr. Strahan's printing-house.

Boswell's Life of Johnson.

2. He that composeth or setteth a thing in order.

Bullockar, ed. 1656.

COMPOSSE'SSOR.* n. s. [old Fr. composseuseur.] A joint possessor. Sherwood.

COMPO'SSIBLE.* adj. [con and possible.] Consistent; that which may exist with another thing.

They should make the faith wherewith they believe, an intelligent, compossible, consistent thing, and not define it by repugnancies. Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. vi. § 7.

COMPOST. n. s. [Fr. compositum, Lat.]

1. A mixture of various substances for enriching the ground; manure.

Avoid what is to come,
And do not spread the compost on the weeds,
To make them ranker. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

VOL. I.

We also have great variety of composts and soils, for the making of the earth fruitful. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Water young planted shrubs, ananum especially, which you can hardly refresh too often, and it requires abundant compost.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground. Dryden.

In vain the nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

2. Any mixture or composition.

Finding the most pleasurable sin such a sad γλυκύμακρον, a compost of more bitter than sweet at the very instant, we should never be such blind obedient votaries of Satan.

Hammond, Works, iv. 534.

TO COMPO'ST. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure; to enrich with soil.

By removing into worse earth, or forbearing to compost the earth, water-mint turneth into field-mint and the colewort into rape. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

As for earth, it composteth itself; for I knew a garden that had a field poured upon it, and it did bear fruit excellently.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How many fields have been drenched with blood, and composted with carcases! Bp. Hall, Sermon, 1641.

COMPO'STURE. n. s. [old Fr. composture.] Soil; manure. Not used.

The earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From general excrement. Shakespeare, Timon.

COMPO'SURE. n. s. [from compose.]

1. The act of composing or inditing.

Their own forms are not like to be so sound, or comprehensive of the nature of the duty, as of forms of publick composure. King Charles.

2. Arrangement; combination; mixture; order.

Hence languages arise, when, by institution and agreement, such a composure of letters, such a word, is intended to signify such a certain thing. Holder, El. of Speech.

From the various composures and combinations of these corpuscles together, happen all the varieties of the bodies formed out of them. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. The form arising from the disposition of the various parts.

In composure of his face,
Liv'd a fair, but manly grace. Crashaw.

4. Frame; make; temperament.

To reel the streets at noon, and stand the bullet
With slaves that smell of sweat; say this becomes him:

As his composure must be rare indeed,
Whom these things cannot blemish. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cl.

The duke of Buckingham sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composure, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master. Wotton.

5. Adjustment.

God will rather look to the inward raptures of the mind than to the outward form and composure of the body. Dugdale.

6. Composition; framed discourse. See COMPOSITION. This is of older usage, by at least the difference of a century, than Atterbury's; the first of Dr. Johnson's examples.

The labour'd and understanding workes of Maister Johnson; the no lesse worthy composures of the both worthily excellent Maister Beaumont and Maister Fletcher.

Webster, Pref. to the W. A. Devil, 1612.

As I then sate on this very grass, I turned my present thoughts into verse: 'tis a wish which I will repeat to you:

I in these flowery meads, &c.
When I had ended this composure, I left this place.

Wotton's Angler.

Discourses on such occasions are seldom the productions of leisure, and should be read with those favourable allowances that are made to hasty composures. Atterbury.

In the composures of men, remember you are a man as well as they; and it is not their reason, but your own, that is given to guide you. Watts on the Mind.

7. Sedateness; calmness; tranquillity.

To whom the virgin majesty of Eve,
As one who loves and some unkindness meets,
With sweet austere composure thus reply'd, Milton, P. L.
The calmest and serenest hours of life, when the passions of nature are all silent, and the mind enjoys its most perfect composure. Watts, Logick.

8. Agreement; composition; settlement of differences.

The treaty at Uxbridge gave the fairest hopes of an happy composure. King Charles.
Vanguard! to right and left the front unfold,
That all may see, who hate us, how we seek Peace and composure. Milton, P. L.
Things were not brought to an extremity: there seems yet to be room left for a composure; hereafter there may be only for pity. Dryden.

COMPOTATION. n. s. [compotatio, Lat.] The act of drinking or tipping together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society compotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

If thou wilt prolong
Dire compotation, forthwith reason quits
Her empire to confusion and misrule,
And vain debates; then twenty tongues at once
Conspire in senseless jargon; nought is heard
But din and various clamour, and mad rant. Philips.

COMPOTATION. * n. s. [from the Lat. compoto.] One who drinks together with another.

I shall yet think it a diminution to my happiness, to miss of half our companions and compotators of syllabub, &c.
Pope, Lett. to Mr. Knigh.

To COMPOUND. † v. a. [compono, Latin.]

1. To mingle many ingredients together in one mass.

Only compound me with forgotten dust.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

2. To form by uniting various parts.

Whosoever compoundeth any like it, shall be cut off.
Exodus, xxx.
It will be difficult to evince, that nature does not make de-compound bodies; I mean, mingle together such bodies as are already compounded of elementary, or rather of simple ones. Boyle, Serpitical Chymist.

The ideas, being each but one single perception, are easier got than the more complex ones; and therefore are not liable to the uncertainty which attends those compounded ones. Locke.

3. To mingle in different positions; to combine:

We cannot have a single image that did not enter through the sight; but we have the power of altering and compounding those images into all the varieties of picture. Addison, Spect.

4. [In grammar.] To form one word from two or more words.

Where it and Tigris embrace each other under the city of Apania, there do they agree of a joint and compounded name, and are called Piso-Tigris. Raleigh, Hist. of the World

5. To compose by being united.

Who'd be so mock'd with glory, as to live
But in a dream of friendship?
To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
But only painted, like his tarnish'd friends. Shakspeare, Tim.

6. To adjust a difference by some recession from the rigour of claims.

I would to God all strifes were well compounded.

Her's a fellow will help you to-morrow: compound with him by the year. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

3. To come to terms by granting something on each side.

Cornwall compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Once more I come to know of thee, king Harry,
If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound
Before thy most assured overthrow? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Made all the royal stars recant,
Compound and take the covenant. Hudibras.

But useless all, when he, despairing, found
Catullus then did with the winds compound. Dryden, Juv.

Paracelsus and his admirers have compounded with the Ga-lenists, and brought a mixed use of chymical medicines into the present practice. Temple.

4. To determine. This is not in use.

We here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what
We have compounded on. Shakspeare, Coriol.

COMPOUND. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed out of many ingredients; not simple.

The ancient egyptians had in it a fifth of silver to the gold, and made a compound metal, as fit for most uses as gold. Bacon.
Compound substances are made up of two or more simple substances. Watts, Logick.

2. [In grammar.] Composed of two or more words; not simple.

Those who are his greatest admirers, seem pleased with them as beauties; I speak of his compound epithets. Pope.

3. COMPOUND or aggregated Flower, in botany, is such as consists of many little flowers, concurring together to make up one whole one; each of which has its style and stamina, and adhering seed, and are all contained within one and the same calyx: such are the sunflower and dandelion. *Harris.*COMPOUND. n. s. [from the verb.] The mass formed by the union of many ingredients.

For present use or profit, this is the rule: consider the price of the two simple bodies: consider again the dignity of the one above the other in use; then see if you can make a compound, that will save more in price than it will lose in dignity of the use. Bacon, Physical Rem.

As man is a compound and mixture of flesh, as well as spirit.
South, Serm.

Love, why do we one passion call?

When 'tis a compound of them all;

Where hot and cold, where sharp and sweet,

In all their equipages meet. Swift.

COMPOUNDABLE. † adj. [from compound.] Capable of being compounded.

Sherwood.

COMPOUNDER. † n. s. [from To compound.]

1. One who endeavours to bring parties to terms of agreement.

They held it to be the best course to let him alone, yea, and be compounders of peace and amity between Sancho and the barber. Shelton, D. Quix. iv. 19.

Those softeners, sweetners, compounders, and expedient-mongers, who shake their heads so strongly. Swift.

2. A mingler; one who mixes bodies.

3. An academical term for one who, having any estate or income for life of a certain value, pays extraordinary fees for the degree which he takes; and, according to the value, is either a grand or a petty compounder.

To COMPREHEND. † v. a. [comprehendo, Lat.]

1. To comprise; to include; to contain; to imply.

If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Rom. xiii. 9.

It would be ridiculous to grow old in the study of every necessary thing, in an art which comprehends so many several parts.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. To contain the mind; to understand; to conceive.

The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

St. John, i. 5.

Rome was not better by her Horace taught,
Than we are here to comprehend his thought,

Waller.

'Tis unjust, that they who have not the least notion of heroick writing, should therefore condemn the pleasure which others receive from it, because they cannot comprehend it.

Dryden.

COMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [comprehensible, Fr. comprehensibilis, Latin.]

1. Intelligible; attainable by the mind; conceivable by the understanding.

The horizon sets the bounds between the enlightened and dark parts of things, between what is and what is not comprehensible by us.

Locke.

2. Possible to be comprised.

Lest this part of knowledge should seem to any not comprehensible by axiom, we will set down some heads of it.

Bacon.

COMPREHENSIBLENESS. * n. s. [from comprehensible.] Capability of being understood.

Which facility and comprehensibility must needs improve the usefulness of these expositions very considerably.

More, Expos. of the Seven Churches, Pref.

COMPREHENSIBLY. * adv. [from comprehensible.]

With great power of signification or understanding; significantly; with great extent of sense. Tillotson seems to have used comprehensibly for comprehensively.

The words wisdom and righteousness are commonly used very comprehensibly, so as to signify all religion and virtue.

Tillotson.

COMPREHENSION. n. s. [comprehensio, Latin.]

1. The act or quality of comprising or containing; inclusion.

In the Old Testament there is a close comprehension of the New, in the New an open discovery of the Old.

Hooker.

The comprehension of an idea regards all essential modes and properties of it; so body, in its comprehension, takes in solidity, figure, quantity, mobility.

Watts, Logick.

2. Summary; epitome; compendium; abstract; abridgement in which much is comprised.

If we would draw a short abstract of human happiness, bring together all the various ingredients of it, and digest them into one prescription, we must at last fix on this wise and religious aphorism in my text, as the sum and comprehension of all.

Rogers.

3. Knowledge; capacity; power of the mind to admit and contain many ideas at once.

You give no proof of decay of your judgment, and comprehension of all things, within the compass of an human understanding.

Dryden.

4. [In rhetoric.] A trope or figure, by which the name of a whole is put for a part, or that of a part for the whole, or a definite number for an indefinite.

Harris.

COMPREHENSIVE. adj. [from comprehend.]

1. Having the power to comprehend or understand many things at once.

He must have been a man of a most wonderful comprehensive nature, because he has taken into the compass of his Canterbury tales the various manners and humours of the whole English nation in his age; not a single character has escaped him.

Dryden, Pub. Pref.

His hand unstain'd, his uncorrupted heart,
His comprehensive head; all int'rests weigh'd,
All Europe sav'd, yet Britain not betray'd.

Pope, Epist.

2. Having the quality of comprising much; compendious; extensive.

So diffusive, so comprehensive, so catholic a grace is charity, that whatever time is the opportunity of any other virtue, that time is the opportunity of charity.

Sprat's Sermon.

COMPREHENSIVELY. adv. [from comprehensive.] In a comprehensive manner.

COMPREHENSIVENESS. * n. s. [from comprehensive.]

1. The quality of including much in a few words or narrow compass.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins.

Addison, on Anc. Medals.

2. The power of understanding all things.

In regard of the universality and comprehensiveness of God's will, the school-divines for our better understanding have distinguished it into divers kinds; as, his will antecedent and consequent; his will of sign; and his will of good pleasure.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 188.

COMPREHENSOR. * n. s. [Lat. comprehensus.] One who has attained knowledge.

Thou that wert guided by their example, be likewise heartened by their success; thou art yet a traveller, they [the saints in heaven] comprehensors; thou art panting towards that rest, which they must happily enjoy.

Bp. Hall, Soul's farewell to Earth.

COMPRESBYTERIAL. * adj. [from con and presbyterial.] See PRESBYTERIAL.] Relating to the presbyterian form of ecclesiastical ministration.

He—has his coequal and compresbyterial power to ordain ministers and deacons by publick prayer.

Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

To COMPRESS. * v. a. [compressus, Latin.]

1. To force into a narrower compass; to squeeze together.

The air in a valley is more compressed, than that on the top of a mountain.

Adams.

2. To embrace.

Her Neptune ey'd, with bloom of beauty blest,
And in his cave the yielding nymph compress'd.

Pope, Odys.

There was in the island of Io a young girl compressed by a genius, who delighted to associate with the muses.

Pope.

COMPRESS. n. s. [from the verb.] Bolsters of linen; by which surgeons suit their bandages for any particular part or purpose.

Quincy.

I applied an intercipient about the ankle and upper part of the foot, and by compress and bandage dressed it up.

Wiseman.

COMPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from compressible.] The quality of being compressible; the quality of admitting to be brought by force into a narrower compass; as air may be compressed, but water can by no violence be reduced to less space than it naturally occupies.

COMPRESSIBLE. adj. [from compress.] Capable of being forced into a narrower compass; yielding to pressure, so as that one part is brought nearer to another.

There being spiral particles, accounts for the elasticity of air: there being spherical particles, which gives free passage to any heterogeneous matter, accounts for air's being compressible.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

COMPRESSIBILITY. n. s. [from compressible.] Capability of being pressed close.

Dict.

COMPRESSION. n. s. [compressio, Latin.] The act of bringing the parts of any body more near to each other by violence; the quality of admitting such an effort of force as may compel the body compressed into a narrower space.

Whensoever a solid body is pressed, there is an inward tumult in the parts, seeking to deliver themselves from the compression; and this is the cause of all violent motion.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The powder in shot, being dilated into such a flame as endureth not compression, moveth in round, the flame being in the nature of a liquid body, sometimes recoiling.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Tears are the effects of the compression of the moisture of the brain, upon dilatation of the spirits.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Merry Michael the Cornish poet piped this upon his oaten pipe for merry England, but with a mocking compression for Normandy.

Camden's Remains.

He that shall find out an hypothesis, by which water may be so rare, and yet not be capable of compression by force, may doubtless, by the same hypothesis, make gold and water, and all other bodies, as much rarer as he pleases; so that light may find a ready passage through transparent substances.

Newton.

COMPRESSIVE.* adj. [from compress.] Having the power to compress.

This pitcher also hath his ear, which is usually called, Auricle Cordis; which (notwithstanding its name, as if it most properly appertained to the heart,) yet we must know doth rather belong to the vein, and is indeed a part thereof, and not only a part, but the principal and primary part thereof, from whence all other parts and branches do arise, as from their original; and whereunto all the blood of the body by the compressive motion of the veins, doth naturally tend, as to its ultimate hold.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 236.

COMPRESSURE. n. s. [from compress.] The act or force of one body pressing against another.

We tried whether heat would, notwithstanding so forcible a compression, dilate it.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

COMPRIEST.* n. s. [from con and priest.] A fellow-priest.

What will he then praise them for? not for any thing doing, but for deferring to do, for deferring to chastise his lewd and insolent compriests.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

TO COMPRI'NT. v. n. [comprimere, Latin.] To print together; it is commonly taken, in law, for the deceitful printing of another's copy or book, to the prejudice of the rightful proprietor.

Phillips's World of Words.

COMPRI'SAL.* n. s. [from comprisc.] The inclusion, the comprehending of things.

Slandering is a complication, a comprisal and sum of all wickedness.

Barrow, Sermon i. 254.

TO COMPRI'SE. v. a. [comprendre, compris, French.]

To contain; to comprehend; to include.

Necessity of shortness causeth men to cut off impertinent discourses, and to comprise much matter in few words.

Hooker, v. § 32.

Do they not, under doctrine, comprehend the same that we intend by matters of faith? Do not they, under discipline, comprise the regimen of the church.

Hooker, iii. § 3.

'Tis the polluted love that multiplies;

But friendship does two souls in one comprise.

Roscommon.

TO COMPROBATE.* v. n. [Lat. comprobo.] To agree with; to concur in testimony.

For as well that sentence, as all other before rehearsed, do comprobate with Holy Scripture, that God is the fountaine of sapience.

Sir T. Elyot Gov. fol. 199.

COMPROBATION.† n. s. [comprobo, Latin.] Proof; attestation.

That is only esteemed a legal testimony which receives comprobation from the mouths of at least two witnesses.

Brown.

To whom the earl of Pembroke imbosomes the whole design, and presses his comprobation in it.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 59.

COMPROMISE.† n. s. [old Fr. compromis; Lat. compromissum.]

1. Compromise is a mutual promise of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controversies to the arbitrement or equity of one or more arbitrators.

Cowel.

Either the parties are persuaded by friends, or by their lawyers, to put the matter in compromise.

Knight's Tryall of Truth, (1580.) fol. 30.

2. A compact or bargain, in which some concessions are made on each side.

Wars have not wasted it; for warr'd he hath not;

But basely yielded, upon compromise,

That which his ancestors achiev'd with blows.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

TO COM'PROMISE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound; to adjust a compact by mutual concessions: as, they compromised the affair at a middle rate.

Perhaps it may be no great difficulty to compromise the dispute.

Shenstone.

2. In Shakspeare it means, unusually, to accord; to agree.

Laban and himself were compromis'd,

That all the yearlings, which were streak'd and pied,

Should fall as Jacob's hire.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

TO COM'PROMISE.* v. n. To agree; to accord.

Any one may be convinced, that no formed church in the Christian world is more truly protestant than is the church of England; nor any which (all things compared) less compromiseth with Rome.

Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 458.

COM'PROMISER.* n. s. [from compromisc.] He who makes concession.

COMPROMISSO'RIAL.† adj. [old Fr. compromissaire.] Relating to a compromise.

TO COM'PROMIT.* v. a. [Lat. compromitto.] This is our old word for compromise. "To compromit, or put unto compromise." Sherwood. It has been of late revived, especially by American writers.] To pledge; to promise.

Compromitting themselves in the name of all their country, to abide and performe all such sentence and awarde, as should by him be given.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 151.

COMPROVINCIAL. n. s. [from con and provincial.] Belonging to the same province.

At the consecration of an archbishop, all his comprovincials ought to give their attendance.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

COMPT. n. s. [compte, Fr. computus, Lat.] Account; computation; reckoning.

Your servants ever

Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt,

To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,

Still to return your own.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TO COMPT. v. a. [compter, French.] To compute; to number. We now use To COUNT, which see.

COMPT.* adj. [Lat. comptus, Fr. coïnt.] Neat; spruce; and figuratively, dressed.

A neat, spruce, compt fellow; [mondiest.]

Cotgrave.

Leaving the surface rough, rather than too compt and exquisitely trimmed.

Everlyn.

COMPTIBLE. adj. [from compt.] Accountable; responsible; ready to give account; subject; submissive.

Good beauties, let me sustain no scorn; I am very comptible even to the least sinister usage.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

COMPTLY.* adv. [from compt.] Neatly; sprucely.

Sherwood.

COMPTNESS.* n. s. [from compt.] Neatness.

Sherwood.

C O M

TO COMPTROL.† v. a. [This word is written by some authors, who did not attend to the etymology, for control; and some of its derivatives are written in the same manner, Dr. Johnson says. But when used as the title of a person in office, the assertion may be doubted. A learned friend informs me, that a charter of James V. 1538. is witnessed "compotorum nostrorum rotulatore."] To control; to overrule; to oppose.

COMPTROLLER. n. s. [from comptroll.] Director; supervisor; superiour intendent; governour.

This night he makes a supper, and a great one,

To many lords and ladies:

I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford,

This night to be comptrollers.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The comptrollers of vulgar opinions pretend to find out such a similitude in some kind of baboons.

Temple.

My fates permit me not from hence to fly;

Nor he, the great comptroller of the sky.

Dryden, Æn.

COMPTROLLERSHIP. n. s. [from comptroller.] Superintendence.

The gale for stannery-causes, is annexed to the comptroller-ship.

Crew, Surv. of Cornwall.

COMPU'SATIVE.* adj. [from compulsatory.] Compelling; forcing; constraining.

COMPU'SATIVELY. adv. [from compulsatory.] With force; by constraint.

Clarissa.

COMPU'SATORY. adj. [from compulsor, Latin.] Having the force of compelling; coactive.

Which is no other

But to recover from us by strong hand,

And terms compulsatory, those 'foresaid lands

So by his father lost.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

COMPU'SION. n. s. [from compulsio, Latin.]

1. The act of compelling to something; force; violence of the agent

If reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason on compulsion.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Thoughts, whither have ye led me! with that sweet

Compulsion thus transported.

Milton, P. I.

Such sweet compulsion doth in musick lye,

To lull the daughters of necessity.

Milton, Arcades.

2. The state of being compelled; violence suffered.

Compulsion is in an agent capable of volition, when the beginning or continuation of any action is contrary to the preference of his mind.

Locke.

When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear,

With what compulsion and laborious flight

We sunk thus low?

Milton, P. I.

This faculty is free from compulsion, and so spontaneous, and free from determination by the particular object.

Hale.

Possibly there were others who assisted Harold, partly out of fear and compulsion.

Hale on Common Law.

COMPU'SIVE.† adj. [from compulser, Fr. compulsus, Latin.] Having the power to compel; forcible.

For poison, I infus'd meer opium;

Holding compulsive perjury less sin

Than such a loathed murder would have bin.

Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in One.

And in all wise apprehensions the persuasive power in man to win others to goodness by instruction is greater, and more divine, than the compulsive power to restrain men from being evil by terror of the law.

Milton, Animad. Ref. Def.

The Danube, vast and deep,

Supreme of rivers, to the frightful brink,

Urg'd by compulsive arms, soon as they reach'd,

New terror chill'd their veins.

Phillips.

The clergy would be glad to recover their ducs by a more short and compulsive method.

Swift.

COMPU'SIVELY.† adv. [from compulsive.] By force; by violence.

To forbid divorce compulsively, is not only against nature, but against law.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

C O M

COMPU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from compulsive.] Force; compulsion.

COMPU'SORILY. adv. [from compulsory.] In a compulsory or forcible manner; by force; by violence.

To say that the better deserver hath such right to govern, as he may compulsorily bring under the less worthy, is idle.

Bacon.

COMPU'SORY. adj. [from compulsoire, French.] Having the power of necessitating or compelling.

He erreteth in this, to think that actions, proceeding from fear, are properly compulsory actions; which, in truth, are not only voluntary, but free actions; neither compelled, nor so much as physically necessitated.

Kindly it would be taken to comply with a patent, although not compulsory.

Swift.

COMPU'NCTION. n. s. [from componction, Fr. from pungo punctum, to prick, Latin.]

1. The power of pricking; stimulation; irritation.

This is that acid and piercing spirit, which, with such activity and compunction, invadeth the brains and nostrils of those that receive it.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The state of being pricked by the conscience; repentance; contrition.

He acknowledged his disloyalty to the king, with expressions of great compunction.

Clarendon.

COMPU'NCTIONS. adj. [from compunction.] Repentant; sorrowful; tender.

Stop up th' access and passage to remorse,

That no compunctious visitings of nature

Shake my fell purpose.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

COMPU'NCTIVE. adj. [from compunction.] Causing remorse.

COMPU'PIL.* n. s. [from con and pupil.] A fellow-pupil; he who prosecutes his studies with another.

Donne, and his sometime compupil in Cambridge that married him, namely, Samuel Brook.

Walton, Life of Donne.

COMPURGATION. n. s. [from compurgatio, Lat.] The practice of justifying any man's veracity by the testimony of another.

COMPURGATOR.† n. s. [Latin.] One who bears his testimony to the credibility of another.

If the lady Paula's memory wanted a compurgator, I would be one myself; it being improbable that those her eyes would burn with lust, which were constantly drowned with tears.

Fuller's Holy State, p. 26.

Lord Russel defended himself by many compurgators, who spoke very fully of his great worth.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time, 1683.

To make his innocence and his virtue his compurgators, and not to fight, but live down, the calumniator.

South, Sermon vi. 97.

The next quarry, or chalk-pit, will give abundant attestation: these are so obvious, that I need not be far to seek for a compurgator.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

COMPU'TABLE. adj. [from compute.] Capable of being numbered or computed.

If, instead of twenty-four letters, there were twenty-four millions, as those twenty-four millions are a finite number; so would all combinations thereof be finite, though not easily computable by arithmetic.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO COMPUTATE.* v. a. [Lat. computo.] This should seem to be the regular verb, from which computation is formed.] To account; to reckon.

Cockeram.

COMPUTATION. n. s. [from compute.]

1. The act of reckoning; calculation.

My princely father

Then, by just computation of the time,

Found that the issue was not his.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. The sum collected or settled by calculation.

We pass for women of fifty: many additional years are thrown into female computations of this nature.

Addison, Guardian.

To COMPUTE. v. a. [computo, Latin.] To reckon; to calculate; to number; to count.

Compute how much water would be requisite to lay the earth under water. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Where they did compute by weeks, yet still the year was measured by months. Holder on Time.

Alas! not dazzled with their noon-tide ray,
Compute the morn and ev'ning to the day;
The whole amount of that enormous fame,
A tale that blends their glory with their shame. Pope.

COMPUTER. n. s. [computus, Lat.] Computation; calculation.

Though there were a fatality in this year, yet divers were out in their account, aberring, several ways from the true and just compute; and calling that one year which perhaps might be another. Brown, Vulg. Err.

COMPUTER. n. s. [from compute.] Reckoner; accountant; calculator.

The calendars of these computers, and the accounts of these days, are different. Brown, Vulg. Err.

I have known some such ill computers, as to imagine the many millions in stocks so much real wealth. Swift.

COMPUTIST. n. s. [computiste, Fr.] Calculator; one skilled in the art of numbers or computation.

The treasurer was a wise man, and a strict computist. Wotton.

We conceive we have a year in three hundred and sixty-five days exact: computists tell us, that we escape six hours. Brown.

COMRADE. n. s. [camerade, Fr. camerata, Ital. from camera, a chamber, one that lodges in the same chamber, qui contubernio fruatur. Formerly written by us camerade; as in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 149. The accent on this word was formerly on either syllable. In the examples, that from Shakspeare presents it on the first; that from Milton, on the last.]

1. One who dwells in the same house or chamber.

Rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. A companion; a partner in any labour or danger.

He permitted them
To put out both thine eyes, and fetter'd send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses, thy comrades,
As good for nothing else. Milton, S. A.

A footman, being newly married, desired his comrade to tell him freely what the town said of it. Swift.

COMROGUE. n. s. [from con and rogue.] A fellow-rogue; an associate in villainy.

Here will be a masque, and shall be a masque, when you and the rest of your comrogues shall sit disguis'd in the stocks. B. Jonson, Masques.

You may seek them
In Bridewell, or the hole; here are none of your comrogues.
Massinger, Cit. Madam.

CON. A Latin inseparable preposition, which, at the beginning of words, signifies union or association: as concourse, a running together; to convepe, to come together. Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice, that con, in compound words, is by many writers converted into co. Thus some write cotemporary, where others use contemporary; cogenial, instead of congenial; and the like. The variations of spellings, however, are now often noticed in words, which have been given without any attention to such distinction.

CON. [abbreviated from contra, against, Lat.] A cant word for the negative side of a question; as the pros and cons.

We may enquire and judge — what may be said pro and con.
James on the Corrupt. of Script. (1688,) p. 526.

Of many knotty points, they spoke,
And pro and con by turns, they took. Prior, Alma.

To CON. v. a. [connan, Sax. to know; as in Chaucer, "Old wyemen connen mochtli thinge;" that is, Old women have much knowledge. "To conne, or have connyng, scio." Prompt. Parv.]

1. To know.

Of muses, Hobinol, I conne no skill:—
But pyping low in shade of lowly grove,
I play to please myself, all be it ill. Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.
They say they con to heaven the high way. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

2. To study; to commit to memory; to fix in the mind. It is a word now little in use, except in ludicrous language.

Pretty answers: have you not been acquainted with goldsmiths wives, and conn'd them out of rings. Shakspeare.

Here are your parts; and I am to intreat you to con them by to-morrow night. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Our understanding cannot in this body arrive so clearly to the knowledge of God, and things invisible, as by orderly conning over the visible and inferiour creatures. Milton.

Shew it him written; and, having the other also written in the paper, shew him that, after he has conn'd the first, and require it of him. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The books of which I'm chiefly fond,
Are such as you have whilom conn'd. Prior.

All this while John had conn'd over such a catalogue of hard words, as were enough to conjure up the devil. Arbutnot.

3. To Con thanks; an old expression for to thank. It is the same with sçavoir grè.

I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it. Shakspeare.

To CONCA'MERATE. v. a. [concamero, Lat.] To arch over; to vault; to lay concave over.

Of the upper beak, an inch and a half consisteth of one concamerated bone, bended downwards, and toothed as the other. Grew, Muscum.

CONCAMERATION. n. s. [from concamerate.] Arch; vault.

The insides of these hot-houses are divided into many cells and concamerations. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 164.

What a romance is the story of those impossible concamerations, and feigned rotations of solid orbs? Glawville, Scops.

Gervasius Dorobernensis, in his account of the burning of Canterbury cathedral in the year 1174, says, that not only the beam-work was destroyed, but the ceiling underneath it, or concameration called cælum, being of wood, beautifully painted, was also consumed. Warton, H. E. P. i. 303.

To CONCA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Lat. a chain, Dr. Johnson says; who also cites no example of this old English verb. Cotgrave and Sherwood write it to concatenate, and give the old Fr. concatheuer.] To link together; to unite in a successive order.

Nature has concatenated our fortunes and affections together with indissoluble bands of mutual sympathy. Barrow, Sermon. ii. S. 2.

Both can only be referable to that concatenated order of events, which cannot but be best. Harris, Three Treatises, P. II.

If Chapman affected the reputation of rendering line for line, the specious expedient of chusing a protracted measure which concatenated two lines together, undoubtedly favoured his usual propensity to periphrasis. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 444.

CON

CONCATENATION.† n. s. [from concatenate, and old Fr. concatenation.] A series of links; an uninterrupted, unvariable succession.

Seek the consonancy and concatenation of truth.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

In this concatenation of causes, there is a progress ordinary from the first to the last.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625,) p. 104.

Meanes are not meanes, but in their concatenation, as they depend, and are chained together.

Donne, Devo. p. 497.

His quickness or volubility proceeds partly from that concatenation he useth among his syllables, by linking the syllable of the precedent word with the last of the following.

Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

The stoicks affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will.

South, Sermon. ii. 262.

CONCAVATION. n. s. [from concave.] The act of making concave.

CONCAVE. adj. [concavus, Latin.]

1. Hollow without angles; as, the inner surface of an eggshell, the inner curve of an arch: opposed to convex.

These great fragments falling hollow, inclosed under their concave surface a great deal of air.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Hollow.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tiber trembled underneath his banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds
Made in his concave shores?

Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar.

For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

CONCAVE.* n. s. [from the adjective.] An hollow; a cavity.

His wit the most exuberant of all that ever entered the concave of this ear.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

At which the universal host sent up

A shout, that tore Hell's concave.

Milton, P. L.

TO CONCAVE.* v. a. [The old French language has concave, hollowed, made concave. Cotgrave.] To make hollow.

Into that western bay, concaved by vast mountains, western winds only can blow.

Steward's Lett. iv. 118.

CONCAVENESS. n. s. [from concave.] Hollowness.

Dict.

CONCAVITY.† n. s. [old Fr. concavité.] Internal surface of a hollow spherical or spheroidal body.

Niches that contain figures of white marble should not be coloured in their concavity too black.

Wotton.

They have taken the impresses of these shells with that exquisite niceness, that no metal, when melted and cast in a mould, can ever possibly represent the concavity of that mould with greater exactness than these flints do the concavities of the shells, wherein they were moulded.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CONCAVO-CONCAVE. adj. Concave or hollow on both sides.

CONCAVO-CONVEX. adj. [from concave and convex.] Concave one way, and convex the other.

I procured another concavo-convex plate of glass, ground on both sides to the same sphere with the former plate.

Newton.

A concavo-convex pentagonal plate, part of a shell that belongs to the entrochus.

Woodward on Fossils.

CONCAVOUS.† adj. [concavus, Latin.] Concave; hollow without angles.

This, as so much leaf-gold, drawn out to a very great thinness, doth securely, tenderly, and universally wrap up, all those little hills and valleys, those convex or convexous parts, that are within the compass of its own circumference.

Smith's Portraiture of old Age, p. 221.

CON

The convexous part of the liver was called trias, i. e. belonging to the family, because the signs observed there concerned themselves and their friends.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, i. ch. 14.

CONCAVOUSLY. adv. [from concavous.] With hollowness; in such a manner as discovers the internal surface of a hollow sphere.

The dolphin that carrieth Arion is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONCAUSE.* n. s. [from con and cause.] Joint cause.

The power of all these he ascribes unto the Efficient, making it in effect the only true cause of all the rest; and all the rest to be rather as instruments unto it, than concauses with it.

Fotherby, Atheom. p. 225.

TO CONCEAL. v. a. [concello, Latin.] To hide; to keep secret; not to divulge; to cover; not to detect.

He oft' finds medicine, who his grief imparts;

But double griefs afflict concealing hearts.

Spenser, F. Q.

Come, Catesby, thou art sworn

As deeply to effect what we intend,

As closely to conceal what we impart.

Shakespeare, Richard III.

Ulysses himself adds, he was the most eloquent and the most silent of men: he knew that a word spoke never wrought so much good as a word concealed.

Broome.

There is but one way I know of conversing safely with all men, that is, not by concealing what we say or do, but by saying or doing nothing that deserves to be concealed.

Pope.

CONCEALABLE. adj. [from conceal.] Capable of being concealed; possible to be kept secret, or hid.

Returning a lye unto his Maker, and presuming to put off the searcher of hearts, he denied the omniscieny of God, whereunto there is nothing concealable.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONCEALEDNESS. n. s. [from conceal.] The state of being concealed; privacy; obscurity.

Dict.

CONCEALER.† n. s. [from conceal.] He that conceals any thing.

The lords made themselves culpable as concealers.

Sir W. Ashton, (1624,) Sup. to Cabala, p. 153.

The notice of treason, if too long smothered, draws the concealer into danger.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. Add.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

If therefore they will appeal to revelation for their creation, they must be concluded by it.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He never refused to be concluded by the authority of one legally summoned.

Atterbury.

To CONCLUDE. v. n.

1. To perform the last act of ratiocination; to collect the consequence; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,
When boldly she concludes of that and this;
When of herself she can no judgment give,
Nor how, nor whence, nor where, nor what she is? Davies.

The blind man's relations import no necessity of concluding, that though black was the roughest of colours, therefore white should be the smoothest.

Boyle on Colours.

There is something infamous in the very attempt: the world will conclude I had a guilty conscience.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. To settle opinion.

Can we conclude upon Luther's instability, as our author has done, because, in a single notion no way fundamental, an enemy writes that he had some doubtings?

Atterbury.

I question not but your translation will do honour to our country; for I conclude of it already from those performances.

Addison to Pope.

3. Finally to determine.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of,
Between the realms of England and of France. Shakspeare.

4. To end.

And all around wore nuptial bonds, the ties
Of love's assurance, and a train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden, Fab.
We'll tell when 'tis enough,
Or if it wants the nice concluding bout. King.

CONCLUDENCY. n. s. [from concludent.] Consequence; regular proof; logical deduction of reason.

Judgment concerning things to be known, or the neglect and concludency of them, ends in decision. Hale.

CONCLUDENT.† adj. [from conclude.] Decisive; ending in just and undeniable consequences.

The fourth part of excess is, concerning the communicating the authority of the chancellor too far, and making upon the matter too many chancellors, by relying too much upon reports of the masters in chancery as concludent.

Bacon, Sp. on taking his place in Chancery.

Though these kind of arguments may seem more obscure, yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and concludent to my purpose.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

CONCLUDER.* n. s. [from conclude.] One who determines or decides.

Not forward concluders in these times.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 146.

C O N

CONCLUSIBLE. adj. [from conclude.] Determinable; certain by regular proof.

'Tis as certainly conclusible from God's prescience, that they will voluntarily do this, as that they will do it at all.

Hammond.

CONCLUSION. n. s. [from conclude.]

1. Determination; final decision.

Ways of peaceable conclusion there are but these two certain; the one a sentence of judicial decision, given by authority thereto appointed within ourselves; the other, the like kind of sentence given by a more universal authority. Hooker.

2. The collection from propositions premised; the consequence.

The conclusion of experience, from the time past to the time present, will not be sound and perfect. Bacon, War with Spain.

And marrying divers principles and grounds,
Out of their match a true conclusion brings. Davies.

Then doth the wit

Build fond conclusions on those idle grounds;
Then doth it fly the good, and all pursue. Davies.

I only deal by rules of art,

Such as are lawful, and judge by

Conclusions of astrology. Hudibras.

It is of the nature of principles, to yield a conclusion different from themselves. Tillotson.

He granted him both the major and the minor; but denied him the conclusion. Addison, Freeholder.

3. The close; the last result of argumentative deduction.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter, fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man.

Eccles. xii. 13.

I have been reasoning, and in conclusion have thought it best to return to what fortune hath made my home. Swift.

4. The event of experiments; experiment.

Her physician tells me,

She has pursu'd conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We practise likewise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating, as well of wild trees as fruit trees. Bacon, New Atlant.

5. The end; the last part.

I can speak no longer; yet I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation, which shall be my conclusion. Howell.

6. In Shakspeare it seems to signify silence; confinement of the thoughts.

Your wife Octavia, with her modest eyes
And still conclusion, shall acquire no honour, Demuring upon me. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

CONCLUSIONAL.* adj. [from conclusion.] Concluding.

Such separations of initiatory dedications, as well as conclusional separations, are made with wine.

Hooper on Lent, p. 278.

*CONCLUSIVE. adj. [from conclude.]

1. Decisive; giving the last determination to the opinion.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not by any law or reason conclusive to my judgment. King Charles.

The last dictate of the understanding is not always absolute in itself, nor conclusive to the will, yet it produces no antecedent nor external necessity. Bp. Bramhall, Answ. to Hobbes.

They have secret reasons for what they seem to do, which, whatever they are, they must be equally conclusive for us as they were for them. Rogers.

2. Regularly consequential.

Those that are not men of art, not knowing the true forms of syllogism, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures. Locke.

CONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from conclusive.] Decisively; with final determination.

This I speak only to desire Eupolis not to speak peremptorily or conclusively, touching the point of possibility, 'till they have heard me deduce the means of the execution. Bacon.

To CONCOCT. v. a. [concoquo, Latin.]

1. To digest by the stomach, so as to turn food to nutriment.

The working of purging medicines cometh two or three hours after the medicines taken; for that the stomach first maketh a proof, whether it can concoct them. Bacon.

Assuredly he was a man of a feeble stomach, unable to concoct any great fortune, prosperous or adverse. Hayward.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

The notions and sentiments of others judgment, as well as of our own memory, makes our property: it does, as it were, concoct our intellectual food, and turns it into a part of ourselves. Watts on the Mind.

2. To purify or sublime by heat; or heighten to perfection.

The small, close-lurking minister of fate,
Whose high concocted venom through the veins

A rapid lightning darts. Thomson, Summer.

3. To ripen.

The root which continueth ever in the earth, is still concocted by the earth; and fruits and grains are half a year in concocting; whereas leaves are out and perfect in a month. Bacon.

CONCOCTION. n. s. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing towards purity and perfection.

This hard rolling is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The constantest notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He, though he knew not which soul spake,

Because both meant, both spake the same,

Might thence a new concoction take,
And part far purer than he came. Donne.

CONCOCTIVE. \ adj.* [from concoct.] Digesting by the stomach; turning food to nourishment.

It were more easy — to force the concoctive stomach to turn that into flesh, which is so totally unlike that substance as not to be wrought on. Milton, Tetrach.

With keen dispatch

The concourse of all good men, strike thee nothing ? B. Jonson.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance, or fortuitous concourse of particles of matter. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Vain is his force, and vainer is his skill.

With such a concourse comes the flood of ill. Dryden, Fab.

2. The persons assembled.

The prince with wonder hears, from every part,
The noise and busy concourse of the mart. Dryden, Virg.

3. The point of junction or intersection of two bodies.

So soon as the upper glass is laid upon the lower, so as to touch it at one end, and to touch the drop at the other end, making, with the lower glass, an angle of about ten or fifteen minutes : the drop will begin to move towards the concourse of the glasses, and will continue to move with an accelerated motion, till it arrives at that concourse of the glasses. Newton.

To CONCREATE.* v. a. [old Fr. concreer, from the
Lat. con and creo.] To create at the same time.

Upon loving God above all, and our neighbour as ourselves, hang all the law and the gospel. And this, as a rule concreated with man, is that which the apostle calls the royal law ; which if we fulfil, we do well. Feltham, Rev. ii. 3.

To CONCREDE.* v. a. [Lat. concredo, part. concreditus.] To entrust ; to commit upon trust.

The which reason may well be applied to excuse every Christian from swearing, who is a most high priest to the Most High God, and hath the most celestial and important matters concredited to him. Barrow, Sermon, i. S. 15.

Ecclesia commendata, so called in contradistinction to ecclesia titulata, is that church, which for the custodial charges and government thereof, is by a revocable collation concredited with some ecclesiastical person, in the nature of a trustee.

Lett. to the Bp. of Rochester, (1772,) p. 2.

CONCREMATION. n. s. [from concremo, Lat. to burn together.] The act of burning many things together. Dict.

CONCREMENT. n. s. [from concreresco, Latin.] The mass formed by concretion ; a collection of matter growing together.

There is the cohesion of the matter into a more loose consistency, like clay, and thereby it is prepared to the concrement of a pebble or flint. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

CONCRESCENCE. n. s. [from concreresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrecence hath not been taught. Rudolph, Nat. of the World.

To CONCRETE.* v. n. [concreresco, Latin.] To coalesce into one mass ; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus concreting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures ; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The blood of some who died of the plague, could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun.

Arbutnot.

TO CONCRETE.† v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute: we see it in the meteors.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I hope he will not desert his own principle, that all fluid bodies being congealed or concreted, rest in the same form as they were in before concretion.

Bp. H. Croft on Burnet's Theory, p. 169.

CONCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state.

Burnet.

2. [In logick.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it skilleth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save the world.

Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express, or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them.

Watts, Logick.

CONCRETE. n. s. A mass formed by concretion; or union of various parts adhering to each other.

If gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater.

Bentley, Sermon.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependance of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty.

Norris.

CONCRETENESS. n. s. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass.

Dict.

CONCRETION.† n. s. [old Fr. concretion.]

1. The act of concreting; coalition.

The mind surmounts all power of concretion, and can place in the simplest manner every attribute by itself; convex without concave; colour without superficies, &c.

Harris, Hermes, iii. 1.

2. The mass formed by a coalition of separate particles.

Some plants upon the top of the sea, are supposed to grow of some concretion of slime from the water, where the sea stirreth little.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Heat, in general, doth not resolve and attenuate the juices of a human body; for too great heat will produce concretions.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

CONCRETIVE. adj. [from concrete.] Having the power to produce concretions; coagulative.

When wood and other bodies petrify, we do not ascribe their induration to cold, but unto salinous spirit, or concretive juices.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONCRETURE. n. s. [from concrete.] A mass formed by coagulation.

TO CONCREW.* v. n. [Lat. concreresco.] To grow together. Not in use.

His faire locks —

He let to grow and griesly to concrew,

Uncomb'd, uncurl'd.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 40.

CONCUBINAGE. n. s. [concupinage, Fr. concubinatus, Lat.] The act of living with a woman not married.

Adultery was punished with death by the ancient heathens; concubinage was permitted.

Broome.

CONCUBINATE.* n. s. [Lat. concubinatus.] Whoredom; fornication; concubinage.

Holy marriage in all men is preferred before unclean concubinate in any.

Rp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, iii. § 3

CONCUBINE. n. s. [concupina, Lat.] A woman kept in fornication; a whore; a strumpet.

I know, I am too mean to be your queen;

And yet too good to be your concubine.

Shakspeare, Henry VI.

When his great friend was suitor to him to pardon an offender, he denied him; afterwards, when a concubine of his made the same suit, he granted it to her; and said, Such suits were to be granted to whores.

Bacon.

He caused him to paint one of his concubines, Campaspe, who had the greatest share in his affection.

Dryden.

The wife, though a bright goddess, thus gives place

To mortal concubines of fresh embrace.

Granville.

TO CONCULCATE.† v. a. [conculco, Latin.] To tread or trample under foot.

Conculcating and trampling under foot whatsoever is named of God, he [Mahomet], advanceth his own (blasphemous, reprobate, and forlornie miscreant as he is) divine power and authority forsooth, in the devil's name, above all things whatsoever in heaven and earth.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 153

CONCULCATION. n. s. [conculcatio, Latin.] Trampling with the feet.

Dict.

CONCUPISCENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. concupiscence, Lat. concupiscentia.] Our word is now rarely used in the plural number; formerly it was not uncommon. Irregular desire; libidinous wish; lust; lechery.

We know even secret concupiscence to be sin, and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation.

Hooker.

Taking their pleasures and lusts, after their inordinate concupiscences.

Outreth's Tr. of M. Cope on Proverbs, (1580,) p. 77. b.

In such sort doth Satan deal with us every day, by the means of our concupiscences sette on fire.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587,) p. 218.

In our faces evident the signs

Of foul concupiscence; whence evil store;

Even shame, the last of evils.

Milton, P. L.

Nor can they say, that the difference of climate inclines one nation to concupiscence and sensual pleasures, another to blood-thirstiness: it would discover great ignorance not to know, that a people has been overrun with recently invented vice.

Bentley, Sermon.

CONCUPISCENT. adj. [concupiscens, Latin.]

Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body

To his concupiscent intemperate lust,

Release my brother!

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

CONCUPISCENTIAL. adj. [from concupiscent.] Relating to concupiscence.

Dict.

CONCUPISCIBLE.† adj. [concupiscibilis, Lat.] Impressing desire; eager; desirous; inclining to the pursuit or attainment of any thing.

To the vegetative, from which, as from a fountain, they said, the concupiscible appetite doth flow, they appointed the liver for her place.

Bryskett, Disc. of Civil. Life, (1606,) p. 47.

It is not to be supposed, there should be any predominancy of any of those passions, that proceed from the concupiscible appetite.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 153.

The schools reduce all the passions to these two heads, the concupiscible and irascible appetite.

South, Sermon.

TO CONCUR.† v. n. [concurro, Latin.] This word is the parent of a joke, reflecting on Dr. Adam Littleton, the well-known author of a Latin dictionary; which has been so confidently asserted in Anecdotes of the English Language, as well as in other publications, that I think it right to shew the inaccuracy of the pretended narrative, and to undeceive the wits as well as the more sober investigators of lexicography. "When Dr. Littleton was compiling his dictionary; and announced the verb concurrere to his amanuensis, the scribe, imagining that the various senses of the word would, as usual, begin with the most literal translation, said, concur, I suppose, sir; to which the doctor replied peevishly—concurr! condog! The secretary, whose business it was to write what his master dictated, accordingly did his duty; and the word condog was inserted, and is actually printed as one interpretation of concurrere in the first edition, 1678, (to be seen in the British Museum,) though it has been expunged, and does not appear in subsequent editions." Pegge's Anecdotes of the English Language.—But condog had before appeared in English lexicography. In Cockeram's English dictionary, under To Agree, in the second part, (I am citing from the edition of 1642,) are these definitions, "concurrere, cohere, condog, concurrere." Littleton therefore cited what had before been used, but justly discharged it afterwards; though the editors of the Cambridge dictionary in 1693 thought proper to readmit it under concurrere.]

1. To meet in one point.

Though reason favours them, yet sense can hardly allow them; and, to satisfy, both these must concur. Temple.

Is it not now utterly incredible, that our two vessels, placed there antipode to each other, should ever happen to concur? Gentley, Sermon 7.

2. To agree; to join in one action, or opinion.

Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effectual as if all my executors had concurred in the same. Swift, Last Will.

3. It has with before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concur with the heathens, either in opinion or action, and that conformity with them is only then a disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or generally in that they do without reason. Hooker.

4. It has to before the effect to which one contributes.

Their affections were known to concur to the most desperate counsels. Clarendon.

Extremes in nature equal good produce,
Extremes in man concur to general use. Pope.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.

To have an orthodox belief, and a true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity. South.

Testimony is the argument; and, if fair probabilities of reason concur with it, this argument hath all the strength it can have. Tillotson.

6. To contribute to one common event with joint power.

When outward causes concur, the idle are soonest seized by this infection. Collier, on the Splend.

CONCURRENCE. } n. s. [from concur.]
CONCURRENCE. }

1. Union; association; conjunction.

We have no other measure but our own ideas, with the concurrence of other probable reasons, to persuade us. Locke.
VOL. I.

2. Agreement; act of joining in any design, or measures.

Their concurrence in persuasion, about some material points belonging to the same polity, is not strange. Hooker, Pref.

The concurrence of the peers in that fury, can be imputed to the irreverence the judges were in. Clarendon.

Tarquin the proud was expelled by an universal concurrence of nobles and people.

Swift on the Dissent, in Athens and Rome.

3. Combination of many agents or circumstances.

Struck with these great concurrences of things. Crashaw.

He views our behaviour in every concurrence of affairs, and sees us engage in all the possibilities of action. Addison, Spect.

4. Assistance; help.

From these sublime images we collect the greatness of the work, and the necessity of the divine concurrence to it. Rogers.

5. Joint right; equal claim.

A bishop might have officers, if there was a concurrence of jurisdiction between him and the archdeacon. Aylmer.

CONCURRENCE. } adj. [old Fr. concurrent.]

1. Acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; concomitant in agency.

I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Davies on Ireland.

Every bishop, that shall be nominated by us to another bishoprick, shall from that day of nomination not presume to make any lease for three lives of one and twenty years, or concurrent lease, or any way renew any estate, &c. K. James, Instruct. concerning Bishops, 1622.

For without the concurrent consent of all these three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.

This sole vital faculty is not sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery, unless the animal faculty be concurrent with it to supply the fibres with animal spirits. Harvey.

All combin'd,

Your beauty, and my impotence of mind;
And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryden, Fob.

2. Conjoined; associate; concomitant.

There is no difference between the concurrent echo and the iterant, but the quickness or slowness of the return. Bacon.

CONCURRENCE. } n. s. [old Fr. concurrent.]

1. That which concurs; a contributory cause.

To all affairs of importance there are three necessary concurrents, without which they can never be dispatched; time, industry, and faculties. Decay of Piety.

2. Equal claim; joint right.

Stepping over to the south-sea (for the distance is, in comparison, but a step) St. Michael's Mount looketh so aloft, as it brooketh no concurrent for the highest place. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

CONCURRENCE. } adv. [from concurrent.] In an agreeing manner.

They did not vote these special and precise means concurrently with the voice of God. W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648), p. 301.

CONCUSSION. } n. s. [Lat. concussio, concussatus.] A violent agitation or shaking.

Surely he were a bold man that could sleep whilst the earth rocks him; and so were he that could give himself to a stupid security when he feels any vehement concussions of government. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 68.

CONCUSSED. } part. adj. [Lat. concussus.] Shaken. Cockeram.

CONCUSSION. } n. s. [concuissio, Lat.]

1. The act of shaking; agitation; tremefaction.

It is believed that great ringing of bells in populous cities, hath dissipated pestilent air; which may be from the concussion of the air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The strong concussion on the heaving tide,
Roll'd back the vessel to the island's side. Pope, Odysse

2. The state of being shaken.

There want not instances of such an universal concussion of the whole globe, as must needs imply an agitation of the whole abyss. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CONCUSSIVE. adj. [concussus, Latin.] Having the power or quality of shaking.

To CONDEMN. v. a. [condemno, Latin.]

1. To find guilty; to doom to punishment: contrary to absolve.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Is he found guilty?

—Yes truly, is he, and condemn'd upon't.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Considered as a judge, it condemns where it ought to absolve, and pronounces absolution where it ought to condemn.

Fiddes, Sermon.

2. It has to before the punishment.

The son of man shall be betrayed unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death. St. Matt. xx. 18.

3. To censure; to blame; to declare criminal: contrary to approve.

Who then shall blame

His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn

Itself for being there! Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The poet who flourished in the scene, is condemned in the ruelle. Dryden, Bn. Pref.

He who was so unjust as to do his brother an injury, will scarce be so just as to condemn himself for it. Locke.

They who approve my conduct in this particular, are much more numerous than those who condemn it.

Spectator, No. 488.

4. To fine.

And the king of Egypt put him down at Jerusalem, and condemned the land in an hundred talents of silver.

2 Chron. xxxvi. 3.

5. To show guilt by contrast.

The righteous that is dead shall condemn the ungodly which are living. Wisd. iv. 16.

CONDEMNABLE. adj. [from condemn.] Blameable; culpable.

He commands to deface the print of a cauldron in ashes, which strictly to observe were condemnable superstition. Brown.

CONDEMNATION. n. s. [condemnation, Latin.] The sentence by which any one is doomed to punishment; the act of condemning; the state of being condemned.

There is therefore now no condemnation to them. Rom. viii.

CONDEMNATORY. † adj. [old Fr. condemnatoire.] Passing a sentence of condemnation, or of censure.

The evidence being clear and convictive, the doom can be no other than condemnatory. Bp. Hall, Cas. of Consc. ii. 6.

He that passes the first condemnatory sentence, is like the incendiary in a popular tumult, who is chargeable with all the disorders to which he gave rise. Gore, of the Tongue.

CONDEMNER. † n. s. [from condemna.] A blamer; a censorer; a censor.

Thus are ye all one in opinion with heretiques olde and newe, and yet ye pretende to be condemners of them.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. fol. 62. b.

Some few are the only refusers and condemners of this catholic practice. Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

Some of the later and lesser edition of divines, who would be counted great reformers of the times, because they were vehement censorers and condemners of whatever they listed to dislike or not to fancy. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 118.

But we shall meet, where our condemners
Shall not.

Dequon, and Fl. Four Plays in One.

CONDENSABLE. adj. [from condensate.] That which is capable of condensation; that which can be drawn or compressed into a narrower compass.

This agent meets with resistance in the moveable, and not being in the utmost extremity of density, but condensable yet further, every resistance works something upon the mover to condense it. Digby on the Soul.

To CONDENSATE. † v. a. [condenso, Latin.] To condense; to make thicker.

They say, a little critical learning makes one proud; if there were more, it would condensate and compact itself into less room. Hammond's Works, iv. 611.

To CONDENSATE. v. η. To grow thicker.

CONDENSATE. adj. [condensatus, Latin.] Made thick; condensed; compressed into less space.

Water by nature is white; yea, thickened or condensate, most white, as it appeareth by the hail and snow. Prochaw.

CONDENSATION. n. s. [from condensate.] The act of thickening any body, or making it more gross and weighty. Opposite to rarefaction.

If by natural arguments it may be proved, that water, by condensation, may become earth; the same reason teacheth that earth, rarefied, may become water.

By water-glasses the account was not regular; for, from attenuation and condensation, the hours were shorter in hot weather than in cold. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The supply of its moisture [is] by rains and snow, and dews and condensation of vapours, and perhaps by subterraneous passage. Bentley, Sermon. iv.

CONDENSATIVE.* adj. [from condensate.] Having the power of condensating.

To CONDENSE. † v. a. [condenso, Latin.] To make any body more thick, close, and weighty; to drive or attract the parts of any body nearer to each other. To inspissate; opposed to rarefy.

The midst was all of dark and condensed clouds.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

Moving in so high a sphere, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which condensed by a popular odium, were capable to cloud the brightest merit. K. Charles.

Some lead their youth abroad, while some condense

Their liquid store, and some in cells disperse.

Dryden, Virg.

Such dense and solid strata arrest the vapour, at the surface of the earth, and collect and condense it there. Woodward.

To CONDENSE. v. n. To grow close and weighty; to withdraw its parts into a narrow compass.

The water falling from the upper parts of the cave, does presently there condense into little stones. Boyle, Scept. Chym.

All vapours, when they begin to condense and coalesce into small parcels, become first of that bigness whereby azure must be reflected, before they can constitute other colours.

Newton, Opticks.

CONDENSE. adj. [from the verb.] Thick; dense; condensed; close; massy; weighty.

They colour, shape and size

Assume, as likes them best, condense or rare. Milton, P. L.

They might be separated without associating into the huge condense bodies of planets. Bentley, Sermon.

CONDENSER. n. s. [from condense.] A strong metal-line vessel, wherein to crowd the air, by means of a syringe fastened thereto. Quincy.

CONDENSITY. † n. s. [old Fr. condensité.] The state of being condensed; condensation; denseness; density.

CONDERS. n. s. [conduire, French.]

Such as stand upon high places near the sea coast, at the time of herring-fishing, to make signs to the fishers which way the shole passeth, which may better appear to such as stand upon some high cliff, by a kind of blue colour that the fish causeth in the water, than to those in the ships. These be likewise called huers, by likelihood of the French huer, exclamare, and balkers. Cowel.

CONDESCENCE.* n. s. [from condescend.] Descent from superiority. See CONDESCENT.

Which passage I find cited by Cressie's Answer to Dr. Pierce, adding thus, See the condescence of this great king.

Puller's Modest. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 440.

To CONDESCEND.† v. n. [condescendre, Fr. from condescendo, Lat.]

1. To depart from the privileges of superiority by a voluntary submission; to sink willingly to equal terms with inferiours; to sooth by familiarity.

This method carries a very humble and condescending air, when he that instructs seems to be the enquirer. Watts.

2. To consent to do more than mere justice can require.

Spain's mighty monarch,
In gracious clemency does condescend,
On these conditions, to become your friend.

Dryden's Ind. Emp.

He did not primarily intend to appoint this way; but condescended to it as accommodate to their present state.

Tillotson.

3. To stoop; to bend; to yield; to submit; to become subject.

Can they think me so broken, so debas'd
With corporal servitude, that my mind ever
Will condescend to such absurd commands?

Milton, S. A.

Nor shall my resolution
Disarm itself, nor condescend to parly
With foolish hopes.

Denham, Sophy.

4. To agree to, or concur with, simply. This sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Hudock.

And therefore condescending to Blount's advice to surprize the court, he pursued, &c.

Bacon, Declar. of Id. Essex's Treason, 1601.

CONDESCENDENCE.† n. s. [condescendance, French.]

Voluntary submission to a state of equality with inferiours.

By the warrant of St. Paul's condescendence to the capacities he wrote unto, I may speak after the manner of men.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648,) p. 31.

CONDESCENDING.* n. s. [from condescend.] Act of voluntary humiliation.

This queen of most familiar condescendings is content to be our every week's prospect.

Hammond's Works, iv. 525.

CONDESCENDINGLY.† adv. [from condescending.] By way of voluntary humiliation; by way of kind concession.

Not starting of high and intricate questions, and concluding them by subtle arguments, but familiarly and condescendingly setting out the creation, according to the most easy and obvious conceits they themselves had of those things they saw in the world.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 101.

We condescendingly made Luther's works unpires by the controversy.

Atterbury.

CONDESCENSION. n. s. [from condescend.] Voluntary humiliation; descent from superiority; voluntary submission to equality with inferiours.

It forbids pride and ambition, and vain glory; and commands humility and modesty, and condescension to others.

Tillotson.

Courtesy and condescension is an happy quality, which never fails to make its way into the good opinion, and into the very heart, and allays the envy which always attends a high station.

Atterbury, Sermons.

Raphael, amidst his tenderness, shews such a dignity and condescension in all his behaviour, as are suitable to a superior nature.

Addis on.

CONDESCENSIVE.† adj. [from condescension.] Courteous; willing to treat with inferiours on equal terms; not haughty; not arrogant.

There is not the least of the divine favours, which, if we consider the condescensive tenderness, the clear intention, the unreserved frankness, the cheerful debonairity expressed therein, has not dimensions larger than our comprehension, colours too fair, lineaments too comely for our weak sight thoroughly to discern, requiring therefore our highest and our utmost thoughts.

Barrow, Sermon, vol. i. S. 8.

CONDESCENT.* n. s. [from condescend.] This is our old substantive for condescension, which also formerly appeared in condescence. Accordance; agreement; submission; condescension.

God turns the heart of men which way hever he pleases; sometimes dreadfully forced to a right down opposition; sometimes sideways to a fair accommodation; sometime circularly bringing them about to a full condescend and accordance.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 79.

They rather, to gratify Herodia, make way for so slight and easy a condescend.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. W. 4.

Upon the comfortable feeling of a gracious condescend, follows an happy fruition of God in all his favours.

Bp. Hall, Devout Soul, § 20.

Some worthy person that can deny himself in stooping to such a condescend.

Worthington, to Warthb. (1661.) Ep. 17.

CONDIGN.† adj. [old Fr. condigne, from condignus, Lat.] Worthy of a person; suitable; deserved; merited: it is always used of something deserved by crimes. Dr. Johnson says; which is by no means the case. Sir Thomas Elyot uses it indifferently; and other good authorities shew, that it is used strictly for praiseworthy.

Unto so excellent a prince there shall not lack hereafter condigne writers to register his acts. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 76.

Then shall they give condigne reprehensions, manifesting their faults.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 259.

Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 202.

Unless it were a bloody laurel wreath,

I never gave them condign punishment. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Consider who is your friend; he that would have brought him to condign punishment, or he that has saved him.

Arbutnot.

CONDIGNESS. n. s. [from condign.] Suitableness; agreeableness to deserts.

Dict.

CONDIGNITY.* n. s. [from condign.] Merit; desert.

Condignity is much made of, [by the Church of Rome,] as being a piece for the nonce of some importance; an opposite of some spirit to affront God, and peremptorily to challenge, This is my due.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 201.

Such a worthiness of condignity, and proper merit of the heavenly glory, cannot be found in any the best, most perfect, and excellent of created beings.

Bp. Bull's Works, i. 364.

He, who prays for a thing as God has appointed, gets thereby a right to the thing prayed for; but it is a right, not springing from any merit or condignity, either in the prayer itself, or the person that makes it, to the blessing which he prays for.

South, Sermon on Extemp. Prayer.

CONDIGNLY.† adv. [from condign.] Deservedly; according to merit.

Dict.

Here you may see what persons may condignly bear the signs and tokens of arms.

Knight's Trial of Truth, (1680,) p. 12.

The arguments brought by Christ for the confirmation of his doctrine, were in themselves sufficient. South.

4. An ecclesiastical rite.

What is prepared for in catechising, is, in the next place, performed by confirmation; a most profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the practice of the apostles, which consists in two parts: the child's undertaking, in his own name, every part of the baptismal vow (having first approved himself to understand it); and to that purpose, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now (as in baptism) as his procurator to undertake for him, but as a witness to testify his entering this obligation. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONFIRMATIVE.* adj. [old Fr. confirmatif.] Having power to confirm a thing. Sherwood.

CONFIRMATOR. n. s. [from confirmo, Lat.] An attester; he that puts a matter past doubt.

There wants herein the definitive confirmator, and test of things uncertain, the sense of man. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONFIRMATORY.† adj. [from confirm.]

1. Giving additional testimony; establishing with new force.

To each of these reasons he subjoins ample and learned illustrations, and confirmatory proofs. Bp. Barlow's Rem. p. 453.

2. Relating to the rite of confirmation.*

It is not improbable, that they [the disciples] had in their eye the confirmatory usage in the synagogues, to which none were admitted, before they were of age to undertake for themselves. Bp. Compton's Episcopalia, (1686,) p. 35.

CONFIRMEDNESS. n. s. [from confirmed.] Confirmed state; radication.

• If the difficulty arise from the confirmedness of habit, every resistance weakens the habit, abates the difficulty.

Decay of Pety.

CONFIRMER.† n. s. [from confirm.] One that confirms: one that produces evidence or strength; an attester; an establisher.

Be these sad sighs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again. Shakspeare, K. John.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster: they are both the confirmers of false reckonings. Shakspeare.

More repeaters of their popular oratorious vehemencies, than urgers and confirmers of their argumentative strength.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 122.

CONFIRMINGLY.* adv. [from confirming.] In a corroborative manner.

She [the moon] was called Anna; to which the vow that they used somewhat confirmingly alludes.

B. Jonson, King's Entertainment, Notes.

CONFISCABLE. adj. [from confiscate.] Liable to forfeiture.

To CONFISCATE. v. a. [confiscare, confisquer, i. e. in publicum addicere, from fiscus, which, originally signifieth a hamper, pannier, basket, or fireil; but metonymically the emperor's treasure, because it was anciently kept in such hampers. Coccl.] To transfer private property to the prince or publick, by way of penalty for an offence.

It was judged that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down.

Bacon.

Whatever fish the vulgar fry excel,
Belong to Cæsar, where-oe'er they swim,

By their own worth confiscated to him. Dryden, Juv.

CONFISCATE.† adj. [from the verb.] Transferred to the publick as forfeit. The accent in Shakspeare is on the first syllable.

Thy lands and goods

Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate
Unto the state of Venice. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

But our judgement on thee

Is, that thy substance all be straight confiscate
To th' hospital of th' Incurabili. B. Jonson, For.

CONFISCATION.† n. s. [from confiscate.] The act of transferring the forfeited goods of criminals to publick use.

Whosoever will not do the law of thy God, and the law of the king, let judgement be speedily executed upon him, whether it be unto death, or to banishment, or to confiscation of goods, or to imprisonment. Ezra, vii. 26.

It was in every man's eye, what great forfeitures and confiscations he had at that present to help himself. Bacon, II. VII.

CONFISCATOR.* n. s. [from confiscate.] One who is concerned in the management of confiscated property.

They were overrun by publicans, farmers of the taxes, agents, confiscators, usurers, bankers, those numerous and insatiable bodies, which always flourish in a burthened and complicated revenue. Burke, Abridg. Eng. Hist. i. 3.

I see the confiscators begin with bishops, and chapters, and monasteries; but I do not see them end there.

Burke on the Fr. Revolution.

CONFISCATORY.* adj. [from confiscator.] Consigning to forfeiture.

The grounds, reasons, and principles of those terrible, confiscatory, and exterminatory periods.

Burke, Lett. to R. Burke, Esq.

CONFIT.* v. s. [Ital. confetto. See also COMFIT and CONFITURE.] Any sweet-meat, or confection.

CONFITENT. n. s. [confitens, Lat.]. One confessing; one who confesses his faults.

A wide difference there is between a meer confitent and a true penitent. Decay of Piety.

CONFITURE. n. s. [French; from confectura, Lat.]. A sweetmeat; a confection; a confit.

It is certain, that there be some houses wherein confitures and pies will gather mould more than in others. Bacon.

We contain a confiture house, where we make all sweet-meats, dry and moist, and divers pleasant wines. Bacon.

To CONFIX v. e. [configo confixum, Lat.] To fix down; to fasten.

As this is true,

Let me in safety raise me from my knees;

Or else, for ever be confixed here,

A marble monument!

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

CONFIXURE.* n. s. [from confix.] The act of fastening.

How subject are we to embrace this earth, even while it wounds us by this confixure of ourselves to it!

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. P. II. (1654.) p. 55.

CONFLAGRANT. adj. [conflagrans, Lat.] Burning together; involved in a general fire.

Then raise

From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,

New heav'n's, new earth.

Milton, P. L.

CONFLAGRATION. n. s. [conflagratio, Lat.]

1. A general fire spreading over a large space.

The opinion deriveth the complexion from the deviation of the sun, and the conflagration of all things under Phaeton.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Next o'er the plains, where ripen'd harvests grow,

The running conflagration spreads below.

Addison, Ovid.

Mankind hath had a gradual increase, notwithstanding what floods and conflagrations, and the religious profession of celibacy, may have interrupted.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is generally taken for the fire which shall consume this world at the consummation of things.

CONFLATION. n. s. [conflutum, Lat.]

1. The act of blowing many instruments together.

The sweetest harmony is, when every part or instrument is not heard by itself, but a conflation of them all. Bacon.

2. A casting or melting of metal.

CONFLEXURE. n. s. [conflexura, Lat.] A bending or turning.

To CONFLICT. v. n. [confligo, Lat.] To strive; to contest; to fight; to struggle; to contend; to encounter; to engage: properly by striking against one another.

Bare unhousted trunks

To the conflicting elements exposed,

Answer meer nature.

Shakspeare, Timon.

You shall hear under the earth a horrible thundering of fire and water conflicting together.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A man would be content to strive with himself, and conflict with great difficulties, in hopes of a mighty reward.

Tillotson.

Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine

Seems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn.

Thomson.

CONFLICT. n. s. [conflictus, Lat.]

1. A violent collision, or opposition of two substances.

Pour dephlegm'd spirit of vinegar upon salt of tartar, and there will be such a conflict or chollition, as if there were scarce two more contrary bodies in nature.

Boyle.

2. A combat; a fight between two. It is seldom used of a general battle.

The luckless conflict with the giant stout,

Wherein captiv'd, of life or death he stood in doubt.

Spenser, F. Q.

It is my father's face,

Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.

Shakspeare.

3. Contest; strife; contention.

There is a kind of merry war betwixt signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between them. — Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off.

Shakspeare.

4. Struggle; agony; pang.

No assurance touching victories can make present conflicts so sweet and easy, but nature will shrink from them.

Hooker.

If he attempt this great change, with what labour and conflict must he accomplish it?

Rogers.

He perceiv'd

Th' unequal conflict then, as angels look
On dying saints.

Thomson, Summer.

CONFLUENCE. n. s. [confluere, Lat.]

1. The junction or union of several streams.

Nimrod, who usurped dominion over the rest, sat down in the very confluence of all those rivers which watered Paradise.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Bagdat is beneath the confluence of Tigris and Euphrates.

Brerewood on Languages.

In the veins innumerable little rigulers have their confluence into the great vein, the common channel of the blood.

Bentley.

2. The act of coming to a place.

You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.

Shakspeare.

Some come to make merry, because of the confluence of all sorts.

Bacon.

You had found by experience the trouble of all men's confluence, and for all matters, to yourself.

Bacon to Villiers.

3. A concourse; a multitude crowded into one place.

This will draw a confluence of people from all parts of the country.

Temple.

4. Collection; concurrence.

We may there be instructed how to rate all goods by those that will centre into the felicity we shall possess, which shall be made up of the confluence, perfection and perpetuity of all true joys.

Boyle.

CONFLUENT. † adj. [confluent, Fr. confluent, Lat.]

Running one into another; meeting.

At length, to make their various currents one,

The congregated floods together run:

These confluent streams make some great river's head,

By stores still melting and descending fed.

Blackmore.

CONFLUX. n. s. [confluxio, Lat.]

1. The union of several currents; concourse.

Knots by the conflux of meeting sap

Infect the sound pine and divert his grain.

Shakspeare.

2. Crowd; multitude collected.

To the gates erst round thine eye, and see

What conflux issuing forth, or entering in.

Milton, P. L.

He quickly by the general conflux and concourse of the whole people, streightened his quarters.

Clarendon.

CONFORM. † adj. [conformis, Latin. We write deform and uniform; and this adjective also is the true word; conformable, however, has taken place of it.] Assuming the same form; wearing the same form; resembling; similar.

Variety of tunes doth dispose the spirits to variety of passions conform unto them.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Your opinion seemeth to you to be conform to all reason, law, religion, piety, wisdom, and policy.

Hayward, Answer to Dolman, ch. 3.

Care must be taken that the interpretation given be every way conform to the analogy of faith, and fully accordant to other Scripture.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To CONFORM. † v. a. [conformo, Lat.]

1. To reduce to the like appearance, shape, or manner with something else: with to.

Then followed that most natural effect of conforming one's self to that which she did like.

Sidney.

The apostles did conform the Christians, as much as might be, according to the pattern of the Jews.

Hooker.

Demand of them wherefore they conform not themselves unto the order of the church?

Hooker.

2. Without to.

That in perfection, this in sorrow, dies:

Yet death, more equal, these extremes conforms,

And covers their corrupting flesh with worms.

Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 32.

To CONFORM. v. n. To comply with; to yield with to.

Among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophick fare.

Dryden, Juv.

CONFORMABLE. adj. [from conform.]

1. Having the same form; using the same manners; agreeing either in exterior or moral characters; similar; resembling.

The Gentiles were not made conformable unto the Jews, in that which was to cease at the coming of Christ.

Hooker.

2. It has commonly to before that with which there is agreement.

He gives a reason conformable to the principles.

Arbutnot.

3. Sometimes with, not improperly: but to is used with the verb.

The fragments of Sappho give us a taste of her way of writing, perfectly conformable with that character we find of her.

Addison, Spect.

4. Agreeable; suitable; not opposite; consistent.

Nature is very consonant and conformable to herself.

The productions of a great genius, with many lapses, are preferable to the works of an inferior author, scrupulously exact, and conformable to all the rules of correct writing.

Addison.

5. Compliant; ready to follow directions; submissive; peaceable; obsequious.

I've been to you a true and humble wife,

At all time to your will conformable.

For all the kingdoms of the earth to yield themselves willingly conformable, in whatever should be required, it was their duty.

Hooker.

Such delusions are reformed by a conformable devotion, and the well-tempered zeal of the true Christian spirit.

Sprat.

CONFORMABLY, adv. [from conformable.] With conformity; agreeably; suitably: it has to.

So a man observe the agreement of his own imaginations, and talk conformably, it is all certainty.

Locke.

I have treated of the sex conformably to this definition.

Addison.

CONFORMATION. n. s. [French; conformatio, Latin.]

1. The form of things as relating to each other; the particular texture, and consistence of the parts of a body, and their disposition to make a whole: as, light of different colours is reflected from bodies according to their different conformation.

Varieties are found in the different natural shapes of the mouth, and several conformations of the organs.

Holder.

Where there happens to be such a structure and conformation of the earth, as that the fire may pass freely into these spiracles, it then readily gets out.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of producing suitableness, or conformity to any thing: with to.

Virtue and vice, sin and holiness, and the conformation of our hearts and lives to the duties of true religion and morality, are things of more consequence than the furniture of understanding.

Watts.

CONFORMER. \ n. s.* [from conform.] One that conforms to, or complies with, an established doctrine.

He meant it of the publick authorized doctrine of the church of England, and of conformers unto the said doctrine of that church.

Mozart, App. to Cæ. p. 127.

CONFORMIST. † n. s. [from conform.]

1. One that complies with the worship of the church of England; not a dissenter, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the authority of Dunton. It has, however, a general sense also; and a better example than that of Dunton, in the present meaning, may be given from the admirable author of the Christian Life.

There are too many men, who, to credit their ill designs against government, shelter themselves under the wings of the church; yet it's evident, they are either non-conformists to the church, or conformists that act against their own principle.

Scott, Serm. iv.

They were not both nonconformists, neither both conformists.

Dunton.

2. One who submits or yields.

So much have you made me a cheerful conformist to your judgement and charity. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 199.

CONFO'RMITY. n. s. [from conform.]

1. Similitude; resemblance; the state of having the same character of manners or form.

By the knowledge of truth, and exercise of virtue, man, amongst the creatures of this world, aspireth to the greatest conformity with God. Hooker.

Judge not what is best

By pleasure, though to nature seeming meet;

Created as thou art to nobler end,
Holy and pure, conformity divine!

Milton, P. L.

Space and duration have a great conformity in this, that they are justly reckoned amongst our simple ideas. Locke.

This metaphor would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and the sensitive taste. Addison, Spect.

2. It has in some authors acell before the model to which the conformity is made.

The end of all religion is but to draw us to a conformity with God. Decay of Piety.

3. In some to.

We cannot be otherwise happy but by our conformity to God. Tillotson.

Conformity in building to other civil nations, hath disposed us to let our old wooden dark houses fall to decay. Graunt.

4. Consistency.

Many instances prove the conformity of the essay with the notions of Hippocrates. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONFORTATION. n. s. [from conforto, a low Latin word.] Collation of strength; corroboration.

For corroboration and confortation, take such bodies as are of astringent quality, without manifest cold. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CONFOUND. v. a. [confondre, Fr. confundo, Latin.]

1. To mingle things so that their several forms or natures cannot be discerned.

Let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech. Gen. xi. 7.

Two planets rushing from aspect malign

Of fiercest opposition, and mid sky

Should combat, and their jarring spheres confound.

Milton, P. L.

2. To perplex; to compare or mention without due distinction.

A fluid body and a wetting liquor are wont, because they agree in many things, to be confounded. Boyle.

They who strip not ideas from the marks men use for them, but confound them with words, must have endless dispute. Locke.

3. To disturb the apprehension by indistinct words or notions.

I am yet to think, that men find their simple ideas agree, though, in discourse, they confound one another with different names. Locke.

4. To throw into consternation; to perplex; to terrify; to amaze; to astonish; to stupify.

So spake the son of God; and Satan stood

A while as mute, confounded what to say. Milton, P. R.

Now with furies surrounded,

Despairing, confounded,

He trembles, he flows,

Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope, St. Cecilia.

5. To destroy; to overthrow.

The sweetest honey

Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,

And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakespeare.

The gods confound thee! do'st thou hold there still!

Shakespeare.

Let them be confounded in all their power and might, and let their strength be broken. Dan. xxi.

So deep a malice to confound the race

CONFOUNDED. particip. adj. [from confound.] Heatful; detestable; enormous; odious: a low cant word.

A most confounded reason for his brutish conception. Grew.

Sir, I have heard another story,

'He was a most confounded Tory;

And grew, or he is much bely'd,

Extremely dull before he dy'd. Swift.

CONFOUNDELY. adv. [from confounded.] Hatefully; shamefully: a low or ludicrous word.

You are confoundedly given to squiring up and down, and chattering. L'Estrange.

Thy speculations begin to smell confoundedly of woods and meadows. Addison, Spect.

Of the same strain is their witty descendant of my confoundedness.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

CONFOUNDER. n. s. [from confound.]

1. He who disturbs, perplexes, terrifies, or destroys.

Ignorance—the darkener of man's life, the disturber of his reason, and common confounder of truth. B. Jonson, Discov.

In the confounders of those houses, [there was] some detestation of the vices of friars, more desire of the wealth of friars. Fuller's Holy War, p. 242.

2. He who mentions things without due distinction.

The confounder of our church with Charenton-Temple, is now at leisure to finish and polish those precious manuscripts, wherewith he adorns certain of his elect ladies' closets here.

Dean Martin, Letters, (1690,) p. 71.

CONFRATERNITY. n. s. [from con and fraternitas, Latin.] A brotherhood; a body of men united for some religious purpose.

We find days appointed to be kept, and a confraternity established for that purpose with the laws of it. Sidling flect.

The confraternities are in the Roman church, what corporations are in a commonwealth.

Brevint, Saul and Sam. at Tabor, p. 264.

CONFRER. n. s. [Fr. confrere.] One of the same religious order.

It was enacted, that none of the brethren or confreres of the said religion within this realm of England, and land of Ireland, should be called knights of Rhodes. Wreter.

CONFRICATION. n. s. [from con and frico, Lat.] The act of rubbing against any thing.

It hath been reported, that ivy hath grown out of a stag's horn; which they suppose did rather come from a confrication of the horn upon the ivy, than from the horn itself. Bacon.

To CONFRONT. v. a. [confronter, French.]

1. To stand against another in full view; to face.

He spoke, and then confronts the full;

And on his ample forehead, aiming full,

The deadly stroke descend. Dryden, Virg.

2. To stand face to face, in opposition to another.

The East and West churches did both confront the Jews and concur with them. Hooker.

Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd blows, Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,

Confronted him with self comparisons,

Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

3. To oppose one evidence to another in open court.

We began to lay his unkindness unto him; he seeing himself confronted by so many, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falshood. Sidney.

4. To compare one thing with another.

When I confront a medal with a verse, I only shew you the same design executed by different hands. Addison on Medals.

CONFRONTATION. n. s. [French.] The act of bringing two evidences face to face.

C O N

The argument would require a great number of comparisons, confrontations, and combinations, to find out the connection between the two manners.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

To CONFUSE. v. a. [confusus, Latin.]

1. To disorder; to disperse irregularly.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, the adventurous bands —
View'd first their lamentable lot, and found No rest.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

CONFUSEDNESS. * n. s. [from confused.] Want of distinctness; want of clearness.

Hitherunto these titles of honour carry a kind of confusedness, and rather betokened a successive office than an established dignity.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

Yet do I see through this confusedness some little comfort.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention.

Morris.

CONFUSELY. * adv. [from the adj. confuse.] Obscurely, not with sufficient declaration; without order; in a mixed manner.

Barret.

CONFUSION. n. s. [from confuse.]

1. Irregular mixture; tumultuous medley.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought.

Davies.

2. Tumult; disorder.

God is not a god of sedition and confusion, but of order and of peace.

Hooker, Preface.

C O N

This is a happier and more comely time,
Than when these fellows run about the streets

Crying confusion.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. Indistinct combination.

The confusion of two different ideas, which a customary connexion of them in their minds hath made to them almost one, fills their head with false views, and their reasonings with false consequences.

Locke.

4. Overthrow; destruction.

The strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him in to his confusion.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Astonishment; distraction of mind; hurry of ideas.

Confusion dwelt in ev'ry face,
And fear in ev'ry heart,
When waves on waves, and gulphs in gulphs,
O'ercame the pilot's art.

Speciator, No. 489.

CONFUTABLE. adj. [from confute.] Possible to be disproved; possible to be shewn false.

At the last day, that inquisitor shall not present to God a bundle of calumnies, or confutable accusations; but will offer unto his omniscience a true list of our transgressions.

Brown.

CONFUTANT. * n. s. [from confute.] One who undertakes to confute another.

Now that the confutant may also know as he desires, what force of teaching there is sometimes in laughter.

A confutation of atheism from the frame of the world.

Bentley.

To CONFUTE. v. a. [confuto, Latin.] To convict of error or falshood; to disprove.

He could on either side dispute;

Confute, change hands, and still confute.

Hudibras.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live as if there were none, but, when he dies, to find himself confuted in the flames, must be the height of woe.

South.

CONFUTEMENT. * n. s. [from confute.] Disproof.

An opinion held by some of the best among reformed writers without scandal or confutement.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

CONFUTER. * n. s. [from confute.] One who convicts another of mistake.

We have promised that their own dearest doctors and divines should be their confuters.

Bp. Morton, Episc. Asserted, p. 102.

And this is the immediate reason here why our enraged confuter, that he may be as perfect a hypocrite as Caiaphas, ere he be a high priest, cries out, "Horrid blasphemy!" and, like a recreant Jew, calls for stones.

Milton, Apology for Smeectym.

CONGE. † n. s. [congé, French.] Our word is often written congie.]

1. Act of reverence; bow; courtesy.

Because they cannot ride a horse, which every clown can do; salute and court a gentlewoman, enjoy at table, cringe, and make conges, which every swabber can do; they are laughed to scorn!

Barton, Anal. of Mch. p. 127.

The captain salutes you with congé profound.

And your ladyship curtsies half way to the ground.

Swift.

2. Leave; farewell.

So, courteous congé both did give and take,
With right hands plighted, pledges of good will.

Spenser, F. Q.

To CONGE. † v. n. [from the noun.] To take leave.

I have conged with the duke, and done my adieu with his nearest.

Shakspeare, All's well.

Then with short flight up to the oak he springs,
Where he thrice conged after his ascent.

Mare, Song of the Soul, ii. 63.

CONGEYELURE is French; and signifies, in common law, the king's permission royal to a dean and chapter, in time of vacation, to choose a bishop. The king, as sovereign patron of all archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical benefices, had, in ancient times, the free appointment of all ecclesiastical dignities; investing them first per baculum & annulum, and afterwards by his letters patent. In process of time he made the election over to others, under certain forms and conditions; as, that they should, at every vacation, before they choose, demand of the king a conge d'elire, that is, licence to proceed to election. Coxet.

C O N

A woman, when she has made her own choice, for form's sake, sends a conge d'elire to her friends. Spectator, No. 475.
Co'NGE, n. s. [In architecture.] A moulding in form of a quarter round, or a cavetto, which serves to separate two members from one another: such is that which joins the shaft of the column to the cincture. Chambers.

To CONGEAL.† n. a. Econgelio, Latin. Formerly the word was also accented on the first syllable; as in the passage from Shakspeare's Rich. III. And in the old tragedy of Loecine, ascribed to Shakspeare; as also in Milton's Comus.]

1. To turn, by frost, from a fluid to a solid state.

What more miraculous thing may be told,
Than ice, which is congeal'd with senseless cold,
Should kindle fire by wonderful device? Spenser.

I'll pass the frozen zone, where icy flakes
Do lie, like mountains in the congeal'd sea.

Tragedy of Loecine.
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone.
Milton, Com. 449.

In whose capacious womb
A vapour deluge lies, to snow congeal'd. Thomson, Winter.

2. To bind or fix, as by cold.

Oh, gentlemen, see! see, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh.
Shakspeare, R. III.
Too much sadness hath congeal'd your blood. Shakspeare.

To CONGEAL. v. n. To concreate; to gather into a mass by cold.

In the midst of molten lead, when it becometh to congeal, make a little dent, into which put quicksilver wrapt in linen, and it will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer.

Baron.

When water congeals, the surface of the ice is smooth and level, as the surface of the water was before. Burnet's Theory.

CONGEALMENT.† n. s. [from congeal.] The clot formed by congelation; concretion.

Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your feats, whilst they with joyful tears
Wash the congealment from your wounds.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We do not see that while we still affect by all means a rigid external formality, we may as soon fall again into a gross conforming stupidity, a stark and dead congealment of "wood, hay, and stubble." Milton, Arcopagitica.

CONGEALABLE. adj. [from congeal.] Susceptible of congelation; capable of losing its fluidity.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangible, pneumatical, fixed, hard, soft, congealable, not congealable, liquefiable, not liquefiable. Bacon.

The chymists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fixable in the fire, and congealable again by cold into brittle glebes or crystals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CONGELATION. n. s. [from congeal.]

1. Act of turning fluids to solids, by cold.

The capillary tubes are obstructed either by outward compression or congelation of the fluid. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
There are congelations of the redundant water, precipitations, and many other operations. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. State of being congealed, or made solid, by cold.

Many waters and springs will never freeze; and many parts in rivers and lakes, where there are mineral eruptions, will still persist without congelation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONGEMINATION.* n. s. [old Fr. congemination, from the Lat. congemination.] A doubling, or often repeating; a figure of speech, as epizeuxis.

Cotgrave.

CONGENER. n. s. [Latin.] Of the same kind or nature.

The cherry-tree has been often grafted on the laurel, to which it is a congener. Miller.

CONGENERACY.* n. s. [from congener.] Similarity of origin.

That they are ranged neither according to the merit, nor congeneracy, of their conditions.

More, Epos. Seven Ch. p. 172.

CONGENEROUS. adj. [congener, Latin.] Of the same kind; arising from the same original.

Those bodies, being of a congenious nature, do readily receive the impressions of their nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

From extreme and lasting colds proceeds a great run of apoplexies, and other congenious diseases. Arbuthnot on Air.

CONGEMEROUSNESS.† n. s. [from congenious.] The quality of being from the same original; belonging to the same class. Dict.

Rational means, and persuasive arguments, whose force and strength must lie in their congeniousness and suitableness with the ancient ideas and inscriptions of truth upon our souls.

CONGENIAL. adj. [con and genius, Lat.] Partaking of the same genius; kindred; cognate; in Swift it is followed by with.

He sprung, without any help, by a kind of congenial composition, as we may term it, to the likeness of our late sovereign and master. Wotton.

You look with pleasure on those things which are somewhat congenial, and of a remote kindred to your own conceptions. Dryden, Ded. of Juvenal.

Smit with the love of sister arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

He acquires a courage, and stiffness of opinion, not at all congenial with him. Swift.

CONGENIALITY.† n. s. [from congenial.] Participation of the same genius; cognation of mind, or nature.

Painters and poets have alwayes had a kind of congeniality.
Wotton, Elements of Architecture.

CONGENIALNESS. n. s. [from congenial.] Cognation.

CONGENIOUS.* adj. [con and genus, Lat.] Of the same kind. Not now in use.

In the blood thus drop'd there remains a spirit of life congenious to that in the body. Hales, Rem. p. 288.

CONGENITE. adj. [congenitus, Latin.] Of the same birth; born with another; connate; begotten together.

Many conclusions of moral and intellectual truths seem, upon this account, to be congenite with us, connatural to us, and engraven in the very frame of the soul.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Did we learn an alphabet in our embryo-state! And how comes it to pass, that we are not aware of any such congenite apprehensions? Glanville's Scepsis.

CONGER.† n. s. [congrus, Latin, γόγγρος, Gr. formed of γρᾶν, to eat, the fish being very voracious.] The sea-eel.

Many fish, whose shape and nature are much like the eel, frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as the mighty conger, taken often in the Seyvern. Walton's Angler.

CONGERIES.† n. s. [Latin.] A mass of small bodies heaped up together.

Congeries [is] a multiplication or heaping together of many words, signifying divers things of like nature.

Peacham, Garden of Eloquence, (1577) Q. ij.

The air is nothing but a congeries or heap of small, and for the most part, of flexible particles, of several sizes, and of all kinds of figures. Boyle.

To CONGE'ST.† v. a. [congro, congestum, Lat.] It is very remarkable, that of this well established word Dr. Johnson should have given neither authority nor example; merely introducing it into his dictionary, as if before unnoticed or unused.] To heap up; to gather together.

It shewed his bounty and magnificence in congesting matter for building the temple, as gold, silver, brass, &c.

Raleigh, Maxims of State.

Thou that didst order this congested heap,
When it was chaos; 'twixt thy spacious palms
Forming it to this vast rotundity.

Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in One.

In which place is congested the whole sum of all those hands, which before I have collected. Fotherby, Athcom. p. 253.

He had congested and amassed together such infinite monies. Fotherby, Athcom. p. 205.

Yet his congested wealth shall melt like snow. Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 24.

When thou, O Lord, the rivers didst divide,
And on the chariots of salvation ride,
Through the congested billows of the seas.

Sandys, Sacred Songs, p. 21.

CONGE'STIBLE. adj. [from congest.] That may be heaped up. Dict.

CONGE'STION.† n. s. [congestio, Latin.]

1. A collection of matter, as in abscesses and tumours. Quincy.

Congestion is then said to be the cause of a tumour, when the growth of it is slow, and without pain. Wiseman.

2. A gathering together; formation of a mass.

So is the opinion of some divines, that, until after the flood, were no mountains, but that by congestion of sand, earth, and such stuff as we now see hills strangely fraughted with, in the waters they were first cast up.

Seldon, on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

CO'NGIARY. n. s. [congiarium, from congius, a measure of corn, Lat.] A gift distributed to the Roman people or soldiery, originally in corn, afterwards in money.

We see on them the emperor and general officers, standing as they distributed a congiary to the soldiers, or people. Addison.

To CONGLA'CIATE. v. n. [conglaciatus, Latin.] To turn to ice.

No other doth properly conglaciate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is properly fixation, and that of milk coagulation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONGLACIA'TION. n. s. [from conglaciate.] The state of being changed, or act of changing into ice.

If crystal be a stone, it is concreted by a mineral spirit and lapidific principles; for, while it remained in a fluid body, it was a subject very unfit for proper conglaciation. Brown.

To CONGLOBATE.† v. a. [conglobatus, Latin.] This is not a word of frequent occurrence; but it has been admirably employed by Johnson himself, who also has adopted, in imitation of it, the verb conglobulate. See To CONGLOBULATE. To gather into a hard firm ball.

The testicle, as is said, is one large conglobated gland, consisting of soft fibres, all in one convolution. Grew.

He, who is not accustomed to require rigorous accuracy from himself, will scarcely believe how much a few hours take from certainty of knowledge, and distinctness of imagery; how the succession of objects will be broken; how separate parts will be confused; and how many particular features and discriminations will be compressed and conglobated into one gross and general idea. Johnson, Journ. to the West Islands.

CO'NGLOBATE.† adj. [from the verb.] It has escaped Dr. Johnson, that Dryden uses this word, and places the accent on the second syllable. Moulded into a firm ball, of which the fibres are not distinctly visible.

Heaven's gifts, which do like falling stars appear
Scatter'd in others; all, as in their sphere,
Were fix'd conglobate in his soul.

Dryden on the Death of Ld. Hastings.

Fluids are separated from the blood in the liver, and the other conglobate and conglomerate glands. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

CO'NGLOBATELY. adv. [from conglobate.] In a spherical form. Dict.

CONGLOBA'TION. n. s. [from conglobate.] A round body; collection into a round mass.

In this spawn are discerned many specks, or little conglobations, which in time become black. Brown.

To CONGLO'BE. v. a. [conglobo, Lat.] To gather into a round mass; to consolidate in a ball.

Then [he] founded, then conglob'd
Like things to like. Milton, P. L.

For all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around;
Not closer, orb in orb conglob'd, are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope, Dunciad.

To CONGLO'BE. v. n. To coalesce into a round mass.

Thither they
Hasted with glad precipitance, up-roll'd
As drops on dust conglobing from the dry. Milton, P. L.

To CONGLO'BULATE.* v. n. [from Lat. con and globulus.] To gather together into a little round mass.

Swallows certainly sleep all the winter. A number of them conglobulate together, by flying round and round, and then all in a heap throw themselves under water, and lye in the bed of a river. Johnson, in Boswell's Life of Johnson.

To CONGLO'MERATE. v. a. [conglomerare, Lat.] To gather into a ball, like a ball of thread; to inweave into a round mass.

The liver is one great conglomerated gland, composed of innumerable small glands, each of which consisteth of soft fibres, in a distinct or separate convolution. Grew, Cosmol.

CONGLO'MERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Gathered into a round ball, so as that the constituent parts and fibres are distinct.

Fluids are separated in the liver, and the other conglobate and conglomerate glands. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

2. Collected; twisted together.

The beams of light, when they are multiplied and conglomerate, generate heat. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CONGLOMERA'TION. n. s. [from conglomerate.]

1. Collection of matter into a loose ball.

2. Intertexture; mixture.

The multiplication and conglomeration of sounds doth generate refraction of the air. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To CONGLU'TINATE.† v. a. [conglutino, Latin.] This is one of our oldest verbs, (though given without any authority by Dr. Johnson,) being in Huloet's dictionary. To cement; to reunite; to heal wounds.

Without an infinite power God could not conjoin, cement, conglutinate, and incorporate them [our bodies] again into the same flesh. Pearson on the Creed, Art. XI.

Starch, which is nothing but the flower of brap, will make a clinging paste, the which will conglutinate some things, though not every thing. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 291.

To CONGLU'TINATE. v. n. To coalesce; to unite by the intervention of a callus.

CONGLU'TINATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Joined together.

All these together conglutinate, and effectually executed, maketh a perfect definition of justice. Sir T. Elyot, Ger. fol. 142.

CONGLUTINA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. conglutination.]

1. The act of uniting wounded bodies; reunion; healing.

The cause is a temperate conglutination; for both bodies are clammy and viscous, and do bridle the deflux of humours to the hurts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To this elongation of the fibres is owing the union or conglutination of parts separated by a wound. Arbuth. on Aliments.

2. Simply; junction; union.

The common name of Spain, no doubt, hath been a special means of the better union and conglutination of the several kingdoms of Castile, Arragon, &c.

Bacon, of the Union of England and Scotland.

CONGLUTINATIVE. adj. [from conglutinate.] Having the power of uniting wounds.

CONGLUTINATOR. n. s. [from conglutinate.] That which has the power of uniting wounds.

The osteocolla is recommended as a conglutinator of broken bones. Woodward on Fossils.

CONGRATULANT. adj. [from congratulate.] Rejoicing in participation; expressing participation of another's joy.

Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
Rais'd from the dark divan, and with like joy
Congratulant approach'd him. Milton, P. L.

To CONGRATULATE. v. a. [from gratular, Latin.]

1. To compliment upon any happy event; to express joy for the good of another.

He sent Hadoram his son to king David, to congratulate him, because he had fought against Hadarezer, and smitten him. 1 Chron. xviii. 10.

I congratulate our English tongue, that it has been enriched with words from all our neighbours. Watts, Logick.

2. It has sometimes the accusative case of the cause of joy, and to before the person.

An ecclesiastical union within yourselves, I am rather ready to congratulate to you. Sprat's Sermon.

The subjects of England may congratulate to themselves, that the nature of our government and the clemency of our king secure us. Dryden, Pref. to Aurungzebe.

To CONGRATULATE. v. n. To rejoice in participation.

I cannot but congratulate with my country, which hath outdone all Europe in advancing conversation. Swift.

CONGRATULATION. n. s. [from congratulate.]

1. The act of professing joy for the happiness or success of another.

Wherefore then serves all this, but to stir us up to a three-fold use; of holy thankfulness, of pity, of indignation? The two first are those "duo ubera sponsae," the two breasts of Christ's spouse, as Barnard calls them, congratulation and compassion. Bp. Hall, Sermon Works, ii. 360.

All our good old friends that are gone to heav'n before us, shall meet us as soon as we are landed upon the shore of eternity; and, with infinite congratulations for our safe arrival, shall conduct us into the company of the patriarchs and prophets, apostles and martyrs. Scott, Christian Life, i. i.

What unspeakable rejoicing and congratulations will there be between us. Ibid. i. iii.

2. The form in which joy for the happiness of another is expressed.

CONGRATULATOR. n. s. [Lat.] He who offers congratulation to another.

Nothing more fortunately auspicious could happen to us, at our first entrance upon the government, than such a congratulator. Milton, Lett. of State.

CONGRATULATORY. adj. [from congratulate.] Expressing joy for the good fortune of another.

Letters are—consolatory, monitory, or congratulatory. Howell, Lett. i. i. 1.

A solemn congratulatory procession of all the monks marching out to meet and receive him. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 423.

To CONGREGATE. v. n. [from gre, French.] To agree; to accord; to join; to unite. Not in use.

For government,

Put into parts, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close. Shakspeare, Hen. V.
To CONGREGATE. v. n. [from con and greel.] To salute reciproally. Not in use.

My office hath so far prevail'd,
That face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You have congregated. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

To CONGREGATE. v. a. [congrego, Lat.] To collect together; to assemble; to bring into one place.

Any multitude of Christian men congregated, may be termed by the name of a church. Hooker.

These waters were afterwards congregated, and called the sea. Rollin, Hist. of the World.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,

The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,

As having sense of beauty, do omit

Their mortal natures. Shakspeare, Othello.

The dry land, earth; and the great receptacle

Of congregated waters, he call'd seas;

And saw that it was good. Milton, P. L.

Heat congregates homogeneal bodies and separates heterogeneal ones. Newton, Opticks.

Light, congregated by a burning glass, acts most upon sul-phureous bodies, to turn them into fire. Newton, Opticks.

To CONGREGATE. v. n. To assemble; to meet; to gather together.

He rails,

Ev'n there where merchants most do congregate,

On me, my bargains. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

'Tis true, (as the old proverb doth relate)

Equals with equals often congregate. Denham.

CONGREGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Collected; compact.

Who now, in th' highest sky,
Was placed in his principall estate,
With all the gods about him congregate.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 19.

Where the matter is most congregate, the cold is the greater.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CONGREGATION. n. s. [from congregate.]

1. The act of collecting.

The means of reduction by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneal parts. Bacon.

2. A collection; a mass of various parts brought together.

This brave overhanging firmament appears no other thing to me, than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours.

Shakspeare.

3. An assembly met to worship God in publick, and hear doctrine.

The words which the minister first pronounceth, the whole congregation shall repeat after him. Hooker.

The practice of those that prefer houses before churches, and a conventicle before the congregation. South.

If those preachers, who abound in epiphonemas, would look about them, they would find part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

4. A distinct academical assembly; by the members of which, particular business of the university is transacted. See also CONVOCATION.

By a composition entered into between the university of Oxford and the founder of New College, it was agreed that the fellows thereof should be admitted to all degrees in the university without asking any grace of the congregation of masters. Le Neve, Lives of Eng. Bishops, P. I. p. 84.

CONGREGATIONAL. adj. [from congregation.]

1. Pertaining to a congregation or assembly of such Christians as hold every congregation to be a separate and independent church.

The ecclesiastical and congregational pretences were twins of the same birth; though the younger served the elder; and, being much overpowered, sunk in the stream of time, till it appeared again in this unhappy age, amongst the ghosts of so many revived errors, that have escaped from their tombs, to walk up and down, and disturb the world.

Mr. Baxter—takes great pains to unite the classical and congregational brethren. Bp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 13.
Bp. Nicolson to Mr. Yates, 1699.

Every parish had a congregational or parochial presbytery for the affairs of its own circle. Warton, Notes on Milton's Poems.

2. Publick; general; respecting the audience assembled in the church.

He [Abp. Parker] directs a distinct and audible mode of congregational singing. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 176.

My subject is only general congregational psalmody.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 196.

CONGRESS.† n. s. [congressus, Lat.]

1. A meeting; a shock; a conflict.

Here Pallas urges on, and Lausus there;
 Their congress in the field great Jove withstands,
 Both doom'd to fall, but fall by greater hands. Dryden, Æn.

From these laws may be deduced the rules of the congresses and reflections of two bodies. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

2. A meeting, not as a shock, or conflict, but of ceremony; an introduction to others.

In modern practice, especially with us in England, that ceremony is used as much in our adieus, as in the first congress.

Sir K. Digby, Annot. on Rel. Med. p. 76.

3. An appointed meeting for settlement of affairs between different nations: as, the congress of Cambray.

4. A coming together, in a sexual meaning. See CONGRESSIVE.

The congress between the bitch and the wolf was immediate. Pennant.

CONGRESSION.* n. s. [old Fr. congression.] Company; an assembly, or meeting together. Cotgrave.

CONGRESSIVE. adj. [from congress.] Meeting; encountering; coming together.

If it be understood of sexes conjoined, all plants are female; and if of disjoined and congressive generation, there is no male or female in them. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To CONGRUE. v. n. [from congruere, Lat.] To agree; to be consistent with; to suit; to be agreeable. Not in use.

Our sovereign process imports at full,
 By letters congruing to that effect,
 The present death of Hamlet. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

CONGRUENCE.† n. s. [congruentia, Lat.] Agreement; suitableness of one thing to another; consistency.

The same which thereto is necessary, and of congruence appertaining. Martin on the Marr. of Priests, (1554) s. ii.

Those virtues of whom I have spoken of good reason and congruence. Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 190.

Divers translations, saith he, [St. Augustin,] have made many times the harder and darker sentences more plain and open; so that of congruence no offence can justly be taken for this new labour. Abp. Parker, Pref. to the Tr. of the Old Test.

O, now methinks a sullen tragick scene
 Would suit the time with pleasing congruence.

Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

CONGRUENCY.* n. s. [from congruence.] Agreement.

The philosophick cabbala and the text have a marvellous fit and easy congruency in this place.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653) p. 236.

CONGRUENT.† adj. [congruens, Lat.] Agreeing; correspondent.

For humble grammar first doth set the parts
 Of congruent and well-according speech.

Sir J. Davies's Orchestra, (1599.)

The congruent and harmonious fitting of parts in a sentence hath almost the fastening and force of knitting and connexion.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

These planes were so separated as to move upon a common side of the congruent squares, as an axis. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

CONGRUITY.† n. s. [from congrue.]

1. Suitableness; agreeableness.

Congruity of opinions to our natural constitution, is one great incentive to their reception. Glanville.

2. Fitness; pertinence.

A whole sentence may fail of its congruity by wanting one particle.

I must remember our ever-memorable Sir Philip Sidney, whose wit was in truth the very rule of congruity.

Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

3. Consequence of argument; reason; consistency.

With what congruity doth the church of Rome deny, that her enemies do at all appertain to the church of Christ? Hooker.

4. [In geometry.] Figures or lines which exactly correspond, when laid over one another, are in congruity.

5. [In theology.] Some of the schoolmen have devised a twofold merit: a merit of congruity, and a merit of condignity. The latter they ascribe to works which a man does by the assistance of grace, and to which a reward is in justice due. The former they ascribe to such works as a man does by the mere strength of freewill, and which are to be rewarded only out of liberality. But what foundation is there for this sort of merit, since all of us are by nature evil? Welchman on the 39 Articles, Art. xiii. See also CONDIGNITY.

CONGRUMENT.† n. s. [from congrue.] Fitness; adaptation. Not in use. Dr. Johnson says; and, I may add, perhaps never was in use. Dr. Johnson, however, cites as an example the passage from B. Jonson, which I have given under congruent; where congrument, in some editions of the poet, seems to be an error of the press; and it is rightly given congruent in the Rev. Mr. Whalley's edition of the poet's works.

CONGRUOUS.† adj. [congruus, Lat.]

1. Agreeable to; consistent with.

They also perform actions of life and motion, congruous and convenient unto their nature and kind,

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. (1625) p. 232.

The existence of God is so many ways manifest, and the obedience we owe him so congruous to the light of reason, that a great part of mankind give testimony to the law of nature.

Locke.

2. Suitable to; accommodated to; proportionate or commensurate.

It had been more congruous to have continued the same manner of expression. Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 114.

The faculty is infinite, the object infinite, and they infinitely congruous to one another.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

3. Rational; fit.

Therefore was it very singularly congruous, that from this place, from whence the seafaring men took their notice by a light to escape the hazard of those ways they knew not, it should please God also, by the lantern of his word, to give aim to the people that sate in darkness.

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650.) p. 3.

Motives that address themselves to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures: it is so ways congruous, that God should be always frightening us into an acknowledgement of the truth.

Atterbury.

CONGRUOUSLY.† adv. [from congruous.] Suitably; pertinently; consistently.

There they must of necessity, if they will speak congruously, by the first Christian æra, mean the first hundred years after Christ, or that, and some of the next centuries following.

Bp. Barlow's Rem. p. 114.

Nothing can sound more congruously or harmoniously.

More, Expos. Seven Churches, p. 64.

I could wish that in their speech and compliment they [the

French regard d not use the Latin tongue, or else speak it more Heulin's Voyage of France, p. 296.
 This structure is to be regarded, because, congruently unto it, one warmed the bladder, found it then lighter than the weight. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

CONICAL, adj. [conicus, Lat.] Having the form of a cone, or round decreasing.

Conical forms arise,
 Printed spear divide the skies. Prior.

 cast together; to throw.

The conject of colonies—congested and conjected at a mass of the church of England.

CONJECTOR, n. s. [from conject.] A guesser; a conjecturer.

And, because he pretends to be a great conjector at other men's writings, I will not fail to give ye, readers, a taste of him from his title.

Milton, Apology for Smectym.

For conjectors would obtrude,
 And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.

CONJECTURABLE, adj. [from conjecture.] Being the object of conjecture; possible to be guessed.

CONJECTURAL, adj. [old Fr. conjectural.] Depending on conjecture; said or done by guess.

They live by the fire, and presume to know
 What they will, and who declines, side factions, and give opt Conjectural marriages. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour,
 An conjectural tears to come into me. Shakespeare.

A matter of great profit, save that I doubt it is too to venture upon, if one could discern what con- jectural words are likely to be in plenty or scarcity. Bacon.

For conjectural words are not in Callimachus, and consequently the conjectural only conjectural.

CONJECTURAL, n. s. [from conjectural.] That which depends upon guess.

They have not recurred unto chronology, or the records of time, but then themselves unto probabilities, and the con- jectural philosophy. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONJECTURALLY, adv. [from conjectural.] By guess;
 by conjecture.

What may be at any time out of Scripture, but probably conjecturally surmised. Hooker.

Probably, not conjecturally proved. Stilling.

CONJECTURE, n. s. [conjectura, Latin.] "On appelle presumption chez les jurisconsultes, ce qui se prouve pour verité par provision, en cas que le contraire ne se prouve point, et il dit plus que con- jecture, quoique la Dictionnaire de l'Academie n'en ait point épluché [i. difference." Leibnitz, Ess. sur la Theod. p. 28.]

1. Guess; imperfect knowledge; preponderation of opinion without proof.

In the casting of lots a man cannot, upon any ground of reason, bring the event so much as under conjecture. South.

2. Idea; notion; conception. Not now in use.

Now entertain conjecture of a time,
 When creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
 Fill the wide vessel of the universe. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

TO CONJECTURE, v. a. [from the noun.] To guess; to judge by guess; to entertain an opinion upon bare probability.

When we look upon such things as equally may or may not be, human reason can then, at the best, but conjecture what will be. South.

CONJECTURER, n. s. [from conjecture.] A guesser;
 one who forms opinion without proof.

If we should believe very grave conjecturers, carniverous animals now were not flesh devourers then. Brown.

I shall leave conjecturers to their own imaginations. Addison.

CONFEROUS, adj. [confere, old Fr. conus and fero,
Lat.]

Such trees or herbs are conferrous as bear a squamose, scaly fruit, of a woody substance, and a figure approaching to a cone, in which are many seeds;
 and when they are ripe, the several cells in the cone open and the seeds drop out. Of this kind, are the fir, pine, and beech. Quincy.

The laurel, in its prosperity, abounds with pleasant flowers;
 whereas those of the cedar are very little, and scarce perceptible, answerable to the fir, pine, and other conferrous trees.

TO CONJOBBLE, v. a. [from con, together, and jobber-
nol, the head.] To concert; to settle; to discuss.
 A low cant word.

What would a body think of a minister that should conjob- ble matters of state with tumblers, and confer politicks with tinkers? L'Estrange.

TO CONJOIN, v. a. [conjoindre, Fr. conjungo, Lat.]

1. To unite; to consolidate into one.

Whose marriages conjoin the white rose and the red.
Drygl. Polyolb. S. 5.

Thou wrong'st Pirithous, and not him alone;
 But, while I live, two friends conjoin'd in one. Dryden.

2. To unite in marriage.

If either of you know any inward impediment,
 Why you should not be conjoin'd, I charge
 You on your souls to utter it. Shakespeare, Much ado.

3. To associate; to connect.

Common and universal spirits convey the action of the remedy into the part, and conjoin the virtue of bodies far disjoined. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The foresaid knight was conjoined, for the nearness of his place, on the prince's affairs.

Wotton, Life of the D. of Buckingham.
 Men of differing interests can be reconciled in one communion, at least, the designs of all can be conjoined in ligatures of the same reverence, and piety, and devotion. Ap. Taylor.

Let that which he learns next be nearly conjoined with what he knows already. Locke.

TO CONJOIN, v. n. To league; to unite.

This part of his
Conjoins with my disease, and helps to end me.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

CONJOINT, adj. [conjoint, Fr.] United; connected; associated.

CONJOINT Degrees. [In musick.] Two notes which immediately follow each other in the order of the scale; as, ut and re. Dict.

CONJOINTLY. adv. [from conjunct.] In union; together; in association; jointly; not apart.

A gross and frequent error, commonly committed in the use of doubtful remedies, conjunctly with those that are of approved virtues. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The parts of the body separately, make known the passions of the soul, or else conjunctly one with the other. Dryden.

CO'NISOR. See COGNISOR.

CONJUGAL. adj. [conjugal, Lat.] Matrimonial; belonging to marriage; conjugal.

Their conjugal affection still is ty'd,
And still the mournful race is multiply'd. Dryden, Fab.

I could not forbear commending the young woman for her conjugal affection, when I found that she had left the good man at home. Spectator.

He mark'd the conjugal dispute;
Nell roar'd incessant, Dick sat mute. Swift.

CONJUGALLY. adv. [from conjugal.] Matrimonially; conjugal.

This mighty champion challenges me with great insultation — to name but one bishop or priest of note, which after holy orders conversed *conjugal*ly with his wife, without the scandal of the church: — I do here accept his offer.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Cergy. p. 186.

Such a hater loses by due punishment that privilege, Deut. xxiv. 1. to divorce for a natural dislike; which, though it could not love *conjugal*ly, yet sent away civilly, and with just conditions. Milton, Colast.

TO CO'NJUGATE. v. a. [conjugo, Latin.]

1. To join; to join in marriage; to unite.

Those drawing as well marriage as wardship, gave him both power and occasion to conjugate at pleasure the Norman and the Saxon houses. Wotton, Char. of Kings of Eng.

2. To inflect verbs; to decline verbs through their various terminations.

There are some verbs, which, although perhaps anciently conjugated in the manner of those belonging to the fourth conjugation; yet are now become obsolete in that way of inflection, and may therefore be ranked among those of the third conjugation. White on the English Verb, p. 45.

CO'NJUGATE. n. s. [conjugatus, Latin.] Agreeing in derivation with another word, and therefore generally resembling in signification.

His grammatical argument, grounded upon the derivation of spontaneous from sponte, weighs nothing: we have learned in logic, that conjugates are sometimes in name only, and not in deed. Bp. Bramhall, Anst. to Hobbes.

CONJUGATION. n. s. [conjunctio, Lat.]

1. A couple; a pair.

The heart is so far from affording nerves unto other parts, that it receiveth very few itself from the sixth conjugation or pair of nerves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The act of uniting or compiling things together.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions of the elements, and their conjugations, are to be set aside, being but notional, and illimitable and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon.

All the various mixtures and conjugations of atoms do beget nothing. Bentley, Sermon.

3. The form of inflecting verbs through their series of terminations.

Have those who have writ so much about declensions and conjugations, about concords and syntaxes, lost their labour, and been learned to no purpose? Locke.

4. Union; assemblage.

The supper of the Lord is the most sacred, mysterious, and useful conjugation of secret and holy things and duties. Bp. Taylor.

CONJUNCT. adj. [conjunctus, Lat.] Conjoined; concurrent; united. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the example from Shakspeare.

It pleas'd the king his master to strike at me,
When he, conjunct and flaxtering his displeasure,
Tript me behind. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The Lord himself being conjunct with the angels, whom he employed in this embassy. Bp. Patrick on Genesis, xviii. 10.

There was a very conjunct friendship between the two brothers and him. Aubrey, Anec. of Sir W. Raleigh, ii. 511.

CONJUNCTION. n. s. [conjunctio, Lat.]

1. Union; association; league.

With our small conjunction, we should on,
To see how fortune is dispos'd to us. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He will unite the white rose and the red;

Smile, heaven, upon his fair conjunction,

That long hath frown'd upon their enmity. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The treaty gave abroad a reputation of a strict conjunction and amity between them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Man can effect no great matter by his personal strength, but as he acts in society and conjunction with others. South.

An invisible hand from heaven mingles hearts and souls by strange, secret, and unaccountable conjunctions. South.

2. The congress of two planets in the same degree of the zodiack, where they are supposed to have great power and influence.

God, neither by drawing waters from the deep, nor by any conjunction of the stars, should bury them under a second flood. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle? Cannot he observe their influences in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depressions? He shall sooner find ink than nature exhausted. Rymer, Trag. of last Age.

Pompey and Caesar were two stars of such a magnitude, that their conjunction was as fatal as their opposition. Swift.

3. A word made use of to connect the clauses of a period together, and to signify their relation to one another. Clarke.

CONJUNCTIVE. adj. [conjunctivus, Lat.]

1. Closely united. A sense not in use, Dr. Johnson says. He overlooked, however, Thomson.

Taught by Thee,

Ours are the plans of policy and peace,

To live like brothers, and conjunctive all

Embellish life. Thomson, Sum. ver. 1773.

She's so conjunctive to my life and soul,

That as the star moves not but in his sphere,

I could not but by her. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. [In grammar.] The mood of a verb, used subsequently to a conjunction. Dr. Johnson so styles the subjunctive mood in his Grammar of the English Language.

3. Connecting together, as a conjunction.

Though all conjunctions conjoin sentences, yet, with respect to the sense, some are conjunctive, and some disjunctive. Harris, Hermes, ii. 2.

4. United; not apart. Of this sense, as of the preceding, Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. But of the present his own writings afford an example.

Finding King James irremediably excluded, he voted for the conjunctive sovereignty, upon this principle, that he thought the title of the prince and his consort equal.

Johnson, Life of Sheffield Duke of Bucks.

CONJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from conjunctive.] In union; not apart.

These are good mediums conjunctively taken; that is, not one without the other. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Of Strasburg and Ulm I may speak conjunctively, being of one nature; both free, and both jealous of their freedom. Sir H. Wotton, Letters.

CONJUNCTIVENESS. n. s. [from conjunctive.] The quality of joining or uniting.

CONJUNCTLY. adv. [from conjunct.] Jointly; together; not apart.

CONJUNCTURE. n. s. [conjunction, Fr.]

1. Combination of many circumstances, or causes.

I never met with a more unhappy conjunction of affairs than in the business of that earl. K. Charles.

Every virtue requires time and place, a proper object, and a fit conjunction of circumstances. Addison, Spect.

2. Occasion; critical time.

Such censures always attend such conjunctions, and find fault for what is not done, as with that which is done. Clarendon.

3. Mode of union; connection.

He is quick to perceive the motions of articulation, and conjunctions of letters, in words. Holker, Elem. of Speech.

4. Consistency.

I was willing to grant to presbytery what with reason it can pretend to, in a conjunction with episcopacy. K. Charles.

CONJURATION.† n. s. [from conjure.]

1. The form or act of summoning another in some sacred name.

We charge you, in the name of God, take heed:
Under this conjunction speak, my lord. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. A magical form of words; an incantation, an enchantment.

Your conjunction, fair knight, is too strong for my poor spirit to disobey. Sidney.

What drugs, what charms,
What conjunction, and what mighty magick,
For such proceeding I am charg'd withal,
I won his daughter with? Shakspeare, Othello.

3. A plot; a conspiracy.

And because this information might be made more clear, he did make many instances unto the said ambassadors, that they would give him the authors of the said conjunction, this being the sole means whereby their own honour might be preserved. Sir W. Ashton, (1624.) Sup. to Cabala, p. 153.

4. Earnest entreaty. Not now in use.

Ger. But my father's charge.
Win. My conjunction shall dispense with that;
You may be up as early as you please,
But hence to-night you shall not. Heywood's English Traveller.

To CONJURE.† v. a. [conjuro, Latin.]

1. To summon in a sacred name; to enjoin with the highest solemnity.

O, prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
There is another comfort than this world. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

He concluded with sighs and tears to conjure them, that they would no more press him to consent to a thing so contrary to his reason. Clarendon.

The church may address her sons in the form St. Paul does the Philippians, when he conjures them to unity. Decay of Piety.

I conjure you! let him know,
Whate'er was done against him, Cato did it. Addison, Cato.

2. To bind many by an oath to some common design. This sense is rare.

[He] in proud rebellious arms
Drew after him the third part of heaven's sons,

3. To influence by magick; to affect by enchantment; to charm.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakspeare, Rich. III.

What is he whose griefs
Bear such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow
Conjures the wand'ring stars, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

I thought their own fears, whose black arts first raised up those turbulent spirits, would force them to conjure them down again. King Charles.

You have conjured up persons that exist no where else but on old coins, and have made our passions and virtues visible. Addison on Ancient Medals.

be observed, that when this word is used mon. or conspire, its accent is on the last syllable, conjure; when for charm, on the first, conjure. This is Dr. Johnson's observation. But, that this has not always been observed, may be perceived in the example which I have given from Shakspeare under the first definition; where, though certainly improperly, the accent is on the first syllable.

To CONJURE.† v. n. To practise charms or enchantments; to enchant.

My invocation is honest and fair; and in his mistress's name I conjure only but to raise up him. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Out of my door, you witch! you hag, you baggage, you poucat, you runaway! Out, out, out; I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

To CONJURE.* v. n. To enter into conspiracy.

When those 'gainst states and kingdoms do conjure,
Who then can think their headlong ruin to recure. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 26.

CO'NJURER. n. s. [from conjure.]

1. An enchanter; one that uses charms.

Good Doctor Pinch, you are a conjuror;
Establish him in his true sense again. Shakspeare, Com. of Errors.

Figures in the book
Of some dread conjuror, that would enforce nature. Donne.

Thus has he done you British consorts right,
Whose husbands, should they pry like mine to-night,
Would never find you in your conduct slipping,
'Though they turn'd conjurers to take you tripping. Addison

2. An impostor who pretends to secret arts; a cunning man.

From the account the loser brings,
The conjurer knows who stole the things. Prior.

3. By way of irony; a man of shrewd conjecture; a man of sagacity.

Though ants are very knowing, I don't take them to be conjurers; and therefore they could not guess that I had put some corn in that room. Addison.

CONJUREMENT. n. s. [from conjure.] Serious injunction; solemn demand.

I should not be induced but by your earnest intreaties and serious conjurements. Milton, on Education.

CONNASCENCE. n. s. [con and nascor, Lat.]

1. Common birth; production at the same time: community of birth.

2. Being produced together with another being.
Christians have baptized these geminus births and double connascencies, as containing in them a distinction of soul. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. The act of uniting or growing together: improperly.

Symphysis denotes a connascence, or growing together. Wiseman, Surgery.

CONNA'TE. adj. [from con and natus, Latin.] Born with another; being of the same birth.

Many, who deny all connate notions in the speculative intellect, do yet admit them in this. South.

Their dispositions to be reflected some at a greater, and others at a less thickness, of thin plates or bubbles, are connate with the rays, and immutable. Newton, Opt.

CONNA'TURAL. adj. [con and natural.]

1. United with the being; connected by nature.

First, in man's mind we find an appetite
To learn and know the truth of ev'ry thing,
Which is connatural, and born with it. Davies.

These affections are connatural to us, and as we grow up so do they. L'Estrange.

2. Participant of the same nature.

Is there no way, besides
These painful passages, how we may come
To death, and mix with our connatural dust? Milton, P. L.

C O N

C O N

Whatever draws me on,
Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Powerful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity. Milton, P. L.
CONNATURALITY. n. s. [from connaturalis] Participation of the same nature; natural inseparability.

There is a connaturality and congruity between that knowledge and those habits, and that future estate of the soul. Hale.

To CONNATURALIZE.* v. a. [from con and naturalize.] To connect by nature; to make natural.

How often have you been forced to swallow sickness, to drink dead palsies and foaming epilepsies, to render your intemperances familiar to you, — before ever you could connaturalize your midnight revels to your temper! Scott, Christ. Life, i. iv.

CONNATURALLY. adv. [from connaturalis.] In co-existence with nature; originally.

Some common notions seem connaturally engraven in the soul, antecedently to discursive ratiocination. Hale.

CONNATURALNESS. n. s. [from connaturalis.] Participation of the same nature; natural union.

Such is the connaturalness of our corruptions, except we looked for an account hereafter. Pearson on the Creed, Art. vii.

To CONNECT. v. a. [connecto, Lat.]

1. To join; to link; to unite; to conjoin; to fasten together.

The corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver, will be so connected to one another, that, instead of a fluid body, they will appear in the form of a red powder. Boyle.

2. To unite by intervention; as a cement.

The natural order of the connecting ideas must direct the syllogisms, and a man must see the connection of each intermediate idea with those that it connects, before he can use it in a syllogism. Locke.

3. To join in a just series of thought, or regular construction of language: as, the authour connects his reasons well.

To CONNE'CT. v. n. To cohere; to have just relation to things precedent and subsequent. This is seldom used but in conversation.

CONNE'CTIVE.* adj. [from connect.] Having the power of joining or connecting together.

There are times, when prepositions totally lose their connective nature, being converted into adverbs, and used in syntax accordingly. Harris, Hermes, ii. 3.

CONNE'CTIVE.* n. s. [from the adjective.] A conjunction.

Connectives, according as they connect either sentences or words, are called by the different names of conjunctions or prepositions. Harris, Hermes, ii. 2.

CONNE'CTIVELY. adv. [from connect.] In conjunction; in union; jointly; conjointly; conjunctly.

The people's power is great and indisputable, whenever they can unite connectively, or by deputation, to exert it. Swift.

To CONNE'X. v. a. [connexum, Lat.] To join or link together; to fasten to each other.

Those birds who are taught some words or sentences, cannot connex their words or sentences in coherence with the matter which they signify. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

By chains connex'd, and with destructive sweep
Rehead whole troops at once. Philips.

CONNE'XION. n. s. [from connex, or connexio, Lat.]

1. Union; junction; the act of fastening together; the state of being fastened together.

My heart, which, by a secret harmony,
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet. Milton, P. L.

There must be a future state, where the eternal and inseparable connexion between virtue and happiness shall be manifested. Afterbury.

2. Just relation to some thing precedent or subsequent; consequence of argumentation; coherence.

Contemplation of human nature doth, by a necessary connexion and chain of causes, carry us up to the Deity. Hale.

Each intermediate idea must be such as, in the whole chain, hath a visible connexion with those two it is plac'd between. Locke.

A conscious, wise, reflecting cause,
That can deliberate, means elect, and find
Their due connexion with the end design'd. Blackmore's Creation.

CONNE'XIVE. adj. [from connex.] Having the force of connexion; conjunctive.

The predicate and subject are joined in a form of words by connexive particles. Watts, Logic.

CONNECTION. n. s. [from connicto, Lat.] A winking. Dict.

CONNIVANCE.* n. s. [from connivere.] This word is often written, and particularly in our old lexicography, connivence; but Dr. Johnson has chosen connivance. The old Fr. connivence, and Ital. connivenza, countenance the former. See also CONVIVENCY.

1. The act of winking. Not in use.

2. Voluntary blindness; pretended ignorance; forbearance.

It is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon, Ess. 42.

Disobedience, having gained one degree of liberty, will demand another: every vice interprets a connivance an approbation. South.

A connivance to admit half, will produce ruin. Swift.

To CONNIVE.* v. n. [conniver, Lat.; conniver, old French. But Cotgrave, who notices our substantive, does not render the French verb by our English one. The earliest example of this verb, which Dr. Johnson cites, is from the Decay of Christian Piety, which was published in 1667. Milton's is only coeval authority; yet ought to be admitted. But Beaumont and Fletcher, of older authority, are the earliest users of the word which I have hitherto met with.]

1. To wink.

This artist is to teach them how to nod judiciously, to connive with either eye. Spectator, No.

2. To pretend blindness or ignorance; to forbear; to pass uncensured.

I have conniv'd at this, your friend and you,
But what is got by this connivency. Beaumont and Fletcher, Mortal Maid.

I suffer them to enter and possess
A place so heavenly; and, conniving, seem
To gratify my scornful enemies. Milton, P. L. v. 624.

The licentiousness of inferiours, and the remissness of superiours, the one violates, and the other connives. Decay of Piety.

With whatever colours he persuades authority to connive at his own vices, he will desire its protection from the effects of other men's. Rogers.

He thinks it a scandal to government to connive at such traits, as reject all revelation. Swift.

CONNIVENCY.* n. s. [Ital. connivenza, old Fr. connivence.] This was the more usual word with our ancestors for connivence. Pretended ignorance; forbearance.

She did not ransack their consciences by any severe inquisition, but rather secured them by a gracious connivency. Bacon, Collect. of Q. Elizabeth.

Yourself, and many others, have been driven, of late, to excuse and countenance your execrable ingratitude with a false and scandalous report of some further hope and comfort yielded to the Catholics for toleration or connivency, before his [K. James I.] coming to the crown, than since hath been performed. Id. Northampton, Proc. ag. Garnet, M. 2.

By connivency and silence, they in a manner partake in their sins. Hales, Rem. p. 134.

CONNIVENT.* adj. [from connive.] Dormant; not attentive.

His legal justice cannot be so fickle and so variable, sometimes like a devouring fire, and by and by connivent in the embers; or, if I may so say, oscitant and supine.

Milton, Doct. and Div. of Divorce, ii. 3.

CONNIVER.* n. s. [from connive.] One who pretends blindness; who passes wickedness uncensured.

All sins which we give allowance to, being committed, or not hindered by us if we may, are ours, as if we committed them; first, commanders; abettors; counsellors; consenters; commenders; connivers; concealers; not-hinders; each of these will be found guilty before God's tribunal.

Junius, Sin. Stigm. (1639), p. 825.

CONNOISSEUR.† n. s. [French.] A judge; a critick. It is often used of a pretended critick, Dr. Johnson says.

Your lesson learnt, you'll be secure

To get the name of connoisseur.

Swift.

He has been at a considerable expence in the improvement of it, [his villa,] in which he has shew'd himself to be master of a very polite and genteel taste. You're a sort of connoisseur this way; you will have an opportunity of passing your own judgement upon it.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

CONNOISSEURSHIP.* n. s. [connoisseur.] The skill of a connoisseur.

To CONNOTATE. v. a. [con and nota, Lat.] To designate something besides itself; to imply; to infer.

1. To gain by conquest; to over-run; to win.

They had conquer'd them, and brought them under tribute. 1 Mac. viii. 2.

Welcome, great Stagirite, and teach me now

All I was born to know,

Thy scholar's victories thou dost outdo;

He conquer'd th' earth, the whole world you.

Cowley.

'Twas fit,

Who conquer'd nature, should preside o'er wit.

Pope.

We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's charms,

Their arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms.

Pope.

2. To overcome; to subdue; to vanquish.

Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast;

Yet neither, conqueror, nor conquer'd. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,

Shall, with their freemen lost, all virtue lose,

And fear of God.

Milton, P. L.

Anna conquers but to save,

And governs but to bless.

Smith.

3. To surmount; to overcome: as, he conquered his reluctance.

To CONQUER. v. n. To get the victory; to overcome.

Put him to choler straight: he hath been used

Ever to conquer and to have his word

Off contradiction.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Equal success had set these champions high,

And both resolv'd to conquer, or to die.

Waller.

The logick of a conquering sword has no propriety.

Decay of Piety.

Beaum. and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

CONQUEROR.† n. s. [old Fr. conqueror.]

1. A man that has obtained a victory; a victor.

Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,

And lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The gain of civil wars will not allow

Bags for the conqueror's crew.

Cowley.

A critick that attacks authors in reputation, is as the slave who called out to the conqueror, Remember, Sir, that you are a man.

Addison, Guardian.

2. One that subdues and ruins countries.

Deserving freedom more

Than those their conquerors, who leave behind

Nothing but ruin wheresoever they rove.

Milton, P. R.

That tyrant god, that restless conqueror,

May quit his pleasure, to assert his power.

Prior.

CONQUEST.† n. s. [conqueste, French; conquer, Sax. Spenser, for the sake of the rhyme, gives an instance of the accent on the second syllable of this word, Colin Clout, ver. 950.]

1. The act of conquering; subjection.

A perfect conquest of a country reduces all the people to the condition of subjects.

Davies on Ireland.

2. Acquisition by victory; thing gained.

More willingly I mention air,

This our old conquest; than remember hell,

Our hated habitation.

Milton, P. R.

3. Victory; success in arms.

I must yield my body to the earth,
And by my fall, the conquest to my foe. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
To whom I will retail my conquest won,
And she shall be sole victress. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Not to be o'ercome, was to do more
Than all the conquests former kings did gain. Dryden.
In joys of conquest he resigns his breath,
And, fill'd with England's glory, smiles in death. Addison.

4. In feudal law, purchase. [low Lat. conquestus.]

What we call purchase, the feudists call conquest; both denoting any means of acquiring an estate out of the common course of inheritance. Blackstone.

CONSANGUINEOUS. adj. [consanguineus, Lat.]
Near of kin; of the same blood; related by birth, not allied.

Am I not consanguineous? Am I not of her blood? Shakspeare.

CONSANGUINITY. n. s. [consanguinitas, Latin.] Relation by blood; relation by descent from one common progenitor. Nearness of kin. Distinguished from affinity, or relation by marriage.

I've forgot my father;
I know no touch of consanguinity.

There is the supreme and indissoluble consanguinity and society between men in general; of which the heathen poet, whom the apostle calls to witness, saith, We are all his generation. Bacon, Holy War.

The first original would subsist, though he outlived all terms of consanguinity, and became a stranger unto his progeny. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Christ has condescended to a cognation and consanguinity with us. South.

CONSAECINATION. n. s. [from consarcino, Latin, to piece.] The act of patching together. Dict.

CONSCIENCE. † n. s. [conscience, Fr. conscientia, Lat. "Conscience is a Latin word, though with an English termination; and, according to the very notation of it, imports a double or joint knowledge; to wit, one of a divine law or rule, and the other of a man's own action: and so is properly the application of a general law to a particular instance of practice. South, Sermon. vol. ii. p. 438.]

1. The knowledge or faculty by which we judge of the goodness or wickedness of ourselves.

When a people have no touch of conscience, no sense of their evil doings, it is bootless to think to restrain them. Spenser.
Who against faith, and conscience, can be heard Infallible? Milton, P. L.

Conscience has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the clearest information about the will of God. South.

But why must those be thought to 'scape, that feel
Those rods of scorpions, and those whips of steel,
Which conscience shakes? Creech, Jun.

No courts created yet, nor cause was heard;
But all was safe, for conscience was their guard. Dryden, Ovid.

Conscience signifies that knowledge which a man hath of his own thoughts and actions; and, because if a man judgeth fairly of his actions, by comparing them with the law of God, his mind will approve or condemn him, this knowledge or conscience may be both an accuser and a judge. Swift.

2. Justice; the estimate of conscience; the determination of conscience; honesty. This is sometimes a serious and sometimes a ludicrous sense.

This is thank-worthy, if a man, for conscience toward God, endure grief. 1 Pet. ii. 19.

Now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. Shakspeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

He had, against right and conscience, by shameful treachery, intruded himself into another man's kingdom. Kneller.

What you require cannot, in conscience, be deferred beyond this time. Milton.

Her majesty is obliged in conscience to endeavour this by her authority, as much as by her practice. Swift.

3. Conscience; knowledge of our own thoughts or actions.

Merit, and good works, is the end of man's motion; and conscience of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest. Bacon.

The reason why the simple sort are moved with authority, is the conscience of their own ignorance. Hooker.

The sweetest cordial we receive at last,
Is conscience of our virtuous actions past. Denham.

Hector was in an absolute certainty of death, and depressed with the conscience of being in an ill cause. Pope.

4. Real sentiment; veracity; private thoughts.

Do'st thou in conscience think, tell me, Emilia,
That there be women do abuse their husbands,
In such gross kind? Shakspeare, Othello.

They did in their consciences know, that he was not able to send them any part of it. Clarendon.

5. Scruple; principle of action.

We must make a conscience in keeping the just laws of superiours. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Why should not the one make as much conscience of betraying for gold, as the other of doing it for a crust. L'Estrange.

Children and travellers newly arrived in a strange country; we should therefore make conscience not to mislead them. Locke.

6. In ludicrous language, reason; reasonableness.

Why do'st thou weep? Can'st thou the conscience lack,
To think I shall lack friends? Shakspeare, Timon.

Half a dozen fools are, in all conscience, as many as you should require. Swift.

7. Knowledge of the actions of others. This sense is rare.

How might I appear at this altar, except with those affections that no less love the light and witness, than they have the conscience of your virtue? B. Jonson, Ded. to Lady Wroth of his Alchemist.

CONSCIENT. \ adj.* [from conscience.] Having conscience.

Nothing will hold a sanctified, tender-conscient rebel, but a prison, or a halter. South, Sermon. v. 221.

CONSCIENT. \ adj.* [Lat. consciens.] Conscious. See the second sense of CONSCIENTIOUS.

As if he were conscient to himself, that he had played his part well upon the stage. Bacon on Learning.

CONSCIENTIOUS. † adj. [old Fr. conscientieux.]

1. Scrupulous; exactly just; regulated by conscience. Lead a life in so conscientious a probity, as in thought, word and deed to make good the character of an honest man. L'Estrange.

2. Conscious.

Among such as would persuade the world, religion were too pure to mix with the gentility of learning, the heretick, guilty and conscientious to himself of refutability, taketh place first. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 141.

CONSCIENTIOUSLY. adv. [from conscientious.] According to the direction of conscience.

More stress has been laid upon the strictness of law, than conscientiously did belong to it. L'Estrange.

There is the erroneous as well as the rightly informed conscience; and if the conscience happens to be deluded, sin does not therefore cease to be sin, because a man committed it conscientiously. South.

CONSCIENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from conscientious.] Exactness of justice; tenderness of conscience.

It will be a wonderful conscientiousness in them, if they will content themselves with less profit than they can make. Locke.

CONSCIONABLE. † adj. [from conscience.] Reasonable; just; according to conscience.

A knave, very voluble; no farther conscionable than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming. Shakspeare.

Let my debtors have conscionable satisfaction. Wotton.

These things be comely and pleasant to see, and worthy of honour from the beholder: a young saint, an old martyr, a religious soldier, a conscionable statesman, a great man courteous, a learned man humble, a silent woman, &c.

Bp. Hall, Holy Observations.

CO'NSCION, conscius, adv. [from conscionable.] In a manner agreeable to conscience; reasonably; justly.

A prince may be used conscionably as well as a common person. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

CO'NSCIOUS, conscius, [conscius, Lat.]

1. Endowed with the power of knowing one's own thoughts and actions.

Matter has no life nor perception, and is not conscious of its own existence. Bentley, Sermon.

Among substances some are thinking or conscious beings, or have a power of thought. Watts, Logic.

2. Knowing from memory; having the knowledge of any thing without any new information.

The damsel then to Tancred sent,
Who conscious of th' occasion, fear'd th' event. Dryden.

3. Admitted to the knowledge of any thing; with to.

The rest stood trembling, struck with awe divine,
Æneas only conscious to the sign,
Presag'd th' event. Dryden, Æn.

Roses or honey cannot be thought to smell or taste their own sweetness, or an organ be conscious to its music, or gunpowder to its flashing or noise. Bentley, Sermon.

4. Bearing witness by the dictate of conscience to any thing.

The queen had been solicitous with the king on his behalf, being conscious to herself that he had been encouraged by her. Clarendon.

CO'NSCIOUSLY, conscius, adv. [from conscious.] With knowledge of one's own actions.

If these perceptions, with their consciousness, always remained in the mind, the same thinking thing would be always consciously present. Locke.

CO'NSCIOUSNESS, conscius, n. s. [from conscious.]

1. The perception of what passes in a man's own mind.

If spirit be without thinking, I have no idea of any thing left; therefore consciousness must be its essential attribute. Watts, Logic.

2. Internal sense of guilt, or innocence.

No man doubts of a Supreme Being, until, from the consciousness of his provocations, it become his interest there should be none. Government of the Tongue.

Such ideas, no doubt, they would have had, had not their consciousness to themselves, of their ignorance of them, kept them from so idle an attempt. Locke.

An honest mind is not in the power of a dishonest: to break its peace, there must be some guilt or consciousness.

Pope.

CONSCRIPT, conscriptus, adj. [from conscribo, Lat.] A term used in speaking of the Roman senators, who were called Patres conscripti, from their names being written in the register of the senate.

CONSEQUENTIAL † adj. [from consequent.]

1. Produced by the necessary concatenation of effects to causes.

We sometimes wrangle, when we should debate;

A consequential ill which freedom draws;

A bad effect, but from a noble cause. Prior.

2. Having the consequences justly connected with the premises; conclusive.

Though these kind of arguments may seem obscure; yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential, and conclusive to my purpose. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Of late years, used for great, conceited, or pompous.

Consequential, in no shape conveys the meaning intended by those, who use it to express a pompous, conceited, lordly man. It can never be applied to a man, unless you were to say, that an undertaker is a man consequential to death; for its use as to men, must be as it is to things, where one follows another of course; as, this is consequential to that, and that is consequential to another. If a word is wanted to express a man of fancied importance, it should naturally have a termination denotative of the circumstance, formed analogous to other words; and I will consequence to adopt the term consequentious, which will rank with such as these; contemptuous, litigious, contumacious. Peage, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

CONSEQUENTIALLY adv. [from consequential.]

1. With just deduction of consequences; with right connection of ideas.

No body writes a book without meaning something, though he may not have the faculty of writing consequently, and expressing his meaning. Addison, Whig. Exam.

2. By consequence; not immediately; eventually.

This relation is so necessary, that God himself cannot discharge a rational creature from it; although consequently indeed he may do so, by the annihilation of such creatures. South.

3. In a regular series.

Were a man a king in his dreams, and a beggar awake, and dreamt consequently, and in continued unbroken schemes, would he be in reality a king or a beggar? Addison.

CONSEQUENTIALNESS n. s. [from consequential.] Regular consecution of discourse. Dict.

CONSEQUENTLY adv. [from consequent.]

1. By consequence; necessarily; inevitably; by the connection of effects to their causes.

In the most perfect poem a perfect idea was required, and consequently all poets ought rather to imitate it. Dryden.

The place of the several sorts of terrestrial matter, sustained in the fluid, being contingent and uncertain, their intermixtures with each other are consequently so. Woodward.

2. In consequence; pursuantly.

There is consequently, upon this distinguishing principle, an inward satisfaction or dissatisfaction in the heart of every man, after good or evil. South.

CONSEQUENTNESS n. s. [from consequent.] Regular connection of propositions; consecution of discourse.

Let them examine the consequentness of the whole body of the doctrine I deliver. Digby on the Soul, Ded.

CONSERVATION \ n. s.* [Lat. consero, conserutum.] Junction; adaptations.

What order, beauty, motion, distance, size, Conservation of design, how exquisite! Young, Night Th. 9.

CONSERVABLE adj. [from conservo, Latin, to keep.] Capable of being kept, or maintained.

CONSERVANCY n. s. [from conservans, Lat.] Courts held by the Lord Mayor of London for the preservation of the fishery on the river Thames, are called Courts of Conservancy.

CONSERVANT \ adj.* [Lat conservans.] That which preserves or continues.

The papacy, as it hath been usurped in our native country, was either the procreant or conservant cause, or both procreant and conservant, of all the ecclesiastical controversies in the Christian world. Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 493.

CONSERVATION n. s. [conservatio, Lat.]

1. The act of preserving; care to keep from perishing; continuance; protection.

Though there do indeed happen some alterations in the globe, yet they are such as tend rather to the benefit and conservation of the earth, and its productions, than to the disorder and destruction of both. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Preservation from corruption.

It is an enquiry of excellent use, to enquire of the means of preventing or staying of putrefaction; for therein consisteth the means of conservation of bodies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CONSERVATIVE † adj. [from conservo, Lat.] Having the power of opposing diminution or injury.

The spherical figure, as to all heavenly bodies, so it agreeth to light, as the most perfect and conservative of all others. Peacham.

We have not lost our orb conservative,

Of which we are a ray derivative.

More, Song of the Soul, i. iii. 26.

CONSERVATOR n. s. [Latin.] Preserver; one that has the care or office of keeping any thing from detriment; diminution, or extinction.

For that you declare that you have many sick amongst you, he was warned by the conservator of the city, that he should keep at a distance. Bacon, New Atlantis.

The lords of the secret council were likewise made conservators of the peace of the two kingdoms, during the intervals of parliament. Clarendon.

Such individuals as are the single conservators of their own species. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

CONSERVATORY † n. s. [old Fr. conservatoire, from conservo, Lat.] A place where any thing is kept in a manner proper to its peculiar nature; as, fish in a pond, corn in a granary.

1. In a degree deserving notice, though not the highest.

And E<sup>11</sup> <sup>suu</sup> considerably gains,
Both by <sup>poor</sup> <sup>poor</sup> example and their pains. Roscommon.

2. With <sup>unusv</sup> <sup>unusv</sup> importance; importantly!

I desire <sup>eq</sup> <sup>eq</sup> of favour so much, as that of serving you more <sup>com</sup> <sup>com</sup> than I have been yet able to do. Pope.

CONSID' <sup>pinous</sup> <sup>pinous</sup> n. s. [from consider.] Consideration; reflect, <sup>oqm</sup> <sup>oqm</sup> <sup>suor</sup> <sup>suor</sup> thought.

After this <sup>offa</sup> <sup>offa</sup> <sup>conside</sup> <sup>conside</sup> <sup>rance</sup> <sup>rance</sup>, sentence me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
What <sup>jeu</sup> <sup>jeu</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>done</sup> <sup>done</sup> that misbecame my place.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

CONSID'ERATE.† adj. [consideratus, Latin.]

1. Serious; given to consideration; prudent; not rash; not <sup>ne</sup> <sup>ne</sup> <sup>un</sup> <sup>un</sup> <sup>ut</sup> <sup>ut</sup>.

I will <sup>use</sup> <sup>use</sup> <sup>with</sup> <sup>with</sup> <sup>iron-witted</sup> <sup>iron-witted</sup> <sup>fools</sup> <sup>fools</sup>,
That <sup>lo</sup> <sup>lo</sup> <sup>total</sup> <sup>total</sup> <sup>me</sup> <sup>me</sup> <sup>with</sup> <sup>with</sup> <sup>conside</sup> <sup>conside</sup> <sup>rate</sup> <sup>rate</sup> <sup>eyes</sup> <sup>eyes</sup>. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Aeneas is patient, considerate; and careful of his people.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.
I grant it to be in many cases certain, that it is such as a considerate man may prudently rely and proceed upon, and hath no just cause to doubt of. Tillotson.

The expediency in the present juncture, may appear to every considerate man. Addison.

2. Calm; quiet; undisturbed.

I went the next day secretly, unto a high decayed piece of a turret, upon the wall over the haven, to take a considerate view thereof. Blount's Voyage into the Levant, p. 106.

3. Having respect to; regardful. Little used.

Though they will do nothing for virtue, yet they may be presumed more considerate of praise. Decay of Piety.

4. Moderate; not rigorous. This sense is much used in conversation.

CONSID'ERATELY. adv. [from considerate.] Calmly;
coolly; prudently.

Circumstances are of such force, as they sway an ordinary judgement of a wise man, not fully and considerately pondering the matter. Bacon, Col. of Good and Evil.

CONSID'ERATENESS. n. s. [from considerate.] Prudence; calm deliberation. Dict.

CONSIDERATION. n. s. [from consider.]

1. The act of considering; mental view; regard; notice.

As to present happiness and misery, when that alone comes in consideration, and the consequences are removed, a man never chuses amiss. Locke.

2. Mature thought; prudence; serious deliberation.

Let us think with consideration, and consider with acknowledging, and acknowledge with admiration. Sidney.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness mortified in him;
Consideration, like an angel, came,
And whipt th' offending Adam out of him. Shakespeare, H. V.

3. Contemplation; meditation upon any thing.

The love you bear to Mopsa hath brought you to the consi- deration of her virtues, and that consideration may have made you the more virtuous, and so the more worthy. Sidney.

4. Importance; claim to notice; worthiness of regard.

Lucan is the only author of consideration among the Latin poets, who was not explained for the use of the dauphin, because <sup>whole</sup> <sup>whole</sup> <sup>Pharsalia</sup> <sup>Pharsalia</sup> would have been a satire upon the French and violent government. Addison, Frecholder.

5. Equal <sup>of</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>the</sup> <sup>compensation</sup> <sup>compensation</sup>.

We are provident enough not to part with any thing serviceable to our bodies under a good consideration, but make little account of our souls. Ray on the Creation.

Foreigners can never take our bills for payment, though they might pass as valuable considerations among your own people.
Locke.

6. Motive of action; influence; ground of conduct.

The consideration, in regard whereof the law forbiddeth these things, was not because those nations did use them.

Hooker.
He had been made general upon very partial, and not enough deliberated considerations. Clarendon.

He was obliged, antecedent to all other considerations, to search an asylum. Dryden.

The world cannot pardon your concealing it, on the same consideration. Dryden.

7. Reason; ground of concluding.

Not led by any commandment, yet moved with such consi- derations as have been before set down. Hooker, v. § 95.

Uses, not thought upon before, be reasonable causes of retaining that which other considerations did procure to be instituted. Hooker, v. § 42.

8. [In law.] Consideration is the material cause of a contract, without which no contract bindeth. It is either expressed, as if a man bargain to give twenty shillings for a horse; or else implied, as when a man comes into an inn, and taking both meat and lodging for himself and his horse, without bargaining with the host, if he discharge not the house, the host may stay his horse. Cowel.

CONSID'ERATIVE.* adj. [from considerate.] Taking into consideration.

I'll not dissemble, sir; where'er I come,
I love to be considerative. B. Jonson, For.

CONSID'ERATOR.* n. s. [from considerate.] He who is given to consideration.

The wisdom of God hath methodized the course of things unto the best advantage of goodness, and thinking considerators overlook not the tract thereof. Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 30.

CONSID'ERER. n. s. [from consider.] A man of reflection; a thinker.

A vain applause of wit for an impious jest, or of reason for a deep considerer. Governm. of the Tongue.

CONSID'ERING. [This is a kind of conjunction: it had been more grammatically written considered; m, French; but considering is always used.] If allowance be made for.

It is not possible to act otherwise, considering the weakness of our nature. Spectator.

CONSID'ERING.* n. s. [from consider.] Hesitation; doubt.

Many maz'd considerings did throng,
And press'd in with this caution. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VIII.

CONSID'ERINGLY.* adv. [from considering.] In a serious, considerate manner.

The use of this catalogue of sins is this: Upon days of humiliation, especially before the Sacrament, read them con- sideringly over, and at every particular ask thine own heart, Am I guilty of this?

Whole Duty of Man, Heads of Self-Exam.

TO CONSIG'N. v. a. [consigno, Lat.]

Consign'd the youthful consort to his care. Pope, Odys.

To CONSIGN. v. n.

1. To submit to the same terms with another. This is not now in use.

Thou hast finish'd joy and moan;
All lovers young, all lovers must Consign to thee, and come to dust. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. To sign; to consent to. Obsolete.

A maid yet rosd over with the virgin crimson of modesty:
it were a hard condition for a maid to consign to. Shakespeare.

CONSIGNATION.† n. s. [old Fr. consignation.]

1. The act of consigning; the act by which any thing is delivered up to another.

The princes of Germany sent to him [Francis] a secretary of the Duke's of Bavaria to tell him how, upon the consignation of 100,000 crowns which the said king by treaty was obliged to pay in aid, &c. they now all agreed that it should be put into the hands of the said duke.

Ld. Herbert, Hist. of H. VIII. p. 359.

As the hope of salvation is a good disposition towards it, so is despair a certain consignation to eternal ruin. Bp. Taylor.

2. The act of signing.

If we find that we increase in duty; then we may look upon the tradition of the Holy sacramental symbols as a direct consignation of pardon. Bp. Taylor's Worthy Comm.

CONSIGNATURE.* n. s. [old Fr. consignature.] A full stamping, or absolute signature, of. Cotgrave.

CONSIGNIFICATION.* n. s. [con and signification.]

He calls the additional denoting of time, by a truly philosophic word, a consignification. Harri, Philolog. Inq.

CONSIGNMENT.† n. s. [from consign.]

1. The act of consigning.

Ask all the merchants who act upon consignments, where is the necessity, (if they answer readily what their correspondents draw) of their being wealthy themselves. Tatler, No. 31.

2. The writing by which any thing is consigned.

CONSIMILAR. adj. [from consimilis, Lat.] Having one common resemblance. Dict.

CONSIMILITUDE.* n. s. [old Fr. consimilitude, from the Lat. con and similitudo.] Likeness; concu-rence; equality; agreement together. Cotgrave.

CONSIMILITY.* n. s. [Lat. consimilis.] Resemblance.

By which means, and their consimilitude of disposition, there was a very conjunct friendship between the two brothers and him. Aubrey, Aucc. of Sur W. Raleigh, ii. 511.

To CONSI/ST. v. n. [consisto, Lat.]

1. To subsist; not to perish.

He is before all things, and by him all things consist.
Col. i. 17.

2. To continue fixed; without dissipation.

Flame doth not mingle with flame, as air doth with air, or water with water, but only remaineth contiguous; as it cometh to pass betwixt consisting bodies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It is against the nature of water, being a flexible and ponderous body, to consist and stay itself, and not fall to the lower parts about it. Brerewood on Languages.

3. To be comprised; to be contained.

I pretend not to tie the hands of artists, whose skill consists only in a certain manner which they have affected. Dryden.

A great beauty of letters does often consist in little passages of private conversation, and references to particular matters.
Walsh.

4. To be composed.

The land would consist of plains and valleys, and mountains
according as the pieces of this ruin were disposed. Burnet.

5. To have being concurrently; to coexist.

Necessity and election cannot consist together in the same act. Bp. Bramhall, against Hobbes.

6. To agree; not to oppose; not to contradict; not to counteract: it has with before the thing compared or co-existent.

His majesty would be willing to consent to any thing that could consist with his conscience and honour. Clarendon.

Nothing but what may easily consist with your plenty, your prosperity, is requested of you. Seral, Serm.

You could not help bestowing more than is consisting with the fortune of a private man, or with the will of a private man.
Alexander. Dryden, in Fab. Ded.

It cannot consist with the Divine Attributes, that the impious man's joys should, upon the whole, exceed those of the upright. Afterbury.

Health consists with temperance alone. Pope.

The only way of securing the constitution will be by lessening the power of domestick adversaries, as much as can consist with lenity. Swift.

CONSISTENCE.† } n. s. [consistentia, low Lat.]
CONSISTENCY. }

1. State with respect to material existence.

Water, being divided, maketh many circles, 'till it restore itself to the natural consistence. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers: dense, rare, tangibile, pneumatical, volatile, fixed, determinate, indeterminate, hard, and soft. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

There is the same necessity for the Divine influence and regimen to order and govern, conserve and keep together the universe in that consistence it hath received, as it was at first to give it, before it could receive it. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I carried on my enquiries farther, to try whether this rising world, when formed and finished, would continue always the same, in the same form, structure, and consistency. Burnet.

2. Degree of denseness or rarity.

Let the expressed juices be boiled into the consistence of a syrop. Arbutnot on Alim.

3. Substance; form; make.

His friendship is of a noble make, and a lasting consistency.
South, Serm.

4. Durable or lasting state.

Meditation will confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul. Hammond.

These are fundamental truths that lie at the bottom, the basis upon which many others rest, and in which they have their consistencies teeming and rich in store, with which they furnish the mind. Locke.

5. Agreement with itself, or with any other thing; congruity; uniformity.

That consistency of behaviour, whereby he inflexibly pursues those measures, which appear the most just and equitable.
Addison, Frecholder.

6. A state of rest, in which things capable of growth or decrease continue for some time at a stand, without either; as the growth, consistence, and return.

Even there [in the heaven] I find a change, of motion, of face, of quality; motion whether by consistence or retrogradation; "Sun, stand thou still in Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Aialon;" there was a change in not moving.
And for retrogradation; "The shadow went back ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz." Seasonable Serm. p. 2.

CONSISTENT. adj. [consistens, Lat.]

1. Not contradictory: not opposed.

With reference to such a lord, to serve and to be free, are terms not consistent only, but equivalent. South.

A great part of their politicks others do not think consistent with honour to practise. Addison on Italy.

On their own axis as the planets run,
Yet make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope, Ess.

Shew me one that has it in his power
To act consistent with himself an hour. Pope, Epist. of Hor.
The fool consistent, and the false sincere, Pope, Epist.

2. Firm; not fluid.

Pestilential miasms insinuate into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey on Consump.

The sand, contained within the shell, becoming solid and consistent, at the same time that of the stratum without it did. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CONSISTENT, short period n. [from consistent.] Without contradiction, tendency to relaxably.

The consistencies are of this character, and the poet describes consistently with it: they are proud, idle, and effeminate. Broomer.

CONSISTORIAL, adj. [from consistory.] Relating to the ecclesiastical court.

An official, or chancellor, has the same consistorial audience with the bishop himself that deposes him. Ayliffe, Parer.

They drew up a representation of some abuses in the ecclesiastical discipline, and in the consistorial courts. Burnet, Hist. of his own Time, 1704.

CONSISTORIAN, adj. [from consistory.] Relating to an order of presbyterian assemblies.

They have exempted themselves from the ecclesiastical government of this realm, accounting the same, in some respects, to be antichristian, and so not to be obeyed; and, in some other, to be a mere civil and a parliament church-government; and, in that regard, only after a sort to be yielded unto, for their better and safer standing in their own seditious and consistorian ways.

Bp. Bancroft, Dang. Posit. iii. 16.

You fall next on the consistorian schismatics; for so you call Presbyterians. Milton, Notes on Dr. Griffith's Sermon.

CONSISTORY, n. s. [consistorium, Lat.]

1. The place of justice in the court Christian. Conc.

An offer was made, that, for every one minister, there should be two of the people to sit and give voice in the ecclesiastical consistory. Hooker, Pref.

Pius was then hearing of causes in consistory. Bacon.
Christ himself, in that great consistory, shall deign to step down from his throne. South.

2. The assembly of cardinals.

How far I've proceeded,
Or how far further shall, is warranted
By a commission from the consistory,
Yea the whole consistory of Rome. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

A late prelate, of remarkable zeal for the church, were religions to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope and the whole consistory. Atterbury.

3. Any solemn assembly.

In mid air
To council summons all his mighty peers
Within thick clouds, and dark tenfold involv'd,
A gloomy consistory. Milton, P. R.
I left thee; thee, a single person; not a consistory of presbyters, or a bench of elders. Abp. Bancroft, Sermon, p. 18.
At Jove's assent the deities around,
In solemn state the consistory crown'd, Pope, Statius.

4. Place of residence.

My other self, my counsel's consistory, my oracle,
I, as a child, will go by thy direction. Shakespeare, Richard III.

CONSO'CIATE, n. s. [from consocio, Lat.] An accomplice; a confederate; a partner.

Patridge and Stanhope were condemned as consociates in the conspiracy of Somerset. Hayward.

Thou [self-conceit] and envy, ay consociates,
Will not admit that art herself should show
By others finger. Davies, Wil's Pilgrimage, P. ii.

To CONSO'CIATE, v. a. [consocio, Lat.]

1. To unite; to join.

Ships, besides the transporting of riches and rarities from place to place, consociate the most remote regions of the earth by participation of commodities and other excellencies to each other. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 102.

Generally the best outward shapes are also the likeliest to be consociated with good inward faculties. Wotton on Education.

Things very seldom consociated in the instruments of great personages. Wotton, Life, &c. of the D. of Buckingham.

The ancient philosophers always brought in a supernatural principle to unite and consociate the parts of the chaos. Burnet.

To CONSO'CIATE, v. n. To coalesce; to unite.

If they cohered, yet by the next conflict with other atoms might be separated again, — without ever consociating into the huge condense bodies of planets. Bentley, Serp. 7.

CONSO'CIATION, n. s. [from consociate.]

1. Alliance.

There is such a consociation of offices between the prince and whom his favour breeds, that they may help to sustain his power, as he their knowledge. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

2. Union; intimacy; companionship.

By so long, so private, and so various consociation with a prince of such excellent nature, he had now gotten, as it were, two lives in his own fortune and greatness. Wotton, Life, &c. of D. of Buckingham.

CONSO'LABLE, adj. [from console.] That which admits comfort.

To CO'NSOLATE, v. a. [consolar, Latin.] To comfort; to console; to sooth in misery. Not much used, Dr. Johnson says; citing the examples of Shakespeare and Brown. But it is supported by other good authorities also.

I will be gone,
That pitiful rumour may report my flight,
To console thine ear. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

What may somewhat console all men that honour virtue, we do not discover the latter scene of his misery in authors of antiquity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The king had in this time much consolated us both with sending unto him, and with expressing publicly a gracious feeling of his case. Sir H. Wotton, Letters.

This excellent young woman has nothing to console herself with, but the reflection that her sufferings are not the effect of any guilt or misconduct. Tatler, No. 199.

CONSOLA'TION, n. s. [consolatio, Latin.] Comfort; alleviation of misery; such alleviation as is produced by partial remedies.

We that were in the jaws of death, were now brought into a place where we found nothing but consolations. Bacon.

Against such cruelties,
With inward consolations recompens'd;
And oft supported so, as shall amaze

Their proudest persecutors. Milton, P. I.

Let the righteous persevere with patience, supported with this consolation, that their labour shall not be in vain. Rogers.

CONSOLA'TOR, n. s. [Latin.] A comforter.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

CONSO'LATORY, n. s. [from consolate.] A speech or writing containing topicks of comfort.

Consolatories writ
With studied argument, and much persuasion sought, Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton, S. A.

CONSO'LATORY, adj. [from consolate.] Tending to give comfort.

Letters, though they be capable of any subject, yet commonly they are either narratory, obsequatory, consolatory, monitory, or congratulatory. Howell, Lett. i. i. 1.

I must tell you, here is a consolatory letter to the Hugonots at Paris. Dean Martin's Letters, (1666,) p. 89.

To CONSO'LE, v. a. [consolar, Lat.] To comfort; to cheer; to free from the sense of misery.

Others the syren sisters compass round,
And empty heads console with empty sound. Pope, Dunciad.

CONSOLE, n. s. [French.] In architecture, is a part or member projecting in manner of a

Bracket, or shoulder-piece, serving to support a cornice, bust, vase, beam, and frequently used as keys of arches. Chambers.

To CONSOLIDATE. † v. a. [consolider, Fr. solidus, Latin.]

1. To form into a compact and solid body; to harden; to unite into a solid mass.

The word may be rendered either he stretched, or he fixed and consolidated the earth above the waters. Burnet's Theory.

The effect of spirits in stopping hemorrhages, and consolidating the fibres, is well known to chirurgeons. Arbuthnot.

2. To combine or unite two parliamentary bills into one. See CONSOLIDATION.

3. To unite two benefices into one. See CONSOLIDATION.

To CONSOLIDATE. v. n. To grow firm, hard, or solid.

In hurts and ulcers in the head, dryness maketh them more apt to consolidate. Boon, Nat. Hist.

The sandy, sparry, and flinty matter was then soft, and susceptible of any form in these shelly moulds; and it consolidated, and became hard afterwards. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CONSOLIDATE. \ adj.* Formed into a compact body; fixed: settled.

It shall be necessary, that a gentleman do learn to ride a great and fierce horse while he is tender, and the brawnes and sinewes of his thighs not fully consolidate. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 58.

The pure religion of Christ was not in all places consolidate. Ibid. fol. 62. b.

CONSOLIDATION. † n. s. [from consolidate.]

1. The act of uniting into a solid mass.

The consolidation of the marble, and of the stone, did not fall out at random. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of confirmiting a thing.

He first offered a league to Henry the seventh, and for consolidation thereof his daughter Margaret.

Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 11.

3. The annexing of one bill in parliament to another. This appears to be of no great age in our language, by the following example.

It was some surprize to me to find myself translated all on a sudden into this bill against the directors, under the new-fashioned term of consolidation, without any new offence given, or cause assigned: — However, I now find myself tacked to them and their unhappy fate.

Speech of the Rt. Hon. J. Aislabie bef. the H. of L. 19. Jul. 1721.

4. In law, it is used for the combining and uniting of two benefices in one. Coedl.

CONSOLIDATIVE. adj. [from consolidate.] That which has the quality of healing wounds. Dict.

CONSONANCE. n. s. [consonance, Fr. consonans, CONSONANCY. } Latin.]

1. Accord of sound.

The two principal consonances that most ravish the ear, are, by the consent of all nature, the fifth and the octave. Wotton.

And winds and waters flow'd

In consonance.

Thomson, Spring.

2. Consistency; congruence; agreeableness.

Such decisions held consonancy and congruity with resolutions and decisions of former times. Hale's Law of England.

I have set down this, to shew the perfect consonancy of our persecuted church to the doctrine of scripture and antiquity.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Agreement; concord; friendship. A sense now not used.

Let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

CONSONANT. † adj. [old Fr. consonant, consonans, Lat.]

1. Agreeable; according; consistent; followed by either with or to.

Where it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how entirelylatter is restrained? Hooker.

That where much is given there shall be much required, is a thing consonant with natural equity. Decay of Piety.

Religion looks consonant to itself. Decay of Piety.

He discovers how consonant the account which Moses hath left, of the primitive earth, is to this from nature. Woodward.

2. Agreeing: without to or with.

Our bards — hold agnominations, and enforcing of consonant words or syllables one upon the other, to be the greatest elegance. Howell, Lett. i. i. 40.

CONSONANT. n. s. [consonans, Latin.] A letter which cannot be sounded, or but imperfectly, by itself.

In all vowels the passage of the mouth is open and free, without any appulse of an organ of speech to another: but in all consonants there is an appulse of the organs, sometimes (if you abstract the consonants from the vowels) wholly precluding all sound; and, in all of them, more or less checking and abetting it. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

He considered these as they had a greater mixture of vowels or consonants, and accordingly employed them as the verse required a greater smoothness. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

CONSONANTLY. adv. [from consonant.] Consistently; agreeably.

This as consonantly it preacheth, teacheth, and delivereth, as if but one tongue did speak for all. Hooker.

Ourselves are formed according to that mind which frames things consonantly to their respective natures.

Glauville, Scepis.

If he will speak consonantly to himself, he must say that happened in the original constitution. Tillotson.

CONSONANTNESS. n. s. [from consonant.] Agreeableness; consistency. Dict.

CONSONOUS. adj. [consonus, Latin.] Agreeing in sound; symphonious.

To CONSOPATE. \ v. a.* [Lat. consopio; but the regular derivation must be consopite, which, as well as consopiate, is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; though he has admitted consopiation. This verb is not now in use; but our old vocabularies present the participle consopiated. Consopie is supported by good authority.] To lull asleep. Cockeram.

CONSOPATION. † n. s. [from consopiate.] The act of laying to sleep. Little in use.

One of his maxims is, that a total abstinence from intemperance is no more philosophy than a total consopation of the senses is repose. Pope, to Dugby.

To CONSOPITE. \ v. a.* [Lat. consopio.] To compose; to calm; to lull asleep.

The masculine faculties of the soul were for a while well slaked and consopited. Morr, Cong. Cabb. (1653.) p. 68.

By the same degrees that the higher powers are invigorated, the lower are consopited and abated, as to their proper exercises. Glauville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 108.

The higher powers of the soul being almost quite laid asleep and consopited. Ibid. p. 121.

CONSOPITE. \ adj.* [from the verb.] Calmed; quieted; composed.

I have the barking of bold sense confuted;

Its clamorous tongue thus being consopite,

With reasons easy such I well be suited,

To shew that Pythagore's position's right.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 43.

CONSORT.† n. s. [consors, Latin. It had anciently the accent on the latter syllable, but has it now on the former. Milton has used them both.]

1. Companion; partner; generally a partner of the bed; a wife or husband.

experie. Fellowship.
Such a progress it to participat te,
All rat complete-ght; wherein the brute
Cannot take man consort. Milton, P. L.

Male he created thee; but thy consort
Female for race: then bless'd mankind, and said,
Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth. Milton, P. I.

Thy Bellona, who thy consort came
Not only to thy bed, but to thy fame. Denham.

He single chose to live, and shun'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed. Dryden, Fables.

His warlike amazon her host invades,
The imperial consort of the crown of Spades. Pope.

2. An assembly; a divan; a consultation.

In one consort there sat
Cruel revenge, and rancorous despite,
Disloyal treason, and heart-burning hate. Spenser, F. Q.

3. A number of instruments playing together; a symphony. This is probably a mistake for concert, Dr. Johnson says. It is not so. Concert was certainly so written, at the beginning of the last century, and probably much beyond that time. The Italian concert banished it; and now we have also concerto. A "consort of musicians" means indeed a company of musicians, a band, as it is now called. Our old lexicography exhibits this phrase, which might be amply illustrated, if necessary, by passages in our old dramas. See also Bullokar's Expositor, ed. 1656. And see CONCERT.

A consort of musick in a banquet of wine, is as a signet of carbuncle set in gold. Eccles. xxxii. 5.

4. Concurrence; union.

Take it singly, and it carries an air of levity: but, in consort with the rest, has a meaning quite different. Atterbury.

To CONSO'RT.† v. n. [from the noun.] To associate with; to unite with; to keep company with.
What will you do? Let's not consort with them.

Shakspeare.
All flesh consorteth according to kind; and a man will cleave to his like. Eccles. xiii. 16.
Some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas. Acts. xvii. 4.

Which of the Grecian chiefs consorts with thee? Dryden.

To CONSO'RT.† v. a.

1. To join; to mix; to marry.

He, with his consorted Eve,
The story heard attentive. Milton, P. P.

He begins to consort himself with men, and thinks himself one. Locke on Education.

2. To accompany. Not used, Dr. Johnson says. This is certainly not the case: for the word has been well employed in this sense.

Sweet health and fair desires consort your graces.

It is a special prerogative of beauty, though it be in an humble and mean subject, if it be consorted with modesty and virtue, to exalt and equal itself to any dignity.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 9.

CONSO'RTABLE.† adj. [from consort.] To be compared with; to be ranked with; suitable. Not now used.

He was much more consortable to Charles Brandon, than Henry VIII. who was equal to him. Wotton.

A good conscience, and a good courtier, are consortable.
W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648), p. 98.

CONSO'RTION.† n. s. [consortio, Lat.] Partnership; fellowship; society. Dict.

While others are curious in the choice of good air, and chiefly solicitous for healthful habitations, study thou conversation, and be critical in thy consortion.

Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 9.

CONSO'RTSHIP.* n. s. [from consort.] Fellowship; state of union; partnership.

Thus, consulting wisely with the state of times, and the child's disposition and abilities of containing, must the parent either keep his virgin, or labour for the provision of a meet consortship. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iv. 1.

For their having been unkind, and unmerciful to their poor brethren, they shall be cursed, and cast down into a wretched consortship with those malicious and merciless fiends, unto whose dispositions they did so nearly approach.

Barrow, Sermon. i. S. 31.

CONSPÉCTABLE. adj. [from conspéctus, Lat.] Easy to be seen. Dict.

CONSPÉCTION.* n. s. [old Fr. conspéction.] A seeing; a beholding. Colgrave, and Sherwood.

CONSPÉCTU'ITY. n. s. [from conspéctus, Lat.] Sight; view; sense of seeing. This word is, I believe, peculiar to Shakspeare, and perhaps corrupt.

What harp can your bisson conspéctivities glean out of this character? Shakspeare, Coriol.

CONSPÉ'RSION. n. s. [conspersio, Lat.] A sprinkling about. Dict.

CONSPICU'ITY. n. s. [from conspicuous.] Brightness; favourableness to the sight.

If this definition be clearer than the thing defined, midnight may vie for conspicuity with noon. Glanville, Scopsis.

CONSPICUOUS. adj. [conspiciuus, Lat.]

1. Obvious to the sight; seen at a distance.

Or come I less conspicuous? Or what change Absents thee? Milton, P. L.

2. Eminent; famous; distinguished.

He attributed to each of them that virtue which he thought most conspicuous in them. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Thy father's merit points thee out to view,
And sets thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous. Addison, Cato.

The house of lords,
Conspicuous scene! Pope, Epist. of Horace.

CONSPI'CUOUSLY. adv. [from conspicuous.]

1. Obviously to the view.

These methods may be preserved conspicuously, and intirely distinct. Watts, Logick.

2. Eminently; famously; remarkably.

CONSPI'CUOUSNESS. n. s. [from conspicuous.]

1. Exposure to the view; state of being visible at a distance.

Looked on with such a weak light, they appear well proportioned fabricks; yet they appear so but in that twilight, which is requisite to their conspicuousness.

Boyle, Proem. Essay.

2. Eminence; fame; celebrity.

Their writings attract more readers by the author's conspicuousness. Boyle on Colours.

CONSPI'RACY. n. s. [conspiratio, Lat.]

1. A private agreement among several persons to commit some crime; a plot; a concerted treason.

O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban, and his confederates, Against my life. Shakspeare, Tempest.

When scarce he had escap'd the blow
Of faction and conspiracy,
Death did his promis'd hopes destroy. Dryden

2. In law, an agreement of men to do any thing; always taken in the evil part. It is taken for a confederacy of two at the least, falsely to indict one, or to procure one to be indicted of felony.

Cowel.

3. A concurrence; a general tendency of many causes to one event.

When the time now came that misery was ripe for him, there was a conspiracy in all heavenly and earthly things, to frame fit occasions to lead him unto it.

Sidney.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbidick conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard.

Harvey on Consumptions.

CONSPIRANT. adj. [conspirans, Lat.] Conspiring; engaged in a conspiracy or plot; plotting.

Thou art a traitor,

Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious prince.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

CONSPIRATION. † n. s. [conspiratio, Lat.] An agreement of many to one end.

One would wonder, how from so differing premisses, they should infer the same conclusion, were it not that the conspiracy of interest were too potent for the diversity of judgement.

Decay of Piety.

The same [duty of praise] must also be publick and united; universal and illimited, with a general consent and holy kind of conspiracy.

Bp. Pearson, Sermon. Nov. 5. 1673.

What an harmony and conspiracy there is betwixt all these laws, one mutually aiding and assisting the other.

Hammond, of Conscience, § 28.

CONSPIRATOR. n. s. [from conspiro, Lat.] A man engaged in a plot; one who has secretly concerted with others commission of a crime; a plotter.

Achitophel is among the conspirators with Absalom.

2 Sam. xv. 31.

Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;

Thou that contriv'st to murder our dread lord.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

But let the bold conspirator beware;

For heav'n makes princes its peculiar care.

Dryden, Spa. Fryar.

One put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy against him, together with all the names of the conspirators.

South.

To CONSPIRE. v. n. [conspiro, Lat.]

1. To concert a crime; to plot; to hatch secret treason.

Tell me what they deserve,

That do conspire my death with devilish plots

Of damued witchcraft?

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

What was it

That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire?

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

They took great indignation, and conspired against the king.

Apocrypha, Bel. and the Drag. v. 28.

Let the air be excluded; for that undermineth the body, and conspireth with the spirit of the body to dissolve it.

Baron.

There is in man a natural possibility to destroy the world; that is, to conspire to know no woman.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The press, the pulpit, and the stage,

Conspire to censure and expose our age.

Roscommon.

2. To agree together: as, all things conspire to make him happy.

So moist and dry when Phœbus shines,

Conspiring give the plant to grow.

Heigh.

CONSPIRER. † n. s. [from conspire.] A conspirator; a plotter.

Take no care,

Who chafes, who frets, and where conspirers are;

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

But these conspirers couched all so cleane

Through close demeanour, that their wiles did weane

My heart from doubts.

Mir. for Mag. p. 406.

CONSPIRING Powers. [In mechanicks.] All such as act in direction not opposit to one another.

Harris.

CONSPIRINGLY. \ adv.* [from conspiring.] In a manner criminally concerted.

Either violently without mutual consent for urgent reasons, or conspiringly by plot of lust or cunning malice.

Milton, Tetradachord.

CONSPISSATION. \ n. s.* [Lat. conspissatio.] Thickness.

For body's but this spirit, fixt, gross by conspissation.

More, Infin. of Worlds, st. 13.

To CONSPURCATE. \ v. a.* [Lat. conspurgo.] To defile.

Cockeram.

CONSPURCATION. † n. s. [from conspurgo, Lat.] The act of defiling; defilement; pollution. It is in our old vocabularies, and is used by Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 162.

CONSTABLE. † n. s. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed, Dr. Johnson says; in which many agree with him; comes stabuli meaning the master of the stables, or master of the horse, and thence perhaps a commander of cavalry. But our antiquaries, Verstegan and Selden, in particular, refer the word to the Sax. cýning, contracted into KING; and to stable or staple; signifying a prop or stay, the whole word constable being thus as much as columen regis, or one that he especially depends upon in managing his most weighty affairs. This etymology is supported by the occurrence of cunestabula in Domesday Book for maintainer of the king's right. Lord Herbert of Cherbury, in his own Life, p. 44., observes, that "Constable, anciently in France, was the first officer of the army, and so called from appointing the king a place in which he was to stand in the day of battle."]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blasonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary 'till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferiour constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables, because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferiour authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; As, constable of the Tower, of Dover castle, of the castle of Carnarvon; but these are properly castellani, or governors of castles.

Cowel, and Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable.

And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun.

Shakespeare

The knave constable had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did.

Clarke adu.

2. To over-run the CONSTABLE. [Perhaps from contable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CONSTABLESHIP. n. s. [from constable.] The office of a constable.
This <sup>ke</sup> <sup>Relie</sup> is annexed to the constableness of the castle, and that <sup>is</sup> <sup>out</sup> in lease. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

CONSTABLEWICK. * n. s. The district over which the authority of a constable extends.

If directed to the constable of D. he is not bound to execute the warrant out of the precincts of his constablewrick.
Halt, Hist. Ft. of the Cr. ch. 50.

CONSTANCY. n. s. [constantia, Lat.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Consistency; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shakespeare.

CONSTANT. † adj. [constans, Lat.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle, Hist. of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

The world's a scene of changes, and to be constant, in nature were inconsistency. Cowley.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immoveable; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.
The lord privy seal found the woman, in her examination,
constant in her former sayings.
Ld. Herbert, Hist. of Hen. VIII. p. 472.

4. Consistent; steady; grave; applied to things.

I am no more mad than you are; make the trial of it in any constant question. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

5. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney.

6. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent: with to.

Now, through the land, his care of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion as modelled by our national constitution, and was constant to its offices in devotion, both in publick and in his family. Addison, Freeholder.

CONSTANTIA Wine. * Wine, both red and white, so named from the village of Constantia at the Cape of Good Hope, where the vines, which produce this luscious but heavy liquor, are cultivated. The grape from which it is extracted, is a species of the muscadel.

CONSTANTINOPOLITAN Creed. * The Nicene Creed, with additions made by the council of Constantinople.

Divers of the Greeks expressly denied the procession from the Son, and several disputations did arise in the Western church, till at last the Latins put it into the Constantinopolitan creed; and being admonished by the Greeks of that, as an unlawful addition, and refusing to rase it out of the creed again, it became an occasion of vast schism between the Eastern and the Western churches.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. viii.

If you examine those articles that follow after the Constantinopolitan creed, you will find they are not merely explanatory of any article or articles of the old canon of faith; — but they are plain additions to the Rule of Faith.

Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

CONSTANTLY. † adv. [from constant.]

1. Unvariably; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it. Tillotson.

2. Patiently; firmly.

Does our nephew

Bear his restraint so constantly, as you

Deliver it to us? Massinger, Gr. D. of Florence.

TO CONSTELLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Latin.]

To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections, do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and constellate in God. Boyle.

TO CONSTELLATE. † v. a. [The accent on this word was formerly on the first syllable.] To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions and such as are constellated into knowledge do nothing till they outdo all. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Who constellated your fair birth?

Beaum. and Fl. Thierry and Theodoret.

These scattered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferior natures, were summed up and constellated in ours. Glanville, Scopsis.

CONSTELLATION. n. s. [from constellate.]

1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, shall not give their light. Isaiah xiii. 10.

The earth, the air resounded,

The heav'ns and all the constellations rung. Milton, P. L.

A constellation is but one;

Though 'tis a train of stars. Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a constellation or conjuncture of all those gospel-graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest. Hammond, Pract. Cat.

CONSTERNATION. n. s. [from consterno, Latin.]

Astonishment; amazement; alienation of mind by a surprise; surprize; wonder.

They find the same holy consternation upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.

The natives, dubious whom

They must obey, in consternation wait,

Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege. Philips.

TO CONSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipato, Latin.]

1. To crowd together into a narrow room; to thicken; to condense.

Of cold, the property is to condense and constipate. Bacon.

It may, by amassing, cooling, and constipating of waters, turn them into rain. Ray on the Creation.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the midst of the chaos, whereby the atoms might be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid globes.

Bentley, Serm. 74

2. To stuff up, or stop by filling up the passages.
It is not probable that any aliment should have the quality of intirely constipating or shutting up the capillary vessels.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To bind the belly; or make constive.
Omitting honey which is laxative and the powder of some loadstones in this, doth rather constipate and bind, than purge and loosen the belly.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONSTIPATION. n. s. [from constipate.]

1. The act of crowding any thing into less room; condensation.

This worketh by the detention of the spirits, and constipation of the tangible parts.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

[It] requires either absolute fulness of matter, or a pretty close constipation and mutual contact of its particles.

Bentley, Serm. 7.

2. Stoppage; obstruction by plenitude.

The inactivity of the gall occasions a constipation of the belly.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. The state of having the body bound.

CONSTITUENT. adj. [from constituens, Latin.] That which makes any thing what it is; necessary to existence; elemental; essential; that of which any thing consists.

Body, soul, and reason, are the three parts necessarily constituent of a man.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

All animals derived all the constituent matter of their bodies, successively, in all ages out of this fund.

Woodward.

It is impossible that the figures and sizes of its constituent particles, should be so justly adapted as to touch one another in every point.

Bentley, Serm.

CONSTITUENT. n. s.

1. The person or thing which constitutes or settles any thing in its peculiar state.

Their first composure and origination requires a higher and nobler constituent than chance.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. That which is necessary to the subsistence of any thing.

The obstruction of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. He that deposes another; as, the representatives in parliament disregard their constituents.

You may communicate this letter in any manner you think proper to my constituents.

Burke to the Sheriffs of Bristol, 1777.

TO CONSTITUTE. v. a. [from constituo, Lat.]

1. To give formal existence; to make any thing what it is; to produce.

Prudence is not only a moral but christian virtue, such as is necessary to the constituting of all others.

This word is given by Dr. Johnson, without any authority or reference; but it is an old word, and is used by the quaint annotator on Don Quixote, 1654.] To floor with boards.

Bedcords and boards are the best flesh-firmers, consolidating and contabulating his body of errantry into a gum or moving mummia.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. iii. 2.

CONTABULATION. n. s. [contabulatio, Latin.] A joining of boards together; a boarding a floor.

CONTACT. n. s. [contactus, Lat.] Touch; close union; juncture of one body to another.

The Platonists hold, that the spirit of the lover doth pass into the spirits of the person loved, which causeth the desire of return into the body; whereupon followeth that appetite of contact and conjunction.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When the light fell so obliquely on the air, which in other places was between them, as to be all reflected, it seemed in that place of contact to be wholly transmitted.

Newton, Opt.

The air, by its immediate contact, may coagulate the blood which flows along the air-bladders.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

CONTACTION. † n. s. [contactus, Lat.] The act of touching; a joining one body to another.

That deleterious it may be at some distance, and destructive without corporal contaction, there is no high improbability.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is a rule in philosophy, that every natural agent works by a contaction, whether bodily or virtual.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 90.

CONTAGION. † n. s. [Fr. contagion, Lat. contagio, from con with, and tangere, to touch.]

1. The emission from body to body, by which diseases are communicated.

If we two be one, and thou play false,

I do digest the poison of thy flesh,

Being trumpeted by thy contagion. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

A infection and contagion from body to body, as the plague and the like, the infection is received many times by the body passive; but yet is, by the strength and good disposition thereof, repulsed.

Bacon.

2. Infection; propagation of mischief, or disease.

Nor will the goodness of intention excuse the scandal and contagion of example.

King Charles.

Down fell they,

And the dire hiss renew'd, and the dire form

Catch'd by contagion.

Milton, P. L.

3. Pestilence; venomous emanations.

Will he steal out of his wholesome bed,

To dare the vile contagion of the night? Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

CONTAGIOUS. † adj. [old Fr. contagieux.] Infectious; caught by approach; poisonous; pestilential.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,

From their misty jaws

Breathe foul, contagious darkness in the air,

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

We sicken soon from her contagious care,
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair.

Prior

CONTA'GIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from contagious.] The quality of being contagious; infection. Hulot.

An excellent preservative against the contagiousness of sin.
W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648), p. 177.

To CONTA'IN. v. a. [contineo, Lat.]

1. To hold as a vessel.

There <sup>could</sup> be any other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

St. John, xxi. 25.

Gently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain.

Milton, P. L.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance.

Milton, P. L.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.

What seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her summ'd up, in her contain'd.

Milton, P. L.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty, than the sun that barren shines.

Milton, P. L.

3. To comprise, as a writing.

Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture. 1 Pet. ii. 6.

4. To restrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.

All men should be contained in duty ever after, without the terror of warlike forces.

Spenser on Ireland.

Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions.

Ibid.

"I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile, he grows impatient. —

— Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves.

Shakespeare.

To CONTA'IN.† v. n. To live in continence.

If they cannot contain, let them marry. 1 Cor. vii. 9.

amounted to eleven grains.

Boyle.

To CONTA'MINATE. v. a. [contamino, Lat.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now

Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

A base pander holds the chamber-door,

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than a dog,

His fairest daughter is contaminated.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,

Even in the bed she hath contaminated.

Shakespeare, Othello.

I quickly shed

Some of his bastard-blood; and, in disgrace,

Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,

And misbroughten blood I spill of thine.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Though it be necessitated, by its relation to flesh, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis like the sun, without contaminating its beams.

Glanville, Apol.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

CONTA'MINATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Corrupt by base mixture; polluted.

How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,

Should'st thou but bear I were licentious;

And that this body, consecrate to thee,

By ruffian lust should be contaminate?

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

The sons of idiots, of ignoble birth,

Contaminate, and viler than the earth.

Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 42.

William Rufus was contaminate as well with his own, as his father's sacrilege.

Spelman, Hist. of Sacrilege, add. by Stephens, § viii.

CONTAMINATION.† n. s. [from contaminate.] Pollution; defilement.

What was he that accused marriage of unholiness out of sancti estote; of uncleanness out of omnia munda mundis; of contamination with carnal concupiscence? Was it not his own pope Innocentius? By. Hall, Mon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 24.

CONTECK.* n. s. [our old word for contest.] Mr.
Tyrwhitt says it is of Saxon origin; but it is more probably of French, and adopted from attaquer.]
Quarrel; contention. Obsolete.

Let none mislike of that may not be mended:

So conteck some by concord might be ended.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

CONTE'CTION.* n. s. [Lat. contego, confectum.] A covering.

Fig-leaves by sundry authors are described to have some appearance unto genitals, and so were aptly formed for such confection of those parts.

Sir T. Brown, Misc. Tracts, p. 15.

CONTE'MERATED. adj. [contemeratus, Lat.] Violated; polluted.

Dict.

To CONTE'MN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,

That still contemned and flattered.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Ever, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems

To argue in thee something more sublime

And excellent than what thy mind contemns.

Milton, P. L.

Pygmalion then the Tyrian sceptre sway'd;

One who contemn'd divine and human laws,

Then strife ensu'd.

Dryden, Virg. Æneid.

CONTE'MNER.† n. s. [old Fr. contemneur.] One that contemns; a despiser; a scorner.

A terrible example to all contemnors and deriders of religion and godliness.

Woolton's Chr. Man. (1576,) k. iij.

Commonly they come home common contemnors of marriage, and ready persuaders of all others to the same.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

That contemner of the world must still know, he hath not yet taken out the Baptist's copy, not made such use of the doctrine of the rod, as is expected from him.

Hammond's Works, iv. 492.

St. Hierom, — a great clerk, and singular contemner of secular superfluities.

moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves qualify and contemper the heat, and hinder the evaporation of moisture.

Ray on the Creation.

The antidotes with which philosophy has medicated the cup of life, though they cannot give it salubrity and sweetness, have at least allayed its bitterness, and contempered its malignity.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 150.

CONTE'MPERAMENT. n. s. [from contempero, Latin.]

The degree of any quality.

There is nearly an equal contemperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere.

Derham.

To CONTE'MPERATE. v. a. [from contemper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and con-temperate the air, but refresh and humectate the earth.

Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and contempering the humours.

Wiseman, Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. s. [from contemperare.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the contemperation of fervour in the heart.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the contemperations of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

TO CONTE'MPLATE. v. a. [contemplor, Latin. This seems to have been once accented on the first syllable.] To consider with continued attention; to study; to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

TO CONTE'MPLATE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;

So many hours must I contemplate. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Sapor had an heaven of glass, which he trod upon, contem- plating over the same as if he had been Jupiter. Peacham.

How can I consider what belongs to myself, when I have been so long contemplating on you. Dryden, Juv. Preface.

CONTE'MPLATION. n. s. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now, what serious contemplation are you in?

Shakspeare.

CONTENTFULLY. \ adv.* [from contentful.] In a perfectly contented way. Hulot.

CONTENTION. \ n. s.* [contentio, Lat. It has been well observed to me by a learned friend, that the three significations, as arranged by Johnson, should be reversed. Eagerness is the primary signification. Emulation is the next, because eagerness is apt to produce emulation. And Strife is the third, as emulation is apt to produce strife.]

1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.

Can we with manner ask what was the difference?

—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention in publick. Shakespeare.
Avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings. Tit. iii. 9.

Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their case, their reason, and their God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom. Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that signed in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife!

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention. Shakespeare, H. VI.

3. Eagerness; zeal; ardor; vehemence of endeavour.

Your own earnestness and contention to effect what you are about, will continually suggest to you several artifices. Holder.

This is an end, which, at first view, appears worthy our utmost contention to obtain. Rogers.

CONTENTIOUS. \ adj.* [old Fr. contentieux.] Quarrelsome; given to debate; perverse; not peaceable.

Thou think'st much that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There are certain contentious humours that are never to be pleased. I. E. Strange.

Rest made them idle, idleness made them curious, and curiosity contentious. Decay of Piety.

CONTENTIOUS Jurisdiction. [In law.] A court which has a power to judge and determine differences between contending parties. The lord chief justices, and judges, have a contentious jurisdiction; but the lords of the treasury, and the commissioners of the customs, have none, being merely judges of accounts and transactions. Chambers.

CONTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from contentious.] Perversely; quarrelsome.

We shall not contentiously rejoice, or only to justify our own, but to applaud and confirm his maturer assertions. Brown.

CONTENTIOUSNESS. \ n. s.* [from contentious.] Proneness to contest; perverseness; turbulence; quarrelsome.

Contentiousness in a feast of charity is more scandal than any posture. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 22.

Do not contentiousness and cruelty, and study of revenge, seldom fail of retaliation? Bentley, Sermon.

CONTENTLESS. adj. [from content.] Discontented; dissatisfied; uneasy.

Best state, contentless,

Have a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse than the worst, content. Shakespeare, Timon.

CONTENTLY. \ adv.* [from content.] In a quiet, contented way.

We'll away unto your country house,
And there we'll learn to live contently.

Bracon, and Pl. Rule a Wife.

CONTENTMENT. \ n. s.* [old Fr. contentement.]

1. Acquiescence without plenary satisfaction.

Such men's contentment must be wrought by stratagem; the usual method of fare is not for them. Hooker.

Submission is the only reasoning between a creature and its Maker, and contentment in his will is the best remedy we can apply to misfortunes. Temple.

Contentment, without external honour, is humility; without the pleasure of eating, temperance. Grew, Cosmol.

Some place the bliss in action, some in ease,
Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope, Ess.

But now no face divine contentment wears,
'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears. Pope.

2. Gratification.

At Paris the prince spent one whole day, to give his mind some contentment in viewing of a famous city. Wotton.

Let my heart so joy in the assured expectation of it, that it may disrelish all the contentments, and condemn all the crosses, which this world can afford me. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. 57.

CONTERMINABLE.* adj. [from the Lat. contermino.] Capable of the same bounds.

There succeeded in the same place the departure of my no less dear niece, your long, and I dare say, your still beloved consort, (for love and life are not conterminable;) as well appeareth by your many tender expressions of that disjuncture.

Sir H. Wotton, Letters.

CONTERMINATE.* adj. [Lat. contermino, conterminatum.] That which hath the same bounds.

Here are kingdoms mix'd

And nations join'd, a strength of empire fix'd
Conterminat with heaven. B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CONTERMINOUS. adj. [conterminus, Latin.] Bordering upon; touching at the boundaries.

This conform'd so many of them, as were conterminous to the colonies and garrisons, to the Roman laws. Hale.

CONTERRA'NEAN.* adj. [Lat. conterraneus.] Of the same earth or country.

I hold that of the orator to be a wild extravagant speech, That if women were not conterranean and mingled with men, angels would descend and dwell among us. Howell, Lett. iv. 7.

CONTERRA'NEOUS. adj. [conterraneus, Lat.] Of the same country. Dict.

CONTESSERA'TION.* n. s. [from the Lat. con and tesseratus, variegated.] Assemblage; collection.

I have not, so much as with one dash of a pencil, offered to describe that person of his, which afforded so unusual a contesseration of elegancies, and set of rarities to the beholder.

B. Oley's Life of G. Herbert, (1671,) sign. O. 5.

To CONTEST. v. a. [contester, Fr., probably from contra testari, Latin.] To dispute; to controvert; to litigate; to call in question.

'Tis evident, upon what account none have presumed to contest the proportion of these ancient pieces. Dryden, Duf.

To CONTEST. v. n.

1. To strive; to contend: followed by with.

Contesting not with them, nor contradicting them with the spirit of frowardness. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 146.

The difficulty of an argument adds to the pleasure of contesting with it, when there are hopes of victory. Burnet.

2. To vie; to emulate.

I do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,

As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Of man, who dares in pomp with Jove contest,

Unchang'd, immortal, and supremely blest? Pope, Odys.

CONTEST. n. s. [from the verb. It is now accented on the first syllable.] Dispute; difference; debate.

This of old no less contesta did move,
Than when for Homer's birth seven cities strove. Denham.

A definition is the only way whereby the meaning of words can be known, without leaving room for contest about it. Locke.

Leave all noisy contests, all immodest clamours, and brawling language. Watts.

CONTESTABLE. adj. [from contest.] That may be contested from; disputable; controvertible.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [from contestable.] Possibility of contesting; challenge. Dict.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

CONTESTABLE. n. s. [contest.] The act of contesting; contestation.

Those of other warmer regions, impatient of the wrongs of their conjugal disappointments, fly out into open contestations.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. iv. 10.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and, which was worse, divers contestations, even with the queen herself. Wotton.

After years spent in domestick, unsociable contestations, she found means to withdraw. Clarendon.

CONTESTATION.* n. s. [old Fr. contestation, Lat. contestor, to witness.] Testimony; proof by witnesses.

We are all as well baptized into the name of the Holy Spirit, as of the Father and Son, wherein is signified, and by a solemn contestation ratified on the part of God, that those three joined are conspiringly propitious and favourable to us.

Barrow, Sermon ii. S. 34.

CONTESTINGLY.* adv. [from To Contest.] In a contending manner.

The more contestingly they set their reason to explain them, the more difficult they, perhaps, will find them at that conjuncture.

W. Montaigne, Ess. (1648,) p. 371.

CONTESTLESS.* adj. [from contest and less.] Not to be disputed.

Modest sense

Of my unequal worth compell'd some doubting;

But now 'tis truth contestless.

A. Hall.

To CONTEX. v. a. [contexo, Lat.] To weave together; to unite by interposition of parts. This word is not in use.

Nature may contex a plant, though that be a perfectly mixt concrete, without having all the elements previously presented to her to compound it of. Boyle.

The fluid body of quicksilver is contexed with the salts it carries up in sublimation. Boyle.

CONTEXT. n. s. [contextus, Latin.] The general series of a discourse; the parts of the discourse that precede and follow the sentence quoted.

That chapter is really a representation of one, which hath only the knowledge, not practice of his duty; as is manifest from the context. Hammond on Fundamentals.

CONTEXT. adj. [from context.] Knit together; firm.

Hollow and thin, for lightness; but withal context and firm, for strength. Derham, Phys. Theol.

To CONTEXT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To knit together. An unusual but useful verb.

This were to unglew the whole world's frame, which is contexted only by commerce and contracts.

Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1639,) p. 776.

CONTEXTURAL.* adj. [from contexture.] Relating to the human frame.

Again, the contextural expressions are of the self same nature.

Smith, Portrait of Old Age, p. 182.

CONTEXTURE. n. s. [from context.] The disposition of parts one amongst others; the composition of any thing out of separate parts; the system; the constitution; the manner in which any thing is woven or formed.

He was not of any delicate contexture; his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Wotton.

Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful contexture of created beings.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Hence 'gan relax

The ground's contexture; hence Tartarian dregs,

Sulphur, and nitrous spume, enkindling fierce,

Bellow'd within their darksome caves.

Philips.

This apt, this wise contexture of the sea,

Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey:

Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore. Blackmore.

CONTIGNATION. n. s. [contignatio, Lat.]

A frame of beams joined together; a story.

We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in storied buildings. Wotton, Architecture.

Where more of these orders than one shall be set in several stories or contignations, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Ibid.

C O N

Their private oratories were appointed in the uppermost
contignation of their houses. Gregory's Works, p. 10.

2. The act of framing or joining a fabrick of wood.

Their own buildings—were without any party-wall, and linked by a contignation into the edifice of France. Burke.

CONTIGUITY.† n. s. [from contiguus.] Actual contact; situation in which two bodies or countries touch upon each other.

He defined magpetical attraction to be a natural imitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity. Brown.

The immediate contiguity of that convex were a real space. Hale, Orig. of Mank.

The bishop having first stated the convicinity and contiguity of the two parishes. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 18.

CONTIGUOUS. adj. [contiguus, Lat.]

1. Meeting so as to touch; bordering upon each other; not separate.

Flame doth not mingle with flame as air doth with air, or water with water, but only remaineth contiguous, as it cometh to pass betwixt consisting bodies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The loud misrule

Of chaos far remov'd; lest fierce extremes,
Contiguous, might distemper the whole frame. Milton, P. L.

The East and West

Upon the globe, a mathenatick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham, Sophy.

Distinguish them by the diminution of the lights and shadows, joining the contiguous object, by the participation of their colours. Dryden, Dufres.

When I viewed it too near, the two halves of the paper did not appear fully divided from one another, but seemed contiguous at one of their angles. Newton, Opt.

2. It has sometimes with.

Water, being contiguous with air, cooleth it, but moisteneth it not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CONTIGUOUSLY. adv. [from contiguus.] Without any intervening spaces.

Thus disembroll'd, they take their proper place,
The next of kin contiguously embrace,
And foes are sunder'd by a larger space. Dryden, Ovid.

CONTIGUOUSNESS.† n. s. [from contiguus.] Close connection; coherence.

The suspicious houses, as if afraid to be infected with more misery than they have already, by contiguousness to others, keep off at a distance, having many waste places betwixt them. Fuller's Holy War, p. 276.

CONTINENCE. } n. s. [continentia, Lat.]

1. Restraint: command of one's self.

He knew what to say; he knew also when to leave off, a continence which is practised by few writers. Dryden, Fob. Pref.

2. Forbearance of lawful pleasure.

Content without lawful venery, is continence; without unlawful, chastity. Grew, Cosmol.

3. Chastity in general.

Where is he?

—In her chamber, making a sermon of continency to her, and rails, and swears, and rates. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Suffer not dishonour to approach
Th' imperial seat; to virtue consecrate,
To justice, continence, and nobility. Titus Andronicus.

4. Moderation in lawful pleasures.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence: abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence, of married persons. Bp. Taylor.

5. Continuity; uninterrupted course.

Answers ought to be made before the same judge, before whom the depositions were produced, lest the continence of the course should be divided; or, in other terms, lest there should be a discontinuance of the cause. Ayliffe, Parergon.

C O N

CONTINENT.† adj. [continens, Lat.; continent, old Fr.]

1. Chaste; abstemious in lawful pleasures.

Life

Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy! Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
A shamefaced and faithful woman is a double grace, and her continent mind cannot be valued. Eccles. xxvi. 15.

2. Restrained; moderate; temperate.

I pray you, have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. Continuous; connected.

The North-east part of Asia is, if not continent with the West side of America, yet certainly it is the least disjointed by sea of all that coast of Asia. Brerewood on Languages.

4. Opposing; restraining.

My desire

All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will. Shakspeare.

CONTINENT.† n. s. [continens, Lat.]

1. Land not disjointed by the sea from other lands.

Whether this portion of the world were rent,
By the rude ocean, from the continent;
Or thus created, it was sure design'd
To be the sacred refuge of mankind. Waller.

The declivity of rivers will be so much the less, and therefore the continents will be the less drained, and will gradually increase in humidity. Bentley, Serm.

2. That which contains any thing. This sense is perhaps only in Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says. But there is abundant and good authority for this usage of the word.

O cleave my sides!

Heart, once be stronger than thy continent,
Crack thy trail case. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Close pent-up guilts,

Rive your contending continent. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I told our pilot that past other men
He most must bear firm spirits, since he sway'd
The continent that all our spirits convey'd. Chapman, Odys. 12.

I did not say that the Book of Articles only was the continent of the Church of England's publick doctrine. Abp. Laud against Fisher, p. 50.

The smaller continent which we call a pipkin. Kennet, Paroch. Antiq. Gloss. in v. Potagnum.

CONTINENTAL.* adj. [from continent.] Respecting a continent; particularly relating to the states on the continent of Europe: a word much used in the politics of modern times.

I must leave it to you—to reflect upon the effect of this or any continental alliances, present or future. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

CONTINENTLY.* adv. [from continent.] Chastely.

When Paul wrote this epistle, it was likely enough that the man would live continently. Martin on the Marr. of Priests, (1554.) X. i.

To CONTINGE. v. n. [contingo, Lat.] To touch; to reach: to happen. Dict.

CONTINGENCE.† } n. s. [from contingent.]

1. The quality of being fortuitous; accidental possibility.

Their credulities assent unto any prognosticks, which, considering the contingency in events, are only in the prescience of God. Brown, Vulg. Err.

For once, O heaven! unfold thy adamantine book;
Not thy firm, immutable decree,
At least the second page of great contingency,
Such as consists with wills originally free. Dryden.

It is a blind contingency of events? Dryden, Amphitryon.

Aristotle says, we are not to build certain rules upon the contingency of human actions. South.

2. The act of reaching to, or touching.

From the time of the sun's being in F, the point of his rising, till he came to L, the point of contingency, the shadow of the style went still forward from S by Q to M.

Gregory's Posthuma, (1650,) p. 39.

CONTINGENT. † adj. [contingens, Lat.]

1. Falling out by chance; accidental; not determinable by any certain rule.

Hazard naturally implies in it, first, something future; secondly, something contingent. South.

I first informed myself in all material circumstances of it, in more places than one, that there might be nothing casual or contingent in any one of those circumstances. Woodward.

2. Dependent upon an uncertainty.

If a contingent legacy be left to any one when he attains, or if he attains, the age of twenty one, and he dies before that time, it is a lapsed legacy. Blackstone.

CONTINGENT. n. s.

1. A thing in the hands of chance.

By contingents we are to understand those things which come to pass without any human forecast. Grew, Cosmol.

His understanding could almost pierce into future contingents, his conjectures improving even to prophecy. South, Serm.

2. A proportion that falls to any person upon a division: thus, in time of war, each prince of Germany is to furnish his contingent of men, money, and munition.

CONTINGENTLY. adv. [from contingent.] Accidentally; without any settled rule.

It is digged out of the earth contingently, and indifferently, as the pyrite and agates. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CONTINGENTNESS. n. s. [from contingent.] Accidentalness.

CONTINUAL. † adj. [continuel, old Fr. continuus, Latin.]

1. Incessant; proceeding without interruption; successive without any space of time between. Continual is used of time, and continuous of place, Dr. Johnson says; but formerly, I may observe, continual had the sense of continuous; as, "walls are either entire and continual, or intermitted," Wotton's Elem. of Architecture.

He that is of a merry heart, hath a continual feast.

Proverbs xv.

Other care perhaps

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbiddor.

Milton, P. L.

'Tis all blank sadness, or continual tears.

Pope.

2. [In law.] A continual claim is made from time to time, within every year and day, to land or other thing, which, in some respect, we cannot attain without danger. For example, if I be disseised of land, into which, though I have right into it, I dare not enter, for fear of beating; it behooveth me to hold on my right of entry to the best opportunity of me and mine heir, by approaching as near it as, I can, once every year as long as I live; and so I save the right of entry to my heir.

Cowel.

3. It is sometimes used for perpetual.

CONTINUALLY. adv. [from continual.]

1. Without pause; without interruption.

The drawing of boughs into the inside of a room, where fire is continually kept, hath been tried with grapes. Bacon.

2. Without ceasing.

Why do not all animals continually increase in bigness, during the whole space of their lives? Bentley, Serm.

CONTINUALNESS. * n. s. [from continual.] Permanence.

So then, though sleep partake not of our devotion, yet this hinders not the continualness of it. Ilies, Rem. p. 141.

CONTINUANCE. * n. s. [from continue.]

1. Succession uninterrupted.

The brute immediately regards his own preservation, or the continuance of his species. Addison, Spect.

2. Permanence in one state.

Continuance of evil doth in itself increase evil. Sidney.

A chamber where a great fire is kept, though the fire be at one stay, yet with the continuance continually hath its heat increased. Sidney.

These Romish casuists speak peace to the consciences of men, by suggesting something which shall satisfy their minds, notwithstanding a known, avowed continuance in sin. South.

3. Abode in a place.

4. Duration; lastingness.

You either fear his humour, or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Their duty depending upon fear, the one was of no greater continuance than the other. Hayward.

That pleasure is not of greater continuance, which arise from the prejudice or malice of its hearers.

Addison, Freeholder.

5. Perseverance.

To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honour, and immortality, eternal life.

Rom. ii. 7.

6. Progression of time.

In thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned. Psal. cxxxix. 16.

7. Resistance to separation of parts; continuity.

Wool, tow, cotton and raw silk, have besides the desire of continuance in regard of the tenuity of their thread, a greediness of moisture. Bacon.

To CONTINUE. * v. a. [Lat. continuo.] To join closely together.

Bullokar, and Cockram.

These four lines contained and terminated that continuating superficies and imaginary plane, which did cut the length of the wall according to right angles.

Potter on the Number 666, (1647,) p. 29.

CONTINUE. adj. [continuatus, Lat.]

1. Immediately united.

We are of him and in him, even as though our very flesh and bones should be made continue with his. Hooker, b. v.

2. Uninterrupted; unbroken.

A most incomparable man breath'd, as it were,

To an untrifable and continue goodness. Shakspeare, Tim.

A clear body broken to small pieces produceth white; and becometh most black, while it is continue and undivided, as we see in deep waters and thick glasses. Peacham.

CONTINUATELY. adv. [from continuate.] With continuity; without interruption.

The water ascends gently, and by intermissions; but it falls *continuate*ly, and with force. Wilkins.

CONTINUATION. n. s. [from continue.] Protraction, or succession uninterrupted.

These things must needs be the works of Providence, for the continuation of the species, and upholding the world. Ray.

The Roman poem is but the second part of the Ilias: a continuation of the same story. Dryden.

CONTINUATIVE. † n. s. [from continuate.]

1. An expression noting permanence or duration.

To these may be added continuatives: as Rome remains to this day; which includes at least two propositions, viz. Rome was, and Rome is. Watts, Logick.

2. A grammatical conjunction.

The conjunctions which conjoin both sentences and their meanings, are either copulatives or continuatives. The principal copulative in English is and. The continuatives are if, because, therefore, that, &c. Harris, Hermes, ii. 2.

CONTINUATOR.† n. s. [from continuate.] He that continues or keeps up the series or succession.

It seems injurious to Providence to ordain a way of production which should destroy the producer, or contrive the continuation of the species by the destruction of the continuator.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

We are told by the continuator of the Saxon chronicle, that a well here continued boiling with streams of blood for several days together.

Aubrey, Berk. ii. 379.

This was begun by Purbach, and carried on by Regiomontanus, the disciple, the continuator, and the perfecter of the system of Purbach.

A. Smith, Hist. of Astr.

TO CONTINUE. v. n. [continuer, Fr. continuo, Latin.]

1. To remain in the same state, or place.

The multitude continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat.

St. Matt. xv. 32.

The popular vote

Inclines here to continue, and build up here

A growing empire.

Milton, P. L.

Happy, but for so happy ill secured,

Long to continue.

Milton, P. L.

He six days and night

Continued making.

Milton, P. L.

2. To last; to be durable.

Thy kingdom shall not continue.

1 Sam. xiii. 14.

For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come.

Heb. xiii. 14.

They imagine that an animal of the longest duration should live in a continued motion, without that rest whereby all others continue.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. To persevere.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed.

St. John, viii. 31.

Down rush'd the rain

Impetuous, and continued, till the earth

No more was seen.

Milton, P. L.

TO CONTINUE. v. a.

1. To protract, or hold without interruption.

O continue thy loving kindness unto them. Psaln xxxvi. 10.

You know how to make yourself happy, by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead.

Pope.

2. To unite without a chasm, or intervening substance.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments and sustenance.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The dark abyss, whose boiling gulph

Tamely endur'd a bridge of wond'rous length,

From hell continu'd reaching th' utmost orb

Of this frail world.

Milton, P. L.

Here Priam's son, Deiphobus, he found,

Whose face and limbs were one continu'd wound;

Dishonest, with lop'd arms, the youth appears,

Spoil'd of his nose, and shorten'd of his ears.

Dryden, Æn.

Where any motion or succession is so slow, as that it keeps not pace with the ideas in our minds, there the series of a constant continued succession is lost; and we perceive it not but with certain gaps of rest between.

Locke.

CONTINUEDLY. adv. [from continued.] Without interruption; without ceasing.

By perseverance, I do not understand a continuedly uniform, equal course of obedience, and such as is not interrupted with the least act of sin.

Norris.

CONTINUER.† n. s. [from continue.]

1. Having the power of perseverance.

I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer.

Shakespeare, Much ado.

2. One who continues in the same state; one who promotes continuance.

The second being the great plague of spiritual desertion, inflicted on indulgent continuers in sin. Hammond, of Consc. § 64.

It is both very reasonable and methodical to represent the first founder, sustainer, and continuer thereof [the church] by this emblem; Lo, I am with you to the end of the world.

More, Expos. Sec. Ch. p. 100

CONTINUITY.† n. s. [continuitas, Lat.]

1. Connection uninterrupted; cohesion; close union.

It is certain, that in all bodies there is an appetite of union, and evitation of solution of continuity.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

After the great lights there must be great shadows, which we call repose, because in reality the sight would be tired, if it were attracted by a continuity of glittering objects.

Dryden.

It wraps itself about the flame, and by its continuity hinders any air or nitre from coming.

Addison on Italy.

2. [In physick.] That texture or cohesion of the parts of an animal body, upon the destruction of which there is said to be a solution of continuity.

Quincy.

As in the natural body a wound or solution of continuity is worse than a corrupt humour, so in the spiritual.

Bacon, Essays.

The solid parts may be contracted by dissolving their continuity; for a fibre, cut through, contracts itself.

Arbutnot.

CONTINUOUS. adj. [continuus, Latin.] Joined together without the intervention of any space.

As the breadth of every ring is thus augmented, the dark intervals must be diminished, until the neighbouring rings become continuous, and are blended.

How can she acquire those hundred graces and motions, and airs, the contortions of every muscular motion in the face?

Swift.

CONTOUR.† n. s. [French.] The outline; the line by which any figure is defined or terminated.

Titian's colouring and contours are, in my humble opinion, preferable to those of Paul Veronese or Tintoretto; though in this sentiment I differ from the Venetian taste in general.

Drummond's Travels, (1754,) p. 64.

CONTRA. A Latin preposition used in composition, which signifies against.

CONTRABAND. adj. [contrabando, Ital. contrary to proclamation.] Prohibited; illegal; unlawful.

If there happen to be found an irreverent expression, or a thought too wanton, in the cargo, let them be staved or forfeited like contraband goods.

Dryden, Fab. Pref.

CONTRABAND.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Illegal or prohibited traffick.

Miraculous must be the activity of that contraband, whose operation in America could, before the end of that year, have re-acted upon England, and checked the exportation from hence.

Burke, Observ. on the St. of the Nation, App.

Governours of provinces, commanders of men of war, and officers of the customs; persons the most bound in duty to prevent contraband, and the most interested in the seizures to be made in consequence of strict regulation.

Ibid.

TO CONTRABAND.† v. a. [from the adjective.] This is an old word; contrabanded being in Cockeram's vocabulary, and explained "uncustomed," i. e. not entered at the custom-house.] To import goods prohibited.

CONTRA'CTOR. n. s. [from contract.] One of the parties to a contract or bargain.

Let the measure of your affirmation or denial be the understanding of your contractor; for he that deceives the buyer or the seller by speaking what is true, in a sense not understood by the other, is a thief. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
All matches, friendships, and societies are dangerous and inconvenient, where the contractors are not equals. L'Estrange.

To CONTRADICT. v. a. [contradico, Lat.]

1. To oppose verbally; to assert the contrary to what has been asserted.
It is not lawful to contradict a point of history which is known to all the world, as to make Hannibal and Scipio contemporaries with Alexander. Dryden.
2. To be contrary to; to repugn; to oppose.
No truth can contradict any truth. Hooker.
I contradict your banes;
If you will marry, make your loves to me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

CONTRADI'CTER. n. s. [from contradict.] One that contradicts; one that opposes; an opposer.

If no contradictor appears herein, the suit will surely be good. Ayliffe, Parergon.
If a gentleman is a little sincere in his representations, he is sure to have a dozen contradictors. Swift, View of Ireland.

CONTRADI'CTION. n. s. [from contradict.]

1. Verbal opposition; controversial assertion.
That tongue,
Inspir'd with contradiction, durst oppose
A third part of the gods. Milton, P. L.
2. Opposition.
Consider him that endureth such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied. Heb. xii. 3.
3. Inconsistency with itself; incongruity in words or thoughts.
Can he make deathless death? That were to make Strange contradiction, which to God himself

Impossible is held; as argument
Of weakness, not of power.

The apostle's advice to be angry and sin not, was a contradiction in their philosophy.

If truth be once perceived, we do thereby also perceive whatsoever is false in contradiction to it.

4. Contrariety, in thought or effect.

All contradictions grow in those minds, which, neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity.

Laws human must be made without contradiction unto any positive law in scripture.

CONTRADICTIONAL.* adj. [from contradiction.] Inconsistent.

We have tried already, and miserably felt what ambition, worldly glory, and immoderate wealth can do; what the boisterous and contradictional hand of a temporal, earthly, and corporeal spirituality can avail to the edifying of Christ's holy church.

CONTRADICTIONOUS.† adj. [from contradict.]

1. Filled with contradictions; inconsistent.

And what might come to pass,
Implies no contradictionous inconsistencies.

If there were more supreme agents, their decrees must still be the more absurd and contradictionous to one another.

The rules of decency, of government, of justice itself, are so different in one place from what they are in another, so partly-coloured and contradictionous, that one would think the species of men altered according to their climates.

2. Inclined to contradict; given to cavil.

Bondet was argumentative, contradictionous, and irascible.

3. Opposite to; inconsistent with.

Where the act is unmanly, and the expectation immoral, or contradictionous to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain.

CONTRADICTIONOUSNESS. n. s. [from contradictionous.]

1. Inconsistency; contrariety to itself.

This opinion was, for its absurdity and contradictionousness, unworthy of the refined spirit of Plato.

2. Disposition to cavil; disputatious temper.

CONTRADICTIONARILY. adv. [from contradictory.] Inconsistently with himself; oppositely to others.

Such as have discoursed heron, have so diversely, contrarily, or contradictionarily delivered themselves, that no affirmative from thence can be reasonably deduced.

CONTRADICTIONARINESS.† n. s. [from contradictory.]

Opposition in the highest degree.

This objection from the contradictionariness of our dreams sounds big at first, and seems very unpromising to be accounted for.

CONTRADICTIONARY. adj. [contradictorius, Latin.]

1. Opposite to; inconsistent with.

The Jews hold, that in case two rabbies should happen to contradict one another, they were yet bound to believe the contradictory assertions of both.

The schemes of those gentlemen are most absurd, and contradictory to common sense.

2. [In logick.] That which is in the fullest opposition, where both the terms of one proposition are opposite to those of another.

CONTRADICTIONARY. n. s. A proposition which opposes another in all its terms; contrariety; inconsistency.

It is common with princes to will contradictories; for it is the solecism of power to think to command the end, and yet not to endure the means.

To ascribe unto him a power of election, not to chuse this or that indifferently, is to make the same thing to be determined to one, and to be not determined to one, which are contradictories.

CONTRADISTINCT.* adj. [from contradistinguish.]

Distinguished by opposite qualities.

The grasshoppers and capers are in their form and fashion, their substance and consistence, clean contrary one to another; the oak, being protuberant, rough, crusty, and hard; the other, round, smooth, spongy, and soft: and therefore may be very fit emblems to represent the several contradistinct parts of the body, under the same variety of consistence.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 183.

CONTRADISTINCTION. n. s. [from contradistinguish.]

Distinction by opposite qualities.

We must trace the soul in the ways of intellectual action, whereby we may come to the distinct knowledge of what is meant by imagination, in contradistinction to some other powers.

That there are such things as sins of infirmity, in contradistinction to those of presumption, is a truth not to be questioned.

CONTRADISTINCTIVE.* adj. [from contradistinct.]

That which marks contradistinction.

The diversity between the contradistinctive pronouns, and the enclitic, is not unknown even to the English tongue.

To CONTRADISTINGUISH.† v. a. [from contra and distinguish.]

To distinguish not simply by differential but by opposite qualities. Used with to and from; but generally with to.

The descent into hell, as it now stands in the Creed, signifies something commenced after Christ's death, contradistinguished to his burial.

The soul of Christ contradistinguished from his body.

By flesh, or flesh and blood, especially when contradistinguished to the spirit, is commonly meant, not human nature simply considered; but human nature thus corrupted, or sinful flesh.

Christ's active obedience they do contradistinguish to what they call negative justification, which they refer to the passive obedience of Christ.

The primary ideas we have peculiar to body, as contradistinguished to spirit, are the cohesion of solid, and consequently separable parts, and a power of communicating motion by impulse.

These are our complex ideas of soul and body, as contradistinguished.

CONTRAFFSURE. n. s. [from contra and fissure.]

Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, and then it is called fissure; or in the contrary part, in which case it obtains the name of contraffissure.

CONTRAINDICANT.* n. s. [contra and indicans, Lat.]

See To CONTRAINDICATE. A symptom forbidding the usual treatment of the disorder.

Throughout it was full of contraindicants.

To CONTRAINDICATE. v. a. [contra and indico, Lat.]

To point out some peculiar or incidental symptom or method of cure, contrary to what the general tenour of the malady requires.

Vomits have their use in this malady; but the age and sex of the patient, or other urgent or contraindicating symptoms must be observed.

CONTRAINDICATION. n. s. [from contraindicare.]

An indication or symptom, which forbids that to be done which the main scope of a disease points out at first.

I endeavour to give the most simple idea of the distemper, and the proper diet, abstracting from the complications of the first, or the contraindications to the second.

CONTRAMURE. n. s. [contremur, French.]

CONTRARYTENCY. n. s. [from contra and nitens, Lat.]

Reaction; a resistency against pressure.

CONTRANATURAL.* adj. [contra and natural.] Opposite to nature; unnatural.

'Tis the perfection of every being to act according to the principle of its own nature; and it is the nature of an arbitrary principle to act or not, to do or undo, upon no account but its own will and pleasure: to be determined and tied up, either by itself, or from abroad, is violent and contranatural.
Bp. Rust, Disc. on Truth, § 6.

CONTRAPOSITION.† n. s. [from contra and position.]

A placing over against.

Many other things might here be alleged to shew how exact and exquisite an antithesis and contraposition there is between the apostles and cardinals.

Potter on the Numb. 656, p. 91.

If I have spoken more than needs concerning the opposition, or contraposition, of things in general, I have therefore done it, because I am fully persuaded, &c. Ibid. p. 122.

The extremities of which are no other than the last contraposition or opposition to God, in the state of death.

Cabalistical Dialogue, (1682,) p. 16.

CONTRAPUNTIST.* n. s. [from the Ital. contrapunto, counterpoint, in musick, i. e. contra-point. See COUNTERPOINT.] One who is skilled in counterpoint.

Counterpoint is certainly so much an art, that to be, what they call, a learned contrapuntist, is with harmonists a title of no small excellence.

Mason on Ch. Mus. p. 209.

CONTRAREGULARITY. n. s. [from contra and regularity.] Contrariety to rule.

It is not only its not promoting, but its opposing, or at least its natural aptness to oppose the greatest and best of ends; so that it is not so properly an irregularity as a contraregularity.

Norris.

CONTRARIANT.† adj. [contrariant, from contrarius, French.] Inconsistent; contradictory: a term of law, Dr. Johnson says; but it is also a general word, used by an admirable author, in the sense of opposite, repugnant. In its legal sense, it is also of much higher authority than Ayliffe, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites.

Such canons, &c. as be not contrariant nor repugnant to the laws, statutes, and customs of this realm.

Acts of Parl. 25 H. 8. c. 19.

The Christian religion contained precepts far more ungrateful and troublesome to flesh and blood, and contrariant to the general inclination of mankind.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. II.

The very depositions of witnesses themselves, being false, various, contrariant, single, inconcludent. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTRARIES. n. s. [from contrary.] In logick, propositions which destroy each other; but of which the falshood of one does not establish the truth of the other.

If two universals differ in quality, they are contraries; as, every vine is a tree, no vine is a tree. These can never be both true together, but they may be both false. Watts, Logick.

CONTRARIETY. n. s. [from contrarietas, Latin.]

1. Repugnance; opposition.

The will about one and the same thing may, in contrary respects, have contrary inclinations, and that without contrariety.

Hooker.

Making a contrariety the place of my memory, in her foulness I beheld, Pamela's fairness, still looking on Mopsa, but thinking on Pamela.

Sidney.

He which will perfectly recover a sick and restore a diseased body unto health, must not endeavour so much to bring it to a state of simple contrariety, as of fit proportion in contrariety unto those evils which are to be cured.

Hooker.

It principally failed by late setting out, and by some contrariety of weather at sea.

Wotton.

Their religion had more than negative contrariety to virtue.

Decay of Piety.

There is a contrariety between those things that conscience inclines to, and those that entertain the senses.

South.

These two interests it is to be feared, cannot be divided; but they will also prove opposite, and not resting in a bare diversity, quickly rise into a contrariety.

South.

There is nothing more common than contrariety of opinions; nothing more obvious than that one man wholly disbelieves what another only doubts of, and a third stedfastly believes and firmly adheres to.

Locke.

2. Inconsistency; quality or position destructive of its opposite.

He will be here, and yet he is not here;

How can these contrarieties agree? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

CONTRARILY. adv. [from contrary.]

1. In a manner contrary.

Many of them conspire to one and the same action, and all this contrarily to the laws of specifick gravity, in whatever posture the body be formed.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Different ways; in different directions.

Though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them so contrarily, and consequently some of them to what is evil.

Locke.

CONTRARINESS. n. s. [from contrary.] Contrariety; opposition.

Dict.

CONTRARIOUS.† adj. [from contrary.] Opposite; repugnant the one to the other.

Malice — is contrarious and repugnant to benevolence.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 109.

God of our fathers, what is man!

That Thou towards him, with hand se various,

Or might I say contrarious,

Temper'st thy providence through his short course?

Milton, S. A.

CONTRARIOUSLY. adv. [from contrarious.] Oppositely; contrarily.

Many things, having full reference

To one consent, may work contrariouly. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

CONTRARIWISE. adv. [contrary and wise.]

1. Conversely.

Divers medicines in greater quantity move stool, and in smaller urine; and so, contrariwise, some in greater quantity move urine, and in smaller stool.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Every thing that acts upon the fluids, must, at the same time, act upon the solids, and contrariwise.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Oppositely.

The matter of faith is constant, the matter, contrariwise, of actions daily changeable.

Hooker.

This request was never before made by any other lords; but, contrariwise, they were humble suitors to have the benefit and protection of the English laws.

Davies on Ireland.

The sun may set and rise:

But we, contrariwise,

Sleep, after our short light,

One everlasting night.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

CONTRARY.† adj. [contrarius, Latin.] The accent on this word was formerly on the first or second syllable, as suited the convenience of our poets. Even Milton presents both accents. See Par. Lost, i. 161. Samson Agonist. 971. The word is still vulgarly pronounced with the accent on the second syllable.]

1. Opposite; contradictory; not simply different, or not alike, but repugnant, so that one destroys or obstructs the other.

Perhaps some thing, repugnant to her kind,

By strong antipathy the soul may kill;

But what can be contrary to the mind,

Which holds all contraries in concord still,

Davies.

2. Inconsistent; disagreeing.

He that believes it, and yet lives contrary to it, knows that he hath no reason for what he does.

Tillotson.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, do not argue that they do not all pursue good; but that the same thing is not good to every man alike.

Locke.

3. Adverse; in an opposite direction.

The ship was in the midst of the sea, tossed with the waves;
for the wind was contrary. St. Matt. xiv. 24.

By virtue of a clean contrary gale.

Habington's Castara, p. 116.

CONTRARY. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A thing of opposite qualities.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He sung
Why contraries ~~had~~ thunder in the cloud. Cowley, Davidic.

Honour should be concern'd in honour's cause;

That is not to be cur'd by contraries,

As bodies are, whose health is often drawn

From rankest poisons. Southern's Orontoko.

2. A proposition contrary to some other; a fact contrary to the allegation.

The instances brought by our author are but slender proofs of a right to civil power and dominion in the first-born, and do rather shew the contrary. Locke.

3. On the CONTRARY. In opposition; on the other side.

He pleaded still not guilty:

The king's attorney, on the contrary,

Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions

Of diverse witnesses.

Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

If justice stood on the side of the single person, it ought to give good men pleasure to see that right should take place;
but when, on the contrary, the commonweal of a whole nation is overborn by private interest, what good man but must lament?

Swift.

4. To the CONTRARY. To a contrary purpose; to an opposite intent.

They did it not for want of instruction to the contrary.

Stillinger's.

To CONTRARY. v. a. [contrarius, French.] To oppose; to thwart; to contradict.

When I came to court I was advised not to contrary the king. Latimer.

Finding in him the force of it, he would no further contrary it, but employ all his service to medicine it. Sidney.

You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

If they could have contrariet him for any falsity.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 217.

CONTRARY-MINDED. \ adj.* [from contrary and mind.]
Of a different opinion.

We are ready to impute to the contrary-minded not only those things which they profess to hold, but these which we conceive to be consequent to their opinions.

Bp. Hall, The Peacemaker.

CONTRAST. † n. s. [contraste, Fr.] Opposition and dissimilitude of figures, by which one contributes to the visibility or effect of another.

Longinus says, that Cecilius wrote of the sublime in a low way: on the contrary, Mr. Pope calls Longinus "the great sublime he draws." Let it be my ambition to imitate Longinus in style and sentiment; and, like Cecilius, to make these appear a contrast to my subject; to write of deformity with beauty; and by a finished piece to atone for an ill-turned person.

Hay, Essay on Deformity, p. 3.

Those umbrageous pines,
That frown in front, and give each azure hill
The charm of contrast.

Mason, English Garden.

To CONTRAST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in opposition, so that one figure shews another to advantage.

2. To shew another figure to advantage by its colour or situation.

The figures of the groups must not be all on a side, that is,
with their face and bodies all turned the same way; but must contrast each other by their several positions. Dryden.

CONTRATENOR. \ n. s.* [from contra and tenor, in contradistinction to the tenor part; written also contratenor.] In musick, the middle part; higher than the tenor, and below the treble.

In his [Dr. Croft's] time there was a very fine contratenor in the Royal Chapel, called Elford, to whom, in the preface to his anthems, he gives great, and I suppose deserved applause, and for whose voice he purposely set several solos.

Mason on Church Musick, p. 136.

CONTRAVALLATION. n. s. [from contra and vallo, Latin.] The fortification thrown up, by the besiegers, round a city, to hinder the sallies of the garrison.

When the late czar of Muscovy first acquainted himself with mathematical learning, he practised all the rules of cir-cumvallation, and contravallation at the siege of a town in Livonia. Watts, Logick.

To CONTRAVENE. † v. a. [contra and venio,
Lat.] To oppose; to obstruct; to baffle.

Laws, that place the subjects in such a state, contravene
the first principles of the compact of authority: they exact obedience, and yield no protection.

Johnson, Journey to the West. Islands.

CONTRAVE'NER. n. s. [from contravene.] He who opposes another.

CONTRAVEN'TION. † n. s. [French.] Opposition.

They shall voluntarily accept the condition and fulminations of the said censures, in case of contravention.

Ld. Herbert, Hist. of H. VIII. p. 191.

There may be holy contradictions, and humble contraventions, (as to God's silent providence, so to his declared will), either discovered by effects, or by his express word.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 57.

If christianity did not lend its name to stand in the gap, and to employ or divert these humours, they must of necessity be spent in contraventions to the laws of the land. Swift.

CONTRAVE'RSION. \ n. s.* [Lat. contra and versio.] A turning to the opposite side.

The second stanza was called the antistrophe from the contraversion of the chorus; the singers, in performing that, turning from the left hand to the right. Congreve.

CONTRAVE'RSA. † n. s. [contra, against, and versus, a name by which the Spaniards call black hellebore; and, perhaps, sometimes poison in general.] A species of birthwort growing in Jamaica, where it is much used as an alexipharmick. Miller.

No Indian is so savage, but that he knows the use of his tobacco and contraverea. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 51.

CONTRE'CTATION. † n. s. [contractatio, Latin.] A touching or handling. Dict.

The greatest danger of all is, in the contrectation and touching of their hands.

Forrand's Love Melancholy, (1540,) p. 254.

CONTRI'BTARY. adj. [from con and tributary.] Paying tribute to the same sovereign.

Thus we are engaged in the objects of geometry and arithmetick; yea, the whole mathematicks must be contributory, and to them all nature pays a subsidy. Glanville, Seepais.

To CONTRIBUTE. † v. a. [contribuo, Latin.
Formerly accented on the first syllable.] To give to some common stock: to advance towards some common design.

Their several shares of woe

Must contribute to Philip's overthrow.

May, Edward III. (1635,) B. iii.

Yet scarce to contribute

Each orb a glimpse of light.

Milton, P. L. vii. 155.

England contributes much more than any other of the allies.

Addison on the War.

His master contributed a great sum of money to the Jesuits' church, which is not yet quite finished. Addison on Italy.

To CONTRIBUTE. v. n. To bear a part; to have a share in any act or effect.

Whatever praises may be given to works of judgement, there is not even a single beauty in them to which the invention must not contribute. Pope, Ess. on Homer.

CONTRIBUTER.* See CONTRIBUTOR.

CONTRIBUTION.† n. s. [old Fr. contribution.]

1. The act of promoting some design in conjunction with other persons.
2. That which is given by several hands for some common purpose.

It hath pleased them of Macedonia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints. Rom. xv. 26.

Parents owe their children not only material subsistence for their body, but much more spiritual contributions for their mind. Dugby.

• Beggars are now maintained by voluntary contributions. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

3. That which is paid for the support of an army lying in a country.

The people 'twixt Philippi and this ground,
Do stand but in a forc'd affection;
For they have grudg'd us contribution. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

CONTRIBUTIVE.† adj. [from contribute.] That which has the power or quality of promoting any purpose in concurrence with other motives.

As the value of the promises renders them most proper incentives to virtue, so the manner of proposing we shall find also highly contributive to the same end. Decay of Piety.

In the matter of beauty, we challenge to ourselves something as contributive to handsomeness, which is not our's by a native, personal, and individual title. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 99.

CONTRIBUTOR.† n. s. [written contributor by Cotgrave; old Fr. contributeur.] One that bears a part in some common design; one that helps forward, or exerts his endeavours to some end, in conjunction with others.

I promis'd we would be contributors,
And bear his charge of wooing, whatsoe'er. Shakespeare.
A grand contributor to our dissensions is passion. Decay of Piety.

Art thou a true lover of thy country? Zealous for its religious and civil liberties? And a cheerful contributor to all those publick expences which have been thought necessary to secure them? Atterbury.

The whole people were witnesses to the building of the ark and tabernacle, they were all contributors to it. Forbes.

CONTRIBUTORY.† adj. [from contribute.] Promoting the same end; bringing assistance to some joint design, or increase to some common stock.

Like bonfires of contributory wood,
Every man's look shew'd, fed with others' spirit. Chapman, Bussy D'Ambois.

To CONTRISTATE.† v. a. [contristo, Lat.] To sadden; to make sorrowful; to make melancholy. Not now used.

Blackness and darkness are but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contristate, but very little. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Let me never more contristate thy Holy Spirit with these vanities. Spiritual Conquest, (1651.) P. i. p. 64.

CONTRISTATION.† n. s. [from contristate.] The act of making sad; the state of being made sad; sorrow; heaviness of heart; sadness; sorrowfulness; gloominess; grief; moan; mournfulness; trouble; discontent; melancholy. Not now used.

Incense and odorous smells, such as were of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of sadness and contristation of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The Eastern traditioners mean by this a continual sadness and contristation of heart, which Adam had, and made, for the loss of Paradise. Gregory's Works, p. 123.

The husband, tender and pusillanimous, falleth into pangs of fears and contristation.

CONTRITE.† adj. [contritus, Lat.] This word formerly had the accent on either syllable; the example from Shakespeare presenting it on the first; that from Milton, on the last. It is now usually pronounced with the accent on the first.]

1. Bruised; much worn.
2. Worn with sorrow; harassed with the sense of guilt; penitent. In the books of divines contrite is sorrowful for sin, from the love of God and desire of pleasing him; and attrite is sorrowful for sin, from the fear of punishment.

I Richard's body have interred now;
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it is-sud forced drops of blood.

With tear,

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton, P. L.

The contrite sinner is restored to pardon, and, through faith in Christ, our repentance is intitled to salvation. Rogers.

CONTRITENESS. n. s. [from contrite.] Contrition; repentance. Dict.

CONTRITION. n. s. [from contrite.]

1. The act of grinding; or rubbing to powder.
Some of those coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground; where I see not what can be justly pretended for those changes, besides the breaking of their parts into less parts by that contrition. Newton, Opt.
2. Penitence; sorrow for sin: in the strict sense, the sorrow which arises from the desire to please God, distinguished from attrition, or imperfect repentance produced by dread of hell.

What is sorrow and contrition for sin? A being grieved with the conscience of sin, not only that we have thereby incurred such danger, but also that we have so unkindly grieved and provoked so good a God. Hammond, Pract. Cat.

Fruits of more pleasing savour, from thy seed Sown with contrition in his heart, than those Which, his own hand manuring, all the trees
Of paradise could have produc'd. Milton, P. L.

Your fasting, contrition, and mortification, when the church and state appoints, and that especially in times of greater riot and luxury. Sprat, Sermon.

My future days shall be one whole contrition;
A chapel will I build with large endowment,
Where every day an hundred aged men
Shall all hold up their wither'd hands to heav'n. Dryden.

CONTRIVABLE. adj. [from contrive.] Possible to be planned by the mind; possible to be invented and adjusted.

It will hence appear how a perpetual motion may seem easily contrivable. Wilkins, Udalus.

CONTRIVANCE. n. s. [from contrive.]

1. The act of contriving; 'excogitation; the thing contrived.

There is no work impossible to these contrivances, but there may be as much acted by this art as can be fancied by imagination. Wilkins, Math. Mag.

Instructed, you'll explore Divine contrivance, and a God adore. Blackmore, Creation.

2. Scheme; plan; disposition of parts or causes.
Our bodies are made according to the most curious artifice, and orderly contrivance. Glanville, Sceptis.

3. A conceit; a plot; an artifice.
Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,
To try your love, and make you doubt of mine? Dryden.

There might be a feint, a contrivance in the matter, to draw him into some secret ambush. Atterbury.

C O N

To CONTRIVE.† v. a. [controuwer, Fr.]

1. To plan out; to excogitate.

One that slept in the contriving lust, and waked to do it.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

What more likely to contrive this admirable frame of the universe than infinite wisdom.

Tillotson.

Our poet has always some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means which will naturally conduct him to his end.

Dryden.

2. To wear away. Out of use. [Lat. contero, contrivi.]

Three ages, such as mortal men contrive.

Spenser, F. Q.

Please ye, we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress' health.

Shakspeare, Tem. of the Shrew.

To CONTRIVE. v. n. To form or design; to plan; to scheme; to complot.

Is it enough

That masking habits and a borrowed name,

Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame?

Prior.

CONTRIVEMENT.† n. s. [from contrive.] Invention.

Dict.

The king being not only active to meet their contrivements, but had some advantage upon them.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 43.

To sit down and consider the admirable contrivement and artifice of this great fabrick of the universe.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 176.

CONTRIVER. n. s. [from contrive.] An inventor; one that plans a design; a schemer.

I, the mistress of your charms,

The close contriver of all harms,

Was never call'd to bear my part.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Egeus, who the fraud's contriver was.

Denham.

Plain loyalty, not built on hope,

I leave to your contriver, Pope:

None loves his king and country better,

Yet none was ever less their debtor.

Swift.

Scenes of blood and desolation, I had painted as the common effects of those destructive machines; whereof, he said, some evil genius, enemy to mankind, must have been the first contriver.

Swift, Gull. Trav.

CONTROL. n. s. [controle, that is, contre, role, French.]

1. A register or account kept by another officer, that each may be examined by the other.

2. Check; restraint.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;

And own no liberty, but where they may,

Without control, upon their fellows prey.

Waller.

He shall feel a force upon himself from within, and from the control of his own principles, to engage him to do worthily.

South.

If the sinner shall win so complete a victory over his conscience, that all those considerations shall be able to strike no terror into his mind, lay no restraint upon his lusts, no control upon his appetites, he is certainly too strong for the means of grace.

South, Sermon.

Speak, what Phœbus has inspir'd thy soul

For common good, and speak without control.

Dryden, Homer.

3. Power; authority; superintendence.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,

Are their male's subjects, and at their controls.

Shakspeare.

To CONTROL.† v. a. [from the noun, Dr. Johnson says; but it is from the old Fr. verb, contreroller. V. Cotgrave.]

1. To keep under check by a counter reckoning.

2. To govern; to restrain; to subject.

Authority to convent, to control, to punish, as far as with excommunication, whomsoever they think worthy.

Hooker, Pref.

C O N

Give me a staff of honour for mine

But not a sceptre to control the world.

Titus Andronicus.

Who shall control me for my works?

Eccles. v. 3.

I feel my virtue struggling in my soul;

But stronger passion does its pow'r control.

Dryden, Aurengz.

With this he did a herd of goats control,

Which by the way he met, and slyly stole;

Clad like country swain he pip'd and sung,

And playing drove his jolly troop along.

Dryden.

O, dearest Andrew, says the humble droll,

Henceforth may I obey, and thou control.

Prior.

3. To overpower: to confute: as, he controlled all the evidence of his adversary.

As for the time while he was in the Tower, and the manner of his brother's death, and his own escape, she knew they were things that a very few could control.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

CONTROLLABLE. adj. [from control.] Subject to control; subject to command; subject to be overruled.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore, in its present workings, not controllable by reason.

South.

CONTROLLER.† n. s. [old Fr. controleur.] One that has the power of governing or restraining; a superintendent.

He does not calm his contumacious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller.

Shakspeare, II. VI.

Shall the controller of proud Nemesis

In lawless rage upbraid each other's vice?

Ep. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

They were driven to have their nomenclators, controllers, or remembrancers, to tell them the names of their servants and people about them, so many they were.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 421.

The great controller of our fate,

Deign'd to be man, and liv'd in low estate.

Dryden.

CONTROLLERSHIP. n. s. [from controller.] The office of a controller.

CONTROLMENT.† n. s. [from control.]

1. The power or act of superintending or restraining.

It is an excellent thing to have a giant's strength; yet where it is, let it be so tempered, that law stoop not to every governor's humour and controlment.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634), p. 123.

2. The state of being restrained; restraint.

They made war and peace with one another, without controlment.

Davies on Ireland.

3. Opposition; confutation.

Were it reason that we should suffer the same to pass without controlment, in that current meaning whereby every where it prevaileth.

Hooker, iii. § 7.

4. Resistance; hostility.

Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment.

Shakspeare, K. John.

CONTROVERSE.* n. s. [old Fr. controverse.]

Debate; controversy; dispute.

So fitly now here cometh next on place,

After the proofe of Prowesse ended well,

The controverse of Beautie's soveraine grance.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. v. 2.

For he the appeal of innocence derides,

And with his sword the controverse decides.

Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 15.

Come, buckle on thy armour; let us end

This controverse, since thou wilt needs contend.

Ibid. p. 55.

The controverse of life and death

Is arbitrated by his breath.

Sandys, Ps. p. 106.

To CONTROVERSE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To dispute; to debate. See To CONTROVERT.

Persuasion ought to be fully settled in men's hearts that in litigations, and controverted causes of such quality, the Will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine.

Hooker.

In exact discussing of all controverted questions.

Sir B. Sandys, State of Religion.

CONTROVERSIAL. adj. [from controversy.] Relating to disputes; disputatious.

It happens in controversial discourses as it does in the assaulting of towns, where, if the ground be but firm whereon the batteries are erected, there is no farther enquiry whom it belongs to, so it affords but a fit rise for the present purpose.

Locke.

CONTROVERSIALIST. * n. s. [from controversial.] This is a modern word; and it is curious to observe, that heretofore it was controverser, controversor, and controverser, and even controversy-writer; none of which have hitherto been noticed.] One who is engaged in literary war; a disputant.

The translator should be philologist, and not controversialist.

Abp. Newcome, Hist. View of Eng. Tr. of the Bible, p. 349.

In 1550 he [Robert Crowley] printed the first edition of Pierce Worman's Vision, but with the ideas of a controversialist, and with the view of helping forward the reformation by the revival of a book which exposed the absurdities of popery in strong satire.

Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 187.

Marcion, a rash and wild controversialist, published a recension, or chastised edition of St. Luke's Gospel.

Paley's View of the Evidence of Christianity, i. 9. § 7.

CONTROVERSER. * } n. s. [Lat. controversus.] A disputant; a controvertist.

Thus saith the controverser.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 91.

In which place, bottled before to the brain by many controversers, mine adversary hath learned of his Bellarmine to triumph above measure.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 29.

CONTROVERSY. n. s. [from controversia, Latin.]

1. Dispute; debate; agitation of contrary opinions: a dispute is commonly oral, and a controversy in writing.

How cometh it to pass that we are so rent with mutual contentions, and that the church is so much troubled? If men had been willing to learn, all these controversies might have died the very day they were first brought forth.

Hooker, b. 1.

Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. 1 Tim.

Wild controversy then, which long had slept,

Into the press from ruin'd cloisters leapt.

Denham.

This left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others.

Locke.

2. A suit in law.

If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgement, that the judges may judge them, then they shall justify the righteous and condemn the wicked.

Deut. xxv. 1.

3. A quarrel.

The Lord hath a controversy with the nations.

Jer. xxv. 31.

4. Opposition; enmity. This is an unusual sense.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it

With lusty sinews; throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of controversy.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

CONTROVERSY-WRITER. * n. s. He who is now called a controversialist, or controvertist.

Their schoolmen, casuists, and controversy-writers have so mixed Aristotle's philosophy with their divinity.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 159.

TO CONTROVERT. * v. a. [from controverto, Lat.]

This verb, in our old dictionaries, is defined, to strive, to contend, or be at variance about a matter; not confining the meaning, as Dr. Johnson confines it, to literary dispute. Controverser, which he had introduced under this word as perhaps intended for controvert, is a true word, and no mistake of Hooker's. See TO CONTROVERSE.] To debate; to ventilate in opposite books; to dispute any thing in writing.

If any person shall think fit to controvert them, he may do it very safely for me.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

CO'NTROVERTER. * n. s. [from controvert.] A disputant; a controversialist.

Some controverters in divinity are like swaggerers in a tavern, that catch that which stands next them, the candlestick, or pots.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

In divinity

As controverters in vouch'd texts leave out

Shrewd words, which might against them clear the doubt.

Donne, Poems, p. 125.

CONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [from controvert.] Disputable; that may be the cause of controversy.

Discoursing of matters dubious, and many controvertible truths, we cannot without arrogance intreat a credulity, or implore any farther assent than the probability of our reasons and verity of our experiments.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'NTROVERTIST. n. s. [from controvert.] Disputant, a man versed or engaged in literary wars or disputations.

Who can think himself so considerable as not to dread this mighty man of demonstration, this prince of controvertists, this great lord and possessor of first principles.

Tillotson.

CONTUMACIOUS. adj. [from contumacia, Latin.] Obstinate; perverse; stubborn; inflexible.

He is in law said to be a contumacious person, who, on his appearance afterwards, departs the court without leave.

Ayliffe's Parergon

There is another very efficacious method for subduing of the most obstinate contumacious sinner, and bringing him into the obedience of the faith of Christ.

Hammond, Fundamentals.

CONTUMACIOUSLY. adv. [from contumacious.] Obstinate; stubbornly; inflexibly; perversely.

CONTUMACIOUSNESS. n. s. [from contumacious.] Obstinacy; perverseness; inflexibility; stubbornness.

From the description I have given of it, a judgement may be given of the difficulty and contumaciousness of cure.

Wise man.

CONTUMACY. n. s. [from contumacia, Latin.]

1. Obstinacy; perverseness; stubbornness; inflexibility.

Such acts

Of contumacy will provoke the Highest

To make death in us live.

Milton, P. L.

2. [In law.] A wilful contempt and disobedience to any lawful summons or judicial order.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

These certificates do only, in the generality, mention the party's contumacies and disobedience.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONTUMELIOUS. adj. [from contumeliosus, Latin.]

1. Reproachful; rude; sarcastick; contemptuous.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,

In open market-place produc'd they me

To be a publick spectacle.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

In all the quarrels and tumults at Rome, though the people frequently proceeded to rude contumelious language, yet no blood was ever drawn in any popular commotions, 'till the time of the Gracchi.

Swift.

2. Inclined to utter reproach or practise insults; brutal; rude.

There is yet another sort of contumelious persons, who, indeed, are not chargeable with that circumstance of ill employing their wit; for they use none in it.

Gov. of the Tongue.

Giving our holy virgins to the stain

Of contumelious, beastly, madbrain'd war.

Shakspeare, Timon.

3. Productive of reproach; shameful; ignominious.

As it is in the highest degree injurious to them, so is it contumelious to him.

Doddy of Piety.

CONTUMELIOUSLY. adv. [from contumelious.] Reproachfully; contemptuously; rudely.

The people are not wont to take so great offence, when they are excluded from honours and offices, as when their persons are contumeliously trodden upon.

Hooker, i. § 10.

Fie, lords; that you, being supreme magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should break the peace.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

CONTUMELIOUSNESS. n. s. [from contumelious.] Rudeness; reproach.

CONTUMELY. n. s. [contumelia, Latin.] Rudeness; contemptuousness; bitterness of language; reproach.

If the helm of chief government be in the hands of a few of the wealthiest, then laws, providing for continuance thereof, must make the punishment of contumely and wrong, offered unto any of the common sort, sharp and grievous, that so the evil may be prevented.

Hooker, i. § 10.

The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay. Shakspeare, Ham.

It was undervalued and depressed with some bitterness and contumely. Clarendon.

Why should any man be troubled at the contumelies of those whose judgement deserves not to be valued? Tillotson.

Eternal contumely attend that guilty title which claims exemption from thought, and arrogates to its wearers the prerogative of brutes. Addison, Guardian.

To CONTU'ND.* v. a. [Lat. contundo. This verb is in our old dictionaries, and is defined "to beat small in a mortar." It has a peulantick look and sound, and I find it used only by the annotator on Don Quixote. The word is now confuse.] To bruise; to beat together.

His muscles were so extended and contunded that he was not corpus mobile. Gayton, Notes on D. Quar. iii. 2.

To CONTU'SE. v. a. [contusus, Latin.]

1. To beat together; to bruise.

Of their roots, barks, and seeds, contused together, and mingled with other earth, and well watered with warm water, there came forth herbs much like the other. Bacon.

2. To bruise the flesh without a breach of the continuity.

The ligature contuses the lips in cutting them, so that they require to be digested before they can unite. Wiseman.

CONTU'SION. n. s. [from contusio.]

1. The act of beating or bruising.

2. The state of being beaten or bruised.

Take a piece of glass, and reduce it to powder, it acquiring by contusion a multitude of minute surfaces, from a diaphanous, degenerates into a white body. Boyle on Colours.

3. A bruise; a compression of the fibres, distinguished from a wound.

That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all bruise of time. Shakspeare, II. VI.
The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and all contusions, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon.

CONVALE'SCENCE.* } n. s. [old Fr. convalescence, from CONVALE'SCENCY. } convalesco, Latin.] Renewal of health; recovery from a disease.

This is a state, a condition, a calamity, in respect of which any other sickness were a convalescence, and any greater, less.

Doane's Devotions, (1624,) p. 601.

Being in a place out of the reach of any alarm, she recovered her spirits to a reasonable convalescence. Clarendon.

CONVALE'SCENT. adj. [convalescens, Latin.] Recovering; returning to a state of health.

CONVE'NABLE. adj. [convenable, French.]

1. Consistent with; agreeable to; accordant to. Not now in use.

He is so meek, wise, and merciable,
And with his word his work is convenable.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

2. That may be convened.

To CONVE'NE.* v. n. [convenio, Latin.]

1. To come together; to associate; to unite.

VOL. I.

The fire separates the aqueous parts from the others where-with they were blended in the concrete, and brings them into the receiver, where they convene into a liquor. Boyle.

In short-sighted men, whose eyes are too plump, the refraction being too great, the rays converge and convene in the eyes, before they come at the bottom. Newton, Opticks.

2. To assemble for any publick purpose.

There are settled periods of their convening, or a liberty left to the prince for convoking the legislature. Locke.

A synod was soon to convene. Robertson, Hist. of Scotland.

To CONVE'NE. v. a.

1. To call together; to assemble; to convoke.

All the fictitious and schismatical people would frequently, as well in the night as the day, convene themselves by the sound of a bell. Clarendon.

And now the almighty father of the gods

Convenes a counsel in the blest abodes. Pope, Statius.

2. To summon judicially.

By the papal canon law, clerks, in criminal and civil causes, cannot be convened before any, but an ecclesiastical judge. Ayliffe.

CONVE'NER.* n. s. [from conveni.] One who assembles with others for the purpose of particular business.

I do reverence the conveners [at the Synod of Dort] for their places, worth, and learning; but I have nothing at all to do with their conclusions, further than they do consent and agree to and with the conclusions and determinations of that Synod of London, which established the doctrine of our church.

Mountagu, App. to Cæc. p. 70.

CONVE'NIENCE. } n. s. [convenientia, Lat.]
CONVE'NIENCY. }

From East to West burns through th' ethereal frame,
And half heaven's convex glitters with the flame. Ticket.

CONVEXED. part. adj. [from convex.] Formed convex; protuberant in a circular form.

Dolphins are straight; nor have they their spine convexed, or more considerably embowed than either sharks, porpoises, whales, or other cetaceous animals. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONVEXEDLY. adv. [from convexed.] In a convex form.

They be drawn convexedly crooked in one piece; yet the dolphin that carrieth Arion, is concavously inverted, and hath its spine depressed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CONVEXITY. n. s. [from convex.] Protuberance in a circular form.

Convex glasses supply the defect of plumpness in the eye, and, by increasing the refraction, make the rays converge sooner, so as to convene distinctly at the bottom of the eye, if the glass have a due degree of convexity. Newton, Opt.

If the eye were so piercing as to descry even opaque and little objects a hundred leagues off, it would do us little service; it would be terminated by neighbouring hills and woods, or in the largest and evenest plain, by the very convexity of the earth. Bentley.

CONVEXLY. adv. [from convex.] In a convex form.

Almost all, both blunt and sharp, are convexly conical, they the senses have conveyed any in, I conceive that ideas in the understanding are coeval with sensation. Locke.

5. To transfer; to deliver to another.
The earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffees in trust. Spenser on Ireland.

Adam's property or private dominion could not convey any sovereignty or rule to his heir, who, not having a right to inherit all his father's possessions, could not thereby come to have any sovereignty over his brethren. Locke.

6. To impart by means of something.
Men fill one another's heads with noise and sounds, but convey not thereby their thoughts. Locke.

That which uses to produce the idea, though conveyed in by the usual organ, not being taken notice of, there follows no sensation. Locke.

Some single imperceptible bodies must come from them to the eyes, and thereby convey to the brain some motion which conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

3. The method of removing secretly from one place to another.

Your husband's here at hand; bethink you of some conveyance; in the house you cannot hide him. Shakespeare.

4. The means or instrument by which any thing is conveyed.

We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've

'Stuff'd these pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly conducted in such a wilderness of passages and distinct avenues by mere impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.

Glaucville, San. Dog.

5. Transmission; delivery from one to another.

Our author has provided for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power, or paternal dominion, to posterity.

Locke.

6. Act of transferring property; grant.

Doth not the act of the parents, in any lawful grant or conveyance, bind their heirs for ever thereunto?

Spenser on Ireland.

7. Writing by which property is transferred.

The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

This begot a suit in the chancery before the lord Coventry, who found the conveyances in law to be so firm, that in justice he must decree the land to the earl.

Clarendon.

8. Secret management; juggling artifice; private removal; secret substitution of one thing for another.

It cometh herein to pass with men, unadvisedly fallen into error, as with them whose state hath no ground to uphold it, but only the help which, by subtle conveyances, they draw out of casual events, arising from day to day, till at length they be clean spent.

Hooker, iii. § 4.

Close conveyance, and each practice ill

Of cosinage and knavery.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

I am this day come to survey the Tower;

Since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Can they not juggle, and with slight,

Conveyance play with wrong and right.

Hudibras.

CONVEYANCER.† n. s. [from conveyance.] A lawyer who draws writings by which property is transferred.

The Conquerour reduced all grants to writing, to signature, and to witnesses; which brought in cavils and actions grounded upon punctilious errors in writing, mistakes in expression, which in writing, must sometimes happen either by haste, weakness, or perhaps, by fraud of conveyancers.

Temple, Introd. Hist. of England.

CONVEYER.† n. s. [from convey.]

1. One who carries or transmits any thing from one place or person to another.

The conveyers of waters of three times content themselves with one inch of fall in six hundred feet.

Brerewood on Lang.

Those who stand before earthly princes, in the nearest degree of approach, who are the dispensers of their favours, and conveyers of their will to others, do, on that very account, challenge high honours to themselves.

Atterbury.

2. That by which any thing is conveyed.

Melon seeds [are prescribed] with whey of goat's milk, which is the common conveyer.

Burton, Anat. of Med. p. 403.

Throughout the whole body it [the cavity of the spine] lieth lower, and deeper, and safer than the veins, or arteries, or any other common conveyers in the body of man.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 209.

This would be highly injurious to the great Artificer and Maker of those bodies, that he should provide such store-houses of mischief, such irresistible conveyers of the seeds of sin into men's minds.

South, Sermon, viii. 92.

3. A juggler; an imposter; a thief.

Frequent your exercises, a horn on your thumb,

A quick eye, a sharp knife, at hand a receiver;

But then take heed, cousin, ye be a cleanly conveyer.

Preston, Tragic of Cambises, (about 1561.)

Bol. Go, some of you, convey him to the Tower.

K. Rich. O, good! convey? — Conveyers are you all,

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

CONVICINITY.* n. s. [Lat. con and vicinus.] Nearness; neighbourhood.

The bishop having first stated the convicinity and contiguity of the two parishes.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 18.

To CONVICT.† v. a. [convince, convictum, Lat.]

1. To prove guilty; to detect in guilt.

And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one.

John, viii. 9.

Things, that at the first shew seemed possible, by ripping up the performance of them, have been convicted of impossibility.

Bacon, Holy War.

2. To confute; to discover to be false.

Although not only the reason of any head, but experience of every hand, may well convict it, yet will it not by divers be rejected.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. To shew by proof or evidence.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these proofs will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can no where by reading find.

Hooker.

4. To destroy; to overpower; to surmount.

Not now in use; but formerly employed for convince, as our old lexicography shews.

V. Minshew in V.

CONVICT. In the following genuine passage of our great poet, Pope altered convicted to collected; and Dr. Johnson, not attending to this sense of the word, adopted the sophisticated reading in citing the passage for an illustration of armado, which I have removed.

So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,

A whole armado of convicted sail,

Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship.

Shakespeare, K. John.

CONVICT. adj. [rather the participle of the verb.]

Convicted; detected in guilt.

Before I be convict by course of law,

To threaten me with death is most unlawful.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

By the civil law a person convict, or confessing his own crime, cannot appeal.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Convict a papist he, and I a poet.

Pope, Epist. of Hor.

CONVICT. n. s. [from the verb.] A person cast at the bar; one found guilty of the crime charged against him; a criminal detected at his trial.

On the score of humanity, the civil law allows a certain space of time both to the convict and to persons confessing, in order to satisfy the judgement.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

CONVICTION. n. s. [from convict.]

1. Detection of guilt, which is, in law, either when a man is outlawed, or appears and confesses, or else is found guilty by the inquest.

Cowell.

The third best absent is condemn'd,

Convict by flight, and rebel to all law,

Conviction to the serpent none belongs.

Milton, P. L.

2. The act of convincing; confutation; the act of forcing others, by argument, to allow a position.

When therefore the apostle requireth hability to convict hereticks, can we think he judgeth it a thing unlawful, and not rather needful, to use the principal instrument of their conviction, the light of reason.

Hooker, iii. § 8.

The manner of his conviction was designed, not as a peculiar privilege to him; but as a standing miracle, a lasting argument, for the conviction of others, to the very end of the world.

Atterbury.

3. State of being convinced.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences.

Swift.

CONVICTIVE.† adj. [from convict.] Having the power of convincing.

In those convictive wonders, O Saviour, which thou wroughtest upon earth.

Bp. Hall, Gr. Myst. of Godliness, § 7.

They would then have been thought to assert it with clear and convictive evidence. Glennville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 87.
It deserves an entire treatise apart by itself, and that girt up in the most close and convictive method that may be.

More, Antid. ag. Idolatry, Pref.

CONVICTIVELY.* adv. [from convictive.] In a convincing manner.

The truth of the Gospel had clearly shined in the simplicity thereof, and so convictively against all the follies and impostures of the former ages. More, Expos. Seven Ch. p. 141.

To CONVINCCE.† v. a. [convincio, Latin.]

1. To force any one to acknowledge a contested position.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men of, and to persuade them to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend to us, as proper for human consideration. Tillotson.

But having shifted every form to 'scape, Convinc'd of conquest, he resum'd his shape. Dryden, Virg.

History is all the light we have in many cases, and we receive from it a great part of the useful truths we have, with a convincing evidence. Locke.

2. To convict; to prove guilty of.

To convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds. Jude, 15.

The discovery of a truth, formerly unknown, doth rather convince man of ignorance, than nature of error. Raleigh.

Should he for-wear't, make all the affidavits
Against it, that he could, afore the bench
And twenty juries, he would be convinc'd.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

O look not to convince me of a crime,
Which I can ne'er repent, nor can you pardon. Dryden.

3. To convince: to prove; to manifest; to vindicate. Not in use.

From Italy contains none so accomplished a courtier, to convince the honour of my mistress. Shakspeare, Cym.

This letter, instead of a confutation, only urgeth me to prove divers passages of my sermon, which M. Cheynel's part was to convince. Dr. Mann.

4. To overpower; to surmount. This sense is obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakspeare. Dryden, however, uses it.

There are a crew of wretched souls
That stay his cure; their malady convinces
The great essay of art. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Knaves be such abroad,
Who having, by their own importunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,
Convinc'd or suppld them, they cannot chuse
But they must blab. Shakspeare, Othello.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I, with wine and wassel, so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

But strait I convinc'd all his fear with a smile.

Dryden, Ec. n. Love.

CONVINCEMENT.† n. s. [from convince.] Conviction.

They taught compulsion without convincement, which not long before they complained of as executed unchristianly against themselves. Milton, Hist. of Eng. B. iii.

Others — love not to wade farther into the fear of a convincement. Milton, Tetrachordon.

If that be not convincement enough, let him weigh the other also. Decay of Piety.

CONVINCE.* n. s. [from convince.] That which makes manifest.

The divine light now was only a convincer of his miscarriages, but administered nothing of the divine love and power, as it does to them that are obedient, and sincere followers of its precepts; and therefore Adam could no more endure the presence of it, than sore eyes the sun or candlelight.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653), p. 252.

CONVINICIBLE. adj. [from convince.]

1. Capable of conviction.

2. Capable of being evidently disproved, or detected.

Upon what uncertainties, and also convincible falsities, they often erected such emblems, we have delivered. Brown.

CONVINICINGLY.† adv. [from convince.] In such a manner as to leave no room for doubt or dispute; so as to produce conviction.

How convincingly, O Saviour, wert thou justified in the spirit by the dreadful and miraculous descent of the Holy Ghost in the cloven and fiery tongues, and that sudden variety of language for the spreading of the glory of thy name over all the nations of the earth!

Bp. Hall, Great Mystery of Godliness.

This he did so particularly and convincingly, that those of the parliament were in great confusion. Clarendon.

The third sort of providences, in which God often speaks convincingly, is by signal unexpected deliverances.

Soth, Scrip. ix. p. 52.

The resurrection is so convincingly attested by such persons with such circumstances, that they who consider and weigh the testimony, at what distance soever they are placed, cannot entertain any more doubt of the resurrection than the crucifixion of Jesus. Althury.

CONVINICINGNESS. n. s. [from convincing.] The power of convincing.

CONVICTIOUS.* adj. [from the Lat. convictus, or convictor, to taunt.] Reproachful.

The Queenes majesty — commanndeth all manner her subjects to forbear all vain and contentious disputations in matters of religion, and not to use in despite or rebule of any person these convictious words, papist, or papistical, heretike, scismaticke, or sacramentarie, or any such like words of reproche. Q. Eliz. Injunctions, &c. 1559.

To CONVIVEL.† v. n. [convivo, Latin.] To entertain; to feast. A word, I believe, not elsewhere used, Dr. Johnson says. But Mr. Stevens asserts that it is used in the Hist. of Helias, Knight of the Swanne. This verb, which Dr. Johnson has made active by inaccurately printing you for we, as Mr. Mason also has observed, is neuter.

First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent,
There in the full convive we. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

CONVIVAL.† adj. [convivialis, Latin.] Relating

CONVIVAL. } to an entertainment; festal; social.
In their convival garland, they had respect unto plants preventing drunkenness, or discarding the exhalation from wine.

See P. Brown, Misc. Tracts, p. 91.

I was the first who set up festivals;
Not with high taste our appetites did force,
But fill'd with conversation and discourse;
Which feast, convivial meetings we did name. Danham.

Your social and convivial spirit is such that it is a happiness to live and converse with you. Dr. Newton.

CONVIVREUM. n. s. A low jest; a quibble; a mean conceit; a cant word.

Mean time he smokes, and laughs at merry tale,
Or pun ambiguous, or convivrium quaint. Philips.

To CONVOCATE.† v. a. [convoco, Lat.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

Then both the consuls, at the utmost day
Of their expiring honour, convocate
To Epire the fled father. May's Lucan, B. 5.

Smyrna or Angora, where trade hath convocated great numbers of the Armenian nation.

Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 392.

CONVOCA'TION.† n. s. [convocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling to an assembly.

Diaphantus making a general convocation, spake to them in this manner. Sidney.

2. An assembly.

On the eighth day shall be an holy convocation unto you.

Lev. xxiii. 20.

3. An assembly of the clergy for consultation upon matters ecclesiastical, in time of parliament; and as the parliament consists of two distinct houses, so does this; the one called the upper house, where the archbishops and bishops sit severally by themselves; the other the lower house, where all the rest of the clergy are represented by their deputies.

Convoc.

I have made an offer to his majesty,

Upon our spiritual convocation,

As touching France, to give a greater sum

Then ever at one time the clergy yet

Did to his predecessors part withal. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

This is the declaration of our church about it, made by those who met in convocation. Stillington.

4. A distinct academical assembly, in which the general business of the university is transacted, sometimes called the great congregation, as consisting both of regents and non-regents; the congregation, so called, consisting only of the former. See CONGREGATION, and REGENT.

At the last time it [the reformation of the statutes of the university] was attempted, I was named in convocation one of the delegates myself. Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Chanc. of Oxford, p. 7.

To CONVOKE.† v. a. [convoco, Latin.] To call together; to summon to an assembly.

The queen of Italy, — having convoked all her princes, she exhorted them to leave all vain ostentations, and spongy vauntings unto the Spaniards.

Assemblies exercise their legislature at the times that their constitution, or their own adjournment appoints, if there be no other way prescribed to convoke them. Locke.

When next the morning warms the purple East,

— convoke the peerage. Pope, Odyssey.

The senate originally consisted all of nobles, the people being only convoked upon such occasions as fell into their cognizance. Swift.

To CONVOLVE.† v. a. [convolvere, Latin.] To roll together; to roll one part upon another.

He writh'd him to and fro convolv'd.

Milton, P. L.

It is a wonderful artifice how newly hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because she emits no web, nor hath any textrine art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body.

Derham.

Us'd to milder scents, the tender race

By thousands tumble from their honey'd domes,

Convolve'd and agonizing in the dust. Thomson, Autumn.

CONVOLUTED. part. [of the verb I have found no example.] Twisted; rolled upon itself.

This differs from Muscovy-glass only in this, that the plates of that are flat and plain, whereas these are convoluted and inflected.

Woodward on Fossils.

CONVOLUTION. n. s. [convolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling any thing upon itself; the state of being rolled upon itself.

Observe the convolution of the said fibres in all other glands, in the same or some other manner.

Grew, Cosmol.

A thousand secret, subtle pipes bestow,

From which, by num'rous convolutions wound,

Wrap'd with attending nerve, and twisted round.

Blackmore.

2. The state of rolling together in company.

And toss'd wide round,

O'er the calm sky in convolution swift,

The feather'd eddy floats.

Thomson, Autumn.

To CONVOY.† v. a. [convoyer, Fr. from conviare, low Latin.] To accompany by land or sea for the sake of defence: as, he was convoyed by ships of war. Milton places the accent on the last syllable: but the word is now usually spoken with the accent on the first.

Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound

The chariot of Paternal Deity,

Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,

Itself instinct with Spirit, but convoy'd

By four Cherubick shapes.

Milton, P. L. vi. 752.

I shall likewise assay those wily arbiters who in most men have, as was heard, the sole ushering of truth and falsehood between the sense, and the soul, with what loyalty they will use me in convoying this truth to my understanding.

Milton, Reason of Church Government, ii. 3.

Co'NVOY. n. s. [from the verb. Anciently the accent was on the last syllable; it is now on the first.]

1. Force attending on the road by way of defence.

Had not God set peculiar value upon his temple, he would not have made himself his people's convoy to secure them in their passage to it.

South, Sermons.

My soul grows hard, and cannot death endure,

Your convoy makes the dangerous way secure.

Dryden, Aureng.

Convoy's ships accompany their merchants till they may prosecute the voyage without danger. Dryden, Pref. Dufresnoy.

2. The act of attending as a defence.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done; at such a breach, at such a convoy.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Swift, as a sparkle of a glancing star,

I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy.

Milton, Comus.

3. Conveyance. Not now in use.

Sister, as the winds give benefit,

And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,

But let me hear from you.

Shakespeare

CONVOLVULUS.* n. s. [Lat.] In botany, a genus of plants; bind-weed.

Co'NUSABLE.* adj. [from conusance.] Liable to be tried or judged.

He is a judge of one of those courts, where matrimonial causes are conusable.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 365.

Co'NUSANCE. n. s. [connoissance, French.] Cognizance; notice; knowledge. A law term.

Co'NUSANT.* adj. [from conusance.] Knowing.

It is not reasonable to suppose, the officer should be conusant of the formalities of law.

Hale, Hist. Pl. Cr. ch. 50.

To CONVULSE.† v. a. [convulsus, Latin.] To give an irregular and involuntary motion to the parts of any body.

A young man, who was strangely convulsed in his body, having sometimes one member and sometimes another, violently agitated.

Hallywell, Melanpronoca, (1681,) p. 78.

Follows the loosen'd, aggravated roar,

Enlarging, deepening, mingling, peal on peal,

Crush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth.

Thomson.

CONVULSION. n. s. [convulsio, Latin.]

1. A convulsion is an involuntary contraction of the fibres and muscles, whereby the body and limbs are preternaturally distorted.

Quincy.

If my hand be put into motion by a convulsion, the indifferency of that operative faculty is taken away.

Locke.

2. Any irregular and violent motion; tumult; commotion; disturbance.

All have been subject to some concussions, and fallen under the same convulsions of state, by dissensions or invasions.

Temple.

CONVULSIVE. adj. [convulsif, French.] That which produces involuntary motion; that which gives twitches or spasms.

They are irregular and convulsive motions, or strugglings of the spirits.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Shew me the flying soul's convulsive strife,

And all the anguish of departing life.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Her colour chang'd, her face was not the same,

And hollow groans from her deep spirit came:

Her hair stood up; convulsive rage possess'd

Her trembling limbs, and heav'd her lab'ring breast.

Dryden.

In silence weep,

And thy convulsive sorrows inward keep.

Prior.

CONVULSIVELY.* adv. [from convulsive.] In an agitated or tumultuous manner.

CONY.† n. s. [kanin, Germ. cuning, Welsh; coinus, conius, old Fr. cuniculus, Latin.]

1. A rabbit; an animal that burrows in the ground.

With a short-legg'd hen,
Lemons and wine for sauce; to these a cony.

Is not to be despis'd of, for our money. B. Jonson, Epig.
The husbandman suffers by hares and conys, which eat the corn trees. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A simpleton. See TO CONY-CATCH.

It [a cony or rabbit] is of itself a very conny, a most simple animal; whence are derived our usual phrases of conny and conny-catching. Dick's Dry Dinner, 1599.

CONY-BOROUGH.† n. s. A place where rabbits make their holes in the ground.

Birigh, or beorgh, now bergh, properly signifying to shroud or hide; which may also appear by our callings in some parts of England, the places made for conies to hide and shroud themselves in cony-beries, or cony-buries; and in other parts of England, cony-burrows. Verstegan, Rest of Dec. Intelig. ch. 7.

TO CONY-CATCH.† v. n. To catch a cony, is, in the old cant of thieves, to cheat; to bite; to trick; to deceive a foolish fellow. See the second sense of CONY.

I have matter in my head against you, and against your cony-catching rascals. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

CONY-CATCHER. n. s. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Now obsolete.

TO COO. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stock-dove only through the forest cooes, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson, Summer.

CO'ING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Invitation, as the note of the dove.

Let not the cooings of the world allure thee:
Which of her lovers ever found her true? Young, Night Th. 8.

COOK.† n. s. [old Fr. keuz, from coquus, Latin.]

One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly, is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

The new-born babe, by nurses overlaid,
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste. Arbuthnot on Coms.

COOK-MAID. n. s. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend was complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England. Addison.

COOK-ROOM. n. s. [cook and room.] A room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew. The kitchen of a ship.

The commodity of this new cook-room, the merchants having found to be so great as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh, Essays.

TO COOK. v. a. [coquo, Latin.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.

Had either of the crimes been cooked to their palates, they might have changed messes. Decay of Piety.

2. To prepare for any purpose.

Hanging is the word, Sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cookt. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

TO COOK, or COUK.* v. n. [from the sound.] To make the noise of the cuckoo. It is also found in the Scottish poem of The Cherrie and Slae: "The cuckow couks."

Let constant cuckows cook on every side.

The Silkwormes, 1599.

TO COOK.* v. a. [perhaps from chuck.] To throw. Cook me that ball. Gloucestershire. Grasse.

COO'KERY, n. s. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some man's wit

Found th' art of cook'ry to delight his sense:
More bodies are consum'd and kill'd with it,
Than with the sword, famine, or pestilence.

Ev'ry one to cookery pretends. Davies.
These are the ingredients of plants before they are prepared by cookery. King's Cookery.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

COOL.† adj. [Sax. col; Dutch, koel; Germ. kühl. See CO'N.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.

He set his leg in a pale-full, as hot as he could well endure it, renewing it as it grew cool. Temple.

2. Not zealous; not ardent; not angry; not fond; without passion: as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

A man of understanding is of an excellent spirit, [in the margin, of a cool spirit.] Prov. xvii. 27.

COOL. n. s. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see where Lucia, at her wonted hour,
Amid the cool of yon high marble arch,
Enjoys the noon day breeze. Addison, Cato.

Philander was enjoying the cool of the morning; among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison on Medals.

TO COOL.† v. a. [koelen, Dutch; colan, Sax. coles, cooled.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Father Abraham, have mercy on me; and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. St. Luke, xvi. 24.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison, Spect.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cooled their zeal. Swift.

3. To cool the heels; a vulgarism, denoting to keep in attendance; not yet disused.

I looked through the keyhole, and saw him knocking at the gate; and I had the conscience to let him cool his heels there.

Dryden, Amphitryon.

TO COOL.† v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

Come, who is next? our liquor here cools.

B. Jonson, Entert. at Highgate.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison, I will possess him with yellowness. Shakspeare.

You never cool while you read Homer.

I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Dryden.

COOL-CUP.* A beverage, so called, usually composed of wine, water, lemon-peel, sugar, and borage; and introduced at tables in warm weather.

COOL-HEADED.* adj. [from cool and head.] Without passion. See the second sense of COOL.

The old, cool-headed, general law, is as good as any deviation dictated by present heat. Burke, Lett. to the Sher. of Bristol.

CO'OLER.* n. s. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity.

Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man.

Harvey on Consumptions.

Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool. [This word is properly cowler; from cowle, a cowl or coule, that is, a tub. See COWLSTAFF.]

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the sillage behind, and let it run off fine.

Mortimer's Insbandry.

CO'OLISH. * adj. [from cool.] Approaching to cold.

Looking as wise as possible, I observed, that the nights began to grow a little coolish at this time of the year.

Goldsmith, Ess

CO'OLLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.

She in the gelid caverns, woodbine wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-spouting streams,
Sits cooly calm.

Thomson, Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves coolly to our reason, are fittest to be employed upon reasonable creatures.

Atterbury.

CO'OLNESS. * n. s. [Sax. coelneþ.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the heat or coolness of spirits; for cloves, and other spices, naphtha and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter, a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not inflamed.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The toad loveth shade and coolness.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,

Gives a fresh coolness to the royal cup;

There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost,

Tempers hot July with December's frost.

Waller.

The sheep enjoy the coolness of the shade.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again.

Clarendon.

3. Freedom from passion.

There is that coolness and curiousness in a verse, which speaks it greatly unsuitable to the vehemence and seriousness of the prophetick spirit.

Spencer, Vanity of Vulg. Prophecies, p. 53.

COOM. n. s. [ecume, French.]

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth. Phillips.
2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages. Bailey.
3. It is used in Scotland for the useless dust which falls from large coals.

COOMB, or COOP. n. s. [comble, Fr. cumulus, Lat. a heap, Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels.

Bailey.

COOP. * n. s. [Icel. kuppa; Su. kopp; Dutch, kuype.] Ray observes, that coop was a general expression for a vessel to enclose any thing.

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a pen for animals; as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain, the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripudiary augurations.

Brown.

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop.
L'Estrange.

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders.

Shakspeare, K. John.

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravenstein, that he stirred not; and likewise held in strait siege the town.

Bacon.

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and cooped up.

L'Estrange.

Twice conquer'd cowards, now your shame is shown,
Coop'd up a second time within your town!

Who dare not issue forth in open field.

Dryden, Æneid.

One world suffic'd not Alexander's mind;

Coop'd up, he seem'd in earth and seas confin'd.

Dryden, Juv.

Coop'd in a narrow isle, observing dreams

With flattering wizzards.

Dryden, Juv.

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,

Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng.

Dryden, Æneid.

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world.

Locke.

They are cooped in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant.

Locke.

What! coop whole armies in our walls again.

Pope.

COOPE'E. n. s. [coupe, French.] A motion in dancing.

CO'OPER. n. s. [from coop.] One that makes coops or barrels.

Societies of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charters, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction.

Child.

CO'OPERAGE. n. s. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COOPERATE. * v. n. [old Fr. coöperer, from con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends.

Bacon.

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity.

Boyle.

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity co-operate to their conversions.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

All these causes cooperating, must, at last, weaken their motion.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this charge, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension.

Rogers.

COOPERA'TION. n. s. [from cooperate.] The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COOPERATIVE. * adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

For Age with Virtue is cooperative.

Davies, Wit's Pilg. T. 3. b.

COO'PERATOR. n. s. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

To COO'PTATE. * v. a. [Fr. co-opter, Lat. coopto.] Dr. Johnson admits the substantive, though without example. The parent verb is as good a word.] To choose.

Cockeram.

COOPTATION. † n. s. [coopto, Latin.] Adoption; assumption.

Dubitation is the beginning of all knowledge: I confess this is true in the first election and co-optation of a friend, to come into the true knowledge of him by queries and doubts.

Howell, Lett. i. v. 19.

COORDINATE. † adj. [con and ordinatus, Latin.]

Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shell-fish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

Other bishops — might either appoint two presbyters, either co-ordinate or subaltern, to serve one church; or one presbyter to serve two churches.

H. Wharton, Def. of Pluralities, (1692,) p. 53.

A co-ordinate power was given by the bishop to them both.

Ibid. p. 54.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts.

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. s. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION. n. s. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing in the same relation to something higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optinacy, and democracy.

Howell, Pre-eminence of Parliament.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lysideus has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state.

Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

COOT. † n. s. [maer-koel, Dut. cotce, French.] A small black water-fowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

Unfledge 'em of their tires,
Their wires, their partlets, pins, and periwigs,
And they appear like bald coots in the nest.

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant.

Dryden, Fables.

COP. † n. s. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head. As a cop, vulgarly cock of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill. A cop of cherrystones for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

Upon the cop right of his nose he had
A wart, and thereon stode a tuft of hairs. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
They droven him out withouten the cytee, and ledde him to the coppe of the hill.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, iv.

Few of them have cops or crested tufts upon their heads.

Holland, Tr. of Plin. Nat. Hist. b. xi.

CO'PAL. n. s. The Mexican term for a gun.

COPARCENARY. n. s. from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter.

Hale, Hist. of Common Law.

COPARCENER. n. s. [from con and particeps, Lat.] Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor.

Cowel.

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used, in the whole province.

Davies on Ireland.

COPARCENY. n. s. An equal share of coparceners.

Phillips, World of Words.

COPARTMENT. * n. s. Compartment; which see.
In a copartment, towards the head, and under the semicircle, of the letter, are his initials. Warton, Hist. of E. P. iii. 391.

COPARTNER. † n. s. [co and partner.] One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

So should I have copartners in my pain;

And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Our faithful friends,

The associates and copartners of our loss. Milton, P. L.

Shall I to him make known

As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happiness with me? Or rather not;

But keep the odds of knowledge in my power,

Without copartner?

Milton, P. L.

Rather by them

I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell

Copartner in these regions of the world.

Milton, P. R.

Love gives us a real possession and enjoyment of God; it makes us copartners with Him in Himself.

Scott, Chr. Life, i. iii.

COPARTNERSHIP. † n. s. [from copartner.] The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership.

Hale.

At Amsterdam the one vessel took in ballast only; the other laden with herrings, in copartnership with one Peter Heinbergh, sailed away for Stettin in Pomerania. Milton, Letters of State.

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed.

Hammer.

Oh, fine villain! a silken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatam hat.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

COPAYVA. n. s. [It is sometimes written capivi, capivi, capayva, copayva, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brasil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. † n. s. [Sax. cæppe. And see Cop.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministration.

The principal minister using a decent cope.

Const. and Can. Ecc. 24.

The cope answers to the colobium used by the Latin, and the chiton used by the Greek church. It was at first a common habit, being a coat without sleeves, but afterwards used as a church-vestment, only made very rich by embroidery and the like.

Whately on the Comm. Prayer.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained

Within this goodly cope, both most and least,

Their being have, and daily are increast.

Spenser.

Over head the dismal hiss

Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;

And, flying, vaulted either host with fire;

So, under fiery cope, together rush'd

Both battles main.

Milton, P. L.

The scholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is so knowing as his master.

Dryden.

TO CORE. † v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.

A very large bridge, that is all made of wood, and coped over head.

Addison on Italy.

C O P

2. To contend with; to oppose. Dr. Johnson introduces, as the sole example, a passage from Shakspeare's Lear; where, however, the verb is neuter; the word withal, which is connected with cope, being omitted by him. But the active sense of cope is not uncommon.

I love to cope him in these sullen fits.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

We must not stint

Our necessary actions, in the fear

To cope malicious censurers.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VIII.

3. To reward; to give in return. 'This is our old verb to cope, or coep, i. e. to chap, or buy; Dutch, koop. See COPE-MAN.

I and my friend

Have, by your wisdom, been this day acquitted

Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,

Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,

We freely cope your courteous pains withal.

Shakspeare.

To COPE.† v. n.

1. To contend; to struggle; to strive. It has with before the thing or person opposed. [In this sense it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koop, to buy, or some other word of the same import; so that to cope with, signifies to interchange blows, or any thing else, with another. It may, with as much propriety, be referred to cop, the head; and so imply, to make head against, like the French expression, "faire tête à quelqu'un."] Let our traits

March by us, that we may peruse the men

We should have cop'd with.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

It is likely, thou wilt undertake

A thing, like death, to chide away this shame,

That opes with death itself, to 'scape from it.

Shakspeare.

But Eve was Eve;

This far his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd

And rash, before hand had no better weigh'd

The strength he was to cope with, or his own.

Milton, P. R.

They perfectly understood both the hares and the enemy

they were to cope with.

L'Estrange.

On every plain,

Host cop'd with host, dire was the din of war.

Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted. Addison, Wrag-Examiner.

If the mind apply itself first to easier subjects, and things near akin to what is already known; and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by slow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy success. Watts, on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindness or settlements.

Thou fresh piece

Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know

The royal food thou cop'st with.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

Thou art e'en as just a man

As e'er my conversation cop'd with.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in use.

I will make him tell the tale anew:

Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when

He hath, and is again to cope your wife.

Shakspeare, Othello.

COPEMAN.* n. s. [from the old verb cope, to exchange; and Dutch, koopman, a buyer.] 'A chapman.

For ceapman we now say chapman, which is as much as to say — A merchant or cope-man.

Verslegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

Assure thee, Celia, he that would sell thee,

Only for hope of gain, and that uncertain,

He would have sold his part of paradise

For ready money, had he met a cope-man.

B. Johnson, For.

C O P

COPE'RNICAN.* adj. Relating to the system of Copernicus; in which the sun is supposed at rest in the centre, and the planets with the earth to move in ellipses round him.

The Cartesian philosophy begins now to be almost universally rejected, while the Copernican system continues to be universally received.

A. Smith, Hist. of Astronomy, § 4.

It is not necessary, that he who looks with pleasure on the colour of a flower should study the principles of vegetation, or that the Ptolemaick and Copernican system should be compared before the light of the sun can gladden, or its warmth invigorate.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 123.

COPESMATE.† n. s. [perhaps for cutsmate, a companion in drinking, or ope that dwells under the same cope, for house, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from cope in the sense of exchange, I think; one who interchanges kindness with another.] Companion; friend. An old word, Dr. Johnson observes, citing only Spenser. But it is a common word, and among our best authors.

Ne ever staid in place, ne spake to wight,

'Till then the fox his copecsmate he hath found.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale

Mis-shapen Time, copecsmate of ugly Night.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

O, this is the female copecsmate of my son.

B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

If the gagger or his copecsmates had dealt thus with me, I would have cast in their teeth forcery and false play.

Montagu, App. to Ctes. p. 24.

This ponderous confuter, elected by his ghostly patrons to be my copecsmate.

Milton, Colasterion.

COPIER. n. s. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a transcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers.

Addison on Coins.

2. One that imitates; a plagiarist; an imitator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiarist of others.

Denden, Dufresnoy.

Let the fainter copier, on old Tiber's shore,

Nor mean the task, each breathing bust explore;

Long after line with painful patience trace,

This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace.

Tickel.

COPIING.† n. s. [from cope; called also copping, from cop.] The upper tire of masonry which covers the wall.

All these were of costly stones, even from the foundation unto the coping.

1 Kings, vii. 9.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.

Addison, Freeholder.

COPIOUS.† adj. [old Fr. copieux, copieux; from the Lat. copia.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spread

Their branches hung with copious fruit.

Milton, P. L.

Full measure only bounds

Excess, before the all-bounteous king, who show'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy.

Milton, P. L.

This acalene acrimony indicates the copious use of vinegar and acid fruits.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The tender heart is peace,

And kindly pours its copious treasures forth

In various converse.

Thomson, Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men; thy name

Shall be the copious matter of my song

Henceforth; and never shall my harp thy praise

Forget, nor from thy Father's praise disjoin.

Milton, P. L.

COPIOUSLY.† adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.

Sherwood.

The boy being made to drink copiously of tar-water, this prevented or lessened the fever.

Bp. Berkeley, 16. Th. on Tar-Water.

2. At large; without brevity or conciseness; diffusely. These several remains have been so copiously described by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new discoveries on so beaten a subject.

Addison.

COPIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from copious.] •

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.

The copiousness and pleasure of the argument hath carried me a little further than I made account.

Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 158.

2. Diffusion; exuberance of stile.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiousness of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his business to reach the conciseness of Demosthenes.

Dryden.

COPYIST.† n. s. [old Fr. copiste.] A copyer; a transcriber; an imitator.

As for the ancients and elders they are become penitentiaries, proctors in the court ecclesiastical, detarists, bullists, copyists, &c.

Harmer, Tr. of Ben's Ser. (1587.) p. 134.

COPYLAND. n. s. A piece of ground in which the land terminates with an acute angle.

Dict.

TO COPY.† v. a. [from con and plant.] To plant together, at the same time.

Rome being a passable, and plain pervious continent, the Romans quickly diffused and rooted themselves in every part of it, and so copied their language, which in a short revolution of time came to be called Romand.

Howell, L. H. iv. 19.

CORPORTION.† n. s. [from con and portion.] Equal share.

Myselfe will beare a part, coportion of your packe.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 47.

COPPED.† adj. [from cop.] Rising to a top or head.

The blind mole casts

Copp'd hills towards heaven.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

It was broad in its basis, and rose copp'd, like a sugar-loaf.

Wise man, Sur.

A galeated eschimus being copp'd and somewhat conick.

Woodward.

COPPEL. n. s. [This word is variously spelt; as copel, cupel, cuple, and cuppel; but I cannot find its etymology.] An instrument used in chymistry in the form of a dish, made of ashes, well washed, to cleanse them from all their salt; or of bones thoroughly calcined. Its use is to try and purify gold and silver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and exposing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while. The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dross, which is called the litharge of gold and silver. The refiners call the coppel a test.

Harris.

COPPER. n. s. [koper, Dutch, cuprum, Lat.] One of the six primitive metals.

Copper is the most ductile and malleable metal, after gold and silver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a composition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantities, produces what the French call bronze, used for figures and statues.

Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than silver, lead, and gold.

Hildon Fossils.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

Ezra, viii. 27.

COPPER. n. s. A vessel made of copper; commonly used for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into earthen vessels.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COPPER-NOSE.† n. s. [copper and nose, Dr. Johnson says. But it is probably a corruption of the French, couperose, "an extreme redness of the face, accompanied with many pimples and rubies, especially about the nose." Cotgrave. And Sherwood translates "coper-nosed" by couperose; which adjective is rendered also in Cotgrave crimson-faced and copper-nosed.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion: I had as have Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose.

Shakespeare.

Gutta rosacea ariseth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being scratched, looks red, and rise in great welks, rendering the visage fiery; and, makes copper-noses, as we generally express them.

Wise man.

COPPER-PLATE. n. s. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impression: distinguished from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. s. [copper and work.] A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This is like those wrought at copper-works.

Woodward.

COPPERAS. n. s. [kopperose, Dut. couperouse, Fr. supposed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three sorts of vitriol; the green, the bluish green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly sold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of stones found on the sea-shore in Essex, Hampshire, and so westward, ordinarily called gold stones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are exposed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and dissolves the stones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is first put old iron, which, in boiling, dissolves. This fictitious copperas, in many respects, agrees with the native green vitriol.

Chambers, and Hill.

It may be questioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be transuted, from the equation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after conversion.

Brown.

COPPERISH.† adj. [from copper.] Containing copper.

In this fell there is a large vein of copperish sulphur.

Robinson, Nat. Hist. of Conn. and Westm. 1729.

COPPERSMITH. n. s. [copper and smith.] One that manufactures copper.

Salmoneus, as the Grecian tale is,

Was a coppersmith of Elis;

Up at his forge by morning-peep.

Swift.

COPPERWORM. n. s. [teredo, in Latin.]

1. A little worm in ships.

2. A moth that fretteth garments.

3. A worm breeding in one's hand.

Ainsworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron, put into the spring, and deposit, in lieu of the iron, particles carried off, coppery particles, brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mine.

Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. s. [couperce, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] Low woods cut at stated times for fuel; a place over-run with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copper of far more humble growth.

Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,

A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot.

Shakespeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.
The willows and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen,
Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lavs. Milton, Lycidas.
Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coal-mines. Locke.

COPPING.* See COPING.

CO'PPLE-DUST. n. s. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or copple-dust, by pouncing into the quicksilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

CO'PPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more copples! Woodward on Possils.

COPSE. n. s. [abbreviated from coppice.] Low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The East quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carrar, Surv. of Cornwall.

Oaks and brambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden, Fob.

To CORSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

Nature itself hath copsed and bound us in from flying out, and hath designed to every man his proper business, that he may not stray nor wander abroad. Farinond's Sermon. (1657.) p. 439.
The neglect of copsing wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift, Address to Parliament.

CO'RSY.* adj. [from copse.] Having copses.

The flood,

And trading bark with low contracted sail,
Linger among the reeds and corsy banks
To listen; and to view the joyous scene. Dyer's Fleece.

CO'PRICK.* n. s. [from Coptus, converted, by changing K into G, into the Gr. Αγυπτος.] The language of the Copts; the ancient Egyptian language.

The Arabick in this Lex. Polygl. will take in all or most of Golius, &c.—For the Coptick, I doubt not but Mr. Beal hath heard of A. Kircheri Prodomus Copticus.

Worthington to Hartlib, p. 283.

COPULA. n. s. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition; as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts, Logick.

To CO'PULATE. v. a. [copula, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

To CO'PULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons so copulating are infected, but also their children. Wiseman, Surgery.

CO'PULATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Joined.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

COPULA'TION. v. n. [old Fr. copulation.]

1. The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as dishonest. Hooker, iv. § 11.

2. Any conjunction. Though Dr. Johnson has omitted this ancient and present meaning, he furnishes, as usual, a good example of the word.

His copulation of monosyllables supplying the quantity of a trissyllable to his intent. Pattenham, Art of Eng. Poessie.

These virtues are so conjoined together among themselves, with a certain mutual copulation.

Sir M. Sandys, Fss. (1634.) p. 9.

Wit, you know, is the unexpected copulation of ideas, the discovery of some occult relation between images in appearance remote from each other. Johnson, Idler, No. 194.

CO'PULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions; as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Caesar conquered the Gauls and the Britons: neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts, Logick.

CO'PULATIVE.* n. s.

1. A conjunction, in grammar.

Here the copulative "And" must be expounded "Or."

Bp. Patrick on Genesis, xix. 12.

The conjunctions, which conjoin both sentences and their meanings, are either copulatives or continuatives. The principal copulative in English is AND. Harris, Hermes, ii. 2.

2. Connection; conjunction, by marriage.

They understand polygamy to be a conjunction of divers copulatives in number, which is not understood till a person proceeds unto a fourth wife, which makes more than one copulative in the rule of marriage.

Ricaut, State of the Greek Ch. p. 307.

COPY. v. n. [copie, Fr. copie, low Lat. Quod cupiam facta est copia exscribendi. Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might

From your fair mind new copies write.

I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original.

Denham.

He stepped forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South, Sermon.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for the copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker, v. § 22.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;

In bed he slept not, for my urging it;

At board he fed not, for my urging it.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

Originals and copies much the same,

The picture's value is the painter's name.

Bramston.

6. Abundance; plenty. [old Fr. copie, abundance; Lat. copia. This meaning of our own word, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, is also in our old lexicography.]

C O P

That copy or store that he hath given us.

Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

Ple. Which would you choose now, mistress?

Pla.

'Canno't tell:

The copy does confound one.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

COPY-BOOK. † n. s. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

Fair as a text B in a copy-book. Shakspeare, Iov. L. Lost.

COPY-HOLD. n. s. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence. This is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out of the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it: that which is certain is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder: for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and ransum, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-hold; and they committing felony, their land escheats to the lord of the manor. Coxw.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Addison.

COPY-HOLDER. † n. s. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

But now thou art mine

For one-and-twenty years, or for three lives:

Choose which thou wilt, I'll make thee a copyholder.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

By an enumeration of real circumstances, he gives us the following lively draught of the miserable tenement, yet ample services, of a poor copyholder.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 44.

COPY-RIGHT.* n. s. The property which an author, or his assignee, has in a literary work.

Much may be collected from the several legislative recognitions of copy-rights. Blackstone.

Notwithstanding that the statute secures only fourteen years of exclusive right, it has always been understood by the trade, that he, who buys the copy-right of a book from the author, obtains a perpetual property; and upon that belief, numberless bargains are made to transfer that property after the expiration of the statutory term. Johnson, Boswell's Life of Johnson.

To COPY. † v. a. [from the noun; and old Fr. copier.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

C O Q

These are also proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah king of Judah copied out. Prov. xxv. 1.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,

Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,

Who writes a libel, or who copies out.

Pope, Epist.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay o' Ficty.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame;

To copy out their great forefathers' fame. Dryden, K. Arthur.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,

Her virtues fewer swains admir'd.

Swift.

To COPY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Addison, Spect.

COPYER.* n. s. A copier. See COPIER. The word copyist is now more common.

What copyer would have stifled those passages in them both? Bentley, Phil. Lips. § xxxiii.

COPYIST.* n. s. [from copy; formerly copist, which see.]

1. A transcriber.

The first may be ascribed to the copyist's haste, negligence, or ignorance. Blackwall's Sac. Class. ii. 212.

The line on which copyists wrote, may be one cause of errors in transcribing.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. on Tr. of the Bible, p. 376.

2. An imitator.

No original writer ever remained so unrivalled by succeeding copyists, as this Sicilian master, [Theocritus.]

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope, i. 9.

COQUELICOT.* n. s. [Fr.] The red corn-rose, Cotgrave: a colour nearly red so called, in modern times, from it.

To COQUET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamblers play, and I railing at you both.

Swift.

To COQUET. v. n. To act the lover, to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago

Was marry'd to the Tunbridge beau,

I saw coquetting t'other night,

In publick, with that odious knight.

Swift.

COQUETRY. n. s. [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments.

Addison, Spect.

COQUETTE. † n. s. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler, Dr. Johnson says; which may be from caqueter, to tattle. The old French is cokatt for coquart. V. Lacombe. One might suppose Cotgrave to have been jilted by some coquette, and that, in revenge, he heaped upon the name the following choice terms: "COQUETTE, a prattling or proud gossip; a fisking or flipperous minx; a cocket or rattling housewife; a titisill; a flebergebit!" Among these appellations we see cocket; which was the English word at that time, and which is perhaps the meaning of Ben Jonson's "simper-the-cockets" in one of his Masques. Our old adjective cocket is pert, jolly. See COCKET.] A gay, airy girl; a woman who endeavours to attract notice.

If you would see the humour of a coquette pushed to the last excess, you may find an instance of it in the following story. — A young coquette widow in France having been followed by a Gaseon of quality, &c. Tatler, No. 126.

• The light coquettes and sylphs alert repair,

And sport and flutter in the fields of air.

Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are spark-led.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

Not less vain of her person than her politicks, this stately coquet, the guardian of the protestant faith, the terror of the sea, the mediatrix of the factions of France, and the scourge of Spain, was infinitely mortified, if an ambassador, at the first audience, did not tell her she was the finest woman in Europe.

Watson, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 493.

COQUET'TISH.* adj. [from coquette.] Affecting the manner of a coquette.

Their hair falls in long plaits down their backs, and a veil or handkerchief, twisted round in a coquettish manner, serves them for a very becoming head-dress.

Swinburne, Tragic through Spain, L. 44.

COR.* n. s. [Lat. coris.] This word is in our old lexicography for the "measure of a pottle." Cockeram. Properly, it is an Hebrew measure.

How much owist thou to my lord? whiche, answerde, an hundred coris of wheat.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, xvi.

Likewise also of wheat even to an hundred coris.

1 Esdras viii. 20. Present Translation.

Ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, which is an homer of ten baths.

Ezekiel, xlv. 14.

The tenth part of a bath of oil is the hundredth part of a cor, which amounts to about six pints of our measure, according to bishop Cumberland.

Louth on Ezekiel.

CO'RACLE.* n. s. [coracle, Welsh, probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers; made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

I have been informed, that boats made of wicker, and covered with a skin, resembling the upper shell of a tortoise, are frequently used for passing rivers in different parts of India.

Boats of a similar structure are to be found in Wales, called coracles.

Hole on the Arab. Nights' Entert. p. 95.

CORAL.* n. s. [corallium, Lat.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft, while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them, but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom.

Hill's Materia Medica.

In the sea, upon the south-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant: it hath no leaves: it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods,

And sees the secret source of subterranean floods.

Dryden, Virg.

A tufret was inclos'd

Within the wall, of alabaster white,

And crimson coral, for the queen of night,

Who takes in Sylvan sports her chaste delight.

Dryden.

Or where's the sense, direct or moral,

That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral?

Prior.

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grew;

The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew.

Pope.

CORAL-TREE. n. s. [corallodendron, Lat.]

It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens.

Miller.

CO'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral.

At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again as it becomes calm.

Woodward.

CO'RALLINE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

Coralline is a sea-plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white.

Hill.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the owse.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CO'RALLOID. } adv. [κοραλλοειδης.] Resembling CO'RALLOIDAL. } coral.

Now that plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions.

Brown.

The pentadrous, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates set lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it.

Woodward on Fossils.

CO'RANT.* n. s. [courant, Fr.]

1. A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit.

Temple.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin.

Walsb.

2. A paper of news. See COURANT.

All the lords

Have him in that esteem for his relations,

Corants, avises, correspondences

With this ambassador, and that agent!

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

CORANTO.* n. s. See COURANTO. An air, or dance.

After this, they danced galliards and corantos.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

CORB.* n. s. [Fr. corbeau. A diminutive of corbel, which see.] An ornament in building.

It was a bridge ybuilt in goodly wize

With curious corbes and pendants graven faire.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 6.

CO'RBAN. n. s. [קרבן] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion.

King Charles.

Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gift offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the Gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money were deposited. Calm.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked.

- Or sicker thy head very tottie is,
So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

CO'RBEILS. n. s. [Fr. corbeille, a wicker-basket. Cotgrave.] Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CO'RBEL. n. s. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CO'RBEL. n. s.
CO'RBI. n. s.

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semi-girders of a platform.
2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues. Chambers.

CO'RBY.* n. s. [Fr. corbeau.] A raven, still so called in the north of England, and in the heraldic vocabulary.

CORDE. n. s. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Latin; corde, French.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twists.

She let them down by a cord through the window. Jos. ii. 5.
Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These numerous cords are through the body spread. Blackmore.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. Isaiah, xxxiii. 20.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad. [corde de bois, Cotgrave.]

An oak growing lately in a copse of my lord Craven's, yielded—twenty-three cord of fire-wood. Evelyn, iii. 3. § 18.

CORDE-MAKER. n. s. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORDE-WOOD. n. s. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

TO CORDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords: to close by a bandage. Corded; twisted as a cord; bound with a cord. Cotgrave in F. Cordé.

CO'RDAGE. n. s. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables should be made,
Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade. Drayton.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither canvas nor cordage. Raleigh.
Spain furnished a sort of rush called spartum, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping. Arbuthnot on Coins.

CO'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder,
To climb celestial Silvia's chamber-window. Shakespeare.

CORDELI'ER. n. s. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And whp to assist but a grave cordelier. Prior.

CO'RDIAL. n. s. [old Fr. cordial, from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.
2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and uncles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the proper condition for circulation and nutrition; as broths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease

The inward languor of my wounded heart;

And then my body shall have shortly ease;

But such sweet cordials pass physicians art. Spenser.

Cordials of pity give me now,

For I too weak for purges grow. Cowley.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,

The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,

Are the most pleasing object I can find,

Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind. Dryden.

CO'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make; which hath the king

Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know

What is more cordial. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

He only took cordial waters, in which we infused sometimes purgatives. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among Christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superstructing of Christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid. Hammond.

He with looks of cordial love,

Hung over her enamour'd.

Milton, P. L.

CORDIA'LITY. n. s. [old Fr. cordialité.]

1. Relation to the heart.

That the antients had any such respects of cordiality, or reference unto the heart, will much be doubted. Brown.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CO'RDIALITY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Against which church Christ exhibits no complaint at all, but loves her, and likes her entirely, even as he is cordially loved of her. More, Expos. of the Seven Churches, p. 131.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition, wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, nor nor miracle whatsoever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with and receive it.

South, Sermon.

We should really, cordially, and sincerely love God.

Scott, Disc. xxi.

CO'RDIALNESS.* n. s. [from cordial.] Heartiness.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

CO'RDINER. n. s. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker.

It is so used in divers statutes.

CO'RDON. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet. Chambers.

CORDON.* n. s. [Fr.] A band; a wreath.

Which pardon is since enlarged, by Sixtus the fourth and fifth, to all lay brethren and sisters that did wear St. Francis's cordons. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

CORDOVA'N.* n. s. [old Fr. cordouan, cordowan. See CORDWAIN.] Spanish leather.

CORDWAIN. † n. s. [old Fr. cordowan; old Eng. cordwanc. Chaucer's Sir Topas has "shoon of cordwane." This word was formerly used for a dry hide. Its origin is from Cordova in Spain; the leather there prepared being called Cordovan leather; and all leather since, prepared in a similar manner, has obtained the same name.] Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd

In golden buskins of costly cordwain.

Spenser, F. Q.

Buskins he wore of costliest cordwayne.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 6.

Co'RDWAINER. † n. s. [Uncertain whether from Cordovan, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux. The old French has cordwenier; so that Mr. Pegge's remark, in his Anecdotes of the English Language, that "cordwainer, usually supposed to have taken the name from Cordovan leather, of which the finest shoes were made perhaps in France, where the operator probably obtained the name of cordovanier, [is] easily corrupted into our cordwainer;" — is of little value.] A shoemaker.

If the shoe be too big for the foot, it is but troublesome and useless; and how poor an answer would it be of the cordwainer to say, that he had leather good store!

Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

CORE. † n. s. [cœur, Fr. cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square she raised a tower of a furlong high.

Dig out the cores below the surface. Mortimer, Husbandry.

They wasteful eat,

Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core. Thomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees, watered perpetually with water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

I avenge the sore,

And cut the head; for, 'till the core be found,

The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground. Dryden, Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection [from corps, French: pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself; for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon, Hen. VII.

6. A disorder incident to sheep, occasioned by worms in their livers.

Chambers.

CORE'GENT. * n. s. [from cōn and regent.] A joint regent or governour.

Joseph was emperor of Germany, as well as co-regent of Hungary and Bohemia. Wrexall's Berlin, ii. 435.

CORRELATIVE. * adj. [from con and relative. See CORRELATIVE.] Having a reciprocal relation.

Prepositions are the words which express relation considered in the same manner, in concrete with the co-relative object.

A. Smith, on the Format. of Languages.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Latin.]

C O R

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence, perhaps spissitude and coriaceous concretions.

Arbutnaut on Aliments.

CORIA'NDER. n. s. [coriandrum, Latin.] A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2. Smaller testiculated coriander. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom found.

Miller.

Israel called the name thereof manna; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exod. xiii. 31.

CORINTHIL. n. s. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply

Delicious draughts.

Philips.

The chief riches of Zant consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities. Broom.

CORINTHIAN. Ord., is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches encompassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of a volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Villalpandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus.

Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian Order, adorned with fruit and flowers. Dryden.

CORINTHIAN. * adj. Relating to the licentious manners of Corinth. See the substantive.

On searching for me at the bordello's, where, it may be, he has lost himself, and raps up, without pity, the sage and rheumatick old prelatess, with all her young Corinthian lutey, to enquire for such an one. Milton, Apol. for Smeatymn.

CORINTHIAN. * n. s.

1. One of those at Corinth, to whom St. Paul addressed two Epistles.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

2. In allusion to the notorious licentiousness of Corinth, "to play the Corinthian" was in elder times an expression denoting a profligate person; and in the same sense passed into our vulgar language.

I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian; a lad of mettle. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

To act the Corinthian, is, to commit fornication, according to Hesychius. Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. 12.

CORIVAL. * n. s. [from con and rival. See CORIVAL.] A rival.

The pope of Rome is, according to his last challenge and pretences, become a competitor and corival with the king for the hearts and alienations of the people.

Bacon, Charge at the Sess. for the Verge.

To COR'VAL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To affect to equal.

Where's then the saucy boar,
Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now
Corinall'd greatness? Shakspeare, T. A. and Cress.

CORK. n. s. [cortex, Lat. korck, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticem astrictum pice dimovebit

Ampliore funum bibere instituta

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the North of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I prythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;

Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,

That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well. King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay. Pope.

To CORK.* v. a. [from the noun.] To stop or raise with corks. Sherwood.

Ho that weareth a corked shoe or slipper. Hudoc.

And tread on corked stilt, a prisoner's pace.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

CORKING-PIN. n. s. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift, Direct. to the Chambermaid.

CORKY.† adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corky arms. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

[He] hath fully valued the weight of his general guilt, each of which hath lead enough to sink the most corky, vain, fluctuating, proud, stubborn heart in the world.

Hammond's Works, iv. 644.

CORMORANT.† n. s. [cormoran, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. Others, from corvus vorans. But corman being the old French name of this bird, which is termed the greedy fowl, and after which a glutton is called a cormorant, the etymology may belong perhaps to gourmand, whence gourman, gorman, corman.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,

Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;

When, spite of cormorant devouring time,

Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy

That honour which shall bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakspeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Peacham on Drawing.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life

Sat like a cormorant. Milton, P. L.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt

Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden, Fab.

2. A glutton.

CORN.† n. s. [kaurno, Goth. corn, Sax. korh, Germ. It is found in all the Teutonick dialects; as, in an old Runick rhyme,

•Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone. John, xii. 23.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late, When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakspeare.

2. Grain yet unthreshed, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow

In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Thomson, Autumn.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthreshed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a stock of corn cometh in his season. Job, v. 26.

4. Any minute particle.

That art which hath reckoned how many corns of sand would make up a world. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

When I was cut in shreds thus,

And not a corn of powder left to bless us.

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta.

5. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet

Unplagu'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakspeare.

The man that makes his toe,

What he his heart should make,

Shall of a corn cry woe,

And turn his sleep to wake. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do enrieve either towards rain or towards frost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wiseman's Surgery.

He first that useful secret did explain,

That pricking corns foretold the gathering rain. Gay, Past.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,

An offer'd fee from Radcliff scorn'd. Swift.

To CORN.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

A runner, when the sieve is moved, by its weight and motion, forces the powder through the upper sieve; and that corns it. Hist. of Gunpowder, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 281.

Our careful Monarch stands in person by,

His new-cast cannon's firmness to explore;

The strength of big-corn'd powder loves to try,

And ball and cartridge, sorts for every bore. Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

CORN-BIND.* n. s. Climbing buck-wheat; also corn-convolvulus. North. Grose.

CORN-CRAIK.* n. s. [corn, and creak; Welsh crech, a shriek.] The land-rail, so called in the north of England; probably from its constant note, craik, craik.

CORN-FIELD. n. s. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his lass,

That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shakspeare, As you like it.

You may soon enjoy the gallant sights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's cornfields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. s. [corn and flag.] A plant.

Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. s. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor. Hof. ix. 1.

CORN-FLOWER. n. s. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and fumitory.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August. The seeds should be sown in March: they require a good soil.

Mortimer.

CORN-HEAP. n. s. Store of corn.

What if in his chaff he find but one untruth, while I in my corn-heap can find more?

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Mass. Clergy, p. 195.

CORN-LAND. n. s. [from corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pasture and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn-lands.

Mortimer; Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. s. [from corn and master.] One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grasier, a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-master, and a great leadman.

Bacon.

CORN-LOFT. n. s. Granary. [Fr. grenier.]

CORN-MILL. n. s. [from corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers.

Mortimer.

CORN-PIPE. n. s. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by slitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,

To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms.

Ticket.

CORN-ROCKET. n. s. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

CORN-ROSE. n. s. A species of poppy. See COQUELICOT.

CORN-SALLAD. n. s. [from corn and sallad.]

Corn-sallad is an herb, whose top-leaves are a sallat of themselves.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CORN-VIOLET. n. s. A species of campanula.

CORPAGE. n. s. [old Fr. cornage, from cornu, Lat.] A tenure which obliges the landholder to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

The barony of Burgh on the Sands in Com. Cumbræ, with divers other manors and lands in that county, were anciently held by the service of cornage, i. e. to blow a horn when any invasion of the Scots was perceived.

Blount, Anc. Tenures.

CORNAMEUTE. n. s. [probably the same as cornemuse, which see.] A wind instrument.

The hoboy, sagbut deepe, recorder, and the flute: Even from the shrillest shawme unto the cornamute.

Dragton, Polyolb. S. 4.

The musick was composed of treble violins, with all the inward parts, a base viol, base lute, sagbut, cornamute, and a tabor and pipe.

Browne, Inn. Temple Masque.

CORNCHANDLER. n. s. [from corn and chandler, Dr. Johnson says; but this is an awkward combination, chandler or candle-seller having no connection with corn. The word may be a corruption of chaland, a customer unto a merchant; chalandise, trading unto one ship. Cotgrave.] One that retails corn.

CORNCUTTER. n. s. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wieman.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a right education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator, No. 307.

CORNEA. n. s. [Lat.] The horny coat of the eye.

We are not so mtle as to see objects always in their true place, nor so as to see them precisely in the direction of the rays, when they fall upon the cornea.

Reid's Inquiry.

CORNEL. n. s. [old Fr. earnille, cornie;

CORNELIAN-TREE. } modern, cornouiller, from cornus, Lat. The Italians call the fruit of this tree corniola.]

The cornel-tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheelwork.

Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter.

Baron, Nat. Hist.

A huntress issuing from the wood,

Reclining on her cornel spear she stood.

Dryden.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain bestows

The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows

The fruits of cornel, as they feast around.

Pope, Odyssey.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed;

Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest,

And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast.

Dryden, Ovid.

CORNELIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNEMUSE. n. s. [French.] A kind of rustick flute, Dr. Johnson says. It is the bag-pipe, as used by Chaucer; but according to French authors is a shawm.

CORNEOUS. adj. [from cornus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dmsighted.

Brown.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter.

Woodward.

CORNER. n. s. [from cornel, Welsh; cornier, French, Dr. Johnson says. Perhaps from the Lat. cornu, which is a corner as well as a horn; like the Goth. hauru. But the Syr. karnah also is a corner.]

1. An angle; a place inclosed by two walls or lines, which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.

2. A secret or remote place.

There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house.

Proverbs, xxv. 24.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner.

Acts, xxvi. 26.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection.

Davies.

Those vices that lurk in the secret corners of the soul.

Addison.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day,

Behold this maid, all corners else o' the earth

Let liberty make use of.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

I turn'd, and try'd each corner of my bed,

To find if sleep were there, but sleep was lost.

Dryden.

CORNER-STONE. n. s. [from corner and stone.] The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner-stone?

Shakespeare.

A mason was fitting a corner-stone.

Howell, Voc. Fqr.

CORNET.† n. s. [cornette, French.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries and on timbrels, and on cornets.

2 Sam. vi. 5.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear,

Under an actor's nose, he's never near.

Dryden, Juv.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped.

Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken.

Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them.

Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop; derived by some from coronet, which, it is said, such officers formerly wore; by others, with greater probability, from the flag or standard which this officer carries: and which is named in our old poetry; by others from cornu, the wing of an army. See the next sense.

Non-commissioned officers are all those below ensigns and cornets.

Ld. Chesterfield.

4. A standard or flag; "the ensign of a horse company," cornette.

Jordan, Poems, 2. b.

CO'RNÝ. † adj. [from cornu, horn, Latin.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny.

[The rain] downward gan to rave,
And drown'd the corny ranks,

Liste, Tr. of Du Bart. (1627) p. 14.

Up stood the corny reel
Embattel'd in her field.

Milton, P. L.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn.

Tell me why the ant,

Midst summer's plenty thinks of winter's want,
By constant journeys, careful to prepare
Her stores; and bringing home the corny ear.

Prior.

3. Containing corn; this is a very old sense of the word, to which may be added, what has escaped Dr. Johnson, but what most Englishmen will approve, Chaucer's draught of corny ale," Pardoner's Tale; i. e. containing plenty of corn or malt.

They lodge in habitations not their own,

By their high crops and corny gizzards known.

Dryden.

COROLLARY. n. s. [corollarium, Lat. from corolla; finis coronat opus; corollaire, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: A corollary seems to be a conclusion; whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it.

Gov. of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself.

Dryden, Pub. Pref.

2. Surplus.

Bring a corollary,

Rather than want.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

CORONA. n. s. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip.

Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.

Spectator.

CO'RONAL. † n. s. [old Fr. coronal, a coronet, from corona, Lat.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye God Bacchus with a coronal,

And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine.

Spenser.

Now no more shall these smooth brows be begirt,

With youthful coronals, and lead the dance.

Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

CO'RONAL. † adj. [coronal, Fr. "commisure coronale, the coronal suture, or seam, which compasses the forehead, &c." Cotgrave.] Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal suture.

Wiseman.

CO'RONARY. † adj. [coronarius Latin.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and differenced from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown.

The coronary thorns did not only express the scorn of the imposters, by that figure into which they were contrived; but did pierce his tender and sacred temples to a multiplicity of pains, by their numerous acuminations.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 14.

The catalogue of coronary plants is not large in Theophrastus, Pliny, &c.

Sir T. Brown, Misc. Tr. p. 93.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries.

Bentley, Scirr.

CORONATION. n. s. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,

To shew my duty in your coronation.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

A cough, sir, which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown

Of Shadwell's coronation through the town.

Dryden, Macbeth.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recall the fancied scene,

See coronations rise on every green.

Pope.

CO'RONEL.* n. s. [Spanish. See COLONEL.] A colonel.

Their coronel, named Don Sebastian, came forth to entreat that they might part with their arms like soldiers.

Spenser on Ireland

CO'RONER. n. s. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to enquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him sit o' my uncle; for he's in the third degree of drink; he's drowned.

Shakspeare.

CO'RONET. n. s. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery

Walk'd crowns and coronets, realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

All the rest are countesses.

— Their coronets say so.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt,

Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.

Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,

And garters, stars, and coronets appear.

Pope.

2. An ornamental head-dress, in poetical language.

The rest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl.

Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,

In curls, on either cheek play'd.

Milton, P. L.

CO'RPORAL. n. s. [corrupted from caporal, French.]

The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corporal whisper'd in my ear,

Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would set me clear.

Gay.

CO'RPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentries, and relieving them; who sees that all the soldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him.

Harris.

CO'RPORAL.* n. s. [Fr. corporail; low Lat. corporale.]

"The corporal; the fine linen, wherein the sacrament is put." Cotgrave. See CORPORAS.

When all have communicated, the minister is directed to return to the Lord's table, and reverently place upon it what remaineth of the consecrated elements, covering the same with a fair linen cloth; which by the ancient writers and the Scotch liturgy is called the corporal, from its being spread over the body or consecrated bread. Whicully on the Common Prayer.

*CORPORAL.† adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age.

Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil.

A hundred alm-houses, right well supplied. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Render to me some corporal sign about her.

More evident than this. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding. Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts, which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is having a body; corporal relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient. Corporious was formerly used for corporeal.

Whither are they vanish'd?

Into the air: and what seem'd corporeal

Melted, as breath, into the wind. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit. Milton, P. L.

3. Relating to an oath so called.

The phrase Corporal oath, is supposed to have been derived—not from the touching the New Testament, or the bodily act of kissing it, but from the antient use of touching the corporale, or cloth which covered the consecrated elements. Brand, Pop. Antiq.

CORPORALITY.† n. s. [from corporal.]

1. The quality of being embodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all other, the most subtle and pure. Raleigh's Hist.

The corporality of the soul, you know, was taught only by one or two men. Clarke, Letter to Dodwell, p. 77.

2. Corporation; confraternity.

Processes to be served by a corporality of griffonlike promoters and apparitors. Milton, of Ref. in Eng. B. 1.

CORPORALLY.† adv. [from corporal.] Bodily.

They [the Papists] say, that the very natural fleshe and blood of Christ, which suffered for us upon the crosse and sitteth at the right hand of the Father in heaven, is also really, substantially, corporally, and naturally, in or under the accidentes of the sacramental bread and wyne, which they call the formes of bread and wyne. Abp. Cranmer, Def. fol. 16.

The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus. Brown.

Sons in six things are bound to their parents, whether they be alive or dead: First, they are bound to serve them corporally, to wit, with their own body. Sir. M. Savils, Ess. (1634) p. 154.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Latin.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, defacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled. Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons. Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,

That now they are at fall. Shakspeare, Timon.

CORPORAS.* n. s. The old name of the corporal, or communion cloth. See CORPORAL.

Her manyfold kyndes of ornaments; us, her corpes, corporas, chesibles, &c. Bale on the Revel. k. 6. b.

They [the subdeacons] must provide water against mass, wash the pails and corporas-cloths. Dering on the Hebrews, ch. 5.

To CORPORATE.* v. n. [from the adj.] To unite.

Though she [the soul] corporate

With no world yet, by a just Nemesis

Kept off from all; yet she, thus separate,

May oft be struck with potent rays transmiss

From divers worlds.

Merc, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 19.

CORPORATELY.* adv. [from corporate.] In a corporate capacity; unitedly.

CORPORATENESS. n. s. [from corporate.] The state of a body corporate; a community. Dict.

CORPORATION. n. s. [from corpus, Latin.]

A corporation is a body politick, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir. Coxwell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard of their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men. Hooker, i. § 4.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,

Which doth her root from God and nature take;

Ten thousand men she doth together draw,

And of them all one corporation make. Darvies.

CORPORATURE.† n. s. [from corpus, Latin.] The state of being embodied.

That antiquate, secure,

And easy, dull conceit of corporature,

Of matter, quantity, &c. More, Song of the Soul, App.

CORPOREAL. adj. [corporeus, Latin.]

1. Having a body, not immaterial; not spiritual.

See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of those circles attribute,

Though numberless, to his omnipotence,

That to corporeal substances could add

Speed almost spiritual. Milton, P. L.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul, we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal. South, Sermons.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense. Tillotson.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,

And thou from thy corporeal prison freed. Dryden, Fab.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye

On the young gnat, or new-engender'd fly. Prior.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimsbury Down; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one. Swift.

CORPOREALIST.* n. s. [from corporeal.] One who denies spiritual substances.

If the matters of fact be too notorious to be gainsaid, then these corporealists will not stick to affirm with a late author, that they believe there are many thousands of spirits, made of an incorporeal matter, too fine to be perceived by the senses of men. Hallywell, Melanper. (1681) p. 3.

I believe it will puzzle the wisest corporealists to tell us how that, which is immaterial, can either be produced out of matter, or lodged in matter as its subject. Sherlock, Unnatural. of the Soul, i. § 2.

Some corporealists and mechanicks vainly pretended to make a world without a God. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 259.

CORPOREALLY.* adv. [from corporeal.] In a material or bodily manner.

This, and other phrases, are to be understood not corporeally, but spiritually.

Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1655) p. 251.

CORPOREITY. n. s. [from corporeus, Latin.] Materiality; the quality of being embodied; the state of having a body; bodilyness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are iniddle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity which supposeth weight or gravity. Brown.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects and this lower of corporeity. Glanville's Serpiss.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure. Stillingfleet.

CORPOREOUS.* adj. [Lat. corporeous.] Bodily; having a body.

Worshipped in so many corporeous shapes.

Hammond, of Conscience.

A second hindrance was the grossness and earthiness of their fancy, which was not able to conceive God to be any thing but a corporeous substance. Hammond's Works, iv. 641.

CORPORIFICATION. n. s. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

TO CORPORIFY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To embody; to inspissate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporified. Boyle.

CORROSANT, or CORPUSANSE.* [corrupted from the Spanish corpo santo, i. e. holy body.] A word used by mariners to denote those luminous bodies, which sometimes skip about the masts and yards of ships; an ignis fatuus; and what the ancients called Castor and Pollux. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 334.

CORPUS.† } n. s. [corps, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

CORPSE. }

1. A body.

That lewd ribauld

Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cleene,

To spoil her dainty corse, so fair and sheene,

Of chastity and honour virginal. Spenser.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though plentiful, all too little seems

• Te stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps. Milton, P. L.

He looks as man was made, with face erect,

• That scorns his brittle corps, and seems asban'd

He's not all spirit. Dryden, Don Sebast.

3. A carcass; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend greet

My poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown. Shakspeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,

And violent death in thousand shapes display'd. Dryden, Fab.

See where the corps of thy dead son approaches. Addison.

The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body. Addison, Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.

Cold numbness straight bereaves

Her corps of sense, and the air her soul receives. Denham.

5. A body of forces.

6. The land with which a prebend, or other ecclesiastical office, is endowed.

The prebendaries, over and above their reserved rents, have a corps, and receive fines upon remials.

Bacon, Liber Regis, p. 133.

CORPS DE GARDE.* n. s. [Fr.] A guard-room.

See COURT OF GUARD.

False pastors, whom a man shall find rather in their beds, or at table, or in the stews, or any where else than in their corps de gard. Harmer, Tr. of Beza's Sermon (1587) p. 334.

To save ourselves, we were fain to take shelter in the corps de guard, till a lodging was provided for us.

Brown's Travels, (1695), p. 49.

CORPULENCE. } n. s. [corpulentia, Latin.]

CORPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,

And burdensome corpulence my love had grown. Dowry.

It is but one species of corpulence; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail, the heaviness and corpulency of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray on the Creation.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.] Flethy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy stile, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent. Bacon, Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it maketh the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CORPUSCLE. n. s. [corpusculum, Lat.] A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes. Newton, Opt.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies? Watts, Logic.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from corpusculum, Lat.]

CORPUSCULARIA. } Relating to bodies; comprising bodies. It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical. Boyle.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the oldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain buried for many ages in contempt and oblivion.

Bulley, Sermon, iv.

CORPUSCULARIAN.* n. s. [from the adj.] A corpuscularian philosopher.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscularians talk, in most things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks. Bentley.

He [Newton] seems to have made a greater progress, than all the sects of corpuscularians together had done before him.

Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 245.

CORRACLE.† See CORRICLE. Dr. Johnson says. But no such word is in his dictionary. It is perhaps intended for coracle, which was formerly written with the double r. "Corracle, a little round skiff of ozers, covered with raw hides." Sherwood. See CORACLE.

TO CORRA'DE.† v. a. [corrado, Latin.] This verb, though given by Dr. Johnson without any authority, and wearing the appearance of his own coinage, is of ancient date in our language, being in the vocabulary of Cockeram, and there defined "to rake, shave, or scrape." To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIA'TION.† n. s. [con and radius, Lat.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertical point in the eye; so as there is a corradia'tion, and conjunction of beams. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The conjunction and corradia'tion, in that place of heaven, of the sun with the four stars of the first magnitude.

Bacon on the Union of Eng. and Scotland.

TO CORRE'CT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum, Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts the confidence of slinging.

Bp. Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lie, you must be sure never after to pardon it in him. Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them, when they do amiss. Locke on Education.

2. To amend; to take away faults, in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age. Burnet, Theory, Pref.

Correcting Nature, from what actually she is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created. Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write. Pope, Pref.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what habit wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued. Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness, nor while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hocker.

As in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet. Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink: its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his. Dryden, Aur. Prol.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete. Fellon.

CORRECTION. n. s. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shakespeare, Rich. II.

An offensive wife,
That hath carag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hang; resolv'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue. Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction. Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places. Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgement and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but submitting them also unto the correction of future discovery. Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitions, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add
Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.

CORRECTIONER. n. s. [from correction.] One that has been in the house of correction; a jail-bird.

This seems to be the meaning in Shakspeare.
I will have you soundly swinged for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy fannish correctioner. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

CORRECTIVE. † adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

The law of nations alloweth, and ever hath done, masters over their servants not only a directive but a corrective and coactive power. Bicrewood on the Sab. p. 14.

Have any of these — any corrective power of any one member of the house? Bp. Marten, Episc. Asserted, p. 137.

Malbergs are pectoral, corrective of bilious alcoli. Arbuthnot.

2. Having the power to limit.

To prevent this folly, the Palamist interposeth a caution in this corrective article, "Yea, happy?" It hath the force of a revocation, whereby he seems to retract what went before, not simply and absolutely, but in a certain degree, lest worldly men should wreat it to a misinterpretation.

Dr. Hebbeworth, Sermon at Cambridge, (1742), p. 27.

CORRECTIVE. n. s.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a seasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness, from filling themselves with too succulent a food. Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails; but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow. South, Sermons.

2. Limitation: restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment, which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explanation or adumbration thereof. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenses and principles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools. Locke on Education.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low. Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

CORRECTNESS. n. s. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air and posture, and the correctness of design in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison on Italy.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war. Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness. Swift.

CORRECTOR. † n. s. [from correct; and old Fr. correcteur.] Our word is sometimes written correcter.

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

Wherefore, said he to the corrector, until he utterly do cease of his presumption and obstinacy, look that thou still beat him. Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 189. b.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin? How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion. Sprat, Sermons.

With all his faults he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances. Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults; as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

He is by country, an Englishman; by birth, a gentleman; by education, a scholar; afterwards, a corrector of the common law print, with M. Tottle the printer.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1606), sign. T. i. b.
I had been at Louvain and Antwerp to take some depositions for the discovering of the authours and correctors of that most pernicious libel, Corona Regia.

Troubal to the Sec. of State, 1619. Cabot. p. 151.

Friar Manrique commandeth all that passage to be blotted out: But the Roman correctors clap this note upon the margin for an antidote.

Abp. Usher, Answ. to the Jesuit Malone, p. 77.

The composers and correcters, of negligence, or set purpose, have altered many sentences, words, and letters, without reason or authority.

James on the Corruption of Scripture, &c. (1688,) p. 523.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author. Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous vellications of resinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes, and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with: thus turpentine is correctors of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture. Quincy.

CORREGIDOR.* n. s. [Spanish; low Lat. corrigedarius, from corripo.] A Spanish magistrate.

This noise was occasioned by the arrival of the corregidor, followed by two alguazils and a guard, who, without any ceremony, entered the room where we were. Smollett, Gil Blas.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Latin.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. s. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by casting off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son: in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate. South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [from con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another. South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it: giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other. South.

CORRELATIVE.* n. s. [from the adj.] That which has a reciprocal relation.

By what ever method one man gains an estate, by that same method, or its correlative, another has lost it. Blackstone.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. s. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION.* n. s. [from corruptio, Latin.] Objurcation; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

That I use all mildness or mansuetude in admonishing; the angry passionate corruption being rather apt to provoke, than to amend. Hammond of Fraternal Admon. or Correction, § 15.

His clarity of fraternal corruption having only this caution or restraint, the hearer's interest. Felt, Life of Hammond, § 2.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal corruption. Gov. of Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND.* v. n. [Fr. correspondre, from con and respondo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time. Helder on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any farther than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no farther than that. Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE.* n. s. [old Fr. correspondance.]
CORRESPONDENCY.

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the others more perfect direction. Hooker, b. i.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitudes, correspondencies, and relations keep the same to one another. Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms. King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence With the enemy, and thus they would betray us. Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter. Admiral, Guard. No. 116.

3. Friendship, interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, I am reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state. Bacon, Ess. 17.

CORRESPONDENT.* adj. [Fr. correspondant.] Suitable; adapted; agreeable; answerable.

What good or evil is there under the sun, what action correspondent or repugnant unto the law which God hath imposed upon his creatures, but in or upon it God doth work, according to the law which himself hath eternally purposed to keep. Hooker.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind, Five correspondent are to earth assign'd. Dryden, Oeul.

CORRESPONDENT. n. s. One with whom intelligence or commerce is kept up by mutual messages or letters.

He was pleased to command me to send to him, and receive from him all his letters from and to all his correspondents at home and abroad. Denham, Dedication.

CORRESPONDENTLY.* adv. [from correspondent.] In an according manner.

He terms the episcopal power of excommunication, the apostolical rod; and correspondently he calls Damasus, a bishop, his shepherd; and himself, a presbyter, his sheep. Bp. Morton, Episc. Asserted, p. 28.

CORRESPONSIVE. adj. [from correspond.] Answerable; adapted to any thing.

Priam's six gates P the city, with massy staples, And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts, Sperr'd up the sons of Troy. Shakespeare, Tro. and Cress.

CORRIDOR. n. s. [French.]

1. [In fortification.] The covert way lying round the whole compass of the fortifications of a place.

2. [In architecture.] A gallery or long isle round about a building, leading to several chambers at a distance from each other. Harris.

There is something very noble in the amphitheatre, though the high wall and corridors that went round it are almost entirely ruined. Addison on Italy.

CORRIGIBLE.* adj. [Fr. corrigible, from corrigo, Latin.]

1. Capable of being altered or amended.

A satire should expose nothing but what is corrigible. Addison, Spect. No. 209.

2. Deserving of punishment; punishable.

He was taken up very short, and adjudged corrigible for such presumptuous language. Howell, Vocal Portet.

3. Corrective; having the power to correct. Not proper, nor used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakspeare. It may not be proper, but it is certainly used.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will either have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry, the power and corrigible authority of this lies in our will.

Do I not beat a reasonable corrigible hand over him, Crispinus?

CORRIVAL.† n. s. [con and rival.] Rival; competitor.

They had governors commonly out of the two families of the Geraldines and Butlers, both adversaries and corrivals one against the other.

He that doth redeem her thence, might wear Without corrival all her dignities.

Others both just and wise, and Solomon among the rest, if they may not hate and forsake as Moses enjoins; and the gospel imports, will find it impossible not to love otherwise than will sort with the love of God, whose jealousy brooks no corrival.

CORRIVAL* adj. Contending.

Not thinking, perhaps, that this would be to erect a power equal and corrival with that of God.

To CORRIVAL* v. n. [from the noun.] To vie with.

A Starre which to the night no service lends,
Nor on the ever-changing Moone attends:
But with the Sunne corrivalling in light,
Shines more by day than other stars by night.

CORRIVALRY.† n. s. [from corrival.] Competition; opposition.

To reproach the Roman church for this idolatrous corrivalry, or rather prelation, of the Virgin in religious worship before Christ.

CORRIVALSHIP* n. s. [from corrival.] Opposition; rivalry.

To CORROBORATE. v. a. [corroboro, Latin.]

1. To confirm; to establish.

Machiavel well noteth, though in an ill-favoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by custom.

2. To strengthen; to make strong.

To fortify imagination there be three ways; the authority whence the belief is derived, means to quicken and corroborate the imagination, and means to repeat it and refresh it.

It was said that the prince himself had, by the sight of foreign courts, and observations on the different natures of people, and rules of government, much excited and awaked his spirits, and corroborated his judgement.

As any limb well and duly exercised grows stronger, the nerves of the body are corroborated thereby.

CORROBORATE* adj. [Lat. corroboratus.] Strengthened; confirmed; established.

There is no trusting to the force of nature, nor to the bravery of words; except it be corroborate by custom.

Wherever kingdoms and states have been united, and that union corroborate by the bond of mutual naturalization, you shall never observe them afterwards—to break and sever again.

CORROBORATION.† n. s. [from corroborate.] The act of strengthening or confirming; confirmation by some additional security; addition of strength.

The most renowned doctors of Christ's religion, in the corroboratio of their arguments and sentences, do allege the same histories.

The lady herself procured a bull, for the better corroboratio of the marriage.

Something also the bishop of Durham noted, out of the Gospel of St. Matthew, for the imposition of hands upon children. The conclusion was, for the fuller explanation, (thaw we make it not a sacrament, or a corroboratio to a former sacrament; then it should be considered of by their lordships, whether it might not, without alteration, (whereof his Majesty was still very wary) be intitled an Examination with a Confirmation.

CORROBORATIVE.† n. s. [from corroborate.] That which increases strength.

Like an apothecary's shop, wherein are remedies—alteratives, corroboratives, lenitives, &c.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist intemperies, as the heart is weakened by too much humidity, you are to mix corroboratives of an astringent faculty; and the ulcer also requireth to be dried.

CORROBORATIVE* adj. Having the power of confirming or establishing.

If you think there be any thing explanatory or corroborative of what I say in the beginning of my book, be so good to transcribe those passages for me.

To CORRODE. v. a. [corrodo, Lat.] To eat away by degrees, as a menstruum; to prey upon; to consume; to wear away gradually.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode The bad with bad, a spider with a toad;
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.

We know that aqua-fortis corroding copper, which is it that gives the colour to verdigrease, is wont to reduce it to a green blue solution.

The nature of mankind, left to itself, would soon have fallen into dissolution, without the incessant and corroding invasions of so long a time.

Hannibal the Pyreneans past,
And steepy Alps, the mounds that nature cast,
And with corroding juices, as he went,
A passage through the living rock he rent.

Fishes, which neither chew their meat nor grind it in their stomachs, do, by a dissolvent liquor there provided, corrode and reduce it into a chylus.

The blood turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing almost all the diseases of the inflammatory kind.

Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise.

CORRODIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed or corroded.

Metals, although corrodible by waters; yet will not suffer a liquation from the powerfulllest heat communicable unto that element.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'RRODY. n. s. [from corrodo, Lat.] A defalcation from an allowance or salary for some other than the original purpose.

Besides these floating burgesses of the ocean, there are certain flying citizens of the air, which prescribe for a corrody therein.

Crew.

In those days even noble persons, and other meaner men, ordered corrodies and pensions to their chaplains and servants out of churches.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

CORRO'SIBLE. adj. [from corrode.] Possible to be consumed by a menstruum, this ought to be corrodible.

CORRO'SIBLENESS. n. s. [from corrosible.] Susceptibility of corrosion, rather corrodibility.

Diet.

CORRO'SION. n. s. [from corrosion, Fr.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid, or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstruum here employed, have a considerable moment or force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved; so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions; and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm.

Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation.

Woodward.

CORRO'SIVE. adj. [old Fr. corrosif, from corrodo, Lat.] It was anciently pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, now indifferently.]

1. Having the power of consuming or wearing away.

The soft delicious air,

To heal the scar of these corrosive fires,
Shall breathe her calm.

He reft her hateful head, without remorse;
A stream of coal-black blood forth gushed from her corse.

Spenser, F. Q.

Set down the corse; or, by saint Paul,
I'll make a corse of him that disobeys. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

What may this mean?

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Here lay him down, my friends,
Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure
The bloody corse, and count those glorious wounds. Addison.

CORSE-PRESENT.* n. s. A funeral-present; a mortuary.

It was anciently usual in this kingdom to bring the mortuary to church along with the corpse, when it came to be buried;
and thence it is sometimes called a corse-present. Blackstone.

CO'RSELET. n. s. [corselet, Fr.] A light armour for the forepart of the body.

Some shirts of mail, some coats of plate put on,
Some don'd a cuirace, some a corselet bright. Marston.

They lash, they foil, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corselets, and their thinnest parts explore. Dryden.

But heroes who o'ercome or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which, in battle's heat,
Against their very corselets beat. Prior.

TO CO'RSELET, or CO'RSLET.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To encircle, as with a corselet.

Her arms,

Able to lock Jove from a synod, shall
By warranting moon-light corselet thee.

Bacon, and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CORSET.* n. s. [Fr.] A pair of boddices for a woman. The word is still in use. Cotgrave.

C O R

CORTEGE.* n. s. [French; perhaps from cortice, the ablative of cortex.] A train of attendants; as,
"a cortège of coaches." Wiquefort's Ambass. p. 18.

CORTES.* n. s. [Spanish.] The states assembled in Madrid.

The following accounts; though short and imperfect, yet are sufficient to satisfy any person of the ancient Spanish cortes having been the same with the English parliament, and with the assembly of the states in France.

Geddes, View of the Cortes, Tracts, (1720,) i. 318.

CO'RTEX.* n. s. [Lat.] Bark; cover.

Which seeds by the help of microscopes are all found to be real and perfect plants, with leaves and trunk curiously folded up and enclosed in the cortex. Budley, Sermon IV.

CORTICAL. adj. [cortex, bark, Lat.] Barky: belonging to the outer part; belonging to the rind;
outward.

Their last extremities form a little gland, (all these little glands together make the cortical part of the brain) terminating in two little vessels. Cheyne, Phil. Trans.

CORTICATED. adj. [from corticatus, Lat.] Resembling the bark of a tree.

This animal is a kind of lizard, a quadruped corticated and depilous; that is, without wool, fur, or hair. Brown.

CORTICOSE. adj. [from corticosis, Lat.] Full of bark.
Dict.

CORVETTO. n. s. The curvet.

You must draw the horse in his career with his manage, and tug, doing the corveto and leaping. Peecham on Driving.

CORUSCANT.* adj. [corusco, Lat.] Glittering by flashes; flashing.

His praises are like those coruscant beams,
Which Phœbus on high rocks of crystal streams.

Howell, Lett. iv. 49.

TO CORUSCATE.* v. n. [Lat. corusco.] To glitter.

As flaming fire was more coruscant and enlightning than any other matter, they invented lamps to hang in the sepulchres of the rich, which would burn perpetually.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 331.

CORUSCATION. n. s. [coruscatio, Lat.] Flash; quick vibration of light.

We see that lightnings and coruscations, which are near at hand, yield no sound. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We may learn that sulphureous steams abound in the bowels of the earth, and ferment with minerals, and sometimes take fire with a sudden coruscation and explosion. Newton, Opt.

How heat and moisture mingle in a mass,
Or heave in thunder, or in lightning blaze;
Why nimble coruscations strike the eye,
And bold tornadoes bluster in the sky. Garth, Dispens.

CORYBANTICK.* adj. [from Corybantæ, the frantick priests of Cybele. The Greeks have adopted κορυβαντισμ, and the French corybantier, to denote the action of a mad enthusiast.] Madly agitated or inflamed.

True divine zeal is no corybantick fury, but a calm and regular heat, guided and managed by light and prudence.

'When the evil spirit moves them to resist and overthrow, how full are they of the highest corybantick fury!

Fuller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 7.

CORYMBIATED. adj. [corymbus, Lat.] Garnished with branches of berries. Dict.

CORYMBIFEROUS. adj. [from corymbus and fero, Lat.]
Bearing fruit or berries in bunches.

Corymbiferous plants are distinguished into such as have a radiate flower, as the sun-flower; and such as have a naked flower, as the hemp-agrimony, and mugwort: to which are added those a-kin hereunto, such as scabious, teasel, thistle, and the like. Quincy.

CORYMBUS. n. s. [Latin.]

Among the ancient botanists it was used to express the bunches or clusters of berries of ivy: amongst modern botanists it is used for a compounded dissected flower, whose seeds are not pappous, or do not fly away in blown; such are the flowers of daisies, and common marygold. Quincy.

CORYPHE'US. * n. s. [Lat. from the Gr. κορυφή, the top of the head. Fr. coryphée.] The principal of those who composed the chorus in the ancient tragedy; and the speaker for them. Hence the word has passed, in several languages, into a general name for a chief or principal of any company; and accordingly our language, nearly two centuries since, had "corypheus, or prime man." See Sherwood's Fr. and Eng. Dict. 1632. It is now sometimes applied to the leader or director of a band of musick.

COSCI'NOMANCY. n. s. [from κοσκίνον, a sieve, and μαντις, divination.] The art of divination by means of a sieve. A very ancient practice mentioned by Theocritus, and still used in some parts of England, to find out persons unknown.

Chambers.

COS'E'CAN'T. n. s. [In geometry.] The secant of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees.

Harris.

To CO'SEN. * See To COZEN.

CO'SH'RING. n. s. [Irish.]

Cosh'ings were visitations and progresses made by the lord and his followers among his tenants; wherein he did eat them (as the English proverb is) out of house and home.

Darvies.

CO'SIER. † n. s. [cousu, old Fr. from coudre, to sew.] A botcher; a tailor; or, according to Minsheu, a cobbler.

Do you make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your cosiers' catches, without any mitigation or remorse of voice?

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.

COSIGN'FICATIVE. * adj. [con and significative.] Having the same signification.

Cockeram.

CO'SINE. n. s. [In geometry.] The right sine of an arch, which is the complement of another to ninety degrees.

Harris.

COSME'TICK. * n. s. [Fr. cosmétique, Gr. κοσμητικός, from κοσμέω, to adorn. The word is of no great age either in our own or the Fr. language. In the Pop's Dictionary of 1690, Cosmeticks are explained, as if the word was then not generally intelligible.] A preparation for improving beauty.

No better cosmeticks than a severe temperance and purity, modesty and humility, a gracious temper and calmness of spirit; no true beauty without the signatures of these graces in the very countenance.

Ray on the Creation.

Next, rose-check'd majesty, beyond compare
The best cosmetick of the virgin's face.

Lilwards, Can. of Crit. Sonn. 36.

COSME'TICK. † adj. Having the power of improving beauty; beautifying.

First, rob'd in white, the nymph intent adores,
With head uncover'd, the cosmetick powers.

Pope.

He [Plot] seems to be most happily employed, when he is learnedly debating on tautological echoes, fanciful petrifications, subterraneous snails, undescribed thunderbolts, cosmetick clay, the altitude of giants, uncommonly prolific cases of Oxfordshire women and cows, pregnancies of extraordinary duration, children crying in the womb yet portending no misfortune, prophetic dreams, knockings before death, capricious devils, amulets against witchcraft, stags without antlers, and rams with six horns.

Watson, Hist. of Killington, Pref.

COSMICAL. adj. [κόσμος.] .

1. Relating to the world.

2. Rising or setting with the sun; not acronychal.

The cosmical ascension of a star we term that, when it riseth together with the sun, or in the same degree of the ecliptick wherein the sun abideth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'SMICALLY. adv. [from cosmical.] With the sun; not acronychally.

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but eliacally; that is, its emersion from the rays of the sun, the ancient computed their calicular days.

Brown.

COSMO'GONIST. * n. s. [from cosmogony.] He who describes the creation of the world.

The relation seems in some measure to have been approved by the sacred cosmogonist himself; who in entering upon the important transaction of creation, or a universe rising into being at the efficacious fiat of its Maker, gives us his first general picture of it, under the two comprehensive distinctions of heaven and earth.

Century, Dial. to Hud. Conv. 3.

COSMO'GONY. † n. s. [κόσμος, and γέννη.] The rise of birth of the world; the creation.

There are some bad books in that language [the Greek] relating to cosmogonies, and amongst them a little piece of Ocellus Lucanus.

The Student, ii. 380.

The world is in its dotage, and yet the cosmogony or creation of the world has puzzled philosophers of all ages.

Goldsmith, Fear of Wakefield, ch. 14.

COSMO'GRAPHER. n. s. [κόσμος and γράφω.] One who writes a description of the world; distinct from geographer, who describes the situation of particular countries.

The ancient cosmographers do place the division of the East and Western hemisphere; that is, the first term of longitude in the Canary or Fortunate Islands, conceiving these parts the extremest habitations westward.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

COSMOGRA'PHICAL. † adj. [from cosmographical.] Relating to the general description of the world.

An old cosmographical poet.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. Pref.

COSMOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from cosmographical.] In a manner relating to the science by which the structure of the world is discovered and described.

The terrestrial, or spherical magnet, cosmographically set out with circles of the globe.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

COSMO'GRAPHY. † n. s. [κόσμος and γράφω.] The science of the general system or affections of the world, distinct from geography, which delivers the situation and boundaries of particular countries.

I never travelled but in map or card, in which mine unconfin'd thoughts have freely expatiated, as having ever been especially delighted with the study of cosmography.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Here it might see the world without travel; it being a lesser scheme of the creation, nature contracted, a little cosmography, or map of the universe.

South.

COSMOPLA'STICK. * adj. [κόσμος, the world, and πλαστικός, plastick.] Respecting the formation of the world.

The opinion of Seneca signifies little in this case, he bring no better than a cosmoplastick atheist, i. e. he made a certain plastick or spermatick nature, devoid of all animality or conscious intellectuality, to be the highest principle in the universe.

COSMOPO'LITAN. † } n. s. [κόσμος and πολίτης, Fr. cos-
COSMO'POLITE. } mopolitain.] A citizen of the world; one who is at home in every place.

I came tumbling out into the world a pure cadet, a true cosmopolite; not born to land, lease, house, or office.

Howell, Lett. i. vi. 60.

Thus God and Nature taught their rude cosmopolite.

More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 122.

COSSACKS.* n. s. [the etymology of the word has given rise to various opinions. Some consider it as derived from the Polish kosa, or cosa, a goat; these persons imitating the agility as well as the wandering life of the animal. Others refer it to the Tartar language. "C'est à la langue Tartare qu'appartient le mot kosaque. Il signifie un guerrier armé à la légère." Hist. de la Russie par M. L'Evêque, tom. iv. p. 403. Others, to Chazakia, or the land of the chazaks, which formed a part of what is now Circassia, properly so called. Peyssonnel, Observ. sur les Peup. Barb. p. 125.] A people now inhabiting the Ukraine; and in military history, a body of soldiers serving under the Russian government, to which they belong; who have indeed often distinguished themselves, but never with so much valour and success as in contributing to the late overthrow of the most gigantic tyranny that ever trampled upon society, and disgraced human nature.

This upstart, strengthened with many Poles and Cossacks, appears in arms to claim his right out of the hands of Boris.

Milton, Hist. of Moscow.

CO'SSET.* n. s. [Ital. cassiccio, from casa, the house.] A lamb brought up without the dam. The term is applied to a calf, or colt. It is yet used in Norfolk and Suffolk.

And, if thou wilt bewaile my wofull teene,

I shall give thee yond cosset for thy payne.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain

Than kid or cosset.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

CO'SSICK.* adj. [cossa, Lat. "Algebra so called." Cambridge Dict. 1693.] Relating to algebra. Not now in use. "Cossike numbers," Reorde's Whetstone of Witte, 1557. Bp. Hall also uses the word, Rem. p. 367.

COST.* n. s. [kost, Dutch. As this word is found in the remotest Teutonic dialects, even in the Icelandic, it is not probably derived to us from the Latin costo; though it is not unlikely, that the French coster comes from the Latin.]

1. The price of any thing. [Sax. cýrt, Manning's Suppl. to Lye.]

2. Sumptuousness; luxury.

The city woman bears:

The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders.

Shakspeare.

Let foreign princes vainly boast

The rude effects of pride and cost

Of vaster fabricks, to which they Contribute nothing but the pay.

Waller.

3. Charge; expence.

While he found his daughter maintained without his cost, he was content to be deaf to any noise of infamy.

Sidney.

I shall never hold that upon my friend,

Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost,

To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?

2 Sam. xix. 42.

And wilt thou, O cruel boast!

Put poor nature to such cost?

O! 'twill undo our common mother,

To be at charge of such another.

Crashaw.

It is strange to see any ecclesiastical pile, not by ecclesiastical cost and influence, rising above ground; especially in an age in which men's mouths are open against the church, but their hands shut towards it.

South, Serm.

He whose tale is best, and pleases most,

Should win his supper at our common cost.

Dryden, Fab.

Fourteen thousand pounds are paid by Wood for the purchase of his patent; what were his other visible costs I know not; what his latest, is variously conjectured.

Swift.

4. Loss; fine; detriment.

I am what I am, and they that prove me shall find me to their cost: do you mark me neighbour, to their cost, I say.

Braun, and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

What they had fondly wished, proved afterwards to their costs over true.

Knoles, Hist. of the Turks.

COST.* n. s. [Fr. coste, Lat. costa. See COAST.] A rib, or side.

Betwixt the costs of a ship.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To Cost. v. n. pret. cost; particip. cost. [couster, Fr.]

To be bought for; to be had at a price.

The dagger and poison are always in readiness; but to bring the action to extremity, and then recover all, will require the art of a writer, and cost him many a pang.

Dryden.

CO'STAL.* adj. [Fr. costal, from the Lat. costa. See COST.] Belonging to the ribs.

Hereby are excluded all cetaceans and cartilaginous fishes, many pectinal, whose ribs are rectilinear; and many costal, which have their ribs embowed.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CO'STARD.* n. s. [from coster, a head, Dr. Johnson says; which is certainly found, in composition with monger, meaning an apple-monger, or costard-monger; but neither in this or any other sense has he noticed coster; which Skinner, however, says, is an old word for the head.]

1. A head.

Take him over the costard with the hilt of thy sword.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. An apple round and bulky like the head.

The wilding, costard, then the well-known pomwater.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 18.

CO'STARD-MONGER.* n. s. [from costard and monger.]

A dealer in apples; a fruiterer.

Many country vicars are driven to shifts; and, if our greedy patrons hold us to such conditions, they will make us turn costard-mongers, grasiars, or sell ale.

Burton on Melanch.

Half-famished Tantalus is fallen to his fruit, with that appetite, as it threatens to undo the whole company of costard-mongers, and has a river afore him running excellent wine.

B. Jonson, Masques.

CO'STER-MONGER.* n. s. The same as costard-monger.

Poets had their Muses; orators, their Mercury; physicians, their Esculapius; gardeners their Flora; costermongers, their Pomona.

Fotherby, Altheon. p. 38.

He'll rail like a rude coster-monger.

Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

COSTIVE.* adj. [constipatus, Lat. constipé, Fr.]

1. Bound in the body; having the excretions obstructed.

When the passage of the gall becomes obstructed, the body grows costive, and the excrements of the belly white.

Brown.

While faster than his costive brain indites,

Philo's quick hand in flowing letters writes;

His case appears to me like honest Teague's,

When he was run away with by his legs.

Prior.

2. Close; impermeable.

Clay in dry seasons is costive, hardening with the sun and wind, till unlocked by industry, so as to admit of the air and heavenly influences.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Cold; formal.

The costive liberality of a purseproud man insults the distresses it sometimes relieves.

Ld. Chesterfield.

You must be frank, but without indiscretion; and close, but without being costive.

Ibid.

CO'STIVENESS.* n. s. [from costive.]

1. The state of the body in which excretion is obstructed.

Costiveness disperses malign putrid fumes out of the guts and mesentery into all parts of the body, occasioning headaches, fevers, loss of appetite, and disturbance of concoction. Harvey.

Costiveness has ill effects, and is hard to be dealt with by physick; purging medicines rather increasing than removing the evil. Locke on Educat.

2. Coldness; stiffness.

In the literary and philosophical society at Manchester was once a reverend disputant of the same costiveness in publick elocation with myself. Wakefield, Mem. p. 216.

CO'STLESS.* adj. [cost and less.] Costing nothing; without expence.

I have known many, saith St. Basil, who have fasted, and prayed, and groaned, and expressed all sorts of costless piety; who yet would not part with a doit to the afflicted. Barrow, i. Sermon, 31.

CO'STLINESS. n. s. [from costly.] Sumptuousness; expensiveness.

Though not with curious costliness, yet with cleanly sufficiency it entertained me. Sidney.

Nor have the frugaller sons of fortune any reason to object the costliness; since they frequently pay dearer for less advantageous pleasures. Glanville's Scipio.

COSTLY. adj. [from cost.] Sumptuous; expensive; of a high price.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakspeare, Ham.

Leave for a while thy costly country seat;
And to be great indeed, forget
The nauseous pleasures of the great. Dryden.

The chapel of St. Laurence will be perhaps the most costly piece of work on the earth, when completed. Addison.

He is here speaking of Paradise, which he represents as a most charming and delightful place; abounding with things not only useful and convenient, but even the most rare and valuable, the most costly and desirable. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CO'STMARY.* n. s. [costus, Latin.] An herb.

The scented camomile, the verdurous costmary.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

CO'STREL. n. s. [supposed to be derived from costus.] A bottle. Skinner.

*COSTUME.* n. s.* [Ital. costume; old Fr. costume; les contumes, floeurs, usages. V. Roquefort. Low Lat. custuma, old Eng. custume.] In painting, the strict observance of proper character as to persons and things. It is now generally applied in the sense of custom or manners.

The cruzado was not current, as it should seem, at Venice, though it certainly was in England in the time of Shakspeare, who has here indulged his usual practice of departing from national costume. Douce, Illustr. of Shakspeare, ii. 270.

COSUFFERER.* n. s. [con and sufferer.] A fellow-sufferer.

Should no cosufferers commiserate.

Wyckly, Prol. to Love in a Wood.

COSUPREME.* n. s. [con and supreme.] A partaker of supremity.

The phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love. Shakspeare, Pass. Pilgrim.

COT. } At the end of the names of places, come
COTE. } generally from the Saxon cot, a cottage.
COAT. } Gibson.

COT.* n. s. [Goth kot, a little house; Welsh, cwt; Sax. cot and cote. Our own word is often written cole. The first example of cot which is in Dr. Johnson's dictionary, means a very different thing from a cottage. It is a boat. Cot, in our language has also another meaning, which has likewise escaped Dr. Johnson's notice. See Cor, a boat; and Cor, a bed.] A small house; a cottage; a hut; a mean habitation.

Besides, his cot, his flocks, and bounds of feed,
Are now on sale; and at our sheepcote now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will feed on. Shakspeare, As you like it.

A stately temple shoots within the skies:
The crotchets of their cot in columns rise;
The pavement, polish'd marble they behold;
The gates with sculpture grac'd, the spires and tiles of gold. Dryden, Baucis and Phil.

As Jove vouchsaf'd on Ida's top, 'tis said,
At poor Philemon's cot to take a bed. Eden.

COT, or COR.* n. s. [old Fr. cote, coite; Gr. κοίτη, a bed.] A small bed; a cradle, as it is yet call'd in the north of England; and a hammock, as the sailors still call it.

Their beds are cots of two feet height, or four low posts strengthened with girth-web. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 314.
Lying upon a slight and low bedstead they [the Turks] call a cot, bottomed with broad girth-web made of cotton wool. Terry, Voy. to the E. Ind. (1655), p. 198.

COT, or COTT.* n. s. [low Lat. cota, a kind of ship. The passage from Spenser has been cited by Dr. Johnson as an illustration of cot for cottage.] A little boat.

Cymochles of her questioned
Both what she was, and what that usage meant,
Which in her cott she daily practized;—
Vaine man, said she;—
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourne. Spenser, F. Q. ii. vi. 9.

They call, in Ireland, cots, things like boats, but very unsightly, being nothing but square pieces of timber made hollow. G. Boute's Nat. Hist. of Ireland, p. 64.

COT.* n. s.

1. An abridgement of cotquwan.

2. A cade-lamb. Grose.

TO COTA'BULATE.* v. a. [See TO CONTABULATE. This word has the authority of our old lexicography.] To plank; to floor with boards. Cockeram.

COTA'NGENT. n. s. [In geometry.] The tangent of an arch which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

COTE.* n. s. [Sax. See Cor.]

1. A cottage. The old orthography. Sherwood.
No sooner sat he foot within the late deformed cote,
But that the formal change of things his wondering eyes did note. Warner, Albion's England, (1597.)

Not a swain
This night hath known his lodging here, or lain
Within these cotes. Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess.

2. A sheepfold.

Stalls for all manner of beasts, and cotes for flocks.

2 Chron. xxxii. 28.

The folded flock penn'd in their wattled cotes. Milton, Com.
TO COTE.* v. a. [perhaps from the Fr. coté, the side of any thing; de coté, sidelong.] This word, which I have found only in Chapman, seems to signify the same as to leave behind, to overpass, Dr. Johnson says. It is used by Shakspeare, however, and several authors of his time.

Words her worth had prov'd with deeds,
Had more ground been allow'd the race, and coted far his steeds. Chapman, Iliad.

We coted them [the players] on the way, and hither are they coming. Shakspeare, Ham.

Marry, we presently coted and outstript them.

Return from Parnassus, 1600.

TO COTE.* See TO QUOTE, which formerly was written cote.

COTE'MPORARY.* adj. [con and tempus, Latin. Bentley has remarked that cotemporary is a downright barbarism. "For the Latins never use co for con, except before a vowel, as, coequal, coeternal; but, before a consonant, they either retain the n, as contemporary, constitution, or melt it into another letter, as, collection, comprehension: so that the word contemporary is a word of his [Boyle's] own coposition, for which the learned world will cognatulate him!" Diss. on Phalaris, Pref. — It will not be easy to confute the reasoning of this remark, by which the just rule of formation to our compound words of this class is given; though many indeed affectedly write cogenial, copartment, and the like, as well as cotemporary. Sprat might have been added by Dr. Johnson to Locke in aid of cotemporary; and in modern times, both the Warton's have adopted this spelling. Yet Locke, and Cowley, and Dryden, and Addison, are Johnson's examples for contemporary; and Chillingworth and Steele will be found on the same side.] Living at the same time; coetaneous; contemporary.

What would not, to a rational man, cotemporary with the first voucher, have appeared probable, is now used as certain, because several have since, from him, said it one after another.

Locke.

COTEMPORARY.* n. s. One who lives at the same time.

We now find so much artifice amongst those our cotemporaries, who only follow rude and untaught nature.

Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 81.

COTERIE.* n. s. [Fr. those who compose the modern coteries, will be surprised at Cotgrave's rude description of it! "COTERIE, company, society, association of country people." It is indeed a term adopted from the French trading partnerships or associations, where each contributed his quota of stock, and received in return the quota of profit. It has of late years been considered as meaning a select party, or club; and sometimes of ladies only.] A friendly or fashionable association. Of no great date in our language. Sterne somewhere uses it.

COTILLON.* n. s. [Fr. cotillon, a petticoat.] A brisk lively dance; in which eight persons are usually employed.

Brawls were a sort of figure dance then in vogue, and probably deemed as elegant as our modern cotillons.

Gray, Long Story, Note, ver. 11.

I could as easily reconcile it to my ideas of propriety, to see a chief justice, or an archbishop, display their activity in a cotillon, as to have seen Mr. Shenstone footing it in a country dance.

Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 45.

COTLAND. n. s. [cot and land.] Land appendant to a cottage.

COTQUEAN. n. s. [probably from coquin, French.] A man who busies himself with women's affairs.

Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica;
Spare not for cost. —

— Go, go, you cotquean, go;
Get you to bed.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

A stateswoman is as ridiculous a creature as a cotquean: each of the sexes should keep within its bounds.

Addison.

You have given us a lively picture of husbands hen-pecked; but you have never touched upon one of the quite different character, and who goes by the name of cotquean.

Addison.

COTSWOLD.* n. s. [Sax. cote, a cottage, and pold, a place without wood.] Sheepcotes, in an open country; whence the large tract of downs called Cotswold hills in Gloucestershire.

COTTAGE. n. s. [from cot.] A hut; a mean habitation; a cot; a little house.

The sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

Zeph. ii. 6.

They were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage, and there to serve God upon their knees.

Hooker.

The self-same sun that shines upon his court,
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but

Looks on both alike.

Shakespeare, W. Tale.

Let the women of noble birth and great fortunes nurse their children, look to the affairs of the house, visit poor cottages, and relieve their necessities.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

It is difficult for a peasant, bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the splendours of a court.

South.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,

And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste.

Pope, Odyssey.

COTTAGED.* adj. [from cottage.] Having cottages.

Ev'n humble Harting's cottag'd vale

Shall learn the sad repeated tale,

And bid her shepherds weep.

Collins, Ode v.

COTTAGELY.* adj. [from cottage.] Rustick; suitable to a cottage.

They envy others whatever they enjoy of estates, houses, or ornaments of life, beyond their tenuity or cottagely obscurity.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 172.

COTTAGER. n. s. [from cottage.]

1. One who lives in a hut or cottage.

Let us from our farms,

Call forth our cottagers to arms.

Swift.

The most ignorant Irish cottager will not sell his cow for a groat.

Swift, Add. to Parliament.

2. A cottager, in law, is one that lives on the common, without paying rent, and without any land of his own.

The husbandmen and plowmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, or else mere cottagers, which are but housed beggars.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

The yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

COTTIER.* n. s. This is our modern term for the next word, of which Dr. Johnson has noticed merely the existence; but cottier can boast good authority, and cotter indeed is an old Scottish word.

COTTIER.* n. s. [old Fr. cottier, Kelham and Cotgrave; "like enough," says Cotgrave, "the original of our cottager."] One who inhabits a cot.

Itself goes patch'd, like some bare cottier.

Bp. Hall, Satires, iv. 2.

Cottiers; rustick, clownish.

Warburton.

COTTON. n. s. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mala cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cotone, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.

The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive.

Wiseman.

2. Cloth made of cotton.

COTTON. n. s. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk or seed-vessel growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultiv vated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt; these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Miller.

To COTTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a nap.

2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift.

COTTONOUS, or COTTONY. \ adj.* [Fr. cotteux.]

• Full of cotton; soft as cotton; overgrown with a white, soft, or cottonlike down. Cutgrave.

There is a salix near Dorking in Surrey, in which the julus bears a thick cottonous substance. Evelyn, i. 19. § 8.

Oaks bear also a knur full of a cottony matter, of which they anciently made wick for their lamps and candles. Ib. i. 3. § 17.

CO'TYLA, or CO'YLE. \ n. s.* [Fr. cotyle; Gr. κοτύλη, a cavity.]

1. The deep cavity of a bone, which receives the end of another in articulation.

2. A liquid measure in use among the ancients. [Lat. cotula, Fr. cotyle.]

To COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.

If I court more women, you'll couch with more men.

Shakespeare.

Doth not the gentleman

Deserve as full, as fortunate a bed,

As ever Beatrice shall couch upon?

Shakespeare.

When love's fair goddess

Couch'd with her husband in his golden bed.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To lie down on the knees, as a beast to rest.

Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fiercely tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues.

Dryden, Virg.

These, when death

Comes like a rushing lion, couch like spaniels,

With lolling tongues, and tremble at the paw.

Dryden.

3. To lie down in secret, or in ambush.

We'll couch i' the castle-ditch, till we see the light of our fairies.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

The earl of Angus couch'd in a furrow, and was passed over for dead, until a horse was brought for his escape.

Hayward.

4. To lie in a bed, or stratum.

Blessed of the Lord be his land for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath.

Deut. xxxiii. 13.

5. To stoop; or bend down; to lower, in fear, in pain, in respect.

Issachar is a strong ass, couching down between two burdens.

Gen. xlix. 14.

To COUCH. v. a.

1. To repose; to lay on a place of repose.

Where unbruised youth, with unstuff'd brain,

Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.

Shakespeare.

2. To lay down any thing in a bed, or stratum.

If the weather be warm, we immediately couch malt about a foot thick; but if a hotter season require it, we spread it on the floor much thinner.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

The sea and the land make one globe; and the waters couch themselves, as close as may be, to the centre of this globe, in a spherical convexity.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

3. To bed; to hide in another body.

It is at this day in use at Gaza, to couch potsherd, or vessels of earth, in their walls; to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To involve; to include; to comprise.

But who will call those noble who deface,

By meaner acts, the glories of their race;

Whose only title to their fathers' fame,

Is couch'd in the dead letters of their name?

Dryden, Juv.

That great argument for a future state, which St. Paul hath couch'd in the words I have read to you.

Atterbury, Sermon.

5. To include secretly; to hide: with under.

The foundation of all parables, is some analogy or similitude between the topical or allusive part of the parable and the thing couch'd under it, and intended by it. South.

There is all this, and more, that lies naturally couch'd under this allegory. L'Estrange.

The true notion of the institution being lost, the tradition of the deluge, which was couch'd under it, was thereupon at length suspended and lost. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

6. To lay close to another.

And over all, with brazen scales was arm'd,

Like plated coat of steel, so couch'd near,

That nought might pierce.

Spenser, D. Q.

7. To fix the spear in the rest; in the posture of attack.

The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear,

And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might.

Spenser, F. Q.

Before each van

Prick forth the airy knights, and couch their spears,

'Till thickest legions close.

Milton, P. L.

The former way'd in air

His flaming sword, Æneas couch'd his spear.

Dryden, Æn.

8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly call'd couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.

Some artist, whose nice hand

Couches the cataracts, and clears his sight,

And all at once a flood of glorious light

Comes rushing on his eyes.

Dennis.

Whether the cataract be wasted by being separated from its vessels, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couch'd.

Sharp.

COUCH. † n. s. [Fr. couche.]

1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.

So Satan fell; and straight a fiery globe

Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,

Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft,

From his uneasy station, and uphore

As on a floating couch through the blithe air.

Milton, P. R.

To loll on couches, rich with citron steds,

And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Dryden, Virg. Geo.

O, ye immortal pow'rs that guard the just,

Watch round his couch, and soften his repose.

Addison, Cato.

2. A bed; a place of repose.

The beasts that runne astray, seeketh their accustomed couches.

Bale, Pref. to Leland's Journey, D. 2.

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury and damned incest.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair

Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch.

Milton, P. L.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,

Forsook his easy couch at early day.

Dryden, Fab.

3. A layer, or stratum.

This heap is call'd by malsters a couch, or bed of raw malt.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

COUCHANT. adj. [couchant, Fr.] Lying down; squatting.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not probably a lion rampant, but rather couchant or dormant.

Brown.

As a tiger, who by chance hath spy'd,

In some purlicu, two gentle fawns at play,

Strait couches close; then rising, changes oft.

His couchant watch.

Milton, P. L.

COUCHEE. † n. s. [French.] Bedtime; the time of visiting late at night.

None of her sylvan subjects made their court;

Leaves and couches pass'd without resort.

Dryden.

Two days afterwards I was at the king's couchee, and wondered to see him quite cheerful, amidst such an intricacy of trouble.

Hervey's Memoirs, p. 95.

I was at the king's couchee, as I was three times in one week.

Ibid. p. 121.

COUCHER. † n. s. [from couch.]

C O V

1. He that couches or depresses cataracts.
2. A bedfellow. [couchcur, Fr.] Cotgrave.

CO'UCHIER.* n. s. [Fr. cachereau, the same as chartulaire. Cotgrave; from cacher, to keep secret.] A register-book in monasteries. The churchwardens of every parish shall deliver unto our visitours the inventories of vestments, copes, and other ornaments, plate, books, and specially of grayles, couchers, legends, &c. Q. Eliz. Injunctions, &c. 1559.

CO'UCHFELLOW.* n. s. [couch and fellow.] Bedfellow; companion.

I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couchfellow, Nim; or else you had looked through the grate like a geniny of baboons. Shakspeare.

CO'UCHGRASS. n. s. A weed.

The couchgrass, for the first year, insensibly robs most plants in safety grounds apt to graze. Mortimer, Husbandry.

CO'UCHING.* n. s. [from To couch.] The act of bending or bowing. See To Couch.

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies, Might fire the blood of ordinary men. Shakspeare, Jul. Cesar.

COUD.* Often used by our old authors for COULD.

COVE.†. n. s.

Swimburne, Trav. through Spain, I. 44.

CO'VENABLE.* adj. [old Fr. covenable, proper.] Fit; suitable.

When a covenable day was fallen, Eroude in his birthe day made a soper to the princes, &c. Wicliffe, St. Mark, vi.

The covenable joyning of every of the sayd partes one with another, as they come together in sentences.

Palsgrave, Fr. Gr. 1511, B. iii. Intr.

CO'VENABLY.* adv. [from covenable.] Fitly; properly.

He shall here hym, toward owre lord the kyng and his people, in the same office wele and covenably.

Indenture of 1469, Archæol. xv. 177.

CO'VENANT.†. n. s. [old Fr. covenans, convenant, covenance; used for conventions, according to Lacombe, in the 10th century. Lat. conventum.]

1. A contract; a stipulation.

He makes a covenant never to destroy The earth again by flood; nor let the sea Surpass his bounds.

Milton, P. L.

The English make the ocean their abode, Whose ready sails with ev'ry wind can fly, And make a covenant with th' unconstant sky.

Waller.

Some men live as if they had made a covenant with hell: let divines, fathers, friends say what they will, they stop their ears against them.

L'Estrange.

2. An agreement on certain terms; a compact.

A covenant is a mutual compact, as we now consider it, betwixt God and man; consisting of mercies, on God's part, made over to man, and of conditions on man's part, required by God.

Hammond, Pract. Cat.

3. A writing containing the terms of agreement.

I shall but lend my diamond till your return; let there be covenants drawn between us.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

To CO'VENANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To bargain; to stipulate.

His lord used commonly so to covenant with him, which if at any time the tenant disliked, he might freely depart at his pleasure.

Spenser on Ireland.

By words men come to know one another's minds; by these they covenant and confederate.

South.

C O V

Jupiter covenanted with him, that it should be hot or cold, wet or dry, calm or windy, as the tenant should direct.

L'Estrange.

2. To agree with another on certain terms: with for before either the price or the thing purchased.

They covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

St. Matt. xxvi. 15.

Pointing to a heap of sand,

For ev'ry grain to live a year demand;

But, ah! unmindful of th' effect of time,

Forgot to covenant for youth and prime.

Garth's Ovid.

To CO'VENANT.* v. a. To contract; to stipulate.

According to the word that I covenanted with you.

Haggai, ii. 5.

It had been covenanted between him and the king of England, that neither of them should treat of peace or truce with the French king.

Hayward on Edu. VI.

COVENANTE'E. n. s. [from covenant.] A party to a covenant; a stipulator; a bargainer.

Both of them were respective rites of their admission into the several covenants, and the covenanters became thereby entitled to the respective privileges.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

CO'VENANTER.†. n. s. [from covenant.] One who takes a covenant. A word introduced in the civil wars, Dr. Johnson says; which may be doubted. Dr. Johnson introduces the word only from the Oxford Reasons against the Covenant; but it had been used by Sir H. Wotton; and by another author, whom I cite, the word is employed without any reference to the cant expression in the civil wars.

I am sorry to hear of new oaths in Scotland between the covenanters, who they say will have none but Jesus Christ to reign over them.

Sir H. Wotton, Letters.

They cut the calf in twaine; the manner of making covenants; whence the Hebrew phrase is to cut a covenant, that is, from the rite of cutting a beast in twaine, sometime for sacrifice, sometime for feasting; and the covenanters passing through between the parts of it, implying it seems, and that by way of execration, themselves to be alike cut in sunder in case of violating the conditions of the covenant.

Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. (1655) p. 424.

The covenanters shall have no more assurance of mutual assistance each from other, after the taking of the covenant, than they had before.

Oxford Reasons against the Covenant.

CO'VENOUS. adj. [from covin.] Fraudulent; collusive; trickish.

I wish some means devised for the restraint of these inordinate and covenous leases of lands, holden in chief, for hundreds or thousands of years.

Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

CO'VENT.* n. s. [old Fr. covent, for convent. Rocquefort.

Our old lexicography gives covent; and the word is usual in good writers. Covent-Garden is supposed to mean a garden that belonged to a convent; and thence its present name.] A convent, or monastery.

Their monasteries, covents, hospitals, &c.

Bale on the Revel. (1550) I. 8.

You will find a scar in his face, that was from a Roman assassinate, that would have killed him as he was turned to a wall near to his covent.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. to the Regius Professor.

Abbess of that covent.

Bp. Hall, Works, iii. 993.

Putting the covent-seal to any deed.

Burnet, Hist. Ref. i. 3.

To COVER. v. a. [couvrir, French.]

1. To overspread any thing with something else.

The pastures are clothed with flocks, the valleys also are covered over with corn.

Psal. lxx. 13.

Sea cover'd sea,

Sea without shore.

Milton, P. L.

The flaming mount appear'd

In Dothan cover'd with a camp of fire.

Milton, P. L.

Go to thy fellows, bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

2. To conceal under something laid over.

Nor he their outward, only with the skins
Of beasts, but inward nakedness much more Opprobrious, with his robe of righteousness

Cover me ye pines,

Ye cedars with innumerable boughs
Hide me, that I may never see them more. Milton, P. L.

In life's cool vale let my low scene be laid,
• Cover me, gods, with Tempe's thickest shade. Cowley.

Or lead me to some solitary place,
And cover my retreat from human race. Dryden, Virg.

3. To hide by superficial appearances.

4. To overwhelm; to bury.

Railery and wit serve only to cover nonsense with shame, when reason has first proved it to be mere nonsense. Watts.

5. To conceal from notice or punishment.

Charity shall cover the multitude of sins. 1 Pet. iv. 8.

Thou may'st repent,

And one had act with many deeds well done

6. To shelter; to protect.

His calm and blameless life

Does with substantial blessedness abound,
And the soft wings of peace cover him round. Cowley.

7. To incubate; to brood on.

Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding-time, and end a little after; that whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amuses and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting.

Addison, Spect.

8. To copulate with a female.

9. To wear the hat, or garment of the head, as a mark of superiority, or independence.

That king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him, which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king. Dryden.

CO'VER. † n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing that is laid over another.

The secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, the skin is shaped according to the parts. Bacon.

The fountains could be strengthened no other way than by making a strong cover or arch over them. Burnet, Theory.

Orestes' bulky rage,

Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers, and not finish'd yet. Dryden, Juv.

With your hand, or any other cover, you stop the vessel, so as wholly to exclude the air. Ray on the Creation.

2. A concealment; a screen; a veil: a superficial appearance, under which something is hidden.

The truth and reason of things may be artificially and effectually insinuated, under the cover either of a real fact, or of a supposed one. L'Estrange.

As the spleen has great inconveniences, so the pretence of it is a handsome cover for imperfections. Collier on the Spleen.

3. Shelter; defence from weather.

In the mean time, by being compelled to lodge in the field, which grew now to be very cold, whilst his army was under cover, they might be forced to retire. Clarendon.

4. [In hunting.] Shelter; retreat, where the fox or hare is supposed to be.

CO'VERCLE * n. s. [Fr. couvercle.] A lid or cover.

Cotgrave.

Except we take the onycha of that perfume for the covercle of a shell-fish, called unguis odoratus.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. Tracts, p. 11.

CO'VERCHIEF * n. s. [Fr. couverchef, a kerchief. See KERCHIEF.] A covering for the head. Not now
in use.

Her coverchiefs weren ful fine of ground,
That on the Sunday wore upon her head. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

CO'VERIL * n. s. [from cover.] That which covers or protects.

They shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence [in the margin, covering, or coverer,] shall be prepared. Nahum, ii. 5.

CO'VER-SHAME. n. s. [cover and shame.] Some appearance used to conceal infamy.

Does he put on holy garments for a cover-shame of lewdness?

Dryden, Span. Fryar.

CO'VER-SLUT * n. s. [cover and slut.] An appearance to hide sluttishness.

Great Britain was not there. Almost in despair, I hope she will never, in any rags and cover-sluts of infamy, be seen at such an exhibition. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

CO'VERYNG. n. s. [from cover.] Dress; vesture; any thing spread over another.

The women took and spread a covering over the well's mouth.
2 Sam. xvii. 19.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,

Whom I'll intreat to lead me. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Through her flesh methinks is seen

The brightest soul that dwells within,

Our eyes the subtle covering pass,

And see the lily through its glass. Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,

With coverings of Sidonian purple spread. Dryden, Fab.

Sometimes Providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it. South.

CO'VERIET. † n. s. [couverdiel, French. Perhaps our word should be correctly coverlit.] The outermost of the bedcloaths; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lillies and in violets,

And silken curtains over her display,

And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets. Spenser, Epithal.

A flag of double use; for it serves as an umbrella abroad, and at home for a coverlet. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 314.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,

Which with no costly coverlet they spread. Dryden, Fables.

I was for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet. Swift, Gull. Trav.

CO'VERT. n. s. [from cover; couvert, French.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcast dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler. Isaiah, xvi. 4.

There shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and rain. Isaiah, iv. 6.

They are by sudden alarm, or watch-word, to be called out to their military motions, under sky or covert, according to the season, as was the Roman wont. Milton on Education.

It was the hour of night, when thus the Son
Commun'd in silent walk, then laid him down
Under the hospitable covert nigh

• Of trees thick interwoven.

Milton, P. L.

Now have a care your carnations catch not too much wet, therefore retire them to covert. Evelyn, Kalendar.

2. A thicket, or hiding place.

Tow'rd's him I made; but he was ware of me,

And stole into the covert of the wood.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Juliet.

I shall be your faithful guide,

Through this gloomy covert wide.

Milton, Comus.

Hence to the coverts, and the conscious groves,

The scenes of his past triumphs and his loves.

Denham.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,

Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden, State of Innocence.

The deer is lodg'd; I've track'd her to her covert;

Be sure ye mind the word; and when I give it,

Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey. Addison, Cato.

CO'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.]

1. Sheltered; not open; not exposed.

C O V

You are, of either side the green, to plant a covert alley, upon carpenter's work, about twelve foot in height, by which you may go in shade into the garden. Bacon.

The fox is a beast also very prejudicial to the husbandman, especially in places that are near forest-woods and covert places. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Together let us beat this ample field, Try what the open, what the covert yield. Pope, Essays.

2. Secret; hidden; private; insidious.

And let us presently go sit in council, How covert matters may be best disclos'd, And open perils surest answered. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

By what best way, Whether of open war, or covert guile, We now debate. Milton, P. L.

CO'VERT. adj. [couvert, French.] The state of a woman sheltered by marriage under her husband; as covert baron, feme covert.

Instead of her being under covert baron, to be under covert feme myself; to have my body disabled, and my head fortified. Dryden, Span. Fryar.

CO'VERT-WAY. n. s. [from covert and way.]

It is, in fortification, a space of ground level with the field, on the edge of the ditch, three or four fathom broad, ranging quite round the half moons, or other works toward the country. One of the greatest difficulties in a siege is to make a lodgement on the covert-way, because usually the besieged pallisade it along the middle, and undermine it on all sides. It is sometimes called the corridor, and sometimes the counterscarp, because it is on the edge of the scarp. Harris.

CO'VERTLY. adv. [from covert.] Secretly; closely; in private, with privacy.

Yet still Aragnol (so his foe was hight) Lay lurking, covertly him to surprise. Spenser, Muopotmos.

How can'st thou cross this marriage? — Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly, that no dishonesty shall appear in me. Shakespeare, Much ado.

Amongst the poets, Persius covertly strikes at Nero; some of whose verses he recites with scorn and indignation. Dryden.

CO'VERTNESS. n. s. [from covert.] Secrecy; privacy. Dict.

CO'VERTURE.† n. s. [old Fr. coverture, lieu secret. Roq.]

1. Shelter; defence; not exposure.

It may be it is rather the shade, or other coverture, that they take liking in, than the virtue of the herb. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He saw their shame that sought Vain covertures. Milton, P. L.

The winds being so fierce, and so severe, as not to suffer any thing to thrive beyond the height of a shrub, in those islands, unless protected by walls, or other like coverture. Woodward.

2. [In law. "Coverture, old Fr. marriage subsistant. 960." Lacombe.] The estate and condition of a married woman, who, by the laws of our realm, is in potestate viri, and therefore disabled to contract with any, to the prejudice of herself or her husband, without his allowance or confirmation. Cowel.

The infancy of king Edward VI. and the coverture of queen Mary, did, in fact, disable them to accomplish the conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

TO CO'VET. v. a. [convoyer, French.]

1. To desire inordinately; to desire beyond due bounds.

If it be a sin to covet honour, I am the most offending man alive. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

I am yet Unknown to woman, never was forsworn,

C O V

Scarcely have coveted what was mine own, At no time broke my faith. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

O father! can it be that souls sublime, Return to visit our terrestrial clime? And that the gen'rous mind, relens'd by death, Can covet lazy limbs and mortal breath? Dryden, Æn.

2. To desire earnestly.

All things coveting as much as may be to be like unto God in being ever; that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seek to continue itself another way, by mispring and propagation. Hooker.

But covet earnestly the best gifts. 1 Cor. xii. 31.

TO CO'VET. v. n. To have a strong desire.

The love of money is the root of all evil, which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith. 1 Tim. vi.

CO'VETABLE.† adj. [Fr. convitable.] To be wished for; to be coveted. Sherwood.

CO'VETING.* n. s. [from covet.] Inordinate desire.

Be it lying, note it, The woman's; flattering, her's; deceiving, her's; Ambitions, covetings; change of prides, &c. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

CO'VETINGLY.* adv. [from coveting.] Eagerly. Most covetingly ready. B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.

CO'VETISE.† n., s. [old Fr. covetise.] Avarice; covetousness of money. Not in use.

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffice, Whose greedy lust did lack in greatest store; Whose need had end, but no end covetise. Spenser, F. Q.

CO'VETOUS.† adj. [old Fr. coveteus, covitois, convitois, convitois; from the Lat. convolare, Menage; from volere votum, or concupire concupitum, Barbarian. V. Roquefort, Gloss.]

1. Inordinately desirous; eager.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay, The cruel nation, covetous of prey, Stain'd with my blood the unhospitable coast. Dryden, Æn.

2. Inordinately eager of money; avaricious.

An heart they have exercised with covetous practices. 2 Pet. ii. 14.

What he cannot help in his nature, you must not account a vice in him: you must in no ways say he is covetous. Shakespeare.

Let never so much probability hang on one side of a covetous man's reasoning, and money on the other, it is easy to foresee which will outweigh. Locke.

3. Desirous; eager: in a good sense.

Sheba was never More covetous of wisdom and fair virtue, Than this fair soul shall be. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

He that is envious or angry at a virtue that is not his own, at the perfection or excellency of his neighbour, is not covetous of the virtue, but of its reward and reputation, and then his intentions are polluted. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

CO'VETOUSLY.† adv. [from covetous.] Avariciously; eagerly.

If he care not for't, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall's get it? Shakespeare.

Yet since the greater doth embrace the less, We covetously obey. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

CO'VETOUSNESS. n. s. [from covetous.]

1. Avarice; inordinate desire of money; eagerness of gain.

He that takes pains to serve the ends of covetousness, or ministers to another's lust, or keeps a shop of impurities or intemperance, is idle in the worst sense. Bp. Taylor, Holy Living.

Covetousness debaseth a man's spirit, and sinks it into the earth. Tillotson.

2. Eagerness; desire; in a neutral sense.

When workmen strive to do better than well, They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shakespeare, K. John.

C O V

1. A hatch; an old bird with her young ones.

2. A number of birds together.

A flight of wrens and covey of partridges went to a farmer, and begged a sup of him to quench their thirst. L'Esrange.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison, Frecholder.

There would be no walking in a shady wood without springing a covey of toasts. Addison, Guardian.

COUGH.† n. s. [Goth. kuf, a catarrh; kof, suffocation; Su. quaf, shortness of breath; Dutch, kuch, a cough.] A convulsion of the lungs, vellicated by some sharp serosity. It is pronounced coff.

In consumptions of the lungs, when nature cannot expel the cough, men fall into fluxes of the belly, and then they die. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For his dear sake long restless nights you bore,
While rattling coughs his heaving vessels tore. Smith.

To COUGH.† v. n. [Su. quafsa; Dutch, kuchgen.] To have the lungs convulsed; to make a noise in endeavouring to evacuate the peccant matter from the lungs.

Thou didst drink

The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle

Which beasts would cough at. Shakspeare, Auth. and Cleop.

Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

The first problem enquireth why a man doth cough, but not an ox or cow; whereas the contrary is often observed. Brown.

If any humour be discharged upon the lungs, they have a faculty of casting it up by coughing. Ray on the Creation.

I cough like Horace, and though lean, am short. Pope's Ep.

To COUGH. v. a. To eject by a cough; to expectorate.

If the matter be to be discharged by expectoration, it must first pass into the substance of the lungs, then into the aspera arteria, or weasand, and from thence be coughed up, and spit out by the mouth. Wiseman's Surgery.

CO'UGHER. n. s. [from cough.] One that coughs. Dict.

CO'UHAGE.* n. s. A kind of kidney-beans imported from the East Indies, called stinking-beans. The down growing on the outside of the pod is so pointed, as like a nettle to sting the flesh. The word has been corrupted into cow-itch; has been so given by Mason in his Supplement to Johnson's Dictionary, and illustrated by a mistake of Congreve: "As if he had sat upon cow-itch."

CO'VIN.† } n. s. [Skinner writes it coven, from the CO'VINE. } Lat. conventum. So Bacon, covenus.

Thus the Welsh coven, a covenant. But covin is the old English word, and is so written by Chaucer; from the old Fr. covin, "convention secret, 906." Lacombe.] A deceitful agreement between two or more, to the hurt of another.

Covel.

One covyn followeth another, and deceit is met with the lyke. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580), fol. 32. b.

The lawes overlashed by covine and craft,
And we that did governe did winke at this gear:
The worse thereby our faithfull friends were.

Mir. for Mag. p. 84.

CO'VING. n. s. [from cove.] A term in building, used of houses that project over the ground-plot and the turned projecture arched with timber, lathed and plastered. Harris.

C O U

COULD. [the imperfect preterite of can. See CAN.]

Was able to; had power to.

And if I have done well, and as is fitting the story, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain unto. 2 Mac. xv. 38.

What if he did not all the ill he could?

Am I oblig'd by that to assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden, Span. Prior.

COULD.* pret. of can, to know. See To CAN.

[Sax. cuðe.] Knew. More frequently written, by our old authors, could.

It seem'd that whilome he had beene

Some goodly person, and of gentle race,

That could his good to all. Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 36.

Nor need he guide; the way right well he could,

Which leads to sandy plains of Gaza old. Fairfax, Tass. x. 4.

CO'ULTER.† n. s. [coulter; Fr. cultop, Sax. cutter, Latin.] The sharp iron of the plow which cuts the earth, perpendicular to the share.

The Israelites went down to sharpen every man his share, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock. 1 Sam. xiii. 20.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, to whet their natural faculties. Hammond on Fundamentals.

The plough for stiff clays is long and broad, and the coulter long, and very little bending, with a very large wing.

Mortimer.

CO'UNCIL. n. s. [concilium, Latin.]

1. An assembly of persons met together in consultation.

The chief priests, and all the council, sought false witness.

Mat. xxvi. 59.

The Stygian council thus dissolv'd; and forth

In order came the grand infernal peers. Milton, P. L.

In histories composed by politicians, they are for drawing up a perpetual scheme of causes and events, and preserving a constant correspondence between the camp and the council table. Addison, Spect.

2. Act of publick deliberation.

The scepter'd herald call

To council in the city gates: anon

Grey-headed men and grey, with warriors mix'd,

Assemble, and harangues are heard. Milton, P. 1.

3. An assembly of divines to deliberate upon religion.

Some borrow all their religion from the fathers of the Christian church, or from their synods or councils. Watts.

4. Persons called together to be consulted on any occasion, or to give advice.

They being thus assembled, are more properly a council to the king, the great council of the kingdom, to advise his majesty in those things of weight and difficulty, which concern both the king and people, than a court.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

5. The body of privy counsellors.

Without the knowledge

Either of king or council, you made bold

To carry into Flanders the great seal. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

CO'UNCIL-BEARD. n. s. [council and board.] Council-table; table where matters of state are deliberated.

He hath commanded,

To morrow morning to the council-board,

He be convened. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

When ship-money was transacted at the council-board, they looked upon it as a work of the power they were obliged to trust.

Clarendon.

And Pallas, if she broke the laws,

Must yield her for the stronger cause:

A shame to one so much ador'd

For wisdom at Jove's council-board.

Swift.

CO'UNCIL-TABLE.* n. s. The same as council-board.

Wherewith he went at Heaven's high council-table

To sit the midst of Trinit Unity. Milton, Ode Nativ. st. 2.

Whether you be at the top of fame, or entirely unknown to mankind; at the council-table, or at Dick's coffee-house.

Gray to West.

COUNDERSTANDING.* n. s. [from con and understanding.] Mutual understanding.

An art is invented to speak with hands only, to carry the alphabet upon one's joints, and at his fingers' ends; which may be learned without any great difficulty by any mean capacity, and whereby one may discourse and deliver the conceptions of his mind, without ever wagging of his tongue, provided there be a reciprocal knowledge and co-understanding of the art 'twixt the parties.

Howell, Lett. ii. 71.

TO COUNITE.* v. a. [from con and unite.] To unite.

Ah! these three in one doth co-unite.

More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 39.

COUNITE.* adj. [from the verb.] United.

She [the soul] —

Should be more perfectly these co-unite

In this her high and holy union,

Than with the body.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 17.

COUNSEL.* n. s. [conjug. Sax. consilium, Latin.]

1. Advice; direction

There is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer.

Bacon, Ess. 28.

The best counsel he could give him was, to go to his parliament.

Clarendon, b. viii.

Bereave me not,

Whereon I live, thy gentle looks, thy aid,

Thy counsel in this uttermost distress.

Milton, P. L.

2. Consultation; interchange of opinions.

I hold as little counsel with weak fear

As you, or any Scot that lives.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Deliberation; examination of consequences.

They all confess therefore, in the working of that first cause, that counsel is used, reason followed, and a way observed.

Hooker, i. § 2.

4. Prudence; art; machination.

O how comely is the wisdom of old men, and understanding and counsel to men of honour.

Eccles. xxv. 5.

There is no wisdom, nor understanding, nor counsel against the Lord.

Prov. xxi. 30.

5. Secrecy; the secrets intrusted in consulting.

The players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Shakspeare.

6. Scheme; purpose; design. Not in use.

The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

Psal. xxxiii. 11.

O God from whom all holy desires, all good counsels, and all just works do proceed.

Common Prayer.

7. Those that plead a cause; the counsellors. This seems only an abbreviature usual in conversation.

Your hand, a covenant; we will have these things set down by lawful counsel.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

For the advocates and counsel that plead, patience and gravity of learning is an essential part of justice; and an over-speaking judge is no well tuned cymbal.

Bacon, Ess. 57.

What says my counsel learned in the law.

Pope.

CO'UNSEL-KEEPER.* n. s. [counsel and keeper.] One who can keep a secret; a confidant.

His man; — his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

CO'UNSEL-KEEPING.* adj. That which preserves secrecy.

Curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave.

Tit. Andronicus.

TO CO'UNSEL.* v. a. [old Fr. consiller; Lat. consilior.]

1. To give advice or counsel to any person.

But say, Lucetta, now we are alone,

Would'st thou then counsel me to fall in love?

Shakspeare.

Truth shall nurse her;

Holy and heav'nly thoughts still counsel her.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counsel'd, and more for the good of them that counsel than for him that is counsel'd.

Bacon.

All fortune never crushed that man whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends never to trust to her fairer side, though she seemed to make peace with them.

B. Jonst n, Discoveries.

He supports my poverty with his wealth, and I counsel and instruct him with my learning and experience.

Bp. Taylor.

2. To advise any thing.

The less had been our shame,

The less his counsel'd crime which brands the Grecian name.

Dryden, Fab.

CO'UNSELLABLE.* adj. [from counsel.]

1. Willing to receive and follow the advice or opinions of others.

Very few men of so great parts were more counselable than he; so that he would seldom be in danger of great errors, if he would communicate his own thoughts to disquisition.

Clarendon.

2. Advisable.

He did not believe it counselable.

Ld. Clarendon's Life, i. 178.

CO'UNSELLOR. n. s. [from counsel.] This should rather be written conseller.

1. One that gives advice.

His mother was his counsellor to do wickedly.

2 Chr. xxii. 3.

She would be a counsellor of good things, and a comfort in cares.

Wisd. viii. 9.

Death of thy soul! Those linen cheeks of thine

Are counsellors to fear.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Confidant; bosom friend.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd,

Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;

With such old counsellors they did advise,

And by frequenting sacred groves grew wise

Waller.

3. One whose province is to deliberate and advise upon publick affairs.

You are a counsellor,

And by that virtue no man dare accuse you.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Of counsellors there are two sorts; the first, consiliarii nati, as I may term them; such are the prince of Wales, and others of the king's sons: but the ordinary sort of counsellors are such as the king, out of a due consideration of their worth and abilities, and, withal, of their fidelity to his person and to his crown, calleth to be of council with him, in his ordinary government.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

4. One that is consulted in a case of law; a lawyer.

A counsellor bred up in the knowledge of the municipal and statute laws, may honestly inform a just prince, how far his prerogative extends.

Dryden, Jur. Ded.

CO'UNSELLORSHIP. n. s. [from counsellor.] The office or post of a privy counsellor.

Of the great offices and officers of the kingdom, the most part are such as cannot well be severed from the counsellorship.

Bacon, Adv. to Villiers.

TO COUNT.* v. a. [counter, old Fr. compter; mod. computare, Lat.]

1. To number; to tell.

Here through this grate I can count every one,

And view the Frenchmen.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The vicious count their years; virtuous, their acts.

Jonson.

For the preferments of the world, he that would reckon up all the accidents that they depend upon, may as well undertake to count the sands, or to sum up infinity.

South.

When men in sickness ling'ring lie,

They count the tedious hours by months and years.

Dryden.

Argos now rejoice, for Thebes lies low;

Thy slaughter'd sons now smile, and think they won,

When they can count more Theban ghosts than theirs.

Dryden.

2. To preserve a reckoning.

Some people in America counted their years by the coming of certain birds amongst them at their certain seasons, and leaving them at others.

Locke.

3. To reckon; to place to an account.

He believed in the Lord, and he counted it to him for righteousness.

Not barely the plowman's pains is to be counted into the bread we eat; the labour of those who broke the oxen, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

4. To esteem; to account; to reckon; to consider as having a certain character, whether good or evil.

When once it comprehendeth any thing above this, as the differences of time, affirmations, negations, and contradictions in speech, we then count it to have some use of natural reason. Hooker.

Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial.

1 Sam. i. 16.

Nor shall I count it heinous to enjoy
The publick marks of honour and reward
Confer'd upon me.

Milton, S. A.

You would not wish to count this man a foe!
In friendship, and in hatred, obstinate.

Philips's Briton.

5. To impute to; to charge to.

All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description, Shall sooner be.

Rowe, Amb. Step-mother.

To COUNT. v. n. To found an account or scheme:
with upon.

I think it a great error to count upon the genius of a nation as a standing argument in all ages. Swift.

COUNT. v. n. s. [compte, French; computus, Latin.]

1. Number.

That we up to your palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser, Epithal.

2. Reckoning: number summed.

for the lamb. Ezod. xii. 4.

By my count,
I was your mother much upon these years.

Shakspeare.

Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you.

Well, I know not

What counts hard fortune casts upon my face. Shakspeare.

3. Estimation; account.

Some other, that in hard assaies
Were cowards knowne, and little count did hold,
Either through gifts, or guile, or such like waies,
Crept in by stouping low. Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 18.

4. In law, a charge in an indictment, or a declaration in pleading.

COUNT. v. n. s. [comte, Fr. comes, Lat.] A title of foreign nobility; supposed equivalent to an earl.

Comes, the count of the Franks, is the earl of the shire.

Blackstone.

Co'UNTABLE. adj. [from count.] That which may be numbered.

The evils which you desire to be recounted are very many,
and almost countable with those which were hidden in the basket of Pandora. Spenser on Ireland.

CO'UNTENANCE. n. s. [contenance, Fr.]

1. The form of the face: the system of the features.

2. Air; look.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling; her head bowed, somewhat down, seemed to languish with over much idleness. Sidney.

Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest.

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

So spake our sire, and by his count'nance seem'd

Entering on studious thoughts abstruse. Milton, P. L.

To whom, with count'nance calm, and soul sedate,
Thus Turus. Dryden, Rn.

3. Calmness of look; composure of face.

She smil'd severe; nor with a troubled look,
Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;
Ev'n kept her count'nance, when the lid remov'd,
Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd. Dryden, Fab.

The two great maxims of any great man at court are, always to keep his countenance, and never to keep his word. Swift.

4. Confidence of mien; aspect of assurance: it is commonly used in these phrases in countenance, and out of countenance.

The night beginning to persuade some retiring place, the gentlewoman, even out of countenance before she began her speech, invited me to lodge that night with her father. Sidney.

We will not make your countenance to fall by the answer ye shall receive. Bacon, New Atlantis.

Their best friends were out of countenance, because they found that the imputations, which their enemies had laid upon them, were well grounded. Clarendon.

Your examples will meet it at every turn, and put it out of countenance in every place; even in private corners it will soon lose confidence. Spaul's Sejm.

If the outward profession of religion and virtue were once in practice and countenance at court, a good treatment of the clergy would be the necessary consequence. Swift.

If those preachers would look about, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep. Swift.

It is a kind of ill manners to offer objections to a fine woman, and a man would be out of countenance that should gain the superiority in such a contest; a coquette logician may be rallied, but not contradicted. Addison, Frecholder.

It puts the learned in countenance, and gives them a place among the fashionable part of mankind. Addison, Frecholder.

5. Kindness or ill-will; as it appears upon the face.

Yet the stout fairy, 'mongst the mildest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view,
And that great princes too, exceeding proud,
That to strange knight no better countenance allow'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

6. Patronage; appearance of favour; appearance on any side; support.

The church of Christ, which held that profession which had not the publick allowance and countenance of authority, could not use the exercise of Christian religion but in private.

Hooker.

His majesty maintained an army here, to give strength and countenance to the civil magistrate. Davies on Ireland.

Now then, we'll use
His countenance for the battle, which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him, devise
His speedy taking off. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This is the magistrate's peculiar province, to give countenance to piety and virtue, and to rebuke vice and profaneness.

Atterbury.

7. Superficial appearance; show; resemblance.

The election being done, he made countenance of great discontent therent. Ancien, Schoolmaster.

Oh, you blessed ministers above!
Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil, which is here wrapt up
In countenance. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Bianca's love
Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenance in the town. Shakspeare.

To CO'UNTENANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support; to patronise; to vindicate.

Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. Ezod. xxiii. 7.

And to his mistress each himself strove to advance. Spenser, F. Q.

3. To act suitably to any thing; to keep up any appearance.

Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like spirits,
To countenance this horror. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. To encourage; to appear in defence.

C O U

At the first descent on shore he was not immured with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat.

Wotton.

CO'UNTENANCER. † n. s. [from countenance.] One that countenances or supports another.

Are you her Grace's countenancer, Lady?

Beaumont and Fl. Honest Man's Fortune.

"He is a great countenancer of learned men.

Brown, Travels, (1685,) p. 141.

CO'UNTER. † n. s. [from count.]

1. A false piece of money used as a means of reckoning.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite?

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cressida.

Though these half-pence are to be received as money in the Exchequer, yet in trade they are no better than counters.

Saunders, Consideration Wood's Coin.

2. Money in contempt.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods! with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

3 The table on which goods are viewed and money told in a shop.

A fine gaudy mix, that robs our counters every night; and then goes out, and spends it upon our cuckold-makers.

Dryden.

In half-whipt muslin, needles useles lie;

And shuttle-cocks across the counter fly.

Gay's Trivia.

Sometimes you would see him behind his counter selling broad-cloth, sometimes measuring linen.

Arbuthnot.

Whether thy counter shine with sums untold,
And thy wide-grasping hand grows black with gold.

Saunders.

4. A box for cash.

Colles.

5. A reckoner. [compteur, Fr.]

Sherwood.

6. Encounter; trial of skill.

And he, the man whom nature self had made
To mock herself, and truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under mimic shade.

Spenser, Tears of the Muses.

7. An auditor. Chaucer uses this word, in the Prol. to his Canterbury Tales, saying of the Franklin, "A sheriff had he been, and a countour." Urry's edition of Chaucer reads coroner; and Mr. Warton has both adopted and illustrated that obtruded word. Nor has the genuine word, counter, satisfied Mr. Tyrwhitt, who confesses he knows not what to make of it; while he introduces, from Robert of Gloucester, what seems to illustrate the true expression, which exists in our old lexicography; namely, as an auditor, in that of Hulot.

And Adam of Arderne was his chief countour.

Robert of Glouc.

8. COUNTER of a horse, is that part of a horse's forehead that lies between the shoulder and under the neck.

Farrier's Dict.

CO'UNTER. * n. s. A name of some prisons in London.

Thou might'st as well say, I love to walk by the Counter-gate; which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

CO'UNTER. adv. [contre, Fr. contra, Lat.]

1. Contrary to; in opposition to: it is commonly used with the verb run, perhaps by a metaphor from the old tournaments.

Shall we erect two wills in God's, and make the will of his purpose and intention run counter to the will of his approbation.

South.

The profit of the merchant, and the gain of the kingdom, are so far from being always parallels, that frequently they run counter one to the other.

Child on Trade.

C O U

He thinks it brave, at his first setting out, to signalize himself in running counter to all the rules of virtue.

Locke.

2. The wrong way; contrarily to the right course.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry,

Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

3. Contrary ways.

A man whom I cannot deny, may oblige me to use persuasions to another, which, at the same time I am speaking, I may wish may not prevail on him: in this case, it is plain, the will and the desire run counter.

Locke.

4. The face in opposition to the back. Not in use.

They hit one another with darts, as the other do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer.

Sandys, Journey.

5. This word is often found in composition, and may be placed before either nouns or verbs used in a sense of opposition.

That design was no sooner known, but others of an opposite party were appointed to set a counter-petition on foot.

Clarendon.

To COUNTERACT. † v. a. [counter and act.

Formerly written also contra-act.] To hinder any thing from its effect by contrary agency.

In this case we can find no principle within him strong enough to counteract that principle, and to relieve him.

South.

These have no antagonist grinders, nor contra-acting mill-stones.

South's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 83.

COUNTERACTION. * n. s. [from the verb.] Opposition.

The beauties of writing have been observed to be often such as cannot, in the present state of knowledge, be evinced by evidence or drawn out into demonstrations: they are therefore wholly subject to the imagination, and do not force their effects upon a mind preoccupied by unfavourable sentiments, nor overcome the counter-action of a false principle or of stubborn partiality.

COUNTERATTRACTION. * n. s. [from counter and attraction.] Opposite attraction.

Attractions of either kind are less perspicuous, and less perceptible, through a variety of counter-attraction: that diminish their effect.

Shenstone.

To COUNTERBALANCE. v. a. [counter and balance.] To weigh against; to act against with an opposite weight.

There was so much air drawn out of the vessel, that the remaining air was not able to counterbalance the mercurial cylinder.

Boyle.

Few of Adam's children are not born with some bias, which it is the business of education either to take off, or counterbalance.

Locke.

COUNTERBALANCE. n. s. [from the verb.] Opposite weight; equivalent power.

But peaceful kings, o'er martial people set,
Each other's poise and counterbalance are.

Dryden, An. Mith.

Money is the counterbalance to all other things purchasable by it, and lying, as it were, in the opposite scale of commerce.

Locke.

COUNTERBOND. * n. s. [from counter and bond.] A counter-surety, or counter-bond, to a surety.

Sherwood.

To CO'UNTERBUFF. v. a. [from counter and buff.]

To impell in a direction opposite to the former impulse; to strike back.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides,

Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides,

Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,

'Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again.

Dryden.

CO'UNTERBUFF. n. s. [counter and buff.] A blow in a contrary direction; a stroke that produces a recoil.

He at the second gave him such a counterbuff, that, because Phalantus was not to be driven from the saddle, the saddle with broken girths was driven from the horse. Sidney.

Go, captain Stub, lend on, and show,
What house you come of, by the blow.

You give sir Quaintin, and the cuff

You 'scape o' th' sandbags counterbuff. B. Jonson.

CO'UNTERCAST.* n. s. [from counter, a false piece of money; and cast, to devise.] A trick; delusive contrivance.

He can devise this counter-cast of slight,
To give faire colour to that ladies cause in sight.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 16.

CO'UNTERCASTER. n. s. [from counter, for a false piece of money, and caster.] A word of contempt for an arithmetician; a book-keeper; a caster of accounts; a reckoner.

I, of whom his eyes had seen the proof
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, must be silent and calm'd
By debtor and creditor, this counter-caster.

Shakespeare, Othello.

COUNTERCHANGE. v. n. s. [Fr. contrechange.] Exchange; reciprocation.

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master, hitting Each object with a joy. The counterchange
Is severally in all.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

To CO'UNTERCHANGE. v. a. [Fr. contrechanger.] To give and receive; to exchange.

Then shall aggrandiz'd love confess
That souls can mingle substances,
That hearts can easily counter-changed be.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 28.

COUNTERCHARM. v. n. s. [counter and charm.] That by which a charm is dissolved; that which has the power of destroying the effects of a charm.

Now what your sense of the other world would be if you had seen it, that will your belief of it be, when 'tis founded upon clear and satisfactory evidence; 'twill be an infallible counter-charm against the most bewitching temptations.

Scott, Christian Life, ii. v.

But should I tell him that it was poison, that was of this so rare a taste, colour, and smell, this would be a full allay to his desire, and a sufficient counter-charm to all its other alluring qualities,

South, Sermon, viii. 106.

Now touch'd by counter-charms they change again,
And stand majestic, and recall'd to men.

Pope, Odyssey.

To CO'UNTERCHARM. v. a. [from counter and charm.] To destroy the effect of an enchantment.

For what to us is balm, to them are wounds,
Whom grief strikes, fear distracts, and shame confounds,
To find at once the magick counter-charm'd,
Their arts discover'd, and their strength disarm'd.

Id. Falkland, Verses pref. to Sandys's Job, 1648.

Nor can her beams a heat convey
That may my frozen bosom warm,
Unless her smiles have power, as they
That a cross charm can countercharm.

Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 28.

Seducing Hope, farewell.

No more deceive me!

I now can countercharm thy spell. Cotton's, Ode to Hope.
Like a spell it was to keep us invulnerable, and so countercharm all our crimes, that they should only be active to please, not hurt us.

Decay of Piety.

To CO'UNTERCHECK. v. a. [counter and check.] To oppose; to stop with sudden opposition.

Untill some other realme, that on the frontiers lies,
Be hazarded again by other enemies,
Doe then betwixt themselves to composition fall,
To countercheck that sword, else like to conquer all.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.

Who shall countercheck

The wanton pride of greatness. Habington's Castara, P. ii.

COUNTERCHECK.* n. s. [from the verb.] Stop; rebuke.

If again I said his beard was not well cut, he would say I lye: this is called the countercheck quarrelsome. Shakespeare.

COUNTERDISTINCTION.* n. s. [from counter and distinction.] Contradistinction, which see.

I call it moral, in counterdistinction to philosophical or physical.

More, Conject. Cabb. p. 295.

To COUNTERDRAW. v. a. [from counter and draw.]

With painters, to copy a design or painting by means of a fine linen cloth, an oiled paper, or other transparent matter, whereon the strokes appearing through are traced with a pencil.

Chambers.

COUNTEREVIDENCE. n. s. [counter and evidence.] Testimony by which the disposition of some former witness is opposed.

Sense itself detects its more palpable deceits by a counter evidence, and the more ordinary impostures seldom outlive the first experiments.

Glanville, Sceptis.

We have little reason to question his testimony in this point, seeing it is backed by others of good credit, and all because there is no counterevidence, nor any witness that appears against it.

Buruet, Theory of the Earth.

COUNTERFAISANCE.* See COUNTERFEISANCE.

To COUNTERFEIT. v. a. [contrefaire, French.]

1. To copy with an intent to pass the copy for an original; to forge.

What art thou,

That counterfeits the person of a king? Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It came into this priest's fancy to cause this lad to counterfeit and personate the second son of Edward IV. supposed to be murdered.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

There have been some that could counterfeit the distance of voices, which is a secondary object of hearing, in such sort, as when they stand fast by you, you would think the speech came from afar off in a fearful manner.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Say, lovely dream, where could'st thou find

Shadows to counterfeit that face?

Waller.

It happens, that not one single line or thought is contained in this imposture, although it appears that they who counterfeited me had heard of the true one.

Swift.

2. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

And, oh, you mortal engines, whose rude throat

Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,

Farewell!

Shakespeare, Othello.

O Eve! in evil hour thou did'st give ear

To that false worm, of whomsoever taught

To counterfeit man's voice.

Milton, P. L.

To counterfeit is to put on the likeness and appearance of some real excellency: Bristol stones would not pretend to be diamonds, if there never had been diamonds.

Tillotson.

To COUNTERFEIT.* v. n. To feign.

How ill agree it with your gravity,

To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave.

Shakespeare, Cor. of Err.

COUNTERFEIT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. That which is made in imitation of another, with intent to pass for the original; forged; fictitious.

I learn

Now of my own experience, not by talk,

How counterfeit a coin they are, who friends

Bear in their superscription; in prosperous days

They swarm, but in adverse withdraw their head.

Milton, S. A.

General observations drawn from particulars, are the jewels of knowledge, comprehending great store in a little room; but they are therefore to be made with the greater care and caution, lest, if we take counterfeit for true, our shame be the greater, when our stock comes to a severe scrutiny. Locke.

2. Deceitful; hypocritical.

True friends appear less mov'd than counterfeit. Ros. common.

CO'UNTERFEIT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. One who personates another: an impostor.

Now when these counterfeits were thus unceas'd
Out of the foreside of their forgerie,
And is the sight of all men cleane disgrac'd,
All gan to jest and gibe full merrie
At the remembrance of their knaverie.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 99.

I am no counterfeit: to die is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man.

Shakespeare.

This priest, being utterly unacquainted with the true person, according to whose pattern he should shape his counterfeit, yet could think it possible for him to instruct his player, either in gesture or fashions, or in fit answers to questions, to come near the resemblance. Bacon.

But trust me, child, I'm much inclin'd to fear
Some counterfeit in this your Jupiter. Addison, Orid.

2. Something made in imitation of another, intended to pass for that which it resembles; a forgery.

My father was I know not where,
When I was stamp'd. Some coiner, with his tools,
Made me a counterfeit; yet my mother seem'd
The Dian of that time. Shakespeare, Cymb.

There would be no counterfeits but for the sake of something real; though pretenders seem to be what they really are not, yet they pretend to be something that really is. Tillotson.

3. Formerly, it had not the bad sense, which is given in the preceding definition; it meant merely a resemblance, a likeness, a picture, or, as we now say, a copy.

What find I there?
Fair Portia's counterfeit? What demigod
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

CO'UNTERFEITER.† n. s. [from counterfeit.]

In ivory coffers I have stuff'd my crowns;

In cypress chests my arras, counterpoint.

Costly apparel, tents, and canopies.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

COUNTERPOINT.* n. s. [from counter and point.] An opposite point or course.

Affecting in themselves, and their followers, a certain angelical purity, [they] fell suddenly into the very counterpoint of justifying bestiality.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

To COUNTERPOISE. v. a. [from counter and poise.]

1. To counterbalance; to be equi-ponderant to; to act against with equal weight.

Our spoil we have brought home,

Do more than counterpoise a full third part

The charges of the action.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

The force and the distance of weights, counterpoising one another, ought to be reciprocal.

Digby on the Soul.

2. To produce a contrary action by an equal weight.

The heaviness of bodies must be counterpoised by a plummet, fastened about the pulley to the axis.

Watkins.

3. To act with equal power against any person or cause.

So many freeholders of English will be able to beard and to counterpoise the rest.

Spenser on Ireland.

COUNTERPOISE. n. s. [from counter and poise.]

Equiponderance; equivalence of weight; equal force in the opposite scale of the balance.

Take her by the hand,

And tell her she is thine; to whom I promise

A counterpoise, if not in thy estate,

A balance more replete.

Shakespeare, All's well.

Fastening that to our exact balance, we put a metalline counterpoise into the opposite scale.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. The state of being placed in the opposite scale of the balance.

The Eternal—hung forth his golden scales,—

Wherein all things created first he weigh'd,

The pendulous round earth with balance'd air

In counterpoise.

Milton, P. L.

3. Equipollence; equivalence of power.

The second nobles are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent.

Bacon.

Their generals, by their credit in the army, were, with the magistrates and other civil officers, a sort of counterpoise to the power of the people.

Swift.

COUNTERPOISON. n. s. [from counter and poison.] Antidote; medicine by which the effects of poison are obviated.

Counterpoisons must be adapted to the cause; for example, in poison from sublimate corrosive, and arsenick. Abutnot.

COUNTERPRACTICE.* n. s. [from counter and practice.] Practice in opposition.

Against the stroke of Providence, all counter-practices are vain.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1604,) C. c. 2. b.

COUNTERPRESSURE. n. s. [from counter and pressure.] Opposite force; power acting in contrary directions.

Does it not all mechanick heads confound,

That troops of atoms from all parts around,

Of equal number, and of equal force,

Should to this single point direct their course;

That so the counterpressure ev'ry way,

Of equal vigour, might their motions stay,

And, by a steady poise, the whole in quiet lay? } Blackmore

COUNTERPROJECT. n. s. [from counter and project.] Correspondent part of a scheme.

A clear reason why they never sent any forces to Spain, and why the obligation not to enter into a treaty of peace with France, until that entire monarchy was yielded as a preliminary, was struck out of the counterproject by the Dutch.

Swift

To COUNTERPROVE. v. a. [from counter and prove.]

To take off a design in black lead, or red chalk, by passing it through the rolling-press with another piece of paper, both being moistened with a sponge.

Chambers.

COUNTER-REVOLUTION.* n. s. [from counter and revolution.] A revolution succeeding another, and opposite to it; as from monarchy to republicanism, and then from republicanism to monarchy.

To COUNTERROLL. v. a. [from counter and roll.] This is now generally written as it is spoken, control.

To preserve the power of detecting frauds by another account.

COUNTERROLLMENT. n. s. [from counterroll.] A counter account; controlment.

This manner of exercising of this office, hath many testimonies, interchangeable warrants, and counterrollments, whereof each, running through the hands, and resting in the power of many several persons, is sufficient to argue and convince all manner of falsehood.

Bacon.

COUNTERSCARP.* n. s. See COUNTERSCARP.

COUNTERSCARP.† n. s. [from counter and scarp.]

Sometimes written, by our old authors, and in our old lexicography, counterscarf. That side of the ditch which is next the camp, or properly the talus that supports the earth of the covert-way; although by this term is often understood the whole covert-way, with its parapet and glacis; and so it is to be understood when it is said the enemy lodged themselves on the counterscarp.

Harris.

The city is compassed with a thick stone wall, flanker'd and moated about; having withal a counterscarp, and 300 pieces of brass cannon mounted upon the bulwarks.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

A regular fortification with half moons and counterscarps.

M. of Worcester, Cent. of Invent. § 29.

Guarding approaches, marching up into counterscarps, ranging forces in battle.

Bp. Parker, Repr of the Rehearsal Transp. p. 303.

COUNTERSCUFFLE.* n. s. [from counter and scuffle.]

Conflict; contest; mutual opposition.

They meet with several wicked and abominable suggestions, and a terrible counterscuffle between them and their lusts.

Hewyl's Sermon. (1638,) p. 97.

To CO'UNTERSEAL.* v. a. [from counter and seal.]

To seal together with others.

You shall bear

A better witness back than words, which we,
On like conditions, will have countersealed.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

To COUNTERSECURE.* v. a. [from counter and secure.]

To render more secure by corresponding means.

What have the regicides promised you in return, in case you should shew what they would call disposition to conciliation and equity, whilst you are giving that pledge from the throne, and engaging parliament to countersecure it?

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

CO'UNTERSENSE.* n. s. [from counter and sense.]

Opposite meaning.

There are some words now in French, which are turned to a counter-sense.

Howell, Lett. iv. 19.

To COUNTERSIGN.* v. a. [from counter and sign.]

To sign an order or patent of a superiour, in quality of secretary, to render it more authentick.

Thus charters are signed by the King, and counter-signed by a secretary of state, or lord chancellor.

Chambers.

He had brought a letter to his lordship from the king, with one enclosed in it to the lords of the privy council, which he shewed me. I read it; it was counter-signed Melford.

Ld. Chandon's Diary, 1688-9.

CO'PENTERSIGN.* n. s. [from the verb.] A military expression, denoting the watch-word of the day.

CO'UNTERSIGNAL.* n. s. [from counter and signal.]

A corresponding signal; a naval term.

CO'UNTERSNAKE.* n. s. [from counter and snarl.]

Snarl in defence, or opposition.

As a cur that goes through a village, if he clap his tail between his legs and run away, every cur will insult over him; but if he bristle up himself, and stand to it, give but a counter-snarl, there's not a dog dares meddle with him: much is in a man's courage and discreet carriage of himself.

COUNTERSTA'TUTE.* n. s. [from counter and statute.]

A contradictory ordinance.

His own antinomy or counterstatute.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

CO'UNTERSWAY.* n. s. [from counter and sway.]

Opposite influence, or direction.

By a countersway of restraint curbing their wild exorbitance almost in the other extreme; as when we bow things the contrary way, to make them come to their natural straightness.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

CO'UNTERSTROKE.* n. s. [from counter and stroke.]

A stroke returned.

He met him with a counterstroke so swift,
That quite snit off his arme as he it up did lift.

Spenser, F. Q. v. 1. 7.

COUNTERSURETY.* n. s. [from counter and surety.]

A counter-bond to a surety.

Sherrwood.

Shenstone.

COUNTERTENOR.* n. s. [from counter and tenor.]

One of the mean or middle parts of musick; so called, as it were, opposite to the tenor.

Harris.

I am deaf; this deafness unqualifies me for all company, except a few friends with countertenor voices.

Swift.

CO'UNTERTIDE.* n. s. [from counter and tide.]

Contrary tide; fluctuations of the water.

Such were our countertides at land, and so

Presaging of the fatal blow,
In your prodigious ebb and flow.

Dryden.

CO'UNTERMINE.* n. s. [from counter and time, contresens, French.]

1. The defence or resistance of a horse, that intercepts his cadence, and the measure of his manage.

Farrier's Dict.

2. Defence; opposition.

Let cheerfulness on happy fortune wait,

And give not thus the countertime to fate.

Dryden, Aurengz.

COUNTERTURN.* n. s. [from counter and turn.]

The catástasi, called by the Romans status, the height and full growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden on Dramatick Poesy.

To CO'UNTERVAIL.* v. a. [from contra and valere, Lat.]

To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off.

Hooker.

And therewithal he fiercely at him flew,

And with important outrage him assail'd;

Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,

And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

The outward strengths, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other.

Wilkins's Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it.

L'Estrange.

CO'UNTERVAIL.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

2. That which has equal weight or value with something else.

Surely, the present plenitude of a sinful act is a poor countervail for the bitterness of the review, which begins whilst the action ends, and lasts for ever.

South, Sermon.

CO'UNTERVIEW.* n. s. [from counter and view.]

1. Opposition; a posture in which two persons front each other.

Mean while, ere there was sinn'd and judg'd on earth

Within the gates of hell sat sin and death,

In counterview.

Milton, P. L.

2. Contrast; a position in which two dissimilar things illustrate each other.

I have drawn some lines of Linger's character, on purpose to place it in counterview or contrast with that of the other company.

Swift.

To CO'UNTERVOTE.* v. a. [from counter and vote.]

To oppose; to outvote.

The law in our minds being countervoted by the law in our members.

Scott, Chr. Inq. i. iii.

To CO'UNTERWEIGH.* v. n. [from counter and weigh.] To weigh against.

If Wrights had ten fellowships of St. John's, it would not counterweigh with the loss of this occasion.

Ascham, Letter to Ræen.

To CO'UNTERWHEEL.* v. a. [from counter and wheel.]

To make to wheel, or move backwards and forwards, in opposition to other movements; a military phrase.

The Falcon charges at first view

With her brigade of talons, through

Whose shoots the wary Heron beat

With a well countervheel'd retreat.

Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 23.

CO'UNTERWIND.* n. s. [from counter and wind.]

Contrary wind. See COUNTER-TIDE.

Like as a ship, that through the ocean wyde
Directs her course unto one certayne coast,
Is met of many a counter-winde and tyde,

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 1.

To Co'UNTERWORK. † v. a. [countér and work.] To counteract; to hinder any effect by contrary operations.

Whilst some, covetous
Above the rest, seek to engross the whole,
And counter-work the one unto the other,
Content in gifts, as they would seem in love. B. Jonson, Fox.
Can men think that God ever designed prayer as an engine to counter-work or control nature, to reverse its laws, and alter the course of the universe? South, Sermon, vi. 393.

But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole:
That counter-works each folly and caprice;
That disappoints th' effect of ev'ry vice. Pope.

Co'UNTRESS. † n. s. [comitissa, Lat. comitessa, French, comtesse, Sax.] The lady of an earl or count.

I take it, she that carries up the train,
Is that old noble lady, the dutchess of Norfolk.
—It is, and all the rest are countesses. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

It is the peculiar happiness of the countess of Abington to have been so truly loved by you, while she was living; and so gratefully honoured after she was dead. Depden.

Co'UNTING-HOUSE. n. s. [count and house.] The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land,
'till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags, cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them. Locke.

Co'UNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcys tenders on thy lips:
O, were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them. Shakespeare.
But oh, her mind, that orens which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses. Doune.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
'We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return. Prior.
I see, I cry'd, his woes, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main. Pope, Odyssey.

Co'UNTRIFIED.* adj. [from country.] A word of recent formation in our language; and in no dictionary, I believe; but now common. Rustick; rude.

Although Hertfordshire is situated in the neighbourhood of the metropolis, yet, great part of it being no general thoroughfare, nor much frequented high-road, the inhabitants are likely to be as countryfied as persons living at a greater distance from town. Grose's Local Proverbs.

COUNTRY. n. s. [contrée, Fr. contrata, low Latin; supposed to be contracted from contrivata.]

1. A tract of land; a region, as distinguished from other regions.

They require to be examined concerning the descriptions of those countries of which they would be informed. Sprat.

2. The parts of a region distant from cities or courts: rural parts.

Would I a house for happiness erect
Nature alone should be the architect;
She'd build it more convenient than great,
And doubtless in the country chuse her seat. Country.
I see them hurry from country to town, and then from the town back again into the country. Spectator.

3. The place which any man inhabits, or in which he at present resides.

Send out more horses, skirre the country round,
Hang those that talk of fear. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. The place of one's birth; the native soil.
The king set on foot a reformation in the ornaments and advantages of our country. Sprat.

O, save my country, heav'n, shall be your last. Pope.

5. The inhabitants of any region.
All the country, in a general voice,
Cry'd hate upon him; all their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Co'UNTRY. adj.

1. Rustick; rural; villatick.

Cannot a country wench know, that having received a shilling from one that owes her three, and a shilling also from another that owes her three, that the remaining debts in each of their hands are equal? Locke.

I never meant any other, than that Mr. Trot should confine himself to country dances. Spectator.

He comes no nearer to a positive, clear idea of a positive infinite, than the country fellow had of the water which was yet to pass the channel of the river where he stood. Locke.

Talk but with country people, or young people, and you shall find that the notions they apply this name to, are so odd that nobody can imagine they were taught by a rational man. Locke.

A country gentleman, learning Latin in the university, removes thence to his mansion-house. Locke.

The low mechanicks of a country town do somewhat outdo him. Locke.

Come, we'll even to our country seat repair,
The native home of innocence and love. North.

2. Of an interest opposite to that of courts; as, the country party.

3. Peculiar to a region or people.
She laughing the cruel tyrant to scorn, spake in her country language. 2 Macb. vii. 27.

4. Rude; ignorant; untaught.
We make a country man dabble, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

COUNTRY-DANCE.* n. s. A well-known kind of dance; usually so written, and noticed by Dr. Johnson under the adjective country. But some suppose country-dance to be a corruption of the French contre and danse, from the circumstance of the parties standing opposite to each other. Cotgrave takes no notice of such circumstance under danse; but, in the word CORDACE, he speaks of country-dance; which is in favour of the English origin and orthography. In the Shrewsbury Papers, "contrey dances" are part of an entertainment at Court, in 1602, vol. iii. p. 148.

Co'UNTRYMAN. n. s. [from country and man.]

1. One born in the same country, or tract of ground. Locke.

See, who comes here?
My countryman; but yet I know him not. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Homer, great bard, so fate ordain'd, arose;
And bold as were his countrymen in fight,
Snatch'd their fair actions from degrading prose,
And set their battles in eternal light. Prior.

The British soldiers act with greater vigour under the conduct of one whom they do not consider only as their leader, but as their countryman. Addison on the War.

2. A rustick; one that inhabits the rural parts.
All that have business to the court, and all countrymen coming up to the city, leave their wives in the country. Graunt.

3. A farmer; a husbandman.
A countryman took a boar in his corn. L'Estrange.

COUNTY. † n. s. [counté, old Fr. comté, mod. comitatus, Latin.]

is a tub.] A vessel in which water, is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. † n. s. [cowl and staff.] More usually written cowl-staff. See COL-STAFF. Cotgrave calls it "a cowlstaff or stang," our old word for a long pole.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,
Which (tossing him something high)
He apprehended to be Pegasus.

Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster.

Wickman.

CO'WLED.* adj. [from cowl.] Wearing a cowl.

Here the cowl'd zealots with united cries

Urg'd the crusade.

Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

CO'WLIKE.* adj. [from cow and like.] Resembling a cow.

With cowlike udders, and with oxlike eyes. Pope, Dunciad.

COWORKER.* n. s. [from con and worker.] One engaged in the same work; fellow-labourer.

There is mention made by Munster of one Moses Gerundensis, whose opinion it was, that God Almighty spake these words, "Let us make man," to the Earth; as if God and the Earth, as co-workers, made man betwixt them; the Earth his body, and God his soul! Gregory, Dict. of the Trin. p. 29.

In all acquired gifts, or habits, such as those of philosophy, oratory, or divinity, we are properly co-workers with God.

South, Sermon. iii. S. xi.

CO'WSLIP. n. s. [paralysip; euphpe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.] Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose.

Miller.

He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily.

Sulney.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I;

In a cowslip's bell I lie.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

Thy little sons

Permit to range the pastures: gladly they

Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet.

Philips.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. s. A species of Mullein.

CO'XCOMB. † n. s. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them, if the pasty alive; she rapt them o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cried down, wantons, down.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps. "Natural ideots, and fools, have, and still do accustom themselves to wear in their capps cockes feathers, or a hat with a neck and head of a cocke on the top, and a bell thereon."

Minshew.

There take my coxcomb: why this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.

Shakespeare.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments. This meaning was adopted from the preceding signification.

I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,

Tokens and letters, which she did resend.

Shakespeare.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,

Quarter or council from a foe.

Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters.

1st Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not so scandalous a name.

Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools;

And some made coxcombs, nature meant but fools.

Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

CO'XCOMBLY.* adj. [from coxcomb.] Like a coxcomb; foolish; vain.

My look ~~terrify~~ them, you coxcombly ass, you!

Beaumont and Fl. Maud's Tragedy.

She is a most engaging creature, if she were not so fond of that damn'd coxcombly lord of her's.

Congreve, Doubt Dealer.

CONCO'MICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of conco'mical, senseless cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds.

Dennie.

COY. † adj. [cuy, old French, from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jason is as cuy as is a maid;

He look'd piteously, but naught he said.

Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,

A foe of folly and inmodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy.

Spenser.

Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse.

Milton, Lycidas.

Like Pharus sung the no less amorous boy;

Like Daphne she, as lovely, and as coy.

Waller.

At this season, every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon.

Pope.

The Nile's coy source.

Crainier.

To Coy. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, cuying it again!

No more; but make me happy to my gust,

That is, without your struggling.

Dryden, K. Arthur.

Retire! I beg you, leave me. —

— Thus to cuy it!

With one who knows you too!

Rowe, Jane Shore.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he cuy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

TO COY. v. a. [for decoy, Dr. Johnson says. The word bears that sense indeed; but may be from the old French verb coyer, "attacher, joindre ensemble," Lacombe. Dr. Johnson also, defining the present word, "to allure," says that it is not in use, and cites only the passage in Coriolanus. This is, however, a great mistake. It is one of our oldest verbs, and is abundantly employed, both figuratively and simply, with good effect, by some of our best writers. "To cuyen, blandior," Prompt. Parv.] To allure; to flatter; to caress; to pat or stroke.

I'll mountebank their loves,

Coy their hearts from them, and come home belov'd

Of all the trades in Rome.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed,

While I thy amiable cheeks do cuy.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

A fickle sex, and true in trust to no man;

A servant sex, soon proud if they be cuy'd;

And to conclude, thy mistress is a woman.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

Who shall march on before ye, cuy'd and courted

By all the mistresses of war.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

Pleasure is like a dog, which being cuy'd, and stroked, follows us at the heels; but if rated and beaten off, is driven away from us with ease.

Bp. Hall, of Continuation, § 23.

Now there are sprung up a wiser generation in this kind, who have the art to cuy the fonder sort into their nets, who have now reduced gaming to a science.

Bp. Rainbow, Sermon. (1635.) p. 2.

CO'YISH.* adj. [from coy.] Not condescending to familiarity; modest; reserved.

He tooke her in his arms, as yet so coyish to be kist.

Warner, Albion's England, (1597.)

CO'VLY. † adv. [from coy.] With reserve; with disinclination to familiarity.

This said; his hand he coyly snatcht away,
From forth Antinous' hard. Chapman, Odyssey.

Then doth she coyly turn her face aside,
That half her cheek is scarce sometimes descried.

Sir J. Davies, Orchestra, (1599.)

There is no need at all,
That the balsam-sweating bough
So coyly should let fall
His mēd'cifiable tears.

The modest maid
But coyly sips, and blushing drinks, abash'd,

Somerville's Rural Games, C. iii.

CO'YNESS. n. s. [from coy.] Reserve; unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female: and she putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags.

Walton's Angler.

When the kind nymph would coyness feign,
And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

CO'YSTREL. n. s. A species of degenerate hawk. See COISTREL.

One they might trust, their common wrongs to wreak:
The musquet and the coystrel were too weak,
Too fierce the falcon. Dryden, Hind and Panther.

Coz. n. s. A cant or familiar word, contracted from cousin.

Be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow.

Shakspeare.

To CO'ZEN. † v. a. [To cose is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat, because, in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] So far Dr. Johnson. But see TO CHOUSE. † To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Goring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozen'd.

Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it.

L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a sport. Locke on Education.

CO'ZENAGE. n. s. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye
Disguised cheaters. Shakspeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage, and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a main argument.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,

It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago

Lik'd certain colours mingl'd so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanville, Scorpis.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

And from the dregs of life, think to receive
What the first brightly running could not give.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. † n. s. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shakspeare, Win. Tale.

Apt to all stratagies, thefts, treasons, &c. cozeners, shifters, outlaws. Byrton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

Like to a jugler's trick of legerdemaine, in deluding his beholders, when he conveyeth a ring into another man's pocket, and then calleth the man cozened when he hath done.

Bp. Mofton's Discharge, &c. p. 220.

COZIER.* See COSIER.

CRAB. n. s. [cpabba, Sax. krabbe, Dutch.]

1. A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell are, the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the bodmandor or dodman, and the tortoise. The old shells are never found; so as it is like they scale off and crumble away by degrees. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fox catches crab fish with his tail, which Olaus Magnus saith he himself was an eye-witness of. Derham.

2. A wild apple; the tree that bears a wild apple.

Noble stock

Was graft with crab-tree slip, whose fruit thou art. Shakspeare.

Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches. Shakspeare, Henry VIII.

When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl, Shakspeare.

Tell why a graft, taking nourishment from a crab stock, shall have a fruit more noble than its nurse and parent.

Taylor.

3. A peevish morose person.

4. A wooden engine with three claws for launching of ships, or heaving them into the dock. Philips.

5. The sign in the zodiack.

Then parts the Twins and Crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel, that broke the frothy tides. Creech.

CRAB. † adj. It is used by way of contempt for any sour or degenerate fruit; as, a crab cherry, a crab plum.

That liberality hated to provide crab wine for his guests.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 2.

Better gleanings their worn soil can boast,
Than the crab vintage of the neighbouring coast. Dryden.

To CRAB.* v. a. [from the noun.] To sour; to render peevish or morose.

'Tis easy to observe how age or sickness sours and crabs our nature. Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 33.

CRABBED. adj. [from crab.]

1. Peevish; morose; cynical; sour.

A man of years, yet fresh, as mote appear,
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser, F. Q.

O, she is

Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;
And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakspeare, Tempest.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when

Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love, Shakspeare, Win. Tale.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
'Where no crude surfeit reigns. Milton, Comus.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside he was a shrewd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and gloss over;
Whate'er the crabbedst author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Rudibras.

- Lucretius had chosen a subject naturally crabbed. Dryden.
 Your crabbed rogues that read Lucretius,
 Are against gods, you know. Prior.
- CRA'BLEDLY. † adv. [from crabbed.] Peevishly;
 morosely; sourly; with perplexity. Barret.
- CRA'BLEDNESS. † n. s. [from crabbed.]
 1. Sourness of taste.
 2. Sourness of countenance; asperity of manners.
 It does me good to think how I shall conjure him,
 And crucify his crabbedness. Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.
 3. Difficulty; perplexity.
 The mathematics, with their crabbedness and intricacy, could not deter you. Howell, Lett. i. i. 9.
- CRA'BBY. * adj. [from crab.] Difficult; crabbed; perplexing.
 Persius is crabby, because ancient; and his jerks, being particularly given to private customs of his time, dusky.
Marston, Scourge of Villany.
- CRA'BER. n. s.
 The poor fish have enemies enough, beside such unnatural fishermen; as otters, the cormorant, and the craber, which some call the water-rat. Walton's Angler.
- CRABS-EYES. n. s. Whitish bodies, rounded on one side and depressed on the other, heavy, moderately hard, and without smell. They are not the eyes of any creature, nor do they belong to the crab; but are produced by the common crawfish:
 the stones are bred in two separate bags, one on each side of the stomach. They are alkaline, absorbent, and in some degree diuretick. Hill.
 Several persons had, in vain, endeavoured to store themselves with crabs-eyes. Boyle.
- CRACK. † n. s. [Fr. crac; Ir. crac, a loud sound;
 Dutch, krack.]
 1. A sudden disruption, by which the parts are separated but a little way from each other.
 2. The chink, fissure, or vacuity made by disruption;
 a narrow breach.
 Contusions, when great, do usually produce a fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiseman.
 A length it would crack in many places; and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark sky-colour. Newton, Opticks.
 3. The sound of any body bursting or falling.
 If I say sooth, I must report, they were
 As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.
 Now day appears, and with the day the king,
 Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest:
 Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
 And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast. Dryden.
 4. Any sudden and quick sound.
 A fourth? — start eye!
 What will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?
Shakspeare.
 Vulcan was employed in hammering out thunderbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Addison.
 5. Change of the voice in puberty.
 And let us, Paladour, though now our voices
 Have got the nammish crack, sing him to th' ground. Shakspeare.
 6. Breach of chastity.
 I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
 So sovereignly being honourable. Shakspeare, Win. Tale.
 7. Craziness of intellect.
 8. A man crazed.
 I have invented projects for raising millions, without bur-thening the subject; but cannot get the parliament to listen to me, who look upon me as a crack and a projector. Addison.

9. A whore; in low language.
 10. A boast. [See the fourth sense of the verb neuter,
 To CRACK.]
 Out of this fountain proceed all those cracks and brags.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 122.
 If the man and his modesty had, not been long since parted, these idle cracks had never been.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 186.
 11. A boaster. This is only in low phrase.
 12. An instant; as, the business shall be done in a crack. This also is only in low phrase.
 13. A lad. [crack is an old Icelandick word signifying a boy or child. Tyrwhitt.]
 I saw him break Scogan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack, not thus high. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. p. II.
Vol. 'Tis a noble child.
Vir. A crack, madam. Shakspeare, Coriol.
 Since we are turned cracks, let's study to be like cracks, act freely, carelessly, and capriciously. B. Jonson, Cynthia Revels.
 Here's a crack!
 I think they suck this knowledge in their milk.
Mansinger, Unnat. Combat.
To CRACK. † v. a. [Fr. cracker; Dutch, kracken.]
 1. To break into chinks; to divide the parts a little from each other.
 Look to your pipes, and cover them with fresh and warm litter out of the stable, a good thickness, lest the frost crack them. Mortimer.
 2. To break; to split.
 O, madam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd. Shakspeare.
 Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason but because thou hast hazel eyes. Shakspeare.
 Should some wild fig-tree take her native bent,
 And heave below the gaudy monument,
 Would crack the marble tiles, and disperse
 The characters of all the lying verse.
 Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
 Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.
 Honour is like that glassy bubble,
 That finds philosophers such trouble;
 Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
 And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.
 3. To do any thing with quickness or smartness.
 Let the Fauns, drawn from their groves, beware,
 Be I their judge, they do at no time dare,
 Like men street-born, and near the hall rehearse
 Their youthful tricks in over-wanton verse;
 Or crack out bawdy speeches, and unclean.
B. Jonson, Hor. Art. of Poetry.
 Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
 He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.
 4. To break or destroy any thing.
 You'll crack a quart together! Ha, will you not.
Shakspeare.
 • Love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, discord; in palaces, treason; and the bond cracked 'twixt son and father. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
 5. To craze; to weaken the intellect.
 I was ever of opinion, that the philosopher's stone, and an holy war, were but the rendezvous of cracked brains, that wore their feather in their heads. Bacon, Holy War.
 He thought none poets till their brains were crack'd.
Roscommon.
To CRACK. † v. n.
 1. To burst; to open in chinks.
 By misfortune it cracked in the cooling, whereby we were reduced to make use of one part, which was straight and intire. Boyle.
 2. To fall to ruin.
 The credit not only of banks, but of exchequers, cracks
 when little comes in, and much goes out. Dryden.
 3. To utter a loud and sudden sound.
 I will board her, though she chide as loud
 As thunder, when the clouds in autumn crack. Shakspeare.

4. To boast: sometimes with of. [Germ. kraken; Dutch, kracken.] See To CRAKE. It is still used in the north of England for "to brag or boast."

To look like her, are chimney-sweepers black,
And since her time are colliers counted bright;
And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.
Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light. Shakespeare.
Your very tradesmen, if they be excellent, will crack and brag, and shew their folly in excess.

Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 125.
The indifferent reader may easily discern, what may be thought of the cracking cardinal, who would face us down.

Abp. Usher, Answer to the Jesuit Malone, p. 124.
Quakery cracks and boasts much of immediate inspirations.

Hallywell, Acc. of Familism, p. 126.

CRACK-BRAINED. † adj. [crack and brained.] Crazy; without right reason.

A race of crack-brained schismatics do croak in every corner. Howell, Lett. iv. 44.

They seem to be a pitiable, but crack-brained sort of men. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. 1.

We have sent you an answer to the ill-groomed sophisms of those crack-brained fellows. Arbuthnot on Pope.

CRACK-HEMP. n. s. [crack and hemp.] A wretch fated to the gallows; a crack-rope. Furcifer.

Come hither, crack-hemp.

— I hope I may chuse, sir.

-- Come hither, you rogue:

What, have you forgot me? Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

CRACK-ROPE. n. s. [from crack and rope.] A fellow that deserves hanging.

CRA'CKER. † n. s. [from crack. Dutch, kraccher.]

1. A noisy boasting fellow. [Gael. cracaire, a talker.]

What cracker is this same that deafs our ears

With this abundance of superfluous breath. Shakespeare, K. John.

2. A quantity of gunpowder confined so as to burst with great noise.

Beat her into gunpowder,

She would make rare crack-cracks. Bedwin, and El. Women pleas'd.

The bladder, at its breaking, gave a great report, almost like a cracker. Boyle.

And when, for furious haste to run,

They durst not stay to fire a gun,

Have don't with bonfires, and at home

Made squibs and crackers overcome. Hudibras.

Then furious he begins his march,

Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch,

With squibs and crackers arm'd to throw

Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

3. That which cracks or breaks a thing.

Or chance to like

The nut-crackers throughout. B. Jonson, Hor. Art of Poetry.

To CRA'CKLE. v. n. [from crack.] To make slight cracks; to make small and frequent noises; to decrepitate.

All these motions, which we saw,

Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw. Donne.

I fear to try new love,

As boys to venture on the unknown ice

That crackles underneath them. Dryden.

Caught her dishevell'd hair and rich attire;

Her crown and jewels crackling in the fire. Dryden, Æneid.

CRA'CKLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] A small but frequent noise.

As the crackling of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of a fool. Eccles. vii. 6.

Marrow is a specifick in that scurvy which occasions a crackling of the bones; in which case marrow performs its natural function of moistening them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CRA'CKNEL. † n. s. [Craquelin, Fr. "a cracknell, made of the yolks of eggs, water, and flower, and fashioned like a hollow trencle." Cotgrave.] A hard brittle cake.

Albee my love he seek with daily suit,
His clownish gifts and curtsies I disdain,
His kids, his cracknels, and his early fruit.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Jan.

Take with thee ten loaves, and cracknels. 1 Kings, xiv. 3.

Pay tributary cracknels, which he sells;

And with our offerings, help to raise his vails. Dryden, Juv.

CRA'DLE. † n. s. [cpabel, Saxon.]

1. A moveable bed, on which children or sick persons are agitated with a smooth and equal motion, to make them sleep.

She had indeed, sir, a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

No jutting friere,

Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird,
Hath made his pendant bed and procreant cradle. Shakespeare.

His birth, perhaps, some paltry village hides,

And sets his cradle out of fortune's way. Dryden.

A child knows his nurse and his cradle, and by degrees the playthings of a little more advanced age. Locke.

The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh:

To live, is scarce distinguish'd from to die. Prior.

Me let the tender office long engage,

To rock the cradle of reposing age;

With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,

Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death. Pope.

2. It is used for infancy, or the first part of life.

He knew them to be inclined altogether to war, and therefore wholly trained them up, even from their cradles, in arms and military exercises. Spenser on Ireland.

The new duke's daughter, her cousin, loves her, being ever, from their cradles, bred together.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

They should scarcely depart from a form of worship, in which they had been educated from their cradle. Churton.

3. [With surgeons.] A case for a broken bone, to keep off pressure.

4. [With shipwrights.] A frame of timber raised along the outside of a ship by the bulge, serving more securely and commodiously to help to launch her. Harris.

5. [With engravers.] The name of an instrument used in scraping mezzotintoes, and preparing the plate. Chambers.

6. [In husbandry.] A part often added to a scythe, in order to gather the corn into swaths, when it is mowed. Chambers.

To CRA'DLE. v. a. [from the substantive.] To lay in a cradle; to rock in a cradle.

He that hath been cradled in majesty, will not leave the throne to play with beggars. Glanville, Apol.

The tears steal from our eyes, when in the street

With some betrothed virgin's horse we meet;

Or infant's funeral from the cheated womb,

Convey'd to earth, and cradled in a tomb. Dryden.

He shall be cradled in my ancient shield, so famous through the universities. Arbuthnot on Pope.

To CRA'DLE.* v. n. To lodge as in a cradle.

Wither'd roots, and husks,

Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare, Tempest.

CRA'DLE-CLOTHES. n. s. [from cradle and clothes.] Bed clothes belonging to a cradle.

O that it could be prov'd,

That some night tripping fairy had exchange'd

In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,

And call mine Percy, his Plantagenet;

Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. 1.

CRAFT. † n. s. [cpæft, Sax. crefft, in old Welsh.]

1 Manual art; trade. [Touz les craftus du citce de Londres, old Fr. all the craftsmen, companies, of London. Kelham.]

I hear an objection, even from some well-meaning men, that these delightful crafts may be divers ways ill applied in a land.
Wotton, Architecture.

2. Art; ability; dexterity.

A poem is the work of the poet, poesy is his skill or craft of making, the very fiction itself of the work. B. Jonson.

3. Fraud; cunning; artifice.

Th' offence is holy, that she hath committed;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shakespeare.

This gives us a full view of wonderful art and craft in raising such a structure of power and iniquity. Ayliffe.

4. Small sailing vessels.

To CRAFT. v. n. [from the noun.] To play tricks; to practise artifice. Now out of use.

You've made fair hands,
You and your crafts! You've crafted fair. Shakespeare, Coriol.

CRAFTILY. adv. [Sax. craftlice. Our old adverb exactly corresponded with the Saxon: "craftlice or workmanly done." Hulot.]

1. Cunningly; artfully; with more art than honesty.

But that which most impaired his credit was the common report that he did, in all things, favour the Christians; and had, for that cause, craftily persuaded Solymán to take in hand the unfortunate Persian war. Knolles.

May he not craftily infer
The rules of friendship too severe,
Which chain him to a hated trust;
Which make him wretched to be just? Prior.

2. Skillfully. Obsolete.

On their heads bare
Of divers flowers, made full craftily
All in a sute, goodly chaplets they ware. Chaucer, Fl. and Leaf.

CRAFTINESS. n. s. [from crafty.] Cunning; stratagem.

Such there are in this age, whose hearts are so framed to dwell in frowardness, as to say, that these be not the daies of innocencie: what, shall it then follow, that their wickedness would make them the daies of craftiness? God forbid.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 51. b.

He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. Job. 4. 13.

CRAFTSMAN. n. s. [craft and man, Dr. Johnson says. But formerly it was crafty man, to denote this word in the sense of artificer: "A citee — whose crafti man and maker is God." Wicliffe, Heb. xi.] An artificer; a manufacturer; a mechanick.

That her became, as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid
With fair vermillion. Spenser, F. Q.

What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
 wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles. Shakespeare.
What a resemblance this advice carries to the oration of Demetrius to his fellow craftsmen! Decay of Piety.

CRAFTSMAN. n. s. [craft and master.] A man skilled in his trade.

He is not his craft's-master, he doth not do it right. Shakespeare.

As for alchymy and magick — the crafts and the craftsmasters are not only despised, but named with derision.

Sir T. Bodley to Bacon, Supp. to Cabala, p. 75.

There is art in pride: a man might as soon learn a trade. Those who were not brought up to it, seldom prove their craftsmaster. Collier on Pride.

CRAFTY. adj. [from craft.] Cunning; artful; full of artifices; fraudulent; sly.

Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning. Shakespeare, K. John.

This oppression did, of force and necessity, make the Irish a crafty people; for such as are oppressed, and live in slavery, are ever put to their shifts. Davies on Ireland.

Before he came in sight, the crafty god
His wings dismiss'd, but still retain'd his rod. Dryden.

No body was ever so cunning as to conceal their being so; and every body is shy and distrustful of crafty men. Locke.

CRAIG. n. s.

1. Craig is, in British, a rough steep rock; and is used in the same sense in the northern counties at this day. Gibson. The Celt. craig is also a rock.

2. The rugged protuberances of rocks.

And as mount Etua vomits sulphur out,
With cliffs of burning craigs, and fire and smoke. Fabfar.

Who hath dispos'd, but thou, the winding way,
Where springs down from the steepy craigs do beat. Wotton.

A lion spied a goat upon the crag of a high rock
L'Estrange.

3. The neck. [kraze, Goth.]

They looken bigger as bulls that been bate,
And bearen the crag so still and so state. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

4. The small end of a neck of mutton: a low word.

CRAIGGED. adj. [from crag.] Full of inequalities and prominences.

On a huge hill,
Cragged and steep, truth stands. Crashaw

The body becomes more uncomely, cragged, and crumpled; the bones stare through the skin; the flesh that should cover them, is wasted much away.

CRAIGGEDNESS. n. s. [from cragged.] Fulness of craigs or prominent rocks.

That craggedness or steepness of that mountain, — maketh many parts of it in a manner inaccessible. Brerewood on Lang. p. 176.

CRAIGGINESS. n. s. [from craggy.] The state of being craggy.

The cragginess and steepness of places up and down is a great advantage to the dwellers, and makes them inaccessible. Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 132.

CRAIGGY. adj. [from crag.] Rugged: full of prominences; rough to walk on, or climb.

That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff ypright,

Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser, F. Q.

It was impossible to pass up the woody and craggy hills, without the loss of those commanders. Raleigh, Essays.

Mountaineers that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

The town and republick of St. Marino stands on the top of a very high and craggy mountain. Addison on Italy.

CRACK. n. s. [See CRACK.] A hoast.

Crackings, buckbitings, and vain-glorious cracks. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 10.

No perfectness of life, no crack of God's Word, no colour of religion, can please
Almighty God, without the true and right faith.

Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565.) fol. 5. b.

To CRACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To brag; to boast: sometimes with of.

Then she is mortal born, how so ye crack. Spenser, F. Q. vii. vii. 50.

Nothing more proveth that all the light of the gospel, which they crack of, is mere darkness, than to say, as they say, &c. Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, fol. 88.

Each man may crack of that which was his own;
Our parents' good is their's, and no whit our's:
Who therefore will of noble birth be knowne,
Of shine in virtue like his ancestors;
Gentle consisteth not in lands and towers.

Mir. for Mag. p. 297.

To CRAKE. v. a. To utter boastingly, or with insult.

To whom the boaster, that all knights did blot,
With proud disdain did scornfull answer make: —
And further did uncomely speeches crake. Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 16.

CRA'KER.* n. s. [from crake.] A boaster; a bragger; a vaunter. Hudoc and Barret.

These barking whelps were never good biters,
No yet great crakers were ever great fighters.

Damon and Pythias, sign. E. iiij.

To CRAM. v. a. [cramman, Saxon.]

1. To stuff; to fill with more than can conveniently be held.

As much love in rhyme,
As would be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margent and all. Shakspeare.
Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves were called. Shakspeare, M. II. of Windsor.

Thou hast spoke as if thy eldest son should be a fool, whose skull Jove cram with brains. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

.. Cram not in people by sending too fast company after company;
but so as the number may live well in the plantation,
and not by straw he in penny. Bacon.

2. To fill with food beyond satiety.

You'd mollify a judge, would cram a squire;
Or else some smiles from court on may desire. King.

I am sure childre would be freer from diseases, if they were not crammed so much as they are by fond mothers, and were kept wholly from flesh the first three years. Locke.

As a man may be eating all day, and, for want of digestion, is never nourished; so these endless readers may cram themselves in vain with intellectual food. Watts on the Mind.

But Annins, crafty seer,
Came cramm'd with capon, from where Pollio dines. Pope.

3. To thrust in by force.

You cram these words into mine ears, against
The stomach of my sense. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Huffer, quoth Hudibras, this sword
Shall down thy false throat cram that word. Hudibras.

Fate has cramm'd us all into one lease,
And that even now expiring. Dryden, Cleomenes.

In another printed paper it is roundly expressed, that he will cram his brass down our throat. Swift.

To CRAM. v. n. To eat beyond satiety.

The godly dame, who fleshly failings damns,
Scolds with her maid, or with her chaplain crams. Pope.

CRA'MBO.* n. s. [a cant word, probably without etymology.] A play at which one gives a word, to which another finds a rhyme; a rhyme.

So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull
To celebrate some suburb trull,
His similes in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he could get. Swift.

Crowd is nothing but a botch, and a mere crambo to cloud.
Dennis on Pope's Homer.

On a late gratulating occasion, our very worthy vice-chancellor deigned to tag a rhyme; and our learned professors ply'd at crambo in Hebrew, Arabick, and Welsh.

The Student, ii. 225.

CRAMP. n. s. [krampe, Dut. crampe, French.]

1. A spasm or contraction of the limbs, generally removed by warmth and rubbing.

For this, besure, to-night thou shalt have cramps,
Side-stitches that shall peeu thy breath up. Shakspeare, Tempest.

In a retreat, he outruns any lacquey; marry, in coming on,
he has the cramp. Shakspeare.

The cramp, cometh of contraction of sinews; which is manifest, in that it cometh either by cold or dryness.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Hares, said to live on hemlock, do not make good the tradition; and he that observes what vertigoes, cramps, and convulsions follow thereon, in these animals, will be of our belief.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. A restriction; a confinement; obstruction; shackle.

A narrow fortune is a cramp to a great mind, and lays a man under incapacities of serving his friend. L'Estrange.

3. A piece of iron bent at each end, by which two bodies are held together.

To the uppermost of these there should be fastened a sharp grapple, or cramp of iron, which may be apt to take hold of any place where it lights. Wilkins.

CRAMP.* adj. [perhaps it should be cramp'd, or cramp'd, from the verb.] Difficult; knotty: a low term.

With a little patience and attention you shall find those phrases very intelligible, and neither to be nonsense, or gibberish, nor cramp words to conceal a conceited ignorance under, as your old friends the epicureans are wont to call them.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

To CRAMP.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pain with cramps or twitches.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, ev'n then
A wat'rish humour swell'd, and ooz'd again. Dryden, Virgil.

2. To restrain; to confine; to obstruct; to hinder.

It is impossible to conceive the number of inconveniences that will ensue, if borrowing be cramp'd. Bacon.

There are few but find that some companies benumb and cramp them, so that in them they can neither speak nor do any thing that is handsome. Glanville, Scepsis.

He, who serves, has still restraints of dread upon his spirits, which, even in the midst of action, cramps and ties up his activity. South, Serm.

Dr. Hammond loves to contract and cramp the sense of prophecies. Burnet, Theory.

The antiquaries are for cramping their subjects into as narrow a space as they can, and for reducing the whole extent of a science into a few general maxims. Addison on Italy.

Marius used all endeavours for depressing the nobles, and raising the people; particularly for cramping the former in their power of judicature. Swift.

No more

The expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold,
But full of life, and vivifying soul. Thomson, Spring.

3. To bind with crampirons.

The diversified but connected fabrick of universal justice is well cramp'd and bolted together in all its parts.

Burke, Speech at Bristol, 1780.

CRAMP-FISH.* n. s. [from cramp and fish.] The torpedo, which benumbs the hands of those that touch it.

The torpedo or cramp-fish also came to land; a fish, if Pliny writes truth, that by hiding itself with mud and dirt catches lesser fish very strangely; for by his frigidity he benumbs such fish as swim over or lodge near him.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 384.

CRA'MPIRON.* n. s. [from cramp and iron.] See
CRAMP, Sense 3.

The cramp-irons, that it moves on still,
Are the good motions of the will.
Watson, Hist. of the Art of Printing.

CRA'NAGE. n. s. [cranagium, low Latin.] A liberty to use a crane for drawing up wares from the vessels, at any creek of the sea or wharf, unto the land, and to make profit of it. It signifies also the money paid and taken for the same. Corvel.

CRA'NBERRY.* n. s. The whortle-berry, or bilberry.
See BILBERRY.

To CRANCH.* v. a. [See To CRAUNCH.] To crush in the mouth.

She cannot shoot at butts,
Or manage a great horse; but she can cranch
A sack of small coal, eat you lime and hair,
Soap-ashes, loam; and has a dainty spice
O' the green-sickness. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

CRANE. n. s. [cpan, Sax. kraen, Dutch.]

1. A bird with a long beak.

Like a crane, or a swallow, so did I chatter.
Isaiah, xxxviii. 14.

That small infantry warr'd on by cranes. Milton, P. L.

2. An instrument made with ropes, pullies, and hooks, by which great weights are raised.

In case the mould about it be so ponderous as not to be removed by any ordinary force, you may then raise it with a crane.
Mortimer.

Then commerce brought into the publick walk

The busy merchant, the big warehouse built,

Rais'd the string crane.

Thomson, Autumn.

3. A siphon; a crooked pipe for drawing liquors out of a cask.

CRANE-FLY. * n. s. A name given by some to the creature we call father-long-legs.

Chambers.

CRANES-BILL. n. s. [from crane and bill.]

1. An herb.

2. A pair of pincers terminating in a point, used by surgeons.

CRANIUM. n. s. [Latin.] The skull.

In wounds made by contusion, when the cranium is a little naked, you ought not presently to croud in dossils; for if that contused flesh be well digested, the bone will incarn with the wound without much difficulty.

Wiseman, Surgery.

CRANK. † n. s. [This word is perhaps a contraction of crane-neck, to which it may bear some resemblance, and is part of the instrument called a crane, Dr. Johnson says. But it is Saxon; cranctæp, an instrument for weavers.]

1. A crank is the end of an iron axis turned square down, and again turned square to the first turning down; so that, on the last turning down, a leather thong is slipt to tread the treadle-wheel about.

Moxon.

2. Any bending or winding passage.

I send it through the rivers of your blood,
Even to the court, the heart; to the seat of the brain;
And, through the cranks and offices of man,
The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,
From me receive that natural competency,
Whereby they live.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Like a young pine,
He grows up planted under a fair oak,
Whose strong large branches yet do shelter him;
And every traveller admires his beauty;
But like a wind, I'll work into his cranks,
Trouble his stream, and drown all vessels that Ride on his greatness.

Beaumont and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

Meet you no ruin, but the soldier in
The cranks and turns of Thebes?

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

The politick heart is too full of cranks and angles for the discovery of a plain familiar.

Feltham, Res. i. 83.

3. Any conceit formed by twisting or changing, in any manner, the form or meaning of a word.

I know not by what stratagem, or cunning crank of the schools, you can be made agreeable to yourself.

Hayward, Answ. to Doctman, ch. 1.

Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee

Jest and youthful jollity,

Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,

Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles,

Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,

And love to live in dimple sleek.

Milton, L'All.

To shew us the ways of the Lord straight and faithful as they are, not full of cranks and contradictions.

Milton, Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce.

4. An impostor. Obsolete.

A lawyer of Bruges hath some notable examples of such counterfeit cranks; and every village almost will yield abundant testimonies amongst us; we have dunmerers, Abraham-men, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 159.

Thou art a counterfeit crank, a cheater.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 436.

CRANK. † adj. [from onkranck, Dutch, i. e. not sick, Skinner. Serenius refers it to the W. Goth. kranger, bold, daring.]

1. Healthy; sprightly: sometimes corrupted to cranky. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing the solitary instance of Spenser. Yet the word has other good authorities; and it is still used in Kent for merry.

They looken bigger, as bulls that been bate,
And bearen the cragg so stiff and so statu,
As cocke on his dunghill crowing crank.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sep.

For I was a crank wit a brisk young boy.

More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 121.

How came they to grow so extremely crank and confident?

South, Sermon, xi. 21.

2. Among sailors, a ship is said to be crank, when, by the form of its bottom, or by being loaded too much above, it is liable to be overset. [from kranch, Dut. sick, which is from the Cimbr. krank.]

We use the Dutch word crank, in English, "to be well-disposed," which in the original signifieth to be sick.

Huwell, Lett. iv. 19.

To CRANK. * v. n. [from the noun.] To turn, to run in and out. The following passage in Shakspeare's Henry the Fourth has been cited by Dr. Johnson to illustrate the verb crankle; but that is not the true reading, though it is found in some editions. Pope altered the word to crankling.

See how this river comes me cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land
A huge half-moon, a monstrous cante out.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV.

The purblind hare —

How he out-runs the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

To CRA'NKLE. † v. n. [from crank, as it signifies something bent.] To run in and out; to run in flexures and windings.

Meander, who is said so intricate to be,
Hath not so many turns, nor crankling nooks, as she. [The Wye.]

Drayton, Polyolb. S 7.

Now on along the crankling path doth keep,
Then by a rock turns up another way.

Drayton, Baron's Wars, b. 6.

To CRA'NKLE. v. a. To break into unequal surfaces; to break into angles.

Old Vaga's stream,

For'd by the sudden shock, her wonted track
Forsook, and drew her humd train aslope,

Crankling her banks.

Philips.

CRA'NKLES. n. s. [from the verb.] Inequalities; angular prominences.

CRA'NKNESS. n. s. [from crank.]

1. Health; vigour.

2. Disposition to overset.

CRA'NNIED. adj. [from cranny.] Full of chinks.

A wall it is, as I would have you think,

That had in it a crannied hole or chink.

Shakspeare.

A very fair fruit, and not unlike a citron; but somewhat rougher chopt and crannied, vulgarly conceived the marks of Adam's teeth.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CRA'NNY. n. s. [cren, Fr. crena, Lat.] A chink; a cleft; a fissure.

The eye of the understanding is like the eye of the sensor for as you may see great objects through small crannies or holes, so you may see great axioms of nature through small and contemptible instances.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

And therefore beg, and bid about,

To find a cranny to creep out.

Hudibras.

In a firm building, the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, but with brick or stone, fitted to the crannies.

Dryden.

Within the soaking of water and springs, with streams and currents in the veins and crannies.

Burnet, Theory.

He skipped from room to room, ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garrets, and he peeped into every cranny.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

CRANTS. * n. s. [Germ. krantz, garlands; Tecl. kran, a wreath or chaplet. V. Ihre, Gloss. Su. Goth.]

The garlands carried before the bier of a maiden, and hung over her grave. Not wholly discontinued in this country. Warburton changed this word into chants, as others had into rites. But crants is the true word.

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants,
Her maiden strewnents, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

CRAPE. † n. s. [erespe and crepe, Fr. crepa, low Lat.] A thin stuff, loosely woven, of which the dress of the clergy is sometimes made.

And proud Roxana, fir'd with jealous rage,
With fifty yards of cape shall sweep the stage. Swift.

To thee I often call'd in vain, Swift.

Against that assassin in cape.

'Tis from high life high characters are drawn;
A saint in crapes is twice a saint in lawn. Pope.

CRA'PLE.* n. s. [Germ. krappeln, to seize.] A claw.

Soon as they did the monstrous Scorpion view
With ugly craples crawling in their way,
The dreadful sight did them so sore affray,
That their well-known courses they forwent.

Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 40.

And still he thought he felt their craples tare
Him by the heels back to his ugly den.

G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. B. 2.

CRAPULA.* n. s. [Lat. from the Gr. κραπίλη, which is from κεφαλή, the head, and πάλλω, to shake.]

A surfeit, or sickness by intemperance.

The drunkard now supinely snores,
His load of ale sweats thro' his pores,
Yet when he wakes, the swine shall find,
A crapula remains behind. Cotton, Night Quatrains.

CRA'PULENCE. n. s. [crapula, a surfeit, Latin.] Drunkenness; sickness by intemperance. Dict.

CRA'PULOUS. adj. [crapulosus, Lat.] Drunken; intemperate; sick with intemperance. Dict.

To CRASE.* See To CRAZE.

To CRASH. † v. n. [a word probably formed from the thing, Dr. Johnson says. Perhaps it may be from the Fr. croissir, "to crack, or crash; to crackle, as wood that's ready to break." Cotgrave.] To make a loud complicated noise, as of many things falling or breaking at once.

When convulsions cleave the lab'ring earth,
Before the dismal yawn appears, the ground
Trembles and heaves, the nodding houses crash. Smith.

To CRASH. † v. a. To break or bruise. This is one of our old verbs; but it is not in Shakspeare, as cited by Dr. Johnson; for the poet reads "crush a cup of wine," and not crash. See To CRUSH. Our word, in the sense of break, is traced by Serenius to the Goth. krassa, to tear. We have an expression, "to crash the teeth for anger; to grind the teeth." Barret's Alvearie; which squares with the old Fr. See Lacombe in V. Croussi, croquer, grincer les dents, craquer." We may compare also the Fr. craser.

CRASH. n. s. [from the verb.] A loud sudden mixed sound, as of many things broken at the same time.

Senseless Crash,

Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base; and, with a hideous crash, Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Moralizing sat I by the hazard table: I look'd upon the uncertainty of riches, the decay of beauty, and the crash of worlds, with as much contempt as ever Plato did. Pope.

CRA'SHING.* n. s. [from crash.] A violent, complicated noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

Zeph. i. 10.

CRASIS. n. s. [κράσις.] Temperature; constitution arising from the various properties of humours.

The fancies of men are so immediately diversified by the individual crasis, that every man owns something wherein none is like him. Glanville.

A man may be naturally inclined to pride, lust, and anger, as these inclinations are founded in a peculiar crasis, and constitution of the blood and spirits. South.

CRASS. † adj. [old Fr. cras, gras; Lat. crassus.]

Gross; coarse; not thin; not comminuted; not subtle; not consisting of small parts.

Iron in aquafortis, will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication; as also a crass and humid exhalation caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown, Vulg. Err.

A cloud of folly and distraction darkens the soul, and makes it crass and material. Bp. Taylor, Sermon (1653), p. 208.

Metals are intermixed with the common terrestrial matter, so as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, so diffused and scattered amongst the crasser and more unprofitable matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

CRA'SSIMENT.* n. s. [Lat. crassamentum.] Thickness.

Now, as the bones are principally here intended, so also all the other solid parts of the body, that are made of the same crassiment of seed, may be here included.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 179.

CRA'SSITUDE. n. s. [crassitudo, Latin.] Grossness; coarseness; thickness.

They must be but thin, as a leaf, or a piece of paper or parchment; for if they have a greater crassitude, they will alter in their own body, though they spend not. Bacon.

The Dead Sea, which vomiteth up bitumen, is of that crassitude, as living bodies, bound hand and foot, cast into it, have been born up, and not sunk. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The terrestrial matter carried by rivers into the sea, is sustained therein partly by the greater crassitude and gravity of the sea-water, and partly by its constant agitation. Woodward.

CRA'SSNESS.* n. s. [from crass.] Grossness.

The ethereal body contracts crassness and impurity by the same degrees as the immaterial faculties abate in their exercise.

Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 118.

CRASTINA'TION. n. s. [from cras, Latin, to-morrow.]

Delay. Dict.

CRATCH. † n. s. [Fr. creicche, Lat. crates.] One of our oldest substantives. "She leyde him in a cracche, &c." Wicliffe, St. Luke, ii.] The palisaded frame in which hay is put for cattle.

When being expelled out of Paradise, by reason of sin, thou wert held in the chains of death; I was inclosed in the virgin's womb, I was laid in the cratch, I was wrapped in swathing-cloaths. Hakewill on Providence.

We see the Son of God, the God of all the world, in the form of a servant: not a cratch to cradle him in, not a grave to bury him in, was his own. Bp. Hall, of Contentation, § 16.

Our meats and our sports (much of them) have relation to church-works. The coffin of our christmas-pies in shape long, is in imitation of the cratch. Selden, Table-Talk.

To CRATCH.* v. a. [our old verb for scratch; Welsh, crach, scabies. But see To SCRATCH.] To tear; as, "to cratch out one's eyes." Huloch.

CRATER.* n. s. [Lat.] A vent, or aperture; a passage at which any thing is let out.

This mount, I could see, was made of the stones thrown up and fallen back again into the crater.

Berkeley to Arbuthnot, Descrip. of Vesuvius, 1717.

CRATE.* n. s. [Germ. kraet, a basket.] A pannier, or wicker vessel, in which things are carried on a horse.

1. A shire; that is, a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice; so that there is no part of the kingdom, but what lieth within some county. Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgements of the king's courts. Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chester, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governours of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superiour and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chester a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Litchfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court. Cowell.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,
As we will ours. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children. Addison, Spect.

2. An earldom.

Brave impe of Bedford, grow apace in bountie,
And count of wisdom more than of thy countie!

Spenser, Ruins of Time.

3. A count; a lord. [old Fr. countie.] Now wholly obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county Paris. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

He made Hugh Lupus county palatine of Chester, and gave that earldom to him and his heirs, to hold the same ita liberè ad gladium sicut rex tenebat Angliam ad coronam. Dryden.

COUNTY-COURT.* See COUNTRY. It is a court incident to the jurisdiction of the Sheriff. It is not a court of record, but may hold pleas of debt or damages under forty shillings. Blackstone.

COUP-DE-MAIN.* n. s. [Fr.] A military expression, denoting an instantaneous, an unexpected, and generally a desperate attack. It is sometimes applied to any thing which is transacted with promptness and vigour.

The upper fort maintained its defence, and the attack was relinquished. It seems it could only have been carried by a coup de main, which unluckily failed.

Guthrie, India within the Ganges.

COUP-D'OEIL.* n. s. [Fr.] The first view of any thing; a slight view of it.

Only figure to yourself a vast semicircular basin, full of fine blue sea, and vessels of all sorts and sizes, &c. This is the first coup d'oeil, and is almost all I am yet able to give you an account of. Gray, Lett. to West, from Genoa, 1739.

COUPEE. n. s. [French.] A motion in dancing, when one leg is a little bent and suspended from the ground, and with the other a motion is made forwards. See COOPEE. Chambers.

CO'UPING-GLASS.* See CUPPING-GLASS.

CO'UPABLE.* adj. [Fr. accouplable.] Fit to be coupled with. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

COUPLE. n. s. [couple, Fr. copula, Latin.]

1. A chain or tie that holds dogs together.

I'll keep my stables where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couple with her,
Than when I feel and see her, no further trust her. Shakspeare.
It is in some sort with friends as it is with dogs in *couple*s;
they should be of the same size and humour. L'Estrange.

2. Two; a brace.

He was taken up by a couple of shepherds, and by them brought to life again. Sidney.

A schoolmaster, who shall teach my son and your's, I will provide; yea, though the three do cost me a couple of hundred pounds. Ascham.

A piece of chrystal inclosed a couple of drops, which looked like water when they were shaken, though perhaps they are nothing but bubbles of air. Addison on Italy.

By adding one to one, we have the complex idea of a couple. Locke.

3. A male and his female.

So shall all the *couple*s three,
Ever true in loving be. Shakspeare, M. N. Dream.

Oh! alas!

I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as

You gracious couple do. Shakspeare, Win. Tale.

I have read of a feigned commonwealth, where the married couple are permitted, before they contract, to see one another naked. Bacon, New Atlantis.

He said: the careful couple join their tears,
And then invoke the gods with pious prayers. Dryden.

All succeeding generations of men are the progeny of one primitive couple. Bentley's Sermons.

To COUPLE. v. a. [old Fr. coupler, accoupler, jointing; Roq. copula, Lat.]

1. To chain together.

Huntsman, I charge thee, tender well my hounds;
And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd Brach. Shakspeare.

2. To join one to another.

What greater ills have the heavens in store,
To couple coming hains with sorrow past. Sidney.

And where-o'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one. Frod. xxvi. 1.

They behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear. 1 Pet. iii. 2.

Their concernments were so coupled, that if nature had not, yet their religions would have made them brothers. South.

That man makes a mean figure in the eyes of reason, who is measuring syllables and coupling rhimes, when he should be mending his own soul, and securing his own immortality. Pope.

3. To marry; to wed; to join in wedlock.

I shall rejoice to see you so coupled, as may be fit both for your honour and your satisfaction. Sidney.

I am just going to assist with the archbishop, in degrading a parson who *couple*s all our beggars, by which I shall make one happy man. Swift.

To COUPLE. v. n. To join in embraces.

Waters in Africa being rare, divers sorts of beasts come from several parts to drink; and so being refreshed, fall to couple, and many times with several kinds. Bacon.

Thou, with thy lusty crew,
And coupled with them, and begot a race. Milton, P. R.

After this alliance,
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden, Span. Fryar.

COUPLE-BEGGAR. n. s. [couple and beggar.] One that makes it his business to marry beggars to each other.

No couple-beggar in the land,
E'er join'd such numbers hand in hand. Swift.

CO'UPLEMENT.* n. s. [from couple.] Union; two or more together. Not now in use. Mr. Malone believed this word to be of Shakspeare's invention; but Spenser is before him. Some editions of Shakspeare's Sonnets have converted it into compliment.

After all which up to their steeds they went,
And forth together rode, a goodly complement.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. v. 24.

Making a complement of proud compare
With sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems.

Shakspeare, Sonn. xxi.

COUPLÉT. n. s. [French.]

1. Two verses; a pair of rhimes.

Then would they cast away their pipes, and, holding hand in hand, dance by the only cadence of their voices, which they would use in singing some short couplets, whereto the one half beginning, the other half should answer. Sidney.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought;
A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along. Pope.

In Pope I cannot read a line,
But with a sigh I wish it mine;
When he can in one couplet fix,
More sense than I can do in six,
It gives me such a jealous fit,
I cry, p'x take him and his wit.

Swift.

2. A pair; as of doves.

Anon, as patient as the female dove,
Ere that her golden couplets are dislodged,
His silence will sit drooping.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

COUPLING. n. s. [from couple.]

1. A junction.

To the artificers and builders gave they it, to buy hewn stone, and timber for couplings.

2 Chron. xxxiv. 11.

2. Junction in embrace.

That great variety of brutes in Africa, is by reason of the meeting together of brutes of several species, at water, and the promiscuous couplings of males and females of several species.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

COURAGE. n. s. [old Fr. courage; modern, courage; low Lat. coragium; from cor, the heart. Spenser repeatedly uses courage for heart or mind. This word is rarely found in the plural; but Shakspeare gives it in his Cymbeline: "Their discipline now mingled with their courages;" which Dr. Johnson, however, has, in all the editions of his dictionary, printed courage.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Hope arms their courage: from their towers they throng
Their darts with double force, and drive the foe. Dryden.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgement or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason. Addison, Guardian.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortune. Swift.

To CO'URAGE. n. v. [from the noun. An old verb in our language, unjustly slighted and forgotten. "To courage, or to make audacious, addere animum, vel audaciam." Huloet.] To encourage.

Moreover, charge Joshua, and courage him, and bidden him.

Deut. iii. 28. Malheur's Transl.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [old Fr. or Norm. courageux, angry, Kelham; courageux, courageous, Cotgrave.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall flee away naked in that day.

Amos, ii. 16.

Let us imitate the courageous example of St. Paul, who chose then to magnify his office when ill men conspired to lessen it.

Alterbury.

2. It is used ludicrously by Shakspeare for outrageous. He is very courageous mad, about his throwing into the water.

Shakspeare.

COURAGEOUSLY. adv. [from courageous.] Bravely; stoutly; boldly.

Deal courageously; and the Lord shall be with the good.

2 Chron. xix. 17.

The king the next day presented him battle upon the plain, the fields there being open and champaign: the earl courageously came down, and joined battle with him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Endeavour resolutely and courageously to repel temptations, as often as they solicit thee.

Hammond's Works, iv. 563.

COURAGEOUSNESS. n. s. [from courageous.] Bravery; boldness; spirit; courage.

Nichol hearing of the manliness and the courageousness that they had to fight for their country, durst not try the matter by the sword.

2 Mac. xiv. 18.

COURANTE. n. s. [from courante, Fr.] See CORANT.

1. A nimble dance.

I'll like a maid the better, while I have a tooth in my head: why, he is able to lead her a courante.

Shakspeare.

2. Any thing that spreads quick, as a paper of news.

The weekly courants with Paul's seal; and all
Th' admir'd discourses of the prophet Ball.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

New books every day, pamphlets, courantes, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

My distempered old acquaintance read, in the next place, the account of the affairs abroad in the courant.

Tuller, No. 178.

TO COURB. v. n. [from courber, Fr.] To bend; to bow; to stoop in supplication. Not in use.

In the fatness of these pury times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,

Yea, courb and woo, for leave to do it good.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

COERB. adj. Crooked. See CORB.

Her neck is short, her shoulders coerb.

Gower, Conf. Am.

CO'URIER. n. s. [from courier, Fr.] A messenger sent in haste; an express; a runner.

I met a courier, one mine ancient friend.

Shakspeare, Timon.

This thing the wary bassa well perceiving, by speedy couriers advertised Solyman of the enemy's purpose, requesting him with all speed to repair with his army to Tauris.

Knolles, Hist.

COURSE. n. s. [from course, Fr. cursus, Lat.]

1. Race; career.

And some she arms with sinewy force,

And some with swiftness in the course.

Cowley.

2. Passage from place to place; progress. To this may be referred the course of a river.

And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais.

Acts, xxi. 7.

Like as a ship, that through the ocean wide

Directs her course unto one certain coast,

Is met of many a counter wind and tide.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xii. 1.

A light, by which the Argive squadron steers

Their silent course to Ilium's well known shore.

Denham.

3. Tilt; act of running in the lists.

But this hot knight was cooled with a fall, which, at the third course, he received of Phalantus.

Sidney.

4. Ground on which a race is run.

5. Track or line in which a ship sails, or any motion is performed.

6. Sail; means by which the course is performed.

To the courses we have devised studding-sails, sprit-sails, and top-sails.

Raleigh, Ess.

7. Progress from one gradation to another; process.

When the state of the controversy is plainly determined, it must not be altered by another disputant in the course of the disputation. Watts.

8. Order of succession; as, every one in his course.

Their officers that served the king in any matter of the courses, which came in and went out, month by month;—of every course was twenty and four thousand. Chron. xxvii. 1.

If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. 1 Cor. xiv. 27.

9. Stated and orderly method, or manner.

If she live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The duke cannot deny the course of law. Shakspeare.

If God, by his revealed declaration, first gave rule to any man, he, that will claim by that title, must have the same positive grant of God for his succession; for, if it has not directed the course of its descent and conveyance, no body can succeed to this title of the first Ruler. Locke.

10. Series of successive and methodical procedure.

The glands did resolve during her course of physick, and she continueth very well to this day. Wiseman, Surgery.

11. The elements of an art exhibited and explained, in a methodical series. Hence our courses of philosophy, anatomy, chemistry, and mathematicks.

Chambers.

12. Conduct; manner of proceeding.

Grinus perceiving the danger he was in, began to doubt with himself what course were best for him to take. Raolles.

That worthy deputy finding nothing but a common misery, took the best course he possibly could to establish a common-wealth in Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

He placed commissioners there, who governed it only in a course of discretion, part martial, part civil. Davies on Ireland.

Give willingly what I can take by force;
And know, obedience is your safest course. Dryden, Aureng.

But if a right course be taken with children, there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments. Locke.

'Tis time we should decree
What course to take. Addison, Cato.

The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time. Swift.

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; for otherwise it would have been terrible. Sidney.

His addiction was to courses vain;
His companies, unletter'd, rude and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

As the dropsy-man, the more he drinks, the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink; even so a sinner, the more he sins, the apter he is to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness. Perkins.

Men will say,
That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took,
Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.

14. Natural bent; uncontrolled will.

It is best to leave nature to her course, who is the sovereign physician in most diseases. Pamph.

So every servant took his course,
And, bad at first, they all grew worse. Prior.

15. Catamenia.

The stoppage of women's courses, if not suddenly looked to, sets them undoubtedly into a consumption, dropsy, or some other dangerous disease. Harvey on Consumptions.

16. Orderly structure.

The tongue defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature. James, iii. 6.

17. [In architecture.] A continued range of stones, level or of the same height, throughout the whole length of the building, and not interrupted by any aperture.

Harris.

18. Series of consequences.

19. Number of dishes set on at once upon the table.

Worthy sir, thou bleed'st:

Thy exercise hath been too violent
For a second course of fight. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Then with a second course the tables load,
And with full chargers offer to the god. Dryden, Æn.

You are not to wash your hands, 'till after you have sent up your second course. Swift, Direct. to the Cook.

So quick retires each flying course, you'd swear
Sancho's dread doctor and his wand was there. Pope.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course. U Estrate.

22. The running of dogs upon bears. A phrase of bear-baiting times; whether it belongs to the no less savage practice of modern bull-baiting, I am unable to say.

They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-like, I must fight the course. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

23. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind unprejudiced by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

24. Of course. By settled rule.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;
No muse is proof against a golden show'r. Garth.

Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors. Swift.

To COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt; to pursue.

The big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase. Shakspeare, As you like it.

The king is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself. Shakspeare, L. L. Lost.

Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

I am continually starting hares for you to course; we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour just where thine takes it up. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.

When they have an appetite
To venery, let them not drink nor eat,
And course them oft, and tire them in the heat. May, Virg.

To COURSE. v. n. To run: to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The nat'ral gates and allies of the body. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

She did so course o'er my exteriors, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to search me up like a burning glass. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd his chair. Dryden.

All, at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All other coursing in a maze of light. Thomson, Autumn.

COURSER. n. s. [from course; coursier, French.]

1. A swift horse; a war-horse: a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his coursers strong,
And Atinay him pricks with spurs of shame and wrong. Spenser, F. Q.

'Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of courcers, born of heavenly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire.

Dryden, Æn.

Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.

Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of coursing hares; "a runner; a courser." See Cotgrave in V. COUREUR.

I am no bawd, nor a cheater, nor a courser
Of broken-winded women.

Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

A leach is a leathern thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound.

Hammer.

3. He who discourses upon a subject, and pursues it; a disputant. See the 11th sense of COURSE.

He was accounted a noted sophister, and remarkable courser in the time of Lent in the public schools.

Life of A. Wood, p. 109.

CO'URSEY.* n. s. [Fr. coursie.] Part of the hatches in a galley.

Sherwood.

CO'URSING.* n. s. See TO COURSE. The sport of hunting hares, foxes, and sometimes deer, with greyhounds.

It would be tried also in flying of hawks, or in coursing of a deer, or hart, with greyhounds.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

COURT.* n. s. [old Fr. court, mod. cour; Goth. kurt, civility of manners; Sax. cupt; Dutch, koert; low Lat. curtis. See COURTEOUS.]

1. The place where the prince resides; the palace.

Of court, it seems, men courtesie do call,
For that it there most useth to abound.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 1.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires,
Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; Epicurism and lust,
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

"It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

Isaiah, xxvi. 13.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.

Prior, Dedication.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference

That holds this present question in the court?

Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought unto the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached, concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state.

Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house. [perhaps, in this sense, from the Sax. gyrd, a yard, g being changed into c. Or from the Lat. cors, cortis.]

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall.

Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him), for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.

Dryden.

4. A small opening inclosed with houses and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

The court's a school indeed, in which some few learn virtuous principles.

Beaumont and Fl. Custom of the Country.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them.

Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

He was so zealous for his client, and so favourably received by the court, that he went on with great fluency to inform the bench, &c.

Tatler, No. 186.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive
Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

The archbishop

Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf.

Spectator.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did board.

Spenser.

Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er bend

Thy frailter virtue, to betray thy friend?

Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;

Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young master, by offering that which they love best themselves.

Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing.

Swift to Gay.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

COURT of Guard.* See the 7th sense of COURT.

1. The guard-room of soldiers; the place where the guard musters. See CORPS-DE-GARD.

The lieutenant to-night watches on the court of guard.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Visit your courts of guard, view your munition.

Beaumont and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

2. They who compose the guard.

Environed round with a court of guard about her, that stand in readiness with javelins in hand.

Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 18.

TO COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;

Seem to fly it, it will pursue:

So court a mistress, she denies you;

Let her alone, she will court you.

B. Jonson, Forest.

Fir'd with her love, and with ambition led,

The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed.

Dryden, Æn.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love

To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?

Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling vestal,

While she beholds the holy flame expiring.

Addison, Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,

A thousand court you, though they court in vain.

Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.

Locke on Education.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-BARON.* See COURT. A court incident to every manor in the kingdom, and holden by the steward within the said manor.

Blackstone.

COURTEZAN. } n. s. [Fr. courtisane, Ital. cortigiana, low Lat. cortisana. Our old word is cortizan, or cortisan. Colgrave, in translating courtisane, renders it "a lady, gentlewoman, or waiting-woman of the court; also, but less properly, a courtizan, professed strumpet, famous or infamous whore." A woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtezan.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay, they wonder with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

The Corinthian is a column, lasciviously decked like a courtesan.

Wotton.

Charinus, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtezan, spent his whole estate upon her.

Addison.

COURTESY.* n. s. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesía, Ital. kurteisí, Goth.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Of court, it seems, men courtesy do call,

For that it there most useth to abound.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. i. 1.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house;

It must appear in other ways than words;

Therefore I cant this breathing courtesy.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.

Pearson.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.

Clarendon.

Courtesy — is sooner found in lowly sheds

With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, where it first was nam'd.

Milton, Com.

So gentle of condition was he known,

That through the court his courtesy was blown.

Dryden, Fob.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You spurn'd me such a day; another time

You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies,

I'll lend you thus much money.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house

Return, and force their scant'd courtesy.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When I was last at Exeter,

The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,

And by that music let us all embrace;

For heav'n to earth come of us never shall

A second time do such a courtesy.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl scarce to a courtly bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train. Dryden, Jun.
The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I endeavour'd to make her look something Christ-like. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others;
as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. Co'URTSEY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritance, that is, a woman seized of land, find getteth a child of her that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith; yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Angliæ, or by the courtesy of England.

To Co'URTSEY.† v. n. [old Fr. courtiser.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches; courtsies there to me.
Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

The petty traffickers,
That courtsey to them, do them reverence. Shakespeare.

2. To make a reverence in the manner of ladies.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly courtsey to each other. Prior.

To Co'URTSEY.* v. a. To treat with courtesy.

The prince politickly courtesied him with all favours.
Sir R. Williams, Act. of the L. Countries, (1618.) p. 5.

Co'URTIER. n. s. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears. —
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been political with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one. Shakespeare, As you like it.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you will be a courtier.
Shakespeare, M. W. of Windsor.

You know I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs.
Bacon.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his courtiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants.
Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

What
Made thee, all honour'd honest Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the capitol? Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard the III. not out of fear but wisdom.
Suckling.

Co'URTIERY.* n. s. [from courtier.] The manners of a courtier.

In this garb he savours
Little of the nicety,
In the spruce courtiery. B. Jonson, Entertainments.

Co'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

Co'URTLIKE.† adj. [from court and like.] Elegant; polite:
"After the manner of the court; or after the sort of a courtier." Hulnot.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden's Remains.

'Fore me you are not modest,
Nor is this courtlike. Braun, and Fl. Double Marriage.

Instead of masks,
Musick, tilts, tourneys, and such courtlike shews;
The hollow murmur of the checkless winds
Shall groan again. Marston's Malcontent.

I have at my command
The smell of flowers and odorous drugs,
Of ointments sweet, and excellent perfumes,
And courtlike waters; which if once you smell,
You in your heart will wish, as I suppose,
That all your body were transform'd to nose!

Co'URTLINESS. n. s. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in is courtlineess.
Ld. Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.

Co'URTING. n. s. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. B. Jonson.

Co'URTLY.† adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

But with remembrance of your gracious name,
Wherewith that courtly garland most ye grace,
And deck the world. Spenser, Sonnet to Lady Carew.
Modesty should be embraced of courtly virgins, as the preserver of chastity.

A. Wilett, on the Marriage of the Count Palatine with James the 1st's Daughter, 1612, p. 43.

Besides all the courtly preambles, necessary concomitants, and delightful consequences of marriage.

More, Conj. Cabb. (1653) p. 211.
In our own time, (excuse some courtly strains)

No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

Co'URTLY. adv. In the manner of courts; elegantly.

They can produce nothing so courtly writ, or which expresses so much the conversation of a gentleman, as Sir John Suckling. Dryden on Dram. Poetry.

Co'URTSHIP.† n. s. [from court.]

1. The act of soliciting favour.

You'll judge me a novice in the affairs of the world, in not pitching upon some other patron; and unacquainted with the courtship of the times, that holds it more commendable to toy and complement with a stranger, than speak truth of a known friend. Milne, Song of the Soul, (1647.) Dedie.

He paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd Sneyt

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love,
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

In tedious courtship we declare our pain,
And ere we kindness find, first meet disdain.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison, Guardian.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university,
My modesty I give to soldiers bare;
My patience to a gamester's share. Donne.

Co'USIN.† n. s. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Lat.
Our language has a feminine formation of this word, which has escaped Dr. Johnson, and is, I believe, in no dictionary. But the learned Lightfoot has employed it, who will, however, hardly be imitated: "My brethren and sisters, my cosens and cosenesses," Miscell. p. 135.

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister; a kinsman. Our ancestors considered cousin merely as importing one of the same blood; and so applied it to nephews, grandchildren, &c.

Macbeth unseam'd him.
— Oh, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman. Shakespeare.

Tybalt, my cousin! O, my brother's child!
Unhappy sight! alas, the blood is spill'd,
Of my dear kinsman. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

COW

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
And cousin german to great Ham's seed.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

1. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

Then let me hear

Of you, my gentle cousin, Westmorland,

What yesternight our counsel did decree, &c. Shakspeare.

CO'USIN.* adj. [from the substantive. A very ancient employment of the word.] Allied; kindred.

Eke Plato sayeth, whoso can him rede,

The world's, most ben cousin to the dede.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

Her former sorrow into sudden wrath
(Both cousin passion of distressed spright)
Converting, forth she beates the dusty path.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 12.

COUTEAU.* n. s. [Fr. a knife.] A hanger; as the word is sometimes used.

COUTIL.* adj. [Sax. cuð.] Known. See UNFOUTH. Bullockar.

COUTH.* In our old authors, used for coud. See COLD.

Couth cometh of the verb cume, that is, to know, or to have skill; as well interpreteth the same Sir T. Smith, in his booke of government. E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal. Jan.

COW.* n. s. [In the plural, anciently kine or ken, now commonly cows, cu, Sax. koc, Dutch. So far Dr. Johnson. As to the plural kine, or ken, it is in fact nothing more than a corruption of cowen, the old plural of coc. The Goth. and Iceland. ku must be also added to the etymology. The Persian gaw is the same word. See Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 317.] The female of the bull; the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bulls; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wisehead's Surg.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cow,

He sought himself some hospitable house.

Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden, Fob.

Cow.* n. s. The moving top of the chimney of a hop-oust, or kiln. Kent. Supposed to be a corruption of cowl, being in the shape of the cowl or hood worn by some religious orders. Pigge.

To Cow.* v. a. [from coward by contraction, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke considers it as implying "to make to cower." Neither of these quaint etymologies will stand against the northern origin of this word, Su. kufica, to suppress, to keep under. V. Widegren, Su. Lex. The Iceland. kuga is the same.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb

Untimely ripp'd. —

— Accused be that tongue that tells me so;

For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shakspeare, Macb.

I would die with you, but first I would so torture ye,

And cow you in your end, and so despise you,

For a weak and wretched coward.

Bacon, and El. W. for a Month.

By reason of their frequent revolts they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat equalled their spirits. Howel, Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,

Their horns, of course, are understood.

Hudibras.

COW-HERD.* n. s. [Sax. cu-hepde; Teut. koe-herde.]

One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW

COW-HOUSE. n. s. [cow and house.] The house in which kine are kept.

You must house your milch cows, that you give hay to, in your cow-house all night. Mortimer.

COW-ITCH.* See COWHAGE.

COW-LEECH.* n. s. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer, Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. s. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. s. [from cow and wheat.] A plant.

COWARD.* n. s. [coward Fr. of uncertain derivation, Dr. Johnson says; but nothing farther. He might have stated, that both Junius and Skinner have considered cowherd, as its origin; and Twisden and Somner, columvertere, to turn tail, or run away; to which latter opinion Mr. Tyrwhitt has readily subscribed, thinking that the old French culvert, formed from the Latin culumvertere, might easily be corrupted into coward or coward. The supposition of cowherd might probably arise from the circumstance of reproachful terms having been anciently borrowed from the state of persons in a low degree, as villain, knave, &c. The old spelling of our word is cowherd or cowheard. See the adjective COWARD. Others offer cowheart or cow-hearted, as the parent of this word of disgrace. But Mr. Horne Tooke asserts, that coward is the past participle of the verb To Cower; implying "one who has cower'd before an enemy." This assertion, I think, is not correct, and he might just as well have offered "one who had been cowed before an enemy." — There can be no doubt that our word is from the old French "coward, un lâche, un poltron." V. Lacombe and Roquefort; the latter of whom, under courdisse, i. e. courtoisie, refers the origin to coine, Lat. cauda, the tail. "parce que les animaux qui craignent, portent la queue entre les jambes." The Italians have codardo, from coda, i. e. cauda also, as their coward; part of Menage's explanation of which is "dalla coda che fra le gambe portano i cani pavrosi." It may be added that coward is one of our heraldick terms; as, "a lion coward," that is, with his tail hanging down between his legs.]

1. A poltron: a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Masdotes to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.

Tremble ye not, Oh friends! and cowards fly, Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die. Pope, Odyssey.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;

And mis'd the house with loud and coward cries. Shakspeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,

And ill foreseen the present bliss destroy.

Prior.

CO'WARD.* adj. [from the substantive.] Like a coward; dastardly.

Who when he none of all those knights did see
Hastily bent that enterprise to heare,
Nor undertake the same for cowheard feare,
He stepped forth with courage bold and great.

That craven cowherd knight. Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 15.
Ib. vi. vi. 26.

To CO'WARD.* v. a. [old Fr. couarder.] To make timorous or cowardly.

What read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chas'd your blood
Out of appearance? Shakspeare, Hen. V.

CO'WARDICE.† n. s. [from the old Fr. coardice.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, sir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead;
And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name. Spenser, F. Q.
Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton on Education.

None was disgraced; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame;
The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryden, Fab.
This great, this holy, this terrible being is present to all our affections; sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which detels us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Rogers, Sermon.

To CO'WARDIZE.* v. a. [from the noun: which indeed the excellent author whom I cite, as using this verb, writes cowardize.] To render timorous or cowardly.

Wickedness naturally tends to dishearten and cowardize men. Scott, Sermon before the Artill. Comp. 1680.

CO'WARDLIKE.* adj. [from toward and like.] Resembling a coward; acting as a coward.

It would betray a poverty of spirit
In me to obstruct my fortunes, or descent,
If I should coward-like surrender up
The interest which the inheritance of your virtue,
And mine own thrifty fate, can claim in honour.

Beaumont and Fl. Loves of Candy.

CO'WARDLINESS.† n. s. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

I know not whether he more detests cowardliness or cruelty. Bp. Hall, Char. The Valiant Man.

Hugh of France was already returned home, pretending the colick; though some impute it to cowardliness, and make the disease not in his bowels but his heart.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 43.

CO'WARDLY. adv. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian sooth-sayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Mean; befitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South.

CO'WARDLY.† adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reprov'd them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

This is the stupid state of drooping soul,
That loves his body, and false forms admires: —

But cowardly declines the noble strife

'Gainst vice and ignorance. More, Song of the Soul, ii. i. 17.

CO'WARDOUS.* adj. [from coward.] This is our old word for cowardly, and is found in Barret's Alvearie; formed like hazardous, and jeopardous.
Cowardly. Not now in use.

CO'WARDSHIP. n. s. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness; a word not now in use.

A very paitry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakspeare.

To COWER.† v. n. [currian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cove sinks on her knees, Dr. Johnson says. But it may be rather from the manner in which a bird descends into its nest, or sits in it, or stoops over its prey. The Su. Goth. kurr, is translated, "avium more reclinatus quiesco." V. Seren. and G. Andr. Our word is often written cour or coure. In the north of England it is still used for to crouch down, or squat upon one's hams.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon

The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,

And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakspeare.

Do you know the French knight that cowers i' the hairs?

Shakspeare, Pericle.

The metaphor of a wing [applied to an army] leaves most this way, whether we consider their figure and motion being stretched out, or their posture when birds of rapine sit couring over their prey. Milton on Dan. p. 41.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast behold
Approaching two and two; these cowering low
With blandishment; each bird stoop'd on his wing.

Milton, P. L.

Our dame sits cowering over a kitchen fire;
I draw treach'ry, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

To COWER.† v. a. [old Fr. couver, "to cower over, to cherish, to protect; also, to hatch." Cotgrave. See also Menage in V. Couven. We thus use the active verb To BROOD.] To cherish by care.

Where finding life not yet dislodged quite,

He much rejoic'd, and cour'd it tenderly,

As chicken newly hatcht, from dreaded destiny.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. viii. 9.

CO'WISH.† adj. [from To cove, to awe.]

1. Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrong,
Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Pertaining to a cow. Obsolete. Indoet.

CO'WKEEPER. n. s. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd, are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Broom.

COWL.† n. s. [old Fr. coule; cugle, Sax. cucullus, Lat.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented, to signify his name, saint Francis with his friary cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wise man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool, Dr. Johnson says. Perhaps our word is allied to the Germ. kugel, a bowl or round substance; Iceland. koggul. In Essex a cowl

I have seen a horse carrying home the harvest on a crate.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Isles.

CRAVA'T. n. s. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Fr. cravate, which Menage derives from the Cravats, a sort of German troops, usually called Cravates; from whom, in 1636, this ornament, he adds, was adopted in France. — Serenius refers at once to the part which the cravat adorns, and so deduces it from the West Goth. kravice for krage, the neck. Appendix, Eng. and Sw. Diet. Pope places the accent on the first syllable.] A neck-cloth; any thing worn about the neck.

Less delinquents have been scourg'd,

And hemp on wooden anvils forg'd;

Which others for cravats have worn

About their necks, and took a turn.

Hudibras.

With eager beats his Mecklin cravat moves.

Pope, Bass-T-Table.

The restrictives were applied, one over another, to her throat: then we put her on a cravat.

Wiseman, Surgery.

TO CRAVE. v. a. [capian, Sax.]

1. To ask with earnestness; to ask with submission; to beg; to entreat.

What one petition is there found in the whole litany, whereof we shall ever be able at any time to say, that no man living needeth the grace or benefit therein craved at God's hands?

Hooker.

As for my nobler friends, I crave their pardons;

But for the mutable rank-scented many,

Let them regard me as I do not flatter. Shakspeare, Comsolanus.

The poor people not knowing where to hide themselves from the fury of their enemies, nor of whom to crave help, fled as men and women dismayed.

Knolles.

I would crave leave here, under the word action, to comprehend the forbearance too of any action proposed.

Locke.

Each ardent nymph the rising current craves,

Each shepherd's pray'r retards the parting waves.

Prior.

2. To ask insatiably.

The subject arm'd; the more their princes gave,

Th' advantage only took the more to crave.

Denham.

Him dost thou mean, who, spite of all his store,

Is ever craving, and will still be poor?

Who cheats for halfpence; and who doffs his coat,

To save a farthing in a ferry-boat.

Dryden, Pers.

3. To long; to wish unreasonably. See CRAVING.

4. To call for importunately.

Bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses,

Which crave the instant use.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The antecedent concomitants and effects of such a constitution, are acids, taken in too great quantities; sour eruptions, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestrial and absorbent substances.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Sometimes with for before the thing sought.

Once one may crave for love,

But more would prove

This heart too little, that too great.

Shakling.

CRAVEN. n. s. [derived by Skinner from crave, as one that craves or begs his life; perhaps it comes originally from the noise made by a conquered cock, Dr. Johnson says. "Craven," says Mr. Horne Tooke, "is one who has craved or craven his life from his antagonist; dextramque precantem protendens." Div. of Purley, ii. 71. Another learned etymologist has also said, "our word craven, a coward, is nothing but the humble and submissive craver." Whiter, Etym. Magn. p. 148. Thus fortified is the etymology of craven; but it is not impregnable. The word craven, cravent, or cravant, was the ancient exclamation, in a criminal trial by battle, of those who yielded to their opponents; which therefore was considered a term of the greatest infamy, and in time became the common appellation of all cowards. The law was, that the conquered should acknowledge his submission, before the people, in pronouncing this "word of fear;" and Lord Coke says, that if the accuser joined battle, and cried craven, he was to lose "liberam legem;" if the accused, he was to be hanged. Now this expression cravent, or cravant, is, as Dr. Jamieson also has observed, undoubtedly from the old French crant, "terme de jurisprudence feodale: c'est une promesse de rendre service." Dict. Trev. By the use of it, therefore, Dr. Jamieson adds, the vanquished person merely did homage to the victor as his superiour. Creante is the old Fr. substantive for consent, or promise; and cranter, or creanter, the verb. W. Lacombe and Roquefort. And Du Cange, in the low Lat. CREANTUM. The Scottish word for craven is cravodun, which, if not a corruption of crant itself, may be, as Dr. Jamieson has remarked, from creant and donner, to give faith, or do homage. In the north of England, I may add, craddently is yet used for cowardly.]

VOL. I.

1. A cock conquered and dispirited.

What, is your crest a cockcomb? —

— A combless cock, so Kate will be my hen.

— No cock of mine; you crow too like a craven.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Oh craven-chicken of a cock o' the game!

Beaumont and Fl. Martial Maid.

2. A coward; a recreant; a weak-hearted, spiritless fellow.

Is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

— He is a craven and a villain else. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Oh! here's one made to any hand,

Methinks looks like a craven;

Less pains will serve his trial; some slight juggle.

Beaumont and Fl. Passion. Madman.

CRAVEN. adj. Cowardly; base.

Upon his coward breast

A bloody cross, and on his craven crest

A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly.

Spenser, F. Q.

Whether it be

Be'tial oblivion, or some craven scruple

Of thinking too precisely on the event; —

A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And, ever, three parts coward.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Yet if the innocent some mercy find

From cowardice, not ruth did that proceed;

His noble foes durst not his craven kind

Exasperate by such a bloody deed.

Fairfax.

TO CRAVEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

Hammer.

Against self-slaughter

There is a prohibition so diving.

That cravens my weak hand.

Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Dejected souls, cravened with their own distrusts, are the world's footballs, to be kicked and spurned.

Quarles, Judg. and Mercy. The Proud Man.

CRAVER. n. s. [from crave.] An insatiable asker.

It is used in Clarissa, Dr. Johnson says; and, I may add, it is one of our old substantives, being in Huloet's Dictionary, and there rendered mundicus. It is also in Sherwood, a century after Huloet, and a century before Richardson.

CRAVING. n. s. [from crave.] Unreasonable desire. Levity pushes us on from one vain desire to another, in a regular vicissitude and succession of cravings and satiety.

L'Estrange.

He is actually under the power of a temptation, and the sway of an impetuous lust; both hurrying him to satisfy the cravings of it, by some wicked action.

South.

To CRAUNCH. † v. a. [schrantsen, Dutch; whence the vulgar say more properly to scraunch.] To crush in the mouth. See To CRANCH.

She would craunch the wing of a lark, bones and all, between her teeth. Swift, Voy. to Brobdingnag, ch. 3.

CRAW. † n. s. [kroc, Danish.]

1. The crop or first stomach of birds.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or crawl, or at least into a kind of anti-stomach, which I have observed in many, especially piscivorous birds. Ray on the Creation.

2. The human stomach, in contempt.

That this holy prophet, the Baptist, should be great in the sight of God; and should not give himselfe with the wicked priests of the earth, or the false prophets of Israel, to gorge their craws with bibbing cheer, but should lead an austere and temperate diet. Anderson, Expos. on Benedictus, (1573,) fol. 43.

CRAWFISH. n. s. [sometimes written crayfish, properly crevis; in French ecrevisse.] A small crustaceous fish found in brooks; the small lobster of fresh water.

Those that cast their shell are the lobster, the crab, the crawfish, the hodmandod or dodman, and the tortoise. Bacon.
Let me to crack live crawfish recommend. Pope.

The common crawfish, and the large sea crawfish, both produce the stones called crabs eyes. Hill.

To CRAWL. v. n. [kricken, Dutch.]

1. To creep; to move with a slow motion; to move without rising from the ground, as a worm.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of you small hill. Milton, Com.

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warn'd by my beams, and kindled into man! Dryden.

The streams but just contain'd within their bounds,
By slow degrees into their channels crawl;
And earth increases as the waters fall. Dryden.

A worm finds what it searches after, only by feeling, as it crawls from one thing to another. Grew, Cosmol.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow-creature, abject man! Prior.

2. To move weakly, and slowly, or timorously.

'Tis our first intent

To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

They like tall fellows crept out of the holes; and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it. Knolles.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore side. Heylin.

A look so pale no quartane ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave. Dryden, Jyn.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!

A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then shrinks to earth again. Pope.

It will be very necessary for the threadbare gownman, and every child who can crawl, to watch the fields at harvest-time. Swift.

3. To advance slowly and slyly.

Cranmer

Hath crawl'd into the favour of the king,
And is his oracle. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

4. To move about hated and despised.

Reflect upon that litter of absurd opinions that crawl about the world, to the disgrace of reason. South.

How will the condemned sinner then crawl forth, and appear in his filth, before that undefiled tribunal? South.

Behold a rev'rend sire, whom want of grace
Has made the father of a nameless race

Crawl through the street, shov'd on, or rudely press'd
By his own sons, that pass him by unblest'd! Pope.

CRAWL. * n. s. [Span, corral, a vault, or cellar.] The well in a boat.

CRAWLER. † n. s. [from crawl.] A creeper; any thing that creeps.

Unarm'd of wings and scaly oare,
Unhappy crawler on the land. Lovelace, Luc. p. 140.

CRAY, CRAYER, or CRARE. * n. s. [old Fr. craier, "sorte de vaisseau de guerre," Lacombe; low Lat. crayera; Sw. krejare, "a small vessel with one mast," Widegren.] A small sea-vessel.

O, melancholy!

Who ever yet could sound thy bottom? find
The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish crare

Might easiest harbour in? Shakspeare, Cymbeline.
To ships, and barks, with gallics, bulks, and crayes.

Harington, Ork. Fur. xxxix. 28.

Let him venture

In some decay'd crare of his own.

Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

The owner of every ship, vessel, or crayer.

Stat. 2 Jac. I. ch. 32.

CRA'VFISH. n. s. [See CRAWFISH.] The river lobster.

The cure of the muriatick and armoniack saltiness requires slimy meats; as snails, tortoises, jellies, and crawfishes. Floyer.

CRA'YON. n. s. [crayon, French.]

1. A kind of pencil; a roll of paste to draw lines with.

Let no day pass over you without drawing a line: that is to say, without working, without giving some strokes of the pencil or the crayon. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. A drawing or design done with a pencil or crayon.

To CRAZE. v. a. [ecraser, French, to break to pieces.]

1. To break; to crush; to weaken.

In this consideration the answer of Calvin unto Farrel, concerning the children of Popish parents, doth seem crazed.

Hooker.

Relent, sweet Hernia; and, Lysander, yield
Thy crazed title to my certain right. Shakspeare.

'Till length of years

And sedentary numbness craze my limbs. Milton, P. L.

Then through the fiery pillar, and the cloud,
God looking forth, will trouble all his host,

And craze their chariot-wheels. Milton, P. L.

2. To powder.

The tin ore passeth to the crazing mill, which, between two grinding stones, bruiseeth it to a fine sand. Carew's Survey.

3. To crack the brain; to impair the intellect.

I lov'd him, friend,

No father his son dearer, true, to tell thee,
That grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Wickedness is a kind of voluntary frenzy, and a chosen distraction; and every sinner does wilder and more extravagant things than any man can do that is crazed and out of his wits, only with this sad difference, that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

CRA'ZEDNESS. † n. s. [from crazed.] Decrepitude; brokenness; diminution of intellect.

The nature, as of men that have sick bodies, so likewise of the people in the crazedness of their minds, possessed with dislike and discontentment at things present, is to imagine that any thing would help them. Hooker.

Four several persons were scarcely able to hold him; and this at first without any distemper in his head, or crazedness in his brain. Italywell, Melampr. p. 78.

CRA'ZINESS. † n. s. [from crazy.]

1. State of being crazy; imbecility; weakness.

Touching other places, she may be said to hold them as one should do a wolf by the ears; nor will I speak now of the craziness of her title to many of them. Howell, Vocal Forest.

There is no craziness we feel, that is not a record of God's having been offended by our nature; and every little ache about us is a thorn or briar springing out of that offensive earth, whereof we are composed.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 196.

2. Weakness of intellect.

CRAZY. † adj. [ecrazé, Fr.]

1. Broken; decrepit.

Come, my lord,

We will bestow you in some better place;

Fitter for sickness and for crazy age. *Shakespeare, Hen. VI.*When people are crazy and in disorder, it is natural for them to groan. L'Estrange.

2. Broken witted; shattered in the intellect.

I have heard for certain of a minister of no small print and repute among the people, who took great offence at the great sleeves of a lady's new-fashioned gown, calling them anti-christian, ungodly, strange apparel, and such as the Lord was displeased with; yet within one year this good man's wife was in the same fashion, without any scandal to her supercilious husband; so crazy are some men's judgements, and so easy their censures, as to matters of scandal!

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 144.

The queen of night, whose large command

Rules all the sea and half the land,

And over moist and crazy brains,In high spring-tides, at midnight reigns. Hudibras.

3. Weak; feeble; shattered; ailing; out of order: as it is still used in some places.

Ant. How is't, signior?

Mer. Crazy a little.Mar. What ail you, sir? *Benion, and Fl. The Coxcomb.*Physick can but mend our crazy state,Patch an old building, not a new create. *Dryden.*Were it possible that the near approaches of eternity, whether by a mature age, a crazy constitution, or a violent sickness, should amaze so many, had they truly considered.*Wake.*CREAGHT. n. s. [an Irish word.]In these fast-places, they kept their creaghts, or herds of cattle, living by the milk of the cow, without husbandry or tillage.*Davies on Ireland.*To CREAGHT. *v. n.*It was made penal to the English to permit the Irish to creaght or graze upon their lands, or present them to ecclesiastical benefices. *Davies on Ireland.*To CREAK. † v. n. [corrupted from crack, Dr. Johnson says. But it is from the old Fr. verb, criquer.]1. To make a harsh protracted noise; "to creak as a shoe." *Sherwood.*No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. *Dryden.*2. It is sometimes used of animals; as, to creak or cry like a gander, Barret; to creak like a crane, Sherwood. [Welsh, crech, a scream.]The creaking locusts with my voice conspire,
They fry'd with heat, and I with fierce desire. *Dryden.*CRE'AKING. \ n. s.* [from the verb.] • A harsh noise.Let not the creaking of shoes, nor the rustling of silks, betray thy poor heart to women. *Shakespeare, K. Lear.*Their black and neat slipper, or stertup, with the creaking, allureth young men.*A. Willet on the Marriage of the C. Palatine, &c. 1612, p. 47.*With what patience doth this man bear the loud scoldings of his Xantippe, making no more of them than the creaking of a cart-wheel!
*Bp. Hall, of Contentation, § 16.*CREAM. † n. s. [Goth. kreima, Lat. cremor.]

1. The unctuous or oily part of milk, which, when it is cold, floats on the top, and is changed by the agitation of the churn into butter: the flower of milk.

It is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. *Shakespeare.*I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.Cream is matured and made to rise speedily, by putting in cold water; which, as it seemeth, getteth down the whey.*Bacon, Nat. Hist.*How the drudging goblin swet,
To earn his cream bowl duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn.*Milton, L'All.*Let four various creams encircled be
With swelling fruit, just savish'd from the tree.*King.*Milk, standing some time, naturally separates into an oily liquor called cream, and a thinner, blue, and more ponderous liquor called skimmed milk. *Arbuthnot on Aliments.*2. It is used for the best part of any thing; as, the cream of a jest.This is the fourth degree of love, and the cream and top of love, whilst we are on this side heaven.*Henry's Sermon. (1658), p. 94.*To CREAM. † v. n. [from the noun.] To gather on the surface. This figurative expression from milk is, in the north of England, applied to beer, which is said to creamy, i. e. to froth or mantle.There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle, like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit.*Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.*Not any wrinkle creaming in their faces.*Chapman, Bussy D'Ambois.*To CREAM. † v. n. [from the noun.]1. To skim off the cream.Have you some creamed or curded milk?Wodroephe, Fr. Gr. (1623), p. 211.

2. To take the flower and quintessence of any thing.

Such a man, truly wise, creams off nature, leaving the sour, and the dregs, for philosophy and reason to lap up.*Swift, Tale of a Tub, sect. 9.*CREAM-FACED. adj. [cream and fac'd.] Pale; coward-looking.Thou cream-fac'd lown,
Where got'st thou that goose-look. *Shakespeare, Macbeth.*CRE'AMY. † adj. [from cream.] Full of cream; having the nature of cream.Your creamy words but cozen.*Beaumont, and Fl. Queen of Corinth.*There each trim lass, that skims the milky store,
To the swart tribes their creamy bowls allots.*Collins, Popular Superstitions of the Highlands.*CRE'ANCE. n. s. [French.] Is, in falconry, a fine small line, fastened to a hawk's leash when she is first lured.CREASE. † n. s. [from creta, Latin, chalk, Skinner; to which Dr. Johnson assents. In the old chronicle of Robert of Gloucester, creysede occurs in the sense of crossed; whence Hearne conjectures our creased to be derived. See also Kelham in Exercises, old Fr. crossed. But I must not omit the 1. ut. kroesen, to curl or wreath.] A mark made by doubling any thing.Men of great parts are unfortunate in business, because they go out of the common road: I once desired lord Bolingbroke to observe, that the clerks used an ivory knife, with a blunt edge, to divide paper, which cut it even, only requiring a strong hand; whereas a sharp penknife would go out of the crease, and disfigure the paper. *Swift.*To CREASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark any thing by doubling it, so as to leave the impression.To CREATE. v. a. [creo, Lat.]

A. To form out of nothing; to cause to exist.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth.Genesis, i. 1.

We having but imperfect ideas of the operations of our minds, and much imperfecter yet of the operations of God, run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

2. To produce; to cause; to be the occasion of.

Now is the time of help: your eye in Scotland.
Would create soldiers, and make women fight. Shakspeare.
His abilities were prone to create in him great confidence of undertakings, and this was like enough to betray him to great errors and many enemies. K. Charles.

They eclipse the clearest truths, by difficulties of their own creating, or no man could miss his way to heaven for want of light. Decay of Piety.

None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were. Roscommon.

Must I new bars to my own joy create,
Refuse myself what I had forc'd from fate? Dryden, Aureng.
Long abstinence is troublesome to acid constitutions, by the uneasiness it creates in the stomach. Arbuthnot.

3. To beget.

4. To invest with any new character.

Arise my knights of the battle: I create you
Companions to our person, and will fit you
With dignities becoming your estates. Shakspeare, Cymb.

5. To give any new qualities: to put any thing in a new state.

The best British undertaker had but a proportion of three thousand acres for himself, with power to create a manor, and hold a court-baron. Davies on Ireland.

CREA'TE.* adj. [from the verb.]

1. Begotten.

And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate. Shakspeare.

2. Composed: made up.

[They] do serve you
With hearts create of duty and of zeal. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

CREA'TION.* n. s. [from create.]

1. The act of creating or conferring existence.

Consider the immensity of the Divine Love, expressed in all the emanations of his providence; in his creation, in his conservation of us. Bp. Taylor.

2. The act of investing with new qualities or character: as, the creation of peers.

3. The things created; the universe.

As subjects then, the whole creation came;
And from their natures Adam them did name. Denham.

Such was the saint, who shone with ev'ry grace,
Reflecting, Moses like, his master's face:
God saw his image lively was express'd,
And his own work as his creation bless'd. Dryden, Fub.

Nor could the tender new creation bear
Th' excessive heats or coldness of the year. Dryden, Virg.

In days of yore, no matter where or when,
Before the low creation swarm'd with men.
The whole creation preys upon itself: Every living creature is inhabited. Parnell.

4. Any thing produced, or caused.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

CREA'TIVE.* adj. [from create.]

1. Having the power to create.

But come, ye generous minds, in whose wide thought,
Of all his works, creative beauty burns
With warmest beam. Thomson, Spring.

2. Exerting the act of creation.

To trace the outgoings of the ancient of days in the first instance, and of his creative power, is a research too great for mortal enquiry. South.

CREA'TOR.* n. s. [creator, Lat.] The Being that bestows existence.

Open, ye heavens, your living doors; let in
The great Creator, from his work return'd Magnificent; his six days work, a world. Milton, P. L.

When you lie down, close your eyes with a short prayer, commit yourself into the hands of your faithful Creator; and when you have done, trust him with yourself, as you must do when you are dying. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

CREA'TRESS.* n. s. [from the Lat. creatrix.] She who makes, or creates, any thing.

Him long she so with shadows entertain'd,
As her creatress had in charge to her ordain'd.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 10.

CREA'TURE.* n. s. [creatura, low Lat.]

1. A being not self-existent, but created by the supreme power.

Were these persons idolaters for the worship they did not give to the Creator, or for the worship they did give to his creatures. Stillingfleet.

2. Any thing created.

God's first creature was light. Bacon, New Atlantis.
Imperfect the world, and all the creatures in it, must be acknowledged in many respects to be. Tillotson.

3. An animal, not human.

The queen pretended satisfaction of her knowledge only
In killing creatures vile, as cats and dogs. Shakspeare, Cymb.

4. A general term for man.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self-sake,
She wander'd had from one to other end. Spenser, F. Q.
Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo Tantalus, I here tormented lye. Spenser, F. Q.
Though he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;
Is this a holiday? Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

He would into the stew,
And from the common creatures pluck a dove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

6. A word of petty tenderness.

And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand;
Cry, Oh sweet creature, and then kiss me hard. Shakspeare.
Ah, cruel creature, whom dost thou despise?
The gods, to live in woods, have left the skies. Dryden, Virg.
Some young creatures have learnt their letters and syllables by having them pasted upon little tablets. Watts.

7. A person who owes his rise or his fortune to another.

He sent to colonel Massey to send him men, which he, being a creature of Essex's, refused. Clarendon.
The duke's creature he desired to be esteemed. Clarendon.
Great princes thus, when favourites they raise,
To justify their grace, their creatures praise. Dryden.
The design was discovered by a person whom every body knew to be the creature of a certain great man. Swift.

CREA'TURELY.* adj. [from creature.] Having the qualities of a creature.

The several parts of relatives, or creaturely infinities, may have finite proportions to one another. Chayne, Phil. Prin.

CREA'TURESHIP.* n. s. [from creature.] The state of a creature.

The laws of our creature-ship and dependance do necessarily and indispensably subject us to God as our Creator; and we can as soon cease to be creatures, as become independent. Dr. Cave, Serm. pmo.

CREBRITUDE. n. s. [from creber, frequent, Lat.] Frequentness. Dict.

CREBROUS. adj. [from creber, Latin.] Frequent. Dict.

CRE'DENCE. n. s. [from credo, Lat. credence, Norman Fr.]

1. Belief; credit.

Ne let it seem, that credence this exceeds;
For he that made the same was known right well,
To have done much more admirable deeds;
It Merlin was. Spenser, F. Q.

Love and wisdom,
Approv'd so to your majesty, may plead
For ample credence. Shakespeare.

They did not only underhand give out that this was the true earl, but the friar, finding some credence in the people, took boldness in the pulpit to declare as much. Bacon.

2. That which gives a claim to credit or belief.

After they had delivered to the king their letters of credence, they were led to a chamber richly furnished. Hayward.

To CRE'DENCE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To believe. Not now in use.

In credencing his tales. Skelton, Poems, p. 154.

CRE'DENDA. n. s. [Latin.] Things to be believed; articles of faith; distinguished in theology from agenda, or practical duties.

These were the great articles and credenda of Christianity, that so much startled the world. South.

CRÉ'DENT. adj. [credens, Lat.]

1. Believing; easy of belief.

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

2. Having credit; not to be questioned. Less proper.

My authority bears a credent bulk,
That no particular scandal once can touch,
But it confounds the breather. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

CRÉ'DENTIAL. † n. s. [from credens, Latin.] That which gives a title to credit; the warrant upon which belief or authority is claimed.

A few persons of an odious and despised country could not have filled the world with believers, had they not shown undoubted credentials from the Divine Person who sent them on such a message. Addison on the Christian Religion.

They reject the strongest credentials, and will accept of lesser. Leslie, Short Method with the Jews.

CRÉDIBILITY. n. s. [from credibile.] Claim to credit; possibility of obtaining belief; probability.

The first of those opinions I shall shew to be altogether incredible, and the latter to have all the credibility and evidence of which a thing of that nature is capable. Tillotson.

Calculate the several degrees of credibility and conviction, by which the one evidence surpasseth the other. Afterbury.

CRÉDIBLE. † adj. [credibilis, Latin.] Worthy of credit; deserving of belief; having a just claim to belief.

A tale written in the Bible,
Whiche must needs be credible. Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

The ground of credit is the credibility of things credited; and things are made credible, either by the known condition and quality of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth in themselves. Hooker.

None can demonstrate to me, that there is such an island as Jamaica; yet, upon the testimony of credible persons, I am free from doubt. Tillotson.

CRÉDIBLENESS. n. s. [from credibile.] Credibility; worthiness of belief; just claim to belief.

The credibility of a good part of these narratives has been confirmed to me by a practiser of physick. Boyle.

CRÉDIBLY. adv. [from credibile.] In a manner that claims belief.

This, with the loss of so few of the English as is scarce credible, being, as hath been rather confidently than credibly reported, but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

CREDIT. n. s. [credit, Fr.]

1. Belief of; faith yielded to another.

When the people heard these words, they gave no credit unto them, nor received them. Mac. x. 46.

I may give credit to reports. Addison, Spect.

Some secret truths, from learned pride conceal'd,
To roads alone and children are reveal'd.

What though no credit doubting wits may give,
The fair and innocent shall still believe. Pope.

2. Honour; reputation.

I published, because I was told I might please such as it was a credit to please. Pope.

3. Esteem; good opinion.

There is no decaying merchant, or inveterate beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Bacon.

His learning, though a poet said it.

Before a play, would lose no credit. Swift.

Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave,
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave. Pope, Hor.

4. Faith; testimony; that which procures belief.

We are contented to take this upon your credit, and to think it may be. Hooker.

The things which we properly believe, be only such as are received upon the credit of divine testimony. Hooker.

The author would have done well to have left so great a paradox only to the credit of a single assertion. Locke.

5. Trust reposed; with regard to property: correlative to debt.

Credit is nothing but the expectation of money, within some limited time. Locke.

6. Promise given.

They have never thought of violating the public credit, or of alienating the revenues to other uses than to what they have been thus assigned. Addison.

7. Influence; power not compulsive; interest.

She employed his uttermost credit to relieve us, which was as great as a beloved son with a mother. Sidney.

They sent him likewise a copy of their supplication to the king, and desired him to use his credit that a treaty might be entered into. Clarendon.

Having credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, he troubled not himself for that of other men. Clarendon.

To CRÉDIT. v. a. [credit, Lat.]

1. To believe.

Now I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do persuade. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

we need no more than to consider it. Glanville.

2. To procure credit or honour to any thing.

May here her monument stand so,
To credit this rude age; and show

To future times, that even we
Some patterns did of virtue see. Waller.

It was not upon design to credit the papers, nor to comply with a society so much above flattery. Glanville.

At present you credit the church as much by your government, as you did the school formerly by your wit. South.

3. To trust; to confide in.

4. To admit as a debtor.

CRÉDIBLE. adj. [from credit.]

1. Reputable; above contempt.

He settled him in a good creditable way of living, having procured him by his interest one of the best places of the country. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

2. Honourable; estimable.

The contemplation of things, that do not serve to promote our happiness, is but a more sycious sort of idleness, a more pardonable and creditable kind of ignorance. Tillotson.

CREDITABLENESS. n. s. [from creditable.] Reputation; estimation.

Among all these spares, there is none more entangling than the creditableness and repute of customary vices.

CREDITABLY. adv. [from creditable.] Reputably; without disgrace.

Many will chuse rather to neglect their duty safely and creditably, than to get a broken pate in the church's service, only to be rewarded with that which will break their hearts too.

He who would act the destroyer, if he would do it effectually, should put on the reformer; and he who would be creditably, and successfully, a villain, let him go whining, praying, and preaching to his work; let him knock his breast, and his hollow heart, and pretend to lie in the dust before God, before he can be able to lay others there! South, Sermon v. 218.

CREDITOR. n. s. [creditor, Latin.]

1. He to whom a debt is owed; he that gives credit: correlative to debtor.

There came divers of Anthopio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot chuse but break. Shakspeare.
I am so used to consider myself as creditor and debtor, that I often state my accounts after the same manner, with regard to heaven and my own soul. Addison, Spect.

No man of honour, as that word is usually understood, did ever pretend that his honour obliged him to be chaste or temperate, to pay his creditors, to be useful to his country, to do good to mankind, to endeavour to be wise or learned, to regard his word, his promise, or his oath. Swift.

2. One who credits, one who believes. Not used.

Many sought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Shakspeare.

The poor Plangus, being subject to that only disadvantage of honest hearts, credulity, was persuaded by him. Sidney.

The prejudice of credulity may, in some measure, be cured by learning to set a high value on truth. Watts, Logick.

CREDULOUS. adj. [credulus, Latin.] Apt to believe; unsuspecting; easily deceived.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Who now enjoys thee credulous all gold,
Who always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flattery gales
Unmindful, hapless he,
T' whom thou mtry'd seem'st fair. Milton.

CREDULOUSLY.* adv. [from credulous.] In an unsuspecting manner.

If you shall observe a man pretend to believe plain impossibilities, and not only supinely and credulously swallow them, but, &c. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

CREDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from credulous.] Aptness to believe; credulity.

CREED. n. s. [Sax. creba, from the Lat. credo, the first word of the Apostles' Creed. "As the first word Crede, I believe, giveth a denomination to the whole confession of faith, from thence commonly called the Creed; so is the same word to be imagined not to stand only where it is expressed, but to be carried through the whole body of the confession." Pearson on the Creed.]

1. A form of words in which the articles of faith are comprehended.

The larger and fuller view of this foundation is set down in the creeds of the church. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Will they, who decry creeds and creedmakers, say that one who writes a treatise of morality ought not to make in it any collection of moral precepts? Fiddes's Sermons.

2. Any solemn profession of principles or opinion.

"For me, my lords,
'I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed.' Shakspeare.

The grottos cool, with shady poplars crown'd,
And creeping vines on arbours weav'd around. Dryden.

3. To move forward without bounds or leaps; as insects.

4. To move slowly and feebly.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Why should a man
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

He who creeps after plain, dull, common sense, is safe from committing absurdities; but can never reach the excellence of wit. Dryden, Tyrant. Love.

5. To move secretly and clandestinely.

I'll creep up into the chimney.—
—There they always use to discharge their birding-pieces: creep into the kiln-hole. Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

Whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shakspeare.

"Of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women. 2 Tim. iii. 6.

Thou makest darkness, and it is night wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth. Psal. civ. 20.

Now and then a work or two has crept in to keep his first design in countenance. Alford.

6. To move timorously without soaring, or venturing into dangers.

Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when it is evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.

We here took a little boat, to creep along the sea-shore as far as Genoa. Addison on Italy.

7. To come unexpected; to steal forward unheard and unseen.

By those gifts of nature and fortune he creeps, nay he flies, into the favour of poor silly women. Sidney.

It seems, the marriage of his brother's wife

Has crept too near his conscience.

— No, his conscience

Has crept too near another lady. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Necessity enforced them, after they grew full of people, to spread themselves, and creep out of Shinar, or Babylonia.

None pretends to know from how remote corners of those frozen mountains, some of those fierce nations first crept out. Raleigh, Hist. Temple.

Or Bactrian Sophi, from the horns
Of Turkish crescent, leaves all waste beyond
The realm of Aladule, in his retreat. Milton, P. L.
Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.
And two fair crescents of translucent horn,
The brows of all their young increase adorn. Pope, Odyssey.
To CRESCENT. v. a. [from the adj.] To form into a crescent. The old heraldick adjective crescented,
i. e. having a crescent, has long been unsupported by any usage of the verb. The verb is of recent date.

A dark wood crescents more than half the lawn.

Seward's Letters, vi. 195.

CRESCIVE. adv. [from cresco, Latin.] Increasing; growing.

So the prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the ver-of wildness, which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer-grass, fastest by night,
Unseen, yet crescive in his faculty. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

CRESS. † n. s. [perhaps from cresco, it being a quick grower, nasturtium, Lat. But the word is also the Sax. ceppre, pl. ceppen.] An herb.

Its flower consists of four leaves, placed in form of a cross: the point arises from the centre of the flower-cup, and becomes a roundish smooth fruit, divided into two cells, and furnished with seeds generally smooth. Miller.

His court with nettles and with cresses stor'd,
With soups unbought, and sallads, blest his board. Pope.

CRÉSSET. † n. s. [croissete, Fr. because beacons had crosses anciently on their tops.]

1. A great light set upon a beacon, light-house, or watch-tower. Hammer. They still raise armies in Scotland by carrying about the fire-cross.

At my nativity
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning crescets. Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

From the arched roof
Pendant by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps, and blazing crescets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. Milton, P. L. ii. 728.

2. Simply, a lamp, or torch.

The courtie Palatine of Rhene was conveyed by crescet light, and torch light, to Sir T. Gresham's house. Holinshead, Chron.

other a bell. B. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

CREST. † n. s. [cræsta, Sax. crista, Lat.]

1. The plume of feathers, or tuft of horse-hair, on the top of the ancient helmet; the helmet.

His valour, shewn upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Ev'n in the bosom of our adversaries. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

2. The comb of a cock; whence Milton calls him crested.

Others, on ground
Walk'd firm; the crested cock, whose clarion sounds
The silent hours. Milton, P. L.

3. The ornament of the helmet in heraldry.

Of what esteem crests were, in the time of king Edward the third's reign, may appear by his giving an eagle, which he himself had formerly born, for a crest to William Montacute, earl of Salisbury. Camden, Remains.

The horn;
It was a crest ere thou wast born:
Thy father's father wore it. Shakespeare, As you like it.

4. Any tuft or ornament on the head; as some which the poets assign to serpents.

Their crests divide,
And, tow'ring o'er his head, in triumph ride. Dryden, Virgil.

5. Pride; spirit; fire; courage; loftiness of mien.

When horses should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests.

Shakespeare.

To CREST. \ v. a.* [from the noun.]

1. To mark with long streaks, in allusion to the streaming hair of the crest.

Like as the shining skie in summer's night,
What time the days with scorching heat abound,
Is crested all with lines of fire light,
That it prodigious seems in common people's sight.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 13.

2. To serve as a crest for, in allusion to a crest of heraldry.

His legs bestrid the ocean; his rear'd arm crested the world.
Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

CRESTED. † adj. [from crest; cristatus, Latin.]

1. Adorned with a plume or crest.

The bold Ascalonite,
Fled from his lion ramp; old warriors turn'd
Their plated backs under his heel;
Or, groveling, soil'd their crested helmets in the dust.

Milton, S. A. 141.

At this, for new replies he did not stay;
But he'd his crested helu, and strode away. Dryden.

2. Wearing a comb.

The crested bird shall by experience know,
Jove made not him his master-piece below. Dryden.

CREST-FALLEN. adj. [crest and fall.] Dejected; sunk; dispirited; cowed; heartless; spiritless.

I warrant you, they would whip me with their fine wits, till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

They prolate their words in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if they were still complaining and crest-fallen. Howel.

CRESTLESS. adj. [from crest.] Not dignified with coat-armour; not of any eminent family.

His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England,
Sprung crestless yeomen from so deep a root.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI. P. I.

CRETA/CEOUS. adj. [creta, chalk, Lat.]

with a cretick. Bentley, Diss. upon Phalaris.

CRÉVICE. † n. s. [old Fr. crevis, "ruptures, crevasses," Lacombe; from crever, Fr. crepare, Lat. to burst. Chaucer writes it crevasse.] A crack; a cleft;
a narrow opening.

I pried me though the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand he had his two sons heads

Titus Andronicus.

I thought it no breach of good manners to peep at a crevice, and look in at people so well employed. Spectator, No. 266.

To CRÉVICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To crack; to flaw.

So laid they are more apt in swagging down to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and so to crevice the wall. Wotton's Architecture.

CRÉVIS, or CRÉVISSE. \ n. s.* [Fr. ecrevisse.] Cray-fish; the word is yet used in our northern counties.

And there are abundance of more perfect creatures also, which depositing their old skins or shells, or some such emblem of their age, are at certain seasons brought back again to a youthful state, and such are snakes, lizards, crabs, crevices, eagles, king-fishers, and such like.

Smith's Portraiture of Old Age, p. 265.

CREW.† n. s. [probably from creud, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. He might have added cread, a crowd. But it is perhaps from the old Fr. creue, or creue, "growth, accession, augmentation, &c." Cotgrave.]

1. A company of people associated for any purpose; as, gallant crew, for troops. Cherry chase.

There is noble crew,

Of lords and ladies stood on every side.

Which with their presence fair, the place much beautify'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. The company of a ship.

The anchors drop'd, his crew the vessels moor. Dryden, Æn.

3. It is now generally used in a bad sense.

One of the banish'd crew,

I fear, hath ventur'd from the deep, to raise

New troubles.

Milton, P. L.

He, with a crew, whom like ambition joins

With him, or under him to tyrannize,

Marching from Eden towards the West, shall find

The plain.

Milton, P. L.

The last was he, whose thunder Jew

The Titan race, a rebel crew.

Addison.

CREW.† [the preterite of crow, Sax. creop. Mr. Pegge inclines to Bailey's opinion, that crew is the bastard preterite, and crow'd the right heir; yet this preterite is warranted by the Saxon.]

Immediately the cock crew. St. Matt. xxvi. 74.

It was about to speak, when the cock crew. Shakespeare, Ham.

CREWEL.† n. s. [klerwel, Dutch.] Yarn twisted and wound on a knot or ball.

Walton's Angler.

CRIB.† n. s. [crijbb, Sax. crib, German.]

1. The rack or manger of a stable.

Let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Look into all the cribs and troughs of brutish diet, and see whether you can find such a beast as a glutton.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

The steer and lion at one crib shall meet,

And harmless serpents lick the pilgrim's feet.

Pope.

2. The stall or cabin of an ox.

Where no oxen are, the crib is clean.

P. ov. xiv. 4.

3. A small habitation; a cottage.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,

Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,

Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great? Shakespeare.

To CRIB. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow habitation; to confine; to cage.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,

To saucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

CRIBBAGE.† n. s. A game at cards.

For cardes, the philologie of them is not for an essay. A man's fancy would be summed up in cribbage; gleeke requires a vigilant memory, &c. John Hall, Horæ Vac. (1646), p. 150.

CRIBBLE.† n. s. [old Fr. crible, from cribrum, Lat. "De puiser l'eau en un crible," French Prov. Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. 1623, p. 486.]

1. A corn sieve.

Dict.

2. Coarse meal, a degree better than bran. [old Fr. criblure.]

VOL. I.

CRIBBLE Bread.* Bread made of coarse meal. Hyloet.

The gardens, with digging for novelties, are turned over and over, because we will not eat common cribble bread.

Transl. of Bullinger's Sermons, p. 243.

To CRIBBLE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To sift or cribble through a sieve. Littellton, in V. Cerno.

CRIBRATION. n. s. [cribro, Lat.] The act of sifting or separating by a sieve.

CRICK.† n. s.

1. [from crizzo, Italian.] The noise of a door.

2. [from crijce, Saxon, a stake.] A painful stiffness in the neck.

When the weight of her years has almost brought both ends together; 'tis nothing, she'll tell ye, but a crick she has got in her back: and though she might recover her youth again, by confessing her age, she'll never acknowledge it.

De'estrage, Tr. of Queredo's Visions.

3. A corruption of cricket; we say, "as merry as a cricket." "She'll talk sometimes; 'tis the maddest cricket!" Beaumont and Fl. This I take to be the origin of our phrase "as merry as a grig," which Dr. Johnson and others derive from Græcus, a Greek! See CRICK. Crick is used for cricket in the old song of Take thy old Clook about thee.

A merry cricke, and boon companion.

Sheldon, Mus. of Antichrist, (1616), p. 323.

CRICKET. n. s. [crikel, from kriken, to make a noise, Dutch.]

1. An insect that squeaks or clurps about ovens and fireplaces.

Did'st thou not hear a noise.—

—I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry. Shakespeare.

Far from all resort of mirth,

Save the cricket on the hearth.

Milton, Il. Pens.

The solemn death-watch tick'd the hour she died,

And shrilling cricket in the chimney cry'd.

Gay.

2. [from crijce, Saxon, stick.] A sport, at which the contenders drive a ball with sticks or bats in opposition to each other.

The judge, to dance, his brother serjeant call,

The senator at cricket urge the ball.

Pope.

3. [from kriechen, Germ. to creep.] A low seat or stool.

CRICKETING Apple. n. s. A small species of apple.

CRILR.† n. s. [old Fr. crier.] The officer whose business is to cry or make proclamation.

He openeth his mouth like a crier.

Ecclesi. xx. 15.

The criers command silence, and the whole multitude present stand in a suspense.

The crier calls aloud

Our old nobility of Trojan blood,

Who gape among the crowd for their precarious food. Dryden

CRIME.† n. s. [crimen, Lat. crime, French.]

1. An act contrary to right; an offence; a great fault; an act of wickedness.

High God be witness, 'at I guiltless am,

But if yourself, sir knight, ye guilty find,

Or wrapped be in loves of former dame,

With crime do not it cover, but disclose the same.

Spenser, F. Q.

Undergo with me one guilt, one crime,

Of tasting.

Like a punishment

As in their crime.

Milton, P. L.

No crime was thine, if 'tis no crime to love.

Pope.

2. Reproach. A Latinism.

The tree of life, the crime of our first father's fall.

Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 46.

I rue

That error now, which is become my crime,

And thou the accuser.

Milton, P. L. ix. 1180.

CRIMEFUL.† adj. [from crime and full.] Wicked;

criminal; faulty in a high degree; contrary to duty; contrary to virtue.

You proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful and so capital in nature Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Devise extremes beyond extremity,
To make him curse this crimeful night. Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

CRIMELESS. adj. [from crime.] Innocent; without crime.

My foes could not procure me any scathe,
So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

CRIMINAL. † adj. [old Fr. adj. criminel.]

1. Faulty; contrary to right; contrary to duty; contrary to law.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,
That clear she died from blemish criminal. Spenser, F. Q.
What we approve in our friend, we can hardly be induced to think criminal in ourselves. Rogers.

2. Guilty; tainted with crime; not innocent.

The neglect of any of the relative duties, renders us criminal in the sight of God. Rogers

3. Not civil: as, a criminal prosecution: the criminal law.

The discussion and admeasurement of crimes, and their punishment, forms in every country the code of criminal law. Blackstone.

CRIMINAL. † n. s. [old Fr. criminel, n. s.]

1. A man accused.

Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
Curb your ill-manner'd zeal. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. A man guilty of a crime.

All three persons, that had held chief place of authority in their countries; all three ruined, not by war, or by any other disaster, but by justice and sentence, as delinquents and criminals. Bacon.

CRIMINALITY. \ n. s.* [Fr. criminalité.] A criminal action, case, or cause. Cotgrave.

If this perseverance in wrong, often appertains to individuals, it much more frequently appertains to public bodies; in them
the disgrace of error, or even the criminality of conduct, belongs to so many, that no one is ashamed of the part which belongs to himself. Rp. Llandaff, (Watson,) Charge, (1805,) p. 28.

CRIMINALLY. adv. [from criminal.] Not innocently;
wickedly; guiltily.

As our thoughts extend to all subjects, they may be crimi- nally employed on all. Rogers.

CRIMINALNESS. n. s. [from criminal.] Guiltiness; want of innocence.

To CRIMINATE. \ v. a.* [Lat. crimino.] To accuse; to charge with crime.

And as for our church liturgy it is now criminated by many as idolatrous, because in some things it resembleth the mass, though not in the main.

Ed. North. Light in the Way to Paradise, (1682,) p. 29.

CRIMINATION. † n. s. [crimination, old Fr. crimination, Latin.] The act of accusing; accusation; arraignment;
charge.

If this horrible crimination were cast upon thee, O Saviour, in whom the prince of this world found nothing, what wonder is it, if we thy sinful servants be branded on all sides with evil tongues. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

The story of that calumnious crimination, devised by the Arian faction against Athanasius, as a charge of no small impiety. Mede, Diatr. p. 67.

The detractor, who accuses the saints with false criminations.
Bp. Patrick, Answer to the Touchstone, &c. p. 169.

Nor was there a single heathen, who confessed a deity, exempt from this crimination of holding the truth in unrighteousness. Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 275.

CRIMINATORY. † adj. [Fr. criminatoire.] Relating to accusation; accusing; censorious.

CRIMINOUS. † adj. [criminosus, Lat. crimineux, Fr.]
Wicked; iniquitous; enormously guilty.

They are led manacled after him as less criminous.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

The punishment that belongs to that great and criminous guilt, is the forfeiture of his right and claim to all mercies, which are made over to him by Christ. Hammond

CRIMINOUSLY. adv. [from criminous.] Enormously; very wickedly.

Some particular duties of piety and charity, which were most criminosly omitted before. Hammond

CRIMINOUSNESS. n. s. [from criminous.] Wickedness; guilt; crime.

I could never be convinced of any such criminousness in him, as willingly to expose his life to the stroke of justice and malice of his enemies. King Charles

CRIMOSIN. † adj. [cremosino, Italian, commonly written as it is pronounced, crimson.] A species of red colour, tinged with blue.

Upon her head a cremosin coronet.

With damask roses and daffodilies set,

Bay-leaves between,

And primroses green!

Embellish the white violet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

CRIMP. † adj. [from crumble or crimble, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, from the Sax. verb acpynman, fricare.]

1. Friable; brittle: easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

Now the fowler warn'd

By these good omens, with swift early steps,

Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades.

Philips.

2. Not consistent; not forcible. A low cant word.

The evidence is crimp; the witnesses swear backwards and forwards, and contradict themselves; and his tenants stick by him. Arbutnot, John Bull.

CRIMP. \ n. s.*

1. A game at cards formerly.

Laugh, and keep company, at gleeck or crimp.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

2. In modern times, one who is employed to enlist soldiers, but not in the usual manner by beat of drum; one who unfairly decoys others into military service; a low word.

To CRIMP. \ v. a.* [Sax. ge-cpynmr, crimped, cala-mistratus, Lye.]

1. To curl or crisp the hair. See To CALAMISTRATE.

2. In modern cookery, applied to cod-fish; as, to crimp cod, is to cut the fish, while very fresh, into slices, and to throw it into pump water and salt.
This renders it crisp.

To CRIMPLE. † v. a. [from rample, crumple, crimple, Dr. Johnson says; but this sonorous triad must give way to the Teut. krimpen, to contract.] To contract; to corrugate: to cause to shrink or contract.

He passed the cantery through them, and accordingly crim-
pled them up. Wiseman's Surgery.

CRIMSON. † n. s. [Ital. cremosino, and chermisi;
Fr. cramoisi; low Lat. kermesinus; from the Arabic kermes; a little worm which is bred in the berry of the coccus, made use of to dye this colour.]

1. Red, somewhat darkened with blue.

As crimson seems to be little else than a very deep red, with an eye of blue; so some kinds of red seem to be little else than heightened yellow. Boyle on Colours.

2. Red in general.

Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy, in her naked seeing self.

Shakespeare Hen. V.

CRIMSON. \ adj.* [The adjective is not noticed by

Dr. Johnson, though among the examples to the substantive, in his dictionary, several of them present the adjective.]

1. Red somewhat darkened with blue.
Why does the soil endure
The blushing poppy with a crimson hue? Prior.
2. Red, in general.

Beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lip, and in thy cheeks Shakspeare.
The crimson stream stain'd his arms around. Dryden.
TO CRIMSON. v. a. [from the noun.] To dye with crimson.

Pardon me, Julius. — Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart:
Here didst thou fall; and here thy hunters stand
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe. Shakspeare.
CRINCUM. n. s. [a cant word.] A cramp; a contraction; whimsy.

For jealousy is but a kind
Of clasp and crincum of the mind. Hudibras.

CRINGE. v. n. s. [from the verb.] Bow; servile civility.

These travellers, in lieu of the ore of Ophir wherewith they should come home richly freighted, may be said to make their return in apes and owls, in a cargazon of complements and cringes, or some huge monstrous periwigs, which is the golden fleece they bring over with them.

Howell, Inst. For. Trav. p. 183.

By this time Appetite is at the table,
And with a lowly cringe presents the wine
To his old master Gustus.

Brewer's Com. of Language, (1657) v. 3.

Let me be grateful; but let far from me
Be fawning cringe, and false dissembling looks. Philips.

TO CRINGE. v. a. [kriechen, German. Probably from the Iceland. kringe, to turn round.] To draw together; to contract.

Whip him, fellows,
'Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

TO CRINGE. v. n. [kriechen, German.] To bow; to pay court with bows; to fawn; to flatter.

One so superstitiously devout, that he is ready to cringe and crouch to every stock! Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 61.
Flatterers have the flexor muscles so strong, that they are always howing and cringing. Afnulthnot.

The cringing knave, who seeks a place
Without success, thus tells his case. Smelt.

CRINGER.* n. s. [from cringe, Germ. kriechen, a cringing fellow.] One who is always bowing and cringing for some mean purpose: a flatterer.

CRINIGEROUS. adj. [criniger, Lat.] Hairy; overgrown with hair. Dict.

CRINITE.* adj. [Lat. crinitus.] Having the appearance of hair; streaming.

How comate, crinite, caudate stars are form'd.
Fairfax, Tass. xiv. 44.

TO CRINKLE. v. n. [krinkelen, Dutch.] To go in and out; to run in flexures: diminutive of crankle.

Unless some sweetness at the bottom lie,
Who cares for all the crinkling of the pie? King's Cookery.

TO CRINKLE. v. a. To mould into inequalities.

Her face all bowsey,
Comely crinkled,
Wondrously wrinkled. Skelton's Poems, p. 124.

CRINKLE. v. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkle; a sinuosity.

It is the crinkles in this glass making objects appear double.
Search's Freewill, Foreknowledge, &c. p. 114.

CRINOSE. adj. [from crinis, Lat.] Hairy. Dict.

CRINOSITY. n. s. [from crinose.] Hairiness. Dict.

CRIPPLE. n. s. [crÿpel, Sax. krepel, Dutch; cripl, Welsh. See CREEPLE. Mr. Whiter refers this word to "grapple, which means to confine by seizing or holding any thing; and the idea of confinement or hindrance brings us at once to the term cripple." Etym. Magn. p. 132. Junius has strangely deduced it from the Gr. κραπαλη, a crapula. It is true that κραπαλη are those who totter, no doubt from κραπαλη; i. e. those who have drunk too much, and cannot stand. But the origin of our word cripple, is clearly from creep, to move slowly.] A lame man; one that has lost or never enjoyed the use of his limbs. Donne, with great appearance of propriety writes it creep, from creep.

He, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear:
Some tardy cripple had the countermand,
That came too lag to see him buried. Shakspeare.
I am a cripple in my limbs; but what decays are in my mind, the reader must determine. Dryden.

Among the rest, there was a lame cripple from his birth, whom Paul commanded to stand upright on his feet. Bentley.
See the blind beggar dancing, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

CRIPPLE.* adj. Lame.

And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

TO CRIPPLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To lame; to make lame; to deprive of the use of limbs.

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners! Shakspeare, Tom. of Athens.
Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryden.
Tettyx, the dancing-master, threw himself from the rock, but was crippled in the fall. Addison.

CRIPPLENESS. n. s. [from cripple.] Lameness; privation of the limbs. Dict.

CRISIS. n. s. [κρίσις.]

1. The point in which the disease kills, or changes to the better; the decisive moment when sentence is passed.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints, they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis authorize their skill. Dryden.

2. The point of time at which any affair comes to the height.

This hour's the very crisis of your fate;
Your good or ill, your infamy or fame,
And all the colour of your life depends
On this important now. Dryden, Spem. Fr.

The undertaking, which I am now laying down, entered upon in the very crisis of the late rebellion, who was the duty of every Briton to contribute his utmost assistance to the government, in a manner suitable to his station and abilities. Addison, Freeholder.

CRISP. adj. [crÿp, Sax. crispus, Lat.]

1. Curled.
Bulls are more crisp on the forehead than cows. Bacon.
The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired. Hale.
2. Indented; winding; or alluding to the little wave or curl, as it is commonly called, which the gentlest wind occasions on the surface of waters. See the 3d sense of TO CRISP.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the wandering brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever-haunted looks,
Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land
Answer your summons; Juno does command. Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors soundeth better; which may be by reason not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp, and so more porous and hollow. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Short; brisk.

Friar, you must leave

Your neat crisp claret, and fall to your cyder

A while.

Bedum, and Fl. Bloody Brother.

To CRISP.† n. a. [cipprian, to crisp; Lat crispo.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

Severn,—affrighted with their bloody looks,

Rar, fearfully among the trembling reeds,

And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

Young I'd have him too,

Yet a man, with crisp'd hair,

Cast in thousand snares and rings,

For love's fingers, and his rings.

B. Jonson.

Spirit of wine is not only unfit for inflammations in general, but also crisps up the vessels of the dura mater and brain, and sometimes produces a gangrene. Sharp's Surg.

2. To twist; to curl; as was the manner of decorating gardens in Milton's time; who also speaks of "curling a grove with ringlets quaint," Arcades, ver. 46.; and represents Leisure "taking his pleasure in trim gardens," Il Pens. ver. 50. Herrick has "the crisp'd yew," that is, trimmed, shaped. Hesperides, 1648. p. 337.

Along the crisp'd shades and bowers,

Revels the spruce and jocund spring.

Milton, Com.

3. To indent; to make to wave.

From that sapphire fount the crisp'd brooks,

Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,

Ran nectar, visiting each plant.

Milton, P. L.

To CRISP.* v. n. To curl.

Their hair crisps, but grows longer than the Africans.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 337.

CRISPATION. n. s. [from crisp.]

1. The act of curling.

2. The state of being curled.

Some differ in the hair and feathers, both in the quantity, crispation, and colours of them; as he lions are hirsute, and have great manes; the she's are smooth, like cats. Bacon.

CRISPING-IRON.* n. s. [from crisp.] A curling iron.

For never powder, nor the crispings-aron

Shall touch these dangling locks.

Beaumont, and Fl. Queen of Corinth.

CRISPING-PIN. n. s. [from crisp.] A curling iron.

The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crispings-pins.

Isaiah, iii. 22.

CRISPI'SULCANT. adj. [crispisulcans, Lat.] Waved, or undulating; as lightning is represented. D'ct.

CRISPNESS. n. s. [from crisp.] Curledness.

CRISPY. adj. [from crisp.] Curled.

So are those crispy snaky locks, oft known

To be the dowry of a second head.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

CRISS-CROSS-ROW.* [a corruption of Christ-Cross-Row, which see. See also CROSS-ROW.] Alphabet; beginning.

She is not come to the criss-cross-row of her perfection yet.

Southerne.

CRITERION.† n. s. [κριτήριον, Gr. formerly written critrium; the plural is criteria.] A mark by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Of the diseases of the mind there is no critrium, no canon, no rule.

Donne, Letters, p. 288.

Mutual agreement and endearments was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary critrion

Glanville, Scepis.

We have here a sure infallible critrion, by which every man may discover and find out, the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart.

South.

By what critrion do ye eat, d'ye think,

If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink? Pope, Hor.

CRITICK.† n. s. [old Fr. critiquer; modern, critiqueur, critique; from the Gr. κριτικός.] The first definition, which Dr. Johnson has given of this word, presents not the earliest usage of it. The last is probably the earliest; under which, however, he has sought no authority more ancient than that of Swift. Cowel, as Mr. Malone also thinks, is perhaps the first author who uses critick in the sense of Dr. Johnson's primary definition; though Cotgrave, I must also observe, renders critiqueur, "a criticke, a controller, or corrector of other men's works or doings." Shakspeare had long before used it in the sense of a cynick or censor.

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature: a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

The word certiorari is used diverse times in the Digest of the Civil Law; but our later criticks think it so barbarous, that they suspect it to be rather foisted in by Tribonian.

Cowel, In an Interpreter, 1607.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks.

Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,

For 'tis but half a judge's task to know.

Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge. But see CRITIQUE.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,

And make each day a critick on the last.

Pope.

3. A snarler; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others' names deface,

And fix their own with labour in their place.

Pope.

Where an author has many beauties consistent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature.

Watts.

4. A censorer; a man apt to find fault.

My adder's sense

To critick and to flatterer stopp'd are. Shakspeare, Sonn. 122.

Do not give advantage

To stubborn criticks, apt, without a theme,

For depravation.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cr.

My chief design, next to seeing you, is to be a severe critick on you and your neighbour.

Swift.

CRITICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,

But critick learning flourish'd most in France.

Pope.

CRITICK.† n. s. Critical examination. See CRITIQUE.

To CRITICK.† v. n. [from critick.] To play the critick; to criticise.

Nay, if you begin to critick once, we shall never have done.

Brewer's Com. of Lingua, (1657,) v. 9.

They do but trace over the paths that have been beaten by the antients; or comment, critick, and flourish upon them.

Temple.

CRITICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgement of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not.

Holder.

Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs.

Stillingfleet.

2. Relating to criticism: as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault; censorious.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

—O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;

For I am nothing, if not critical. Shakespeare, Othello.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by sevens, and the critical or decretory days to be dependent on that number.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

5. Decisive; nice.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point the critical minute, on which every good work so much depends.

Sprat, Serm.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside.

Swift.

6. Producing a crisis or change of the disease: as, a critical sweat.

CRITICALLY. adv. [from critical.]

1. In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

Difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern good writers from bad, and a proper stile from a corrupt one.

Dryden.

These shells which are digged up out of the earth, several hundreds of which I now keep by me, have been nicely and critically examined by very many learned men.

Woodward.

2. At the exact point of time.

CRITICALNESS. n. s. [from critical.] Exactness; accuracy; nicety; incidence at a particular point of time.

To CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently.

Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character,

Without all this at once before your eyes,

Cavil you may, but never criticise.

Pope.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these accounts, as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his expences.

Locke.

To CRITICISE. v. a. [from critick.] To censure; to pass judgement upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of charity to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person.

Addison.

CRITICISER. n. s. [from criticise.] One who makes or writes remarks.

Others took upon them to be pert criticisers and saucy correctors of the original before them.

Blackwell, Sac. Class. (1731.) ii. 265.

CRITICISM. n. s. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well.

Dryden, State of Innocence, Pref.

2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick who has not shewn, even in the stile of his criticisms, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue.

Addison.

CRITIQUE. n. s. [Fr. See CRITICK. This word is now generally so written, to distinguish it from critick, the person; and accordingly some of Dr. Johnson's examples give it critique; though so lately, as when Pope wrote, no distinction of the spelling or accent obtained; and it may be doubted, whether Dr. Johnson has not, in his third definition of the person, by applying to it what probably belongs to the thing, overlooked this confusion.]

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine.

Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the poesy of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal.

Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logic and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with.

Locke.

What is every year of a wise man's life, but a censure and critique on the past?

Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd,

My verse gave ampler lessons to mankind.

Pope.

To CROAK. v. n. [spacecran, Saxon; croacre, Italian; crocitare, Latin. Dr. Johnson says. But it is perhaps adopted from the old Fr. croâquer.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,

And querulous frogs in muddy pools do croak.

May, Virgil.

So when Jove's block descended from on high,

Lo! thunder to its bottom shook the bog,

And the hoarse nation croak'd.

Pope.

Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British Christians' food;

And France robs marshes of the croaking brood.

Gay.

2. To caw or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself is hoarse,

That *croak*s the fatal entrance of Duncan

Under my battlements.

Shakespeare.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,

By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow.

Dryden.

At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, looks exceeding solemn and venerable.

Addison.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to still the croaking of their own bellies.

Locke.

CROAK. n. s. [croâc, old Fr. the croaking of ravens, &c. V. Cotgrave.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skins the river's watry face,

The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race.

Dryden.

Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?

No matter which, I'll to the grave and hide me.

Lee.

CROAKER. n. s. [from croak.] A word, in modern times, used in contempt for those who are perpetually descanting on dangers and difficulties, and making unfair comparisons of the present with the past.

CROATS. n. s. In military history, irregular troops, formed of natives of Croatia.

The manners, government, religion, language, and custom of the Croats, are similar to those of Sclavonia and Transylvania: they are excellent irregular troops, and as such are famed in modern history, under the name of Pandours, and various other designations.

Guthrie, Transylvania.

CROCEOUS. adj. [croceus, Lat.] Consisting of saffron; like saffron.

Dict.

CROCRATION. n. s. [crocratio, Lat.] The croaking of frogs or ravens.

Dict.

CROCK. n. s. [spacecr, Sax. krok, kruick, Gael. kruik, Dutch; kruka, Goth. Chaucer writes our word croûke.]

1. A cup; any vessel made of earth.

Therefore the vulgar diti about him focke,—

Like foolish flies unto an hony crocke.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 33.

2. A little stool. [perhaps a corruption of cricket; of which see the third sense.]

I bid her come out of the croud, and seated her upon a little crook at my left hand.

Tatler, No. 116.

3. The black or soot of a pot, or a kettle, or chimney-stock, is called crook.

Ray, South and East Country Words.

CRO'CKERY. † n. s. [epochpæpe, Sax.] Earthen ware.

CRO'CODILE. † n. s. [from κρόκος, 'saffron, and δελων, fearing, Dr. Johnson says. In this opinion he is supported by other writers; among whom is Fuller, who quaintly observes, that "crocodiles' tears are never true, save when he is forced where saffron grows, knowing himself to be all poison, and it to be all antidote; whence he is called the saffron-fearer." We have, however, no authentick proofs of this fear. Others derive it from κρόκος, the shore, and δελων, fearing; as if fearing snarcs there laid for it. V. Morin, Diet. Etym. Fr. & Gr. But this is not probable; as the animal perpetually frequents the banks or shore, instead of being afraid of them. Sir T. Herbert, the traveller, speaking of the alligator, or crocodile, says, "the name we give is a crocco colore, or per-antiphrasin quod erocum timeat." Trav. p. 364. See ALLIGATOR.] An amphibious voracious animal, in shape resembling a lizard, and found in Egypt and the Indies. It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced; except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. It runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, near the water-side, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may hatch them. Culmet.

Gloster's show

Begüiles him; as the mournful crocodile,
With sorrow, snares relenting passengers.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep.

Dryden.

Enticing crocodiles, whose tears are death;

Syrens, that murder with enchanting breath. Granville.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called stinx, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile. It lives by land and water; has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tale. It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with brown, and of a gold colour upon the back. It always remains little. Trevour.

CRO'CODILINE. adj. [crocodilinus, Lat.] Like a crocodile. Dict.

CRO'CUS. † n. s. [old Fr. crocus, Lat. crocus. "Ce mot vient du Peruan." Lacombe.] A flower.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every-grace,

Throws out the snow-drop and the crocus first. Thomson.

CROFT. n. s. [croft, Saxon.] A little close joining to a house, that is used for corn or pasture.

This have I learn'd,

Tending my flocks hard by, i' th' hilly crofts

That brow this bottom glade.

Milton, Com.

CROISA'DE. † n. s. [croisade, Fr. from croix, a cross.]
CROISA'DO. } A holy war; a war carried on against infidels under the banner of the cross.

If envy make thy labours prove thy loss,
No marvel if a croisade wear the cross.

Vernes Pref. to Fuller's Holy War.

See that he take the name of Urban, because a pope of that name did first institute the croisado; and, as with an holy trumpet, did stir up the voyage for the Holy Land. Bacon.

CRO'ISES. † n. s. [old Fr. crois for croix; old Eng. crois, Ch.]

1. Pilgrims who carry a cross.
2. Soldiers who fight against infidels under the banner of the cross.

The conquests of the croises, extending over Palestine and a part of Syria, had been erected into a sovereignty under the name of the kingdom of Jerusalem.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. iii. 7.

CRO'MLECHE.* [In British antiquity, from the Welsh cro, crooked, and llech, a flat stone, according to Richards; from the Heb. cavem-luach, a devoted stone or altar.] Huge, broad, flat stones, raised upon other stones set up on end for that purpose. They are common in Anglesey, and are supposed to be the remains of altars. See Rowland's Monu Antiqua Restaurata.

CRONE. n. s. [pone, Sax. according to Verstegan; kronie, Dut. according to Skinner.]

1. An old ewe.
Fresh herrings plenty Michel brings,
With fatted crones, and such old things. Tusser.
2. In contempt, an old woman.

Take up the bastard,

Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.
The crone being in bed with him on the wedding-night, and finding his aversion, endeavours to win his affection by reason.

Dryden.

CRO'NET. n. s. The hair which grows over the top of an horse's hoof.

CRO'NICAL, or CRO'NYCAL.* adj. The same as ACRONYCAL, which see.

Cronychall, or acronychall, that is, vespertine, or at the beginning of night. More, Notes on Psych. p. 425.

Why far remov'd with so vast distancy,
When they [the planets] go down with setting cronical.

More, Song of the Soul, iii. iii. 72.

CRO'NY. n. s. [a cant word.] An old acquaintance; a companion of long standing.

So when the Scots, your constant cronies,

Th' e-pousers of your cause and monies. Hudibras.

To oblige your crony Swift,

Swift.

Bring our dame a new year's gift.

Strange, an astrologer should die,

Without one wonder in the sky!

Not one of all his crony stars,

To pay their duty at his herse? Seyt.

CRGOK. † n. s. [Celt. crok; Su. Goth. krok; Fr. croc. See To CROOK.]

1. Any crooked or bent instrument.
2. A sheephook.

I sing the man who Judah's sceptre bore,
In that right hand which held the crook before. Cowley.

He left his crook, he left his flocks,

And wand'ring through the lonely rocks,

He nourish'd endless woe. Prior.

3. Any thing bent; a meander.

There fall those saphire-colour'd brooks,

Which, conduit like, with curious crooks,

Sweet islands make in that sweet land. Sidney.

4. An artifice; a trick; "by hook or crook," i. e. by bending a thing to one's purpose.

I neither therein have foil nor trip; but, for all your braggies, hookes, and crookes, you have such a fall, as you shall never be able to stand upright again in this matter.

Alp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner.

5. A gibbet. [Fr. croce, from the Lat. crux. So Hulot uses cross for a gibbet.]

Terpine—

She caus'd to be attacht and forthwith led

Unto the crooks—

Where he full shamefully was hang'd by the head.

Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 18.

To CROOK.† v. a. [Su. Goth. kroka, to crook; Fr. crocher, or croquer.]

1. To bend; to turn into a hook.

Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No! let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp;

And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,

Where thrift may follow fawning.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

It is highly probable, that this disease proceeds from a redundant acidity, because vinegar will soften and crook tender bones.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To bend, figuratively; to thwart.

Conscience confoundeth the reason, it crooketh the will, and enquieteth the soule.

Bp. Fisher's Ps. p. 11, 12.

3. To pervert from rectitude; to divert from the original end.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state.

Baron.

To CROOK.† v. n. To be bent; to have a curvature.

Their shoes and pattens are snouted and piked more than a finger long, crooking upward.

Camden.

The eagle might live much longer, but that her upper beak crooketh in time over the lower, and so she faileth not with age but hunger.

Gregory's Posthumus, (1650,) p. 207.

CROOKBACK. n. s. [crook and bark.] A term of reproach for a man that has gibbous shoulders.

Ay, crookback, here I stand to answer thee,

Or art he the proudest of thy sort.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

CROOKBACKED. adj. Having bent shoulders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,

As negro for a swan; a crookback'd lass

Be call'd Lapone.

Dryden, Juvenal.

There are millions of truths that a man is not, or may not think himself concerned to know; as whether our king Richard III. was crookback'd or no.

Locke.

CROOK-KNEED.† adj. [crook and knee.] Having crooked knees.

Crook-kneed and dewlap'd like Thersalian bulls.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

CROOK-SHOULDERED.† adj. [crook and shoulder.] Having bent shoulders; crook-backed.

It is reported of Plato, that being crook-shouldered, his scholars, who so much admired him, would endeavour to be like him, by belustering out their garments on that side, that they might appear crooked too.

South, Sermon. vii. 190.

CROOKED.† adj. [properly the participle of the verb crook.] Formerly written croked, like its northern root. See To CROOK.

1. Bent; not strait; curve.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill, which intercepts the sight of the sounding body; and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes as through straight ones.

Newton, Opt.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the obliquity of a crooked one.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Winding; oblique; anfractuous.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where-ever he has the footsteps of others to follow.

Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, on every hedge,

The glow-worm lights his gem.

Thompson, Summer.

3. Perverse; untoward; without rectitude of mind; given to obliquity of conduct.

They have corrupted themselves: they are a perverse and crooked generation.

Deut. xxxii. 5.

Hence, heap of wrath; foul, indigested lump!

As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

We were not born crooked; we learned those windings and turnings of the serpent.

South.

CROOKEDLY. adv. [from crooked.]

1. Not in a strait line.

2. Untowardly; not compliantly.

If we walk perversely with God, he will walk crookedly towards us.

Bp. Taylor, Rules of Living Holy.

CROOKEDNESS.† n. s. [from crook.] Deviation from straightness; curvity; the state of being inflected; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth even thereby discern what is crooked; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness.

Hooker.

As he that useth an upright shoe, may correct the obliquity or crookedness by wearing it on the other side; we may overcome passions if we will.

Barton, Anat. of Mel. p. 288.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness or spot, any uncleanness or deformity, in their sacrifice.

Bp. Taylor, Worthy Communicant.

3. Lewdness; depravity; perverseness.

Barret.

To CROOKEN.† v. a. [from crook.] To make crooked.

Homilies, B. ii. Against Idolatry.

CROP.† n. s. [crop, Sax. krop, Teut. kropp, Goth.]

The crop of a bird; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnyvorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw.

Rap.

But flatt'ring there, they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own,

By their high croops and corns gizzards known.

Dryden.

CROPPED. adj. [crop and full.] Satiated; with a full belly.

He stretch'd out all the chimney's length,

Basks at the fire his hairy strength;

And, crop-full, out of doors he dings,

Ere the first cock his matin rings.

Milton, L. Alt.

CROP-SICK.† adj. [crop and sick.] Sick with repletion; sick with excess and debauchery.

This daughter that I tell you of, is fall'n

A little crop-sick, with the dangerous surfeit

She took of your affection.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer tamed.

Strange olds! where crop-sick drunkards must engage

A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage.

Tate, Juvenal.

CROP-SICKNESS.† n. s. [crop and sickness.] Sickness arising from repletion.

Every visitant is become a physician; one that scarce knew any but crop-sickness, cryeth, No such apothecary's shop as the sack-shop!

Whitlock, Memoirs of the King. p. 126.

CROP.† n. s. [crop, Saxon.]

1. The highest part or end of any thing; as the head of a tree, the ear of corn.

En pied both in every holt and hethie

The centre croppes.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

2. The harvest; the corn gathered off a field; the product of the field.

And this of all my harvest hope I have,

Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care.

Spenser, Past.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,

Corn, wine, and oil.

Milton, P. L.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,

That sacred stream, should never water weeds,

Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow.

Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

C R O

Guiltless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryden, Fables.
To CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing; to mow; to reap; to lop.

Crop'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat, one half is cut away. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He, upon whose side
The fewest roses are crop'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one,
and will plant it upon an high mountain. Ezek. xvii. 22.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeth upon their beards. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme! Dryden, Virgil.

2. To gather before it falls.

O fruit divine!
Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropp'd.
Milton, P. I.

Age, like ripe apples, on earth's bosom drops:
While force our youth, like fruits, untimely crops. Denham.

The parent's hopes, and crops the growing boys. Creech.
To CROP. v. n. To yield harvest.

Royal wench!

He plough'd her, and she cropt. Shakespeare, Anth. and Cleop.

CROP-EAR.* n. s. [crop and ear.] A horse, having his ears cropped.

What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?
Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

I'll lay a thousand pound upon my crop-ear.
Bacon, and Fl. Sensual Lady.

CROP-EARED.* Having the ears cropped.
A crop-eared scrivener, this. B. Jonson, Masques.

CROPPER. n. s. [from crop.] A kind of pigeon with a large crop.

There be tame and wild pigeons; and of tame there be croppers, carriers, rants. Walton's Angler.

CRO'SIER. n. s. [croiser, Fr. from croix, a cross.]
The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them;
as in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their croisiers, did almost try it with the king's sword. Bacon.

Grievances there were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government; wherein some say the croisier, some say the distaff, was too busy. Howell, England's Tears.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The croisier wielded, and the mitre wore. Dryden.

CRO'SLET.† n. s. [croissetet, French.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,
Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,
That in his armour bare a croset red. Spenser, F. Q. i. vi. 36.

Here an upfash'd diamond croset lay,
To which soft lovers' adoration pay. Gay, Fan.

2. It seems to be printed in the following passage, by mistake for corselet.

The croset some, and some the cuishes mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden, Æn.

3. A crucible. [old Fr. croisueil.] Bullokar.
The coles right anon weren yset,
And this canon took out a crosetlet.

CROSS.† n. s. [Welsh, croes; bas Bret. croas, croes;
croix, Fr. croce, Ital. crux, Latin.]

1. One strait body laid at right angles over another; the instrument by which the Saviour of the world suffered death.

They make a little cross of a quill, long ways of that part of the quill which hath the pith, and crossways of that piece of the quill without pith. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

You are first to consider seriously the infinite love of your Saviour, who offered himself for you as a sacrifice upon the cross. Bp. Taylor, Guide to the Penitent.

2. The ensign of the Christian religion.

And on his brest a bloodie cross he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lorde,
For whose sweete sake that glorious badge he bore.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 2
We do sign him with the sign of the cross, in token that hereafter he shall not be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and manfully to fight under his banner against sin, the world, and the devil, and to continue Christ's faithful soldier and servant unto his life's end.

Ministration of Publick Baptism.
Her holy faith and Christian cross oppos'd Against the Saxon gods. Rowe.

3. A monument with a cross upon it to excite devotion; such as were anciently set in marketplaces.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays. Shakespeare.

4. A line drawn through another.
And some against all idolizing
The cross in shop-books. Hudibras, iii. ii.

5. Any thing that thwarts or obstructs; misfortune; hindrance; vexation; opposition; misadventure;
trial of patience.

Wishing unto me many crosses and mischances in my love, whenever I should love. Sidney.

Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross. Shakespeare.

Heaven prepares good men with crosses; but no ill can happen to a good man. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

A great estate hath great crosses, and a mean fortune hath but small ones. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

6. Money so called, because marked with a cross.
He was said to make soldiers spring up out of the very earth to follow him, though he had not a cross to pay them salary.
Howell, Vocal Forest.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carry'd back nor brought one cross. Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect boys play; cross, I win, and pile, you lose; or, what's yours is mine, and what's mine is my own. Swift.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges, so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the cross; wherein the king made a sheriff: so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the cross. Sir J. Davies.

CROSS.† adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Transverse; falling a thwart something else.

Whatsoever penumbra should be made in the circles by the cross refraction of the second prism, that penumbra would be conspicuous in the right lines which touch those circles. Newton.

The sun, in that space of time, by his annual contrary motion eastward, will be advanced near a degree of the ecliptick, cross to the Motion of the equator. Holder on Time.

The ships must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of cross ones. Bentley.

2. Oblique; lateral.

Was this a face,
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick cross lightning?
The cross like lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven.
The harms of thwarting thunder blue,
Or what the cross dire-looking planet smites.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.
Milton, Arcades.

3. Adverse; opposite: often with to.

We're both love's captives; but with fate so cross,
One must be happy by the other's loss.
Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain.
It runs cross to the belief and apprehension of the rest of mankind; a difficulty, which a modest and good man is scarce able to encounter.
Dryden.
Atterbury.

4. Perverse; untractable.

When, through the cross circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience, then religion bids him quit it.
South.

5. Peevish; fretful; ill-humoured. [Welsh, croes, surly.]

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress?
All cross and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, must be shunned.
Taylor.
Tillotson.

6. Contrary; contradictory.

The mind brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with, and depends upon another; and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties and contradictions, that seemed to lie cross and uncouth, and to make the whole unintelligible.
South.

7. Contrary to wish; unfortunate.

We learn the great reasonableness of not only a contented, but also a thankful acquiescence in any condition, and under the *cross*est and severest passages of Providence.
I cannot, without some regret, behold the cross and unlucky issue of my design; for by my dislike of disputes, I am engaged in one.
South.
Glanville.

8. Interchanged.

Evarehus made a cross marriage also with Dorilaus's sister, and shortly left her with child of the famous Pyrocles.
Cross marriages, between the king's son and the archduke's daughter; and again, between the archduke's son and the king's daughter.
Sidney.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

Cross. *† prep.*1. Athwart; so as to intersect any thing; transversely.

The enemy had, in the woods before them, cut down great trees cross the ways, so that their horse could not possibly pass that way.
Knolles.

Between the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats of human kind;
And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve signs in beautiful order sway.
Dryden, Virg.

Cross his back, as in triumphant scorn,
The hope and pillar of the house was torn.
Dryden, Fables.

2. Over; from side to side.

I charge thee, waft me safely cross the channel.
Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.
A fox was taking a walk one night cross a village.
L'Estrange.

To Cross. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To lay one body, or draw one line, athwart another.

This forc'd the stubborn'st, for the cause,
To cross the cudgels to the laws;
That what by breaking them 't had gain'd,
By their support might be maintain'd.
The loxia, or cross-bill, whose bill is thick and strong, with the tips *cross*ing one another, with great readiness breaks open
VOL. I.

fir-cones, apples, and other fruit, to conte at their kernels; as if the crossing of the bill was designed for this service.

Derham, Physico-Theology.

I shall most carefully observe, not to cross over, or deface the copy of your papers for the future, and only to mark in the margin.

Pope.

A hunted hare treads back her pazes, and crosses and con-founds her former track.

Watts.

2. To sign with the cross.

Friars

Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exercise the beds, and cross the walls.
Dryden.

3. To cancel: as, to cross an article.

4. To pass over.

He conquered this proud Turk as far as the Hellespont, which he crossed, and made a visit to the Greek emperor at Constantinople.

Temple

We found the hero, for whose only sake
We sought the dark abodes, and cross'd the bitter lake.
Dryden.

5. To move laterally, obliquely, or a-thwart; not in opposition; not in the same line.

But he them spying, gan so turn a-side;
For fear, as seem'd, or for some feined loss;
More greedy they of news, fast towards him do cross.

Spenser, F. Q.

6. To thwart: to interpose obstruction; to embarrass; to obstruct; to hinder; to counteract.

Still do I cross this wretch, what so he taketh in hand.
Hooker.

The king no longer could endure
Thus to be cross'd in what he did intend.
Daniel.

He was so great an enemy to Digby and Colepeper, who were only present in debates of the war with the officers, that he crossed all they proposed.

Clarendon.

Bury'd in private, and so suddenly!
It crosses my design, which was t' allow
The rites of funeral fitting his degree.
Dryden.

Swell'd with our late successes on the foe,
Which France and Holland wanted pow'r to cross,
We urge an unseen fate.
Dryden.

The firm patriot there,
Though still by faction, vice, and fortune cross,
Shall find the generous labour was not lost.
Addison, Cato.

7. To counteract; to be inconsistent with.

Then their wills clash with their understandings, and their appetites cross their duty.
Locke.

8. To contravene; to hinder by authority; to countermand.

No governor is suffered to go on with any one course, but upon the least information he is either stopped and crossed, or other courses appointed him from hence.
It may make my case dangerous, to cross this in the smallest.
Spenser on Ireland.
Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

9. To contradict.

In all this there is not a syllable which any ways crosseth us.
Hooker.

It is certain, howsoever it cross the received opinion, that sounds may be created without air.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

10. To debar; to preclude.

From his loins no hopeful branch shall spring,
To cross me from the golden time I look for.
Shakespeare.

To Cross. v. n.

1. To lie a-thwart another thing.

2. To be inconsistent.

Men's actions do not always cross with reason.
Sidney.

by a defendant against the plaintiff.

To Cross-EXAMINE. v. a. [cross and examine.] To try the faith of evidence by captious questions of the contrary party.

If we may but cross-examine and interrogate their actions against their words, these will soon confess the invalidity of their solemnest confessions.
Decay of Piety.

The judges shall, as they think fit, interrogate or cross-examine the witnesses. Spectator.

CROSS-EXAMINATION.* n. s. [from cross and examination.] The act of nicely examining, by questions apparently captious, the faith of evidence in a court of justice.

CROSS-STAFF. n. s. [from cross and staff.] An instrument commonly called the forestaff, used by seamen to take the meridian altitude of the sun or stars. Harris.

CROSSARMED.* adj. [cross and armed.] Having the arms folded across; melancholy.

Yet neither will I vex your eyes to see
A sighing Ode, nor cross-arm'd Elegie. Donne, Poems, p. 182.

CROSSARROW.* n. s. [cross and arrow.] An arrow of a crossbow,

Why I was run twice through the body, and shot i' the head with a cross-arrow, and yet am well again. Beaumont and Fl. King and no King.

CROSSBARRED.* adj. [cross and bar.] Secured by transverse bars.

Substantial doors,
Cross-barr'd and bolted fast. Milton, P. L.

There is much difference of prisons: one is strait and close-locked, so far from admitting visitants, that it scarce allows the sun to look in at those cross-barred gates. Ep. Hall, Free Prisoner.

CROSSBILL.* n. s. [loxia.] A small bird, so called in English from its beak, which is hooked both ways, and has the points crossing one another.

CROSSBITE. n. s. [cross and bite.] A deception; a cheat.

The fox, that trusted to his address and manage, without so much as dreaming of a cross-bite from so silly an animal, fell himself into the pit that he had digged for another. L'Estrange.

To CROSSBITE. v. a. [from the noun.] To contravene by deception.

No rhetoric must be spent against cross-biting a country evidence, and frightening him out of his senses. Collier.

That many knotty points there are,
Which all discuss, but few can clear;
As nature slyly had thought fit,
For some by-ends, to cross-bite wit. Prior.

CROSSBOW. n. s. [cross and bow.] A missive weapon formed by placing a bow athwart a stock.

Gentlemen suffer their beasts to run wild in their woods and waste ground, where they are hunted and killed with cross-bows and pieces, in the manner of deer. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures. Shakespeare.
Testimony is like the shot of a long bow, which owes its efficacy to the force of the shooter; argument is like the shot of the cross-bow, equally forcible whether discharged by a giant or a dwarf. Boyle.

CROSSBOWER. n. s. [from crossbow.] A shooter with a cross-bow.

The French assisted themselves by land with the crossbowers of Genoa against the English. Raleigh, Essays.

To CROSSCUT.* v. a. [cross and cut.] To cut across; to intersect.

If the miners would be at the charge of cross-cutting the rise of this limestone-hill, they would discover the vein from whence this ore doth flow. Robinson, Nat. Hist. of Cumb. and Westm. 1709.

To CROSSFLOW.* v. n. [cross and flow.] To flow in a contrary direction.

The flood,
That staid her flight with his cross-flowing course. Milton, Comus.

CROSSGRAINED.* adj. [cross and grain.]

1. Having the fibres transverse or irregular.

If the stuff proves cross-grained in any part of its length, then you must turn your stuff to plane it the contrary way, so far as it runs cross-grained. Moxon

2. Perverse; troublesome; vexatious.

We find in sullen wits,
And cross-grain'd works of modern wits,
The wonder of the ignorant. Hudibras.

The spirit of contradiction, in a cross-grained woman, is incurable. L'Estrange.

She was none of your cross-grained, termagant, scolding jades, that one had as good be hang'd as live in the house with. Arbutnot, John Bull.

But wisdom, peevish and cross-grain'd,
Must be oppos'd, to be sustain'd. Prior.

CROSSL'GGED.* adj. [cross and leg.] Having the legs crossed.

Their table is usually the ground, covered with some slight sort of carpet, over which they spread a pintado cloth, and sit cross-legged as taylor. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 309.

In an arch of the south wall of the church, is cut in stone the pourtraiture of a knight lying cross-legged, in armour of mail. Ashmole, Berk. i. p. 16.

CROSSING.* n. s. [from cross.]

1. The act of signing with the cross.

How long might an indifferent eye look upon the comical and mimic actions in those your mysteries that should be sacred; your magical exorcisms, your clerical shaving, your uncleanly unctions, your crossings. Ep. Hall, Epist. 1.

What work do they make with their continual crossings upon every occasion. Trapp, Popery truly stated, ii. § xi.

2. Opposition.

From many men I do not bear these crossings.

CROSSLET.* See CROSL'ET.

CROSSLY.† adv. [from cross.]

1. Athwart; so as to intersect something else.

2. Oppositely; adversely; in opposition to.

Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. Shakespeare, K. Rich. II.

He that provides for this life, but takes no care for eternity, is wise for a moment, but a fool for ever; and acts as un-towardly, and crossly to the reason of things, as can be imagined. Tillotson.

3. Unfortunately.

If he have any child,
He shall be crossly match'd. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

CROSSNESS. n. s. [from cross.]

1. Transverseness; intersection.

2. Perverseness; peevishness.

The lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or aptness to oppose; but the deeper sort, to envy, or mere mischief. Bacon.

I deny nothing, fit to be granted, out of crossness or humour. K. Charles.

Who would have imagined, that the stiff crossness of a poor captive should ever have had the power to make Haman's seat so uneasy to him? L'Estrange.

They help us to forget the crossness of men and things, compose our cares and our passions, and lay our disappointments asleep. Collier of the Entertainment of Books.

CROSSPU'RPOSE.* n. s. [cross and purport.]

1. A conceit of conversation, proposing a difficulty to be solved; a kind of enigma or riddle.

The preceding sport—was probably the diversion of the age, and of the same stamp with our modern cross-purposes, or questions and commands. Whalley, Note on B. Jonson's Cynthia Revels.

2. A contradictory system.

C R O

To allow benefit of clergy, and to restrain the press, seems to have something of cross-purpose in it. Shaftesbury.

To CROSSQUESTION.* v. a. [cross and question.] To cross-examine.

They were so narrowly sifted, so craftily examined, and cross-questioned by the Jewish magistrates, &c. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 127.

CROSSROAD.* n. s. [cross and road.] A road across the country; not the direct high-road.

The carriages taking the road to Varennes, he went a cross-road to rejoin them. Guthrie, Geog. France.

CROSSROW. n. s. [cross and row.] Alphabet; so named because a cross is placed at the beginning, to shew that the end of learning is piety.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the crossrow plucks the letter G;
And says a wizard told him, that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

CROSSWAY.† n. s. [cross and way.] A small obscure path intersecting the chief road; or the place, where one road intersects another.

Neither shouldst thou have stood in the cross-way.
Obadiah, ver. 14.

Damn'd spirits all,
That in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakespeare.

The least unhappy persons do, in so fickle and so tempestuous a sea as this world, meet with many more either crosswinds or stormy gusts than prosperous gales. Boyle.

CROSSWORD. n. s. [from cross and word.]

It hath soft leaves, like the ladies bedstraw, from which it differs in the number of leaves, that are produced at every joint; which in this are only four, disposed in form of a cross. Miller.

CROTCH. n. s. [croc, Fr.] A hook or fork.

There is a tradition of a dilemma, that Moreton used to raise the benevolence to higher rates; and some called it his fork, and some his crotch. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Save elm, ash, and crab-tree for cart and for plough,
Save step for a stile of the crotch and the bough. Tusser.

CROTCHET.† n. s. [crochet, Fr.]

1. [In musick.] One of the notes or characters of time, equal to half a minim, and double a quaver. Chambers.

As a good harper, stricken far in years,
Into whose cunning hands the gout doth fall,
All his old crotchets in his brain he hears,
But on his harp plays ill, or not at all. Davies.

2. A support; a piece of wood fitted into another to support a building. [from crotch, a fork.]

A stately temple shoots within the skies,
The crotchets of their cot in columns rise. Dryden.

3. [In printing.] Hooks in which words are included [thus.]

4. A perverse conceit; an odd fancy.

[They] set all in an uproar by their new doctrines, paradoxes, figments, crotchets; make new divisions, &c.

CROUPA'DES. n. s. [from croup.] Higher leaps than those of corvets, that keep the fore and hind quarters of the horse in an equal height, so that he trusses his legs under his belly without jerking.

Farrier's Dict.

CROW. n. s. [cnap, Saxon; corvus.]

A large black bird that feeds upon the carcasses of beasts.

The crows and choughs, that wing the midway air,
Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shakespeare, K<sup>o</sup> Lear.

To crows he like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republic birds. Dryden.

2. To pluck a Crow, is to be industrious or contentious about that which is of no value.

If you dispute, we must even pluck a crow about it.
L'Estrange.

Resolve before we go,
That you and I must pull a crow. Hudibras.

3. A bar of iron, with a beak, used as a lever to force open doors; as the Latins called a hook corvus.

The crow is used as a lever to lift up the ends of great heavy timber, and then they thrust the claws between the ground and the timber; and laying some stuff behind the crow, they draw the other end of the shank backwards, and so raise the timber. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Against the gate employ your crows of iron. Southern

3. The vulgar; the populace.

He went not with the crowd to see a shrine,
But, by the way, with food divine. Dryden, Fables.

4. [From crwth, Welch.] A fiddle.

When he came, and nighed to the house, he herd a symfonye and a crowde. Wicliffe, St. Luke, xv.

Hark how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud
Their metry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor and the trembling crowd,
That well agree with sweet breach or jar. Spenser, Epithal.

Let them freely sing and dance, have their poppet-plays, hobby-horses, tubers, crowds, bag-pipes, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 273.

His fiddle is your proper purchase,
Won in the service of the churches;
And by your doom must be allow'd
To be, or be no more, a crowd. Hudibras.

To Crowd. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fill with confused multitudes.

A mind which is ever crowding its memory with things which it learns, may cramp the invention itself. Watts.

2. To press, close together.

The time misorder'd, doth in common sense
Crowds and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It seems probable, that the sea doth still grow narrower from age to age, and sinks more within its channel and the bowels of the earth, according as it can make its way into all those subterraneous cavities, and crowd the air out of them. Burnet, Theory.

As the mind itself is thought to take up no space, so its actions seem to require no time; but many of them seem to be crowded into an instant. Locke.

Then let us fill
This little interval, this pause of life,
With all the virtues we can crowd into it. Addison, Cato.

3. To incumber by multitudes.

How short is life! Why will vain courtiers toil,
And crowd a vainer monarch for a smile? Granville.

4. To Crowd Sail. [A sea phrase.] To spread wide the sails upon the yards.

To Crowd. v. n.

CRUP. \ n. s.* [old Fr. criup for croupe.] The buttocks.

See CROUP.

CRUP. \ adj.* [perhaps a corruption of crisp.] Short; brittle; as, a crup cake; and figuratively, short or snappish; as, a crup answer. Still used in Kent.

CRUPPER. † n. s. [from croupe, Fr. the buttocks of the horse. Formerly written crouper or crooper.] That part of the horseman's furniture that reaches from the saddle to the tail.

Clitophon had received such a blow, that he had lost the reins of his horse, with his head well nigh touching the crupper of the horse.

Sidney.

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

— Oh — sixpence, that I had a Wednesday last,

To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper.

Shakespeare.

Where pride is in the saddle, shame is in the crupper.

Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1655), p. 277.

Full oft the rivals met, and neither spar'd

His utmost force, and each forgot to ward:

The head of this was to the saddle bent,

The other backward to the crupper sent.

Dryden.

CRURAL. † adj. [Fr. crural, Cotgrave; from crus, cruris, Latin.] Belonging to the leg.

The sharpness of the teeth, and the strength of the crural muscles in lions and tygers, are the cause of the great and habitual immorality of those animals.

Arbutnot.

CRUSADE. † n. s. See CROISADE.

CRUSA'DO. † n. s. See CROISADE.

1. An expedition against the infidels.

Here the cowl'd zealots with united cries

Urg'd the crusade.

Shenstone, Ruin'd Abbey.

If you suppose it [the style of architecture] imported into that kingdom by those that returned from the crusades, we must of course set it down as an eastern invention.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

2. A coin stamped with a cross. [Portuguese.]

Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of crusadoes.

Shakespeare, Othello.

CRUSA'DER. \ n. s.* [from crusade. By our old writers called "a croisadoman."] One employed in a crusade.

They obtained commercial privileges and establishments of great consequence in the settlements, which the crusaders made in Palestine.

Robertson.

CRUSE. See CRUISE.

CRUSET. n. s. A goldsmith's melting pot. Phillips.

To CRUSH. † v. a. [ecraser, French, Dr. Johnson says. It is, perhaps, from the old French "Crusca, i. e. écraser," Lacombe. Croissir, to break. Langued. crouissi.]

1. To press between two opposite bodies; to squeeze; to force by compression.

The ass thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall.

Num. xxii. 25.

Cold causes rheums and defluxions from the head and some astringent plaisters crush out purulent matter.

Bacon.

He crushed treasure out of his subjects purses by forfeitures upon penal laws.

Bacon.

Bacchus that first, from out the purple grape,

Crush'd the sweet poison of misused wine.

Milton, Comus.

I fought and fell like one, but death deceiv'd me:
I wanted weight of feeble Moors upon me,
To crush my soul out. Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. To press with violence.

You speak him fur—
I don't extend him, sir: within himself
Crush him together, rather than unfold
His measure fully. Shakespeare, Cymb.

When loud winds from different quarters rush,
Vast clouds encount'ring, one another crush. Waller.

3. To overwhelm; to beat down.

Put in their hands thy bruising iron, of wrath,
That they may crush down, with a heavy fall,
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries!
Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Vain is the force of man, and heav'n's as vain,
To crush the pillar which the pole maintain. Dryden, Æn.

4. To subdue; to conquer beyond resistance.

They use them to plague their enemies, or to oppress and crush some of their own too stubborn freeholders.
Spenser on Ireland.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword. Shakespeare, Corol.

This act
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength, Defeating sin and death, his two main arms. Milton, P. L.

What can that man fear, who takes care to please a Being that is so able to crush all his adversaries? a being that can divert any misfortune from befalling him, or turn any such misfortune to his advantage? Addison, Guardian.

To CRUSH a Cup.† [this is the true expression, which Dr. Johnson without authority has given under "to crash;" and which Mr. Steevens has abundantly shewn to have been once common among low people. The same commentator observes, that in cant language we still say, "to crack a bottle."] To empty a cup; to drink together.

My master is the great rich Capulet; and, if you be not of the house of Montagues, I pray, come and crush a cup of wine. Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

To CRUSH, v. n. To be condensed; to come in a close body.

CRUSH, n. s. [from the verb.] A collision; the act of rushing together.

Thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the wars of elements,
The wrecks of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison, Cato.

CRUSHER,* n. s. [from crush.] A beater, or crusher of things flat; a violent breaker.

Cotgrave, in VV. Escacheur and Fiacasseur.

CRUST,† n. s. [Fr. croûte; Ital. crosta; Lat.
crusta. Perhaps allied to the Goth. krusts, a collision or crashing together.]

1. Any shell, or external coat, by which any body is enveloped.

I have known the statue of an emperor quite hid under a crust of dross. Addison on Medals.

2. An incrustation; collection of matter into a hard body.

Were the river a confusion of never so many different bodies, if they had been all actually dissolved, they would at least have formed one continued crust; as we see the scorium of metals always gathers into a solid piece. Addison on Italy.

The viscous crust stops the entry of the chyle into the lacteals. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The case of a pie made of meal, and baked.

He was never suffered to go abroad, for fear of catching cold: when he should have been hunting down a buck, he was by his mother's side, learning how to season it, or put it in crust. Addison, Spect.

4. The outer hard part of bread.

Th' impenetrable crust thy teeth defies,
And petrify'd with age, securely lies. Dryden, Juv.

5. A waste piece of bread.

'Tis liberal now; but when your turn is spo'd,
You'll wish me crust'd with every crust of bread. Dryden.
Men will do tricks, like dogs, for crusts. L'Estrange.

To CRUST, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To envelope; to cover with a hard case.

Why gave you me a monarch's soul,
And crusted it with base plebeian clay? Dryden.

Not is it improbable but that, in process of time, the whole surface of it may be crusted over, as the islands enlarge themselves, and the banks close in upon them. Addison on Italy.

And now their legs, and breasts, and bodies stood
Crusted with bark, and hard'ning into wood. Addison.

In some, who have run up to men without education, we may observe many great qualities darkened and eclipsed; their minds are crusted over, like diamonds in the rock. Folton.

2. To foul with concretions.

If your master hath many musty, or very foul and crusted bottles, let those be the first you truck at the auction. Swift.

To CRUST, v. n. To gather or contract a crust; to gain a hard covering.

I contented myself with a plaister upon the place that was burnt, which crusted and heal'd in very few days. Temple.

CRUSTACEOUS,† adj. [from crusta, Lat.] Shelly, with joints; not testaceous; not with one continued uninterrupted shell. Lobster is crustaceous, oyster testaceous.

It is true that there are some shells, such as those of lobsters, crabs, and others of crustaceous kinds, that are very rarely found at hand. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

That most witty conceit of Anaximander, that the first men and all animals were bred in some warm moisture; inclosed in crustaceous skins, as if they were various kinds of crabfish and lobsters! Bentley, Serm. iv.

CRUSTACEOUSNESS, n. s. [from crustaceous.] The quality of having jointed shells.

CRUSTATION,* n. s. [Lat. crustatus.] An adherent covering; an incrustation.

The crustation of the building was changed to what it now is. Pegge, Anecdotes of the Eng. Language.

CRUSTILY, adv. [from crusty.] Peevishly; snappishly; harshly.

CRUSTINESS, n. s. [from crusty.]

1. The quality of a crust.

2. Peevishness; moroseness.

CRUSTY,† adj. [from crust.]

1. Covered with a crust.

The wheat of Christ's Gospel once grew in Rome; but, it being cast into the river of contempt and neglect, sunk and settled in the bottom of oblivion, till with the mud and gravel of traditions and violent interpretations it increased to a huge heap; which, pressed softly by hypocrisy and pretences of devotion, made it as crusty as the hardness of heart or a seared conscience. Dr. Faron's Antiq. (1619), p. 421.

There be two sorts: either the fluid, moist, acedent, tender, and soft parts of the body; or the dry, solid, tensile, hard, and crusty parts of the body.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age p. 173.

For sense cannot arrive to th' inwardness

Of things, nor penetrate the crusty fence

Of constipated matter close compress.

More, Song of the Soul, i. l. 28.

The egg itself deserves our notice: its parts within, and its crusty coat without, are admirably well fitted for the business of incubation. Berham, Physico-Theology.

2. Sturdy; morose; snappish: a low word.

Maister Ruf, are ye so crusty?

Preston's Trag. of K. Cambises, (about 1561.)

CRUTCH,† n. s. [croccia, Ital. croce, Fr. cruche, Germ. epice, Sax.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch:
A sealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
On these new crutches let them learn to walk.
Dryden, Georg.

This fair defect, this helpless crippled wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life.
Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.
The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe. Pope, Messiah.

2. It is used for old age.

Beauty doth varnish age, as if new born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy. Shakspeare.
TO CRUTCH. v. a. [from crutch.] To support on crutches as a cripple.
I hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse. Dryden.
CRUX.* n. s. [Lat.] Figuratively, any thing that vexes or puzzles.
Dear dean, since in cruxes and puns you and I deal,
Pray, why is a woman a sieve and a riddle?
Dr. Sheridan to Swift.

CRUZA'DO.* n. s. [Portug.] See CRUSADO.

TO CRY. v. n. [Fr. crier; old Fr. crida; Span.

kriu, to exclaim, to cry out.]

1. To speak with vehemence and loudness.

Methought I heard a voice cry, sleep no more!
Macbeth, doth murder sleep! the innocent sleep. Shakspeare.
While his falling tears the stream supply'd,
Thus mourning to his mother goddess cry'd. Dryden, Virg.

2. To call importunately.

I cried, by reason of mine affliction, unto the Lord, and he heard me. Jon. ii. 2.

3. To talk eagerly or incessantly; to repeat continually.

They be idle; therefore they cry, saying let us go. Ec. v. 8.
To Thee Cherubin and Seraphim continually do cry, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of hosts. Te Deum.

4. To proclaim; to make publick.

Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem. Jer. ii. 2.

5. To exclaim.

Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then, my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakspeare.
What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate. Shakspeare, Coriol.
If dressing, mistressing, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee. Hebert.
Lysimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surprised at the contrivance, cried out that they were built with more than human art. Arbuthnot on Coins.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came criying hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawle and cry. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart; but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Is. lxx. 14.

When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men. Tillotson.

7. To squall, as an infant.

Should some god tell me, that should I be born,
And cry again, his offer I should scorn. Denham.
Thus, in a starry night, fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky.
He struggles first for breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Dryden, Feh.
The child certainly knows that the wormseed or mustard-seed it refuses, is not the apple or sugar it cries for. Locke.

8. To weep; to shed tears.

Hef who still weeps with spungy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries. Donne.

9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.

He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Psalm cxlvii. 9.
The beasts of the field cry also unto thee. Joel, i. 20.

10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.

He cried upon it at the meekest loss;
Trust me, I take him for the better dog. Shakspeare.

11. To proclaim as a hawk.

Why, you can have nothing there; there's nobody cries brooms. Beaum. and Fl. King and No King.

12. To call for vengeance or punishment.

The hire of the labourers, who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth.
St. James, v. 4.

Heinous offences are called criying sins. Louth on Jonah, i. 2.
TO CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.

She seeks, she sighs, but nowhere spies him:
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Crashaw

TO CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.

Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there's atheism in it. Watts.
Men of dissolute lives cry down religion because they would not be under the restraints of it. Tillotson.

2. To prohibit.

By all means cry down that unworthy course of late times, that they should pay money. Bacon to Villiers.

3. To overbear.

I'll to the king,
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

TO CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.

They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty. Job, xxv. 9.
With that Susanna cried with a loud voice, and the two elders cried out against her. Susanna, xxiv.

2. To complain loudly.

We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration. Atterbury.

3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon.

Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on us. Shakspeare.
Giddy censur
Will then cry out of Marcius; oh, if he Had borne the business. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard. Job, xix. 7.

Cry out upon the stars for doing
Ill offices, to cross their wooing. Hudibras Epiphanius cries out upon it as rank idolatry, and destructive to their souls who did it. Stillingfleet.

Tumult, sedition and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypothesis cry out against. Locke.
I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out it is matter of faith, and above reason. Locke.

4. To declare loud.

5. To be in labour.

What! is she criying out?
— So said her woman; and that her sufferance made Each pang a death. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

TO CRY up. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.

Instead of criying up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom. Bacon to Villiers.

The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity.
when cried up by the multitude. Glanville, Scipius.

C R Y

- The astrologer, if his prediction come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them. • South.
 They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it. Tillotson.
 He may, but of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure. • Locke.
 Poets, like monarchs on an Eastern throne,
 Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
 Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame
 And, as they please, give infamy or fame. • Walsh.
 Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry up our constant success at a most prodigious rate. Swift.
2. To raise the price by proclamation.
 All the effect that I conceive was made by criing up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here. Temple.
- CRY. n. s. [cri, Fr.]
1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.
 And all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land. • Exodus.
2. Weeping; mourning.
3. Clamour; outcry.
 Anazement seizs all; the general cry
 Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die. Dryden, Virg.
 These narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stock. Addison.
4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.
 In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat. Swift.
5. Proclamation.
6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.
7. Acclamation; popular favour.
 The cry went once for thee,
 And still it might, and yet it may again. Shakspeare.
8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.
 Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beast, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune. Locke.
9. Importunate call.
 Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them. Jeremiah, vii. 13.
10. Yelping of dogs.
 He scorns the dog, resolves to try
 The combat next; but if their cry
 Invades again his trembling ear,
 He strait resumes his wonted care. Waller.
11. Yell; inarticulate noise.
 There shall be the noise of a cry from the fishgate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hill. Zeph. i. 10.
12. A pack of dogs.
 You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
 As reek o' th' rotten fens; whose loves I prize
 As the dead carcasses of unburied men,
 That do corrupt my air. Shakspeare, Coriol.
 About her middle round,
 A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd. Milton, P. l.
- CRYAL. n. s. The heron. Ainsworth.
- CRYER. See CRIER.
- CRYER. n. s. A kind of hawk called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift. Ainsworth.
- CRYING.* n. s. [from cry.] Importunate call, or outcry; shout; clamour; exclamation.

- Vociferation is syngage, redynge, or cryinge.
Sir T. Ffoliot, Castell of Health, ch. 35. p. 40. b.
 There is a cryng for wine in the streets; all joy is darkened. Isaiah, xxiv. 11.
 He scorneth the multitude of the city, neither regardeth he the cryng of the driver. Job, xxxix. 7.
 These troubles are nothing unto his mighty cryngs, who was compassed about for our sakes with fears and honours, till his sweat was as drops of blood. Dering on the Hebrews, ch. 5.
- CRYPT.* n. s. [Fr. crypte; Lat. crypta; from the Gr. κρύπτω, to hide. A word of no great age in our language; the Latin one continuing in use at the beginning of the last century. "[In] their subterranean cryptæ—they set a lamp." Greenhill's Art of Embalming, 1705. Remarks on crypts in churches occur in the Archaeologia, vol. viii.] A subterranean cell or cave; more especially, under a church, for the interment of particular persons. Formerly, crypta signified a subterranean oratory or chapel, and also the grave of a martyr.
- CRYPTICAL.* adj. [Lat. crypticus. See CRYPT.]
- CRYPTICK. } Hidden; secret; occult; private unknown; not divulged.
- The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes. Glanville's Apology.
 Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends. Watts.
- CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly: perhaps in the following example; the author might have written critically.
 We take the word acid in a familiar sense, without cryptically distinguishing it from those saps, that are a kin to it. Boyle.
- CRYPTOGRAPHY. n. s. [κρύπτω and γράφω.]
1. The art of writing secret characters.
2. Secret characters: cyphers.
- CRYPTOLOGY. n. s. [κρύπτω and λόγος.] Enigmatical language.
- CRYPTOGAMOUS.* adj. See CRYPTO GAMY.
- CRYPTOGAMY.* n. s. [κρύπτω, to conceal, and γάμος, marriage. Lat. cryptogamia.] In botany, applied to a genus of plants whose fructification is concealed.
 The picturesque dingle Nant-y-bi abounds with what the botanists name the cryptogamous plants. The idea of cryptogamy inspired Timæus with ideas of loves of other kind; and he makes our Nant the tender scene of courtship for all the nymphs and swains of Whiteford parish, which he candidly admits does always terminate in honest matrimony in the parish church. Pennant, Hist. of Whiteford and Holywell. 1796.
- CRYSTAL.* n. s. [Sax. crīstalla, Gr. κρύσταλλος.]
1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexible or elastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrea, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe. Hill on Fossils.
 Island crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one. Hill.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as is seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in stillicidus. Bacon.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit. Brown.

Crystal is certainly known, and distinguished by the degree of its diaphaneity and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same. Woodward.

3. Crystal is also used, for a fictitious body cast in the glass houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal. Chambers.

3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal. Chambers.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals. Bacon.

CRY'STAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy crystal window ope, look out. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds
By crystal-streams, that murmur through the meads. Dryden.

CRYSTALLINE. adj. [crystallinus, Lat. It is to be observed, that Shakspeare places the accent on the first syllable of this word; and Milton, on the second; but Milton does not always write the word crystalline, as an eminent critick has asserted, either in the passage cited by him from Paradise Lost or that from Samson Agonistes. The poet's own editions there read crystalline; but elsewhere, unintentionally perhaps, crystallin.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass. Boyle.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
On the crystalline sky, in saphir thron'd Illustrious far and wide. Milton, P. L.

CRYSTALLINE Humour. n. s. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the uvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the forepart than the backpart of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them. Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Ray on the Creation.

CRYSTALLIZATION. n. s. [from crystallize.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified, according to the nature and texture of the salts. The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a film appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does, by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly, in salt by reason of its solidity: whereby, when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is sated enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then will they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily divest them of their saltiness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mass formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate; congeal; concrete; or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Isaiah on Aliments.

CUB. n. s. [of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would out-stare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear. Shakspeare.

'Tis night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,
The lion, and the belly pinched wolf,

Keep their fur dry. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Estrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,
One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,

That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakspeare.
O most comical sight! a country squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwel's shop last night; but, such two unlicked cubs! Congreve.

CUB.* n. s. [perhaps from the Lat. cubo, to lie down; or a corruption of coop.] A stall for cattle; it is still so used in Gloucestershire.

The anchors also, and charter-mouks, vowed they not to die in their houses? And why are they not turned out of their cubbs, if vows may not be broken?

Confutation of N. Shaxton, (1546.) H. vi. b.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cub'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown George with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the borachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden, Pers.

To CUB.* v. a. [perhaps from coop.] To shut up; to confine as in a cub.

To be cubbed up on a sudden, how shall he be perplexed what shall become of him. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 153.

CUBATION.* n. s. [cubatio, Lat.] The act of lying down. Dict.

CUBATORY.* adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Dict.

CUBATURE.* n. s. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. s. [from κύβος, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [In arithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Green, Cosmol.

CUBE Root. n. s. The origin of a cubick number;

CUBICK Root. n. s. or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root, of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. s. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish-brown colour on the surface. It has an aromattick smell, and is acrid to the taste. *Cubeb*s are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromatticks, as *cubeb*s, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits.

Pleyer on the Humours.

CUBICAL.* adj. [from cube.]

CUBICK.* adj. [from cube.]

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel, containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax-candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be sufficient. Wilkins, Math. Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermon.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubical number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubical numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubical number. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

CUBICALLY.* adv. [from cubical.] In a cubical method.

Such is sixty-four, either made by multiplying eight into eight, and so it is a square; or else by multiplying four cubically. More, Conject. Cab. p. 217.

CUBICALNESS. n. s. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULAR.* adj. [old Fr. cubulaire, "belonging to the bedchamber," Cotgrave; "cubulaire, valet de chambre," Lacombe.] Belonging to the chamber.

Being the inseparable cubicular companion the king took comfort in, in the height of his troubles. Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

CUBICULARY.* adj. [Lat. cubicularis, Fr. cubulaire, from cubiculum.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into dis-cubitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CUBIFORM.* adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. s. [from cubitus, Lat.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmét.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard and a quarter of the stature, and makes a cubit; the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Holler on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Mil. or.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Abraham on Measures.

When on the goddess first I cast my sight,

Scarcely seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL.* adj. [cubital, old Fr. cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that, unto men below, they appeared in a cubital stature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CUBITED.* adj. [from cubit.] Having the measure of a cubit.

The twelve cubited man, as Jacobus a Voragine measurcth his length; or the twelve-foote man, as he is measured by Petrus de Natalibus! Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, p. 393.

CUCKINGSTOOL.* n. s. [derived by Hickeys from coquina, anciently cockagna, signifying an idle jade, a base woman. But it seems nearly allied to the Teut. kucke, a sort of pillory. It is sometimes called a ducking-stool; because the scold, after having been placed in the chair or stool fixed at the end of a long pole, was immersed in some muddy or stinking pool. The Saxon, (for it is of great antiquity,) called it peccing-stole. Brewers and bakers, transgressing against the laws, were also formerly thus punished. Our Homilies notice the punishment as inflicted on the unquiet.] An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Coxe.

In all well-ordered cities, common brawlers and scolders be punished with a notable kind of pain; as to be set on the ducking-stool, pillory, or such like.

Homilies, B. i. Against Contention.

We'll ship them out in duck-stools, there they'll sail

As brave Columbus did. Beaumont and Fl. Zanyer Tamed.

These mounted on a chair-curule,

Which moderns call a ducking-stool,

March proudly to the river's side. Hutchins.

CUCKOLD.* n. s. [Dr. Johnson derives this word from the Fr. cocu, which has been taken to the cockhold in allusion to the cock by it. The old French is cocu, "mari dont la femme est infidelle." Lacombe. But as Howell, in his Letters, nearly two centuries since observed, "In French, cocu is taken for one whose wife is light, and hath made him a passive cockhold; whereas clean contrary, cocu, which is the cock, doth use to lay her eggs in another bird's nest." Lett. iv. 19. Sernius refers our word to a northern origin; the Icelandic quomkall, signifying the same; and which he derives from quoma, a woman, and kall, to blemish. Chaucer has given a bantering etymology of the word, which there is no occasion to cite.

Mr. Horne Tooke considers it formed from the Italian cuculo, the cuckoo; which is from the Lat. cuculus. [That the husbands of false women wear horns, is an old saying, and common in other countries. And Dr. Burn, in his History of Westmoreland, would trace this crest of cuckoldom, to horns worn as crests by those who went to the crusades, as their armorial distinctions; to the infidelity of consorts during their absence; and to the finger of scorn pointing at them, on their return, crested indeed, but abused.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for't. Shakespeare, Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in's absence. Shakespeare.

For though the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands, to her the cuckold may succeed. Dryden, Juv.

Ever since the reign of King Charles II. the aldernza is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD.† v. a. [from the Ital. cuculo, the cuckoo; as Mr. H. Tooke thinks, that is, to serve as the cuckoo serves other birds. Our verb has been sometimes written without the d, and is sometimes pronounced without it. But Beaumont and Fletcher are those only whom I have found to support it.]

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden, Juv.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. s. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden, Span. Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. s. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot, John Bull.

CUCKOO.† n. s. [Welsh, cwccw, gwccw; Fr. coucou, cocu; German, guguck; Dan. kuckuck; Ital. cuculo; Lat. cuculus; Gr. κρυζυζ.]

1. A bird which appears in the Spring; and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place; from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer by calling cuckoo, which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.

The merry cuckoo, messenger of Spring,
His trumpet shrill hath thrice already sounded. Spenser.

The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer, nay. Shakespeare.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare.

I deduce,
From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
The symphony of Spring; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Thomson

2. It is a name of contempt.

Why, what a razak art thou then, to praise him so for running? — —A horseback, ye cuckoo; — but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

CUCKOO-BUD. n. s. [cardaminus, Lat.]. The CUCKOO-FLOWER. } name of a flower.

When daizies pied, and violets blue,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

Nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Dandel, and all the idle weeds. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. s. [cuckoo and spittle.]

Cuckoo-spittle, or woodsear, is that spumous dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CU'QUEAN.* n. s. [Fr. coquine.] A vile woman; a prostitute.

Now [he] her, hourly, her own cucquean makes. B. Jonson.

CU'CULATE. } adj. [cucullatus, hooded, Lat.]

CU'CULATED. }

1. Hooded; covered, as with a hood or cowl.

2. Having the resemblance or shape of a hood.

They are differently cuculated, and capuched upon the head and back. Brown, Vulg. Err.

CU'CUMBER.† n. s. [cucumer, German; coucombre, old Fr. cucumis, Lat.] The name of a plant, and also of the fruit of that plant.

It hath a flower consisting of one single leaf, bell-shaped, and expanded toward the top, and cut into many segments; of which some are male, or barren, having no embryo, but only a large style in the middle, charged with the farina: others are female, or fruitful, being fastened to an embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fleshy fruit, for the most part oblong and turbinated, which is divided into three or four cells, inclosing many oblong seeds. The species are, 1. The common cucumber. 2. The white cucumber. 3. The long Turkey cucumber. Miller.

How cucumbers along the surface creep,
With crooked bodies and with bellies deep. Dryden, Virg.

CU'CURBITACEOUS. adj. [from cucurbita, Lat. a gourd.]

Cucurbitaceous plants are those which resemble a gourd; such as the pumpkin and melon.

Chambers.

C U D

CUCURBITE. n. s. [cucurbita, Latin.] A chymical vessel, commonly called a body, made of earth or glass, in the shape of a gourd, and therefore called cucurbite. Quincy.

I have, for curiosity's sake, distilled quicksilver in a cucurbite, fitted with a capacious glass-head. Boyle on Colours.

Let common yellow sulphur be put into a cucurbite glass, upon which pour the strongest aqua fortis. Mortimer.

CUCURBITIVE.* adj. [from cucurbita.] Applied to small flat worms of the shape of the seed of a gourd. Hist. R. S. iv. 138.

CUD. † n. s. [cud, Saxon.] That which is chewed. That food which is repositied in the first stomach in order to rumination, or to be chewed again.

Many times, when my master's cattle came hither to chew their cud in this fresh place, I might see the young bull testify his love. Sidney.

You range the pathless wood,
While on a flow'ry bank he chews the cud. Dryden.

CUD'DEN. † n. s. [without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Serenius refers it to the Icel.

kutle, a dwarf. But I conceive it may more easily be derived from the Teut. kudde, a herd of cattle, and also a pig.] A clown; a stupid rustic; a low dolt; a low bad word.

The slavering cudden, propp'd upon his staff,
Stood ready gaping with a grinning laugh. Dryden.

To CUD'DLE. † v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. But it may be from the Welsh cuddio, to hide, to get out of sight. To cuddle, in the north of England, is to huddle.]

1. To be close; to squat.
Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
Viewing the tow'ring falcon nigh?
She cuddles low behind the brake;
Nor would she stay, nor dares she fly. Prior.
2. [from the Teut. kudden perhaps, to meet, to come together.] To join in an embrace.

CUD'DY.* n. s. A fish which frequents the coasts of Scotland; the cole-fish.

The cuddis is a fish, of which I know not the philosophical name. It is not much bigger than a gudgeon, but it is of great use in these islands, as it affords the lower people both food and oil for their lamps. Johnson, Journey to the Western Isles.

CUDGEL. † n. s. [kudse, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. The Scotch use the word cud for a strong staff, which Dr. Jamieson refers to the same original. Cudgel-play, as it is an imitation of the sword-exercise, leads one to suppose an affinity between our cudgel and the Spanish cuchillo; “a cuchilladas, by cuts, by slashes.” Minshew, Span. Dict. The guard of the Spanish sword resembles also, in some degree, the basket-hilt of our rustic cudgels.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Racon.

All we have seen compar'd to his experience
Has been but cudgel-play or cock-fighting.

Do not provoke the rage of stones
And cudgels to thy hide and bones.
Tremble and vanish. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

C U E

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack)
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden, Juv.

This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cudgel. Locke.

The wise Cornelius was convinced, that these, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-play. Asbathnot and Pope.

2. To cross the CUDGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

To CUD'GEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouth'd man, as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
Went home, and was cudgell'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it: for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by as a company of young fellows were cudgelling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PLAY.* See CUDGEL.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

His doublet was of sturdy buff;
And though not sword, yet cudgel-proof. Hudibras.

CUDGELLER.* n. s. [from cudgel.] One who cudgels another.

They were often liable to a night-walking cudgeller, or the emptying of an urinal. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

CUD'DLE. n. s. A small sea-fish.

Of round fish there are hake, sprat, cudles, eels. Carver.

CUD'WLED. † n. s. [from cud and weed.] A plant. Miller.

There is a plant, which our herbalists call “herbim impium,” or wicked cudweed, whose younger branches still yield flowers to overtop the elder.

Rp. Hall, Rem. of Projeuancy, ii. § 9.

CUE. † n. s. [old Fr. cuer, a tail; “cuer. com. pour quatre, cauda, 960.” Lacombe.]

1. The tail or end of any thing; as, the long curl of a wig.
2. The last words of a speech which the player who is to answer catches, and regards as intimation to begin. See ALLOQUY.
Pyrautes, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and so every one according to his cue. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.
3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,
Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakespeare.

Let him know how many servants there are, of both sexes, who expect vails; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakespeare, Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer, Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: low word.

6. A farthing, or a farthing's worth. [merely the sound of q, as an abbreviation of the Lat. quadrans, a farthing.] Obsolete.

You are tain
To size your belly out with shoulder fees,
With rumps, and kidneys, and cuts of single beer.
Beaumont and Fl. Fl. at several Weapons.

And trust me, 't will live so soon
To see an ape, a monkey, or baboon,
Play his for'd tricks; as I would give a tester,
To come and view them and their apish gesture.

Wither's Satires, 1613.

CUE KPO. † n. s. [Spanish. Our expression is often corruptly written querpo, which see.] To be in cuerpo, is to be without the upper coat or cloke, so as to discover the true shape of the cuerpo or body.

Expos'd in cuerpo to their rage,
Without my arms and equipage. Hudibras.

CUFF. † n. s. [zuffa, a battle; zuffare, to fight, Italian. This Dr. Johnson's etymology. Skitner derives the word from the Gr. κόπτω, and Junius from κόπτος. But eye notices the Danish kiep, a club, which, with our word, he refers to the Goth. kauþathian, to strike with the hands. Serenius makes the same reference.]

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book, and book and priest.

Shakspeare.

There was no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuff in the question. Shakspeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and she would prick him with her knitting-needle. Arbutnot, John Bull.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffag in with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. Any stroke or blow.

The billow, rude, rouz'd into hills of water,
Cuff'd after cuff, the earth's green banks did batter.
Mir. for Mag. p. 619.

Great Seyner and stout Winter did so gall
With wounding cuff of cannon's fierce ball,
That on the Belgian coast, by friends forsaken,
They, with their captains, by their foes were taken.

Mir. for Mag. p. 814.

3. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

CUFF. † n. s. [couffir, French.] Part of the sleeve.

But here are no clothes;

Yes, here's a cuff. Beaumont and Fl. Little Thief.

To CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping faces acted by the court,
While the poets cuff to make the rabble sport. Dryden, Juv.

To CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him: —
— De, cuff him soundly, but never draw thy sword.

Shakspeare.

Were not you, my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked?
Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious.

O'way.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her seven kind doer bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff'd the noble bird.

Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,
And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food.

Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

How'ring about the coast, they make their moan,
And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own.

Dryden, Æn.

He rail'd at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning-gown, band, short cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbutnot.

CUI BONO. * [a Latin expression often used in modern times, and, as it appears, adopted more than two centuries since.] For what purpose; to what end.

For, what of all this? what good? cui bono?

Bp. Andrews, Sermon, when Deaf of Westminster, 1604, sign. E. i. b.

CUIRAGE. n. s. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into, for carriage to other places. Covel.

CUIRASS. † n. s. [cuirasse, Fr. from cuir, leather; corcuera, Ital.] A breastplate.

Ten years of bitter nights and heavy marches,
When many a frozen storm sang through my cuirass,
And made it doubtful whether that or I Went the more stubborn metal. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

The lance put out the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his bosom with a purple dent. Dryden.

CUIRASSIER. n. s. [from cuirass.] A man of arms, a soldier in armour.

The field all iron, cast a gleaming brow,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight, Milton.

The picture of St. George, wherein he is described like a cuirassier, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Britann. Vulg. Err.

CUISS. † n. s. [cuisse, French, the thigh. Perhaps our word should be written cuisse. Steevens has adopted cuisse, in his edition of Shakspeare. From cuisse the word has, in old authors, been converted also into cuss and cusche.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The crosslet some, and some the cuisses mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden, Æn.

But what had our author to wound Æneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuisses to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour?

Dryden.

CULDEES. † n. s. [colidei, Lat. They had the name, which we give them, in old French. "Culdees, moins, ceux qui sont consacrés au culte de Dieu." Lacombe. Dr. Jamieson, who has written a very learned and curious treatise on these persons, offers several other etymologies of the word.] Monks in Scotland and Ireland.

CULERAGE. n. s. The same plant with ARSMART.

Ainsworth.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those, who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had, being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor disensed thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shakspeare, K. John.

Like the bee, culling from every flower,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey.
Shakespeare.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Then in a moment fortune shall cull birth,
Out of one side, her happy minion.
Shakespeare, K. John.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxon, and Norman laws, being culled, as it were, this grand charter was extracted.
Howell, Parity of Beasts.

When false flowers of rhetorick thou would'st cull,
Trust nature, do not labour to be dull.
Dryden

From his herd he culls,
For slaughter, four the fairest of his bulls.
Dryden, Virg.

When the current pieces of the same denomination are of different weights, then the traders in money call out the heavier, and melt them down with profit.
Locke.

With humble duty and officious haste,
I'll call the farthest mead for thy repast.
Pope.

The various offerings of the world appear:
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil.
Pope.

CULLER. † n. s. [Fr. cueilleur.] One who picks or chooses.
Shakespeare.

CULLIBILITY. * n. s. [from To cully.] Credulity; easiness of belief.

Providence never designed Gay to be above two and twenty,
by his thoughtlessness and cullibility.
Swift, Lett.

CULLION. † n. s. [coglione, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion.] It seems to import meanness rather than folly. So far Dr. Johnson. Coglione is an Italian expression, denoting the highest personal contempt. So the old Fr. caille, "a lubberly coward." A scoundrel, a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion.
Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

Up to the breach, you dogs; away, you cullions.
Shakespeare.

Their wives and loveliest daughters constuprated by every base cullion.
Burton, Anal. of Mel. p. 161.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you; you whorson, cullionly barber-monger, draw.
Shakespeare, M. Lear.

CULLIS. * n. s. [Fr. coulis.] Broth of boiled meat strained.

When I am excellent at cawdles,
And cullises, and have enough spare gold
To boil away, you shall be welcome to me.
Beaumont and Fl. The Captain.

Then by my cawdle and my cullis, I set
My daughter on her feet about the house here.
B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

CULLUMBINE. n. s. [more properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines.
Spenser.

CULLY. n. s. [coglione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers or a strumpet.

Why should you, whose mother wits
Are furnish'd with all perquits,
Be allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none.
Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare;
They purchase but sophisticated ware.
Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully.
Arbutnot.

TO CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULLYISM. * n. s. [from cully.] The state of a cully.

CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULLYISM. * n. s. [from cully.] The state of a cully.

CULLYISM. * n. s. [from cully.] The state of a cully.

What is this but being a cully in the grave! Sure this is being henpecked with a vengeance! But without dwelling upon these less frequent instances of eminent culligism, what is there so common as to hear a fellow curse his fate that he cannot get rid of a passion to a jilt, and quote an half-line out of a miscellany poem to prove his weakness is natural!

Spectator, No. 486.

CULM. * n. s. [Welsh, cwlun.] A kind of dust coal found in pits with coals, and sometimes by itself: mixed up with clay in balls, it makes a strong fire, does not smoke, but emits a sulphurous smell. In this form, Mr. Bagshaw says, it is much used in some parts of Wales. The name is also known among our northern miners.

CULMEN. * n. s. [Lat.] Summit.
At the culmen or top was a chapel.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 227.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks.

Quin. y.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprian and culmiferous kind; some with broader, others with narrower leaves.

Woodward on Plants.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or meal-like seeds of some culmiferous plants; as, oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet, &c.

TO CULMINATE. † v. v. [culmen, Latin.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye command;
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sun-shine, as when his beams at noon
Culminate from th' equator.

Milton, P. L.

When a star culminates, the first moment of his departure from the meridian is the first step to his declining.

Sir H. Sherre, in Lat. Helop's Misc. p. 34.

The regal star, then culminating, was the sun.

Dryden, Tract. of the D. of Glos.

CULMINATION. † n. s. [from culminate.]

1. The transit of a planet through the meridian.
2. Top or crown.

We upbraid the end with the beginning, the harvest with the spring, and wonder how that which in its putting forth was a flower, should in its growth and culmination become a thistle.

Farinon's Sermon, 1657, p. 429.

CULPABILITY. n. s. [from culpable.] Blamableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpatilis, Latin.]

1. Criminal.
Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glo'ster,
Than from true evidence of good esteem,
We be approv'd in practice culpable.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. Guilty; with of.
Thes' being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourer of their friends.
Spenser on Ireland.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.

The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them, without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable, to the end that to him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just.

Hooker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; for as much as it was in every man's power to have prevented it.

South.

CULPABLENESS. † n. s. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

All those who have known me, cannot be ignorant of my culpableness in those particulars.

W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. (1648), p. 145.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily.

CULPRIT.† n. s. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers; Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of, Qu'il paroit, May it so appear, the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent. So far Dr. Johnson. What he has ascribed to the judge, however, belongs to the clerk of arraigns. Barrington also, in his Observations on the Statutes, thinks that the French qu'il paroit, i. e. make it appear, may be the origin of our word; the criminal having answered to the charge that he is not guilty, being required to make his innocence appear. Blackstone refers it to two abbreviations; viz. to cul for culpable, which the clerk declares the prisoner to be; and to the Fr. prit, ready to prove him so. Others to cul for culpable, and to the Fr. prist, (from prendre, taken. Mr. Tyrwhitt considers it as a vulgar name for a prisoner, from the Fr. cul and prist; meaning one seized by the skirts, caught by the back. This countenances my remark on humbailiff, which see.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim:
Then first the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd.

Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and condescending too far, he may injure his own cause; and by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior, Pref. to Solomon.

CULTER.† n. s. [cultor, Sax. cutter, Latin.] The iron of the plow perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coulter.

Her fallow, leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank simfitory,
Doth root upon; while that the cutter rusts,
That should deracinate such savagery. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

CULTIVABLE.* adj. [from cultivate.] Capable of cultivation. This word has lately been adopted by our writers on agriculture.

To CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, French.]

1. To forward or improve the product of the earth, by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Fellon on the Clasticks.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

Were we but less indulgent to our fancies,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our muse would flourish.

Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life.

Addison, Cato.

CULTIVATION.† n. s. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

The state of cultivation among this rude people was so imperfect, that it was with difficulty they could afford subsistence to their new guests. Robertson.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. s. [from cultivate.] One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grass springs up. Boyle.

CULTURE.† n. s. [culture, old Fr. cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Esd. viii. 6.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows? — Where grows it not? If vain our toil,
We ought to blame the culture, not the soil.

Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere.

Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun;

Then to the culture of the willing glebe.

Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skilful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Taller.

To CULTURE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority; yet is frequent in modern poetry.

In countries cultur'd high,

In ornamented towns, where order reigns,

Free social life, and polish'd manners fair.

Thomson, Liberty, P. ii.

CULVER. n. s. [columba, Lat. culpey, Sax.] A pigeon.

An old word.

Had he so done, he had him snatch'd away,

More light than culver in the falcon's fist.

Spenser.

Whence, borne on liquid wing,

The sounding culver shoots.

Thomson, Spring.

CULVERHOUSE.* n. s. [from culver and house.] A dovecot.

Yet was this poor culverhouse sorer shaken.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Sermon. (1587.) p. 279.

CULVERIN.† n. s. [Fr. coulevrine, from coulivre, a snake; ordnance being ornamented with sculptured snakes. See BASILISK.] A species of ordnance; originally an hawk.

A whole cannon requires for every charge, forty pounds of powder, and a bullet of sixty-four pounds; a culverin, sixteen pounds of powder, and a bullet of nineteen pounds; a demi-culverin, nine pounds of powder, and a bullet of twelve pounds.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

Here a well polish'd mall gives us the joy
To see our prince his matchless force employ:

No sooner has he touch'd the flying ball,

But 'tis already more than half the mall;

And such a fury from his arm 't has got,

As from a smoking culverin 'twere shot.

Waller.

CULVERKEY. n. s. A flower.

Looking down the meadows I could see a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, to make garlands. Walton's Angler.

CULVERTAIL.* n. s. In carpentry, the same as dovetail, which see. Bullokar.

CUMBENT.* adj. [from the Lat. cumbens.] Lying down.

Too cold the grassy mantle of the marl,

In stormy winter's long and dreary night,

For cumbent sheep.

Dyer's Fleece.

To CUMBER.† v. a. [kommeren, kombren, to disturb, Dutch. Our word was formerly accomber.

1. "Acombred, vexatus," Prompt. Parv. "Acom-brynge a combrement, vexatio," Ibid.]

1. To embarrass; to entangle; to obstruct.

Why asks he, what avails him not in fight,
And would but cumber, and retard his flight,
In which his only excellence is plac'd
You give him death, that intercept his taste. Dryden, Fab.

Hardly his head the plunging pilot rears,
Clog'd with his cloaths, and cumber'd with his years. Dryden.

The learning and mastery of a tongue, being uneasy and unpleasant enough in itself, should not be cumbered with any other difficulties, as is done in this way of proceeding. Locke.

2. To croud or load with something useless.

Let it not cumber you better remembrance.
Shakespeare, Timon.

The multiplying variety of arguments, especially frivolous ones, is not only lost labour, but cumbers the memory to no purpose. Locke.

3. To involve in difficulties and dangers; to distress.

Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

4. To busy; to distract with multiplicity of cares.

Martha was cumbered about much serving. Luke.

5. To be troublesome in any place.

Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground? St. Luke, xiii. 7.

Doth the bramble cumber a garden? It makes the better hedge; where, if it chances to prick the owner, it will tear the thief. Grew, Cosmol.

CUMBER. n. s. [kumber, Dutch.] Vexation; burdensomeness; embarrassment; obstruction; hindrance;
disturbance; distress.

By the occasion thereof I was brought to as great cumber
and danger, as lightly any might escape. Sidney.

Thus fade thy helps, and thus thy cumbers spring.

Farfax, Tass. ii. 73.

The greatest ships are least serviceable, go very deep in water, are of marvellous charge and fearful cumber. Ralegh.

CUMBERSOME. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious.

Thinking it too early, as long as they had any day, to break off so pleasing a company, with going to perform a cumbersome obedience. Sidney.

2. Burdensome; embarrassing.

I was drawn in to write the first part by accident, and to write the second by some defects in the first: these are the cumbersome perquisites of authors. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Unwieldy; unmanageable.

Very long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be readily managed. Newton, Opt.

CUMBERSOMELY.† adj. [from cumbersome.] In a troublesome manner; in a manner that produces hindrance and vexation. Sherwood.

CUMBERSOMENESS.† n. s. [from cumbersome.] Emcumbrance; hindrance; obstruction. Sherwood.

CUMBRANCE.† n. s. [from cumber.] Burden; hindrance; impediment.

How can I myself alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife? Deut. i. 12.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.
Milton, P. R. ii. 454.

CUMBROUS. adj. [from cumber.]

1. Troublesome; vexatious; disturbing.

A cloud of cumbrous gnats do him molest;
All striving to infix their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can rest.
Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 23.

2. Oppressive; burdensome.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much! Bent rather, how I may be quit, Fairest and easiest, of this cumbrous charge. Milton, P. L.

They rear'd him from the ground,
And from his cumbrous arms his limbs unbound;
Then lanc'd a vein. Dryden.

Possessor's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumbrous weight. Swift.

3. Jumbled; obstructing each other.

Swift to their several quarters hasted then
The cumbrous elements, earth, flood, air, fire. Milton, P. L.

CUMBROUSLY.† adv. [from cumbrous.] In a burdensome manner.

Capitals to every substantive are cumbrously intrusive upon the eye. Seward's Letters, i. 164.

CUMFREV. n. s. [consolida.] A medicinal plant.

CUMIN.† n. s. [cýmyn, Sax. cuminum, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

Rank-smelling rue, and cumin, good for eyes. Spenser.

When a dove-house is empty, there is cumin seed used to purloin from the rest of the neighbours'.

Beaum. and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

To CUMULATE.† v. a. [cumulo, Latin.] To heap together.

All the extremes of worth and beauty that were cumulated in Camila. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 6.

A man that beholds the mighty shoals of shells, bedded and cumulated heap upon heap, amongst earth, will scarcely conceive which way these could ever live. Woodward.

CUMULATION.† n. s. [Lat. cumulatio.] The act of heaping together. Dict.

For cumulation, I must needs profess, I never liked it. And it supposes, of and in itself, an unnecessary delay of the first degree, or a needless haste of the second.

Abp. Laud, Hist. of his Ch. of Oxford, p. 17.

CUMULATIVE.† adj. [old Fr. cumulatif, from the
Lat. cumulo.] Consisting of parts heaped together.

As for knowledge which man receiveth by teaching, it is cumulative. Bacon on Learning.

Among many cumulative treasons charged upon the late earl of Strafford. Hale, Hist. Pl. of the Cr. ch. 14.

To CUN.† v. a. [Icel. kunna, Goth. kunnan, the parent of our cunning.]

1. To know; to learn perfectly. Burret.

2. In naval language, to cun a ship, is to direct her course.

CUNCTATION. n. s. [cunctatio, Latin.] Delay; procrastination; dilatoriness.

It is most certain, that the English made not their best improvements of these fortunate events; and that especially by two miserable errors, cunctation in prosecuting, and haste in departure. Hayward.

The swiftest animal, conjoined with a heavy body, implies that common moral, festina lente; and that celerity should always be counterpoised with cunctation. Brown.

CUNCTATOR. n. s. [Latin.] One given to delay;
a lingerer; an idler; a sluggard. Not in use.

Others, being unwilling to discourage such cunctators, always keep them up in good hope, that, if they are not yet called, they may yet, with the thief, be brought in at the last hour. Hammond on Fundamentals.

To CUND.† v. a. [from konnen, to know, Dutch.]
To give notice to: a provincial or obsolete word.

See CONDERS.

They are directed by a bylker or huer on the cliff, who, discerning the course of the pilchard, cundeth, as they call it, the master of each boat. Carcw, Survey of Cornwall.

CUNEAL. adj. [cuneus, Latin.] Relating to a wedge; having the form of a wedge.

CUNEATED. adj. [cuneus, Latin.] Made in form of a wedge.

CUNIFORM. adj. [from cuneus and forma, Lat.]

Having the form of a wedge.

CUNIFORM-BONES. n. s. The fourth, fifth, and sixth bones of the foot; thus called from their wedge-like shape, being large above and narrow below. Dict.

CUNNER. n. s. [lepas.] A kind of fish less than an oyster, that sticks close to the rocks. Ainsworth.

CUNNING. adj. [from the Goth. kunnan. See To CUN; connan, Sax. konnen, Dut. to know.]

1. Skillful; knowing; well instructed; learned.

Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,

Fit to instruct her youth. — To cunning men

I will be very kind, and liberal

To mine own children, in good bringing up. Shakspeare.

I do present you with a man of mine,

Cunning in music, And the mathematics,

To instruct her fully in those sciences. Shakspeare.

Whicfein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? Wherein cunning, but in craft? Where's a crafty, but in villany? Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and that can skill to cut and to grave. 2 Chron.

When Pedro does the lute command,

She guides the cunning artist's hand. Prior.

2. Performed with skill; artful.

And over them Arachne high did lift

Her cunning web, and spread her subtle net,

Enwrapped in foul smock, and cloud, more black than jet. Spenser.

And there beside of marble stone was built

An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery;

On which true Christians blood was often spilt,

And holy martyrs often done to die. Spenser.

Once put out thy light,

Thou cunning'st pattern of excell'g nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat

That can thy light relume. Shakspeare, Othello.

3. Artfully deceitful; sly; designing; trickish; full of fetches and stratagems; subtle; crafty; subdulous.

These small wares and petty points of cunning are infinite, and it were a good deed to make a list of them; for nothing doth more hurt than that cunning men pass for wise. Bacon.

Men will leave truth and misery to such as love it; they are resolved to be cunning; let others run the hazard of being sincere. South.

4. Acted with subtilty.

The more he protested, the more his father thought he dissembled, accounting his integrity to be but a cunning face of falsehood. Sidney.

CUNNING. n. s. [cuninge, Saxon. This word is not often found in the plural number; but it is so used by Shakspeare, in the sense of skill, to which definition Dr. Johnson gives no example.]

1. Artifice; deceit; slyness; sleight; craft; subtilty; dissimulation; fraudulent dexterity.

What if I be not so much the poet, as even that miserable subject of his cunning, whereof you speak. Sidney.

We take cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom; and certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. Bacon.

Discourage cunning in a child; cunning is the ape of wisdom.

Locke.

2. Art; skill; knowledge.

If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. Psal. cxxxvii. 5.

We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Notes, with many a winding bout

Of linked sweetness long drawn out,

With wauton heed and giddy cunning. Milton, J. Allegro.

CUNNINGLY. adv. [from cunning.]

1. Artfully; slyly; subtly; by fraudulent contrivance; craftily.

Amongst other crimes of this nature, there was diligent enquiry made of such as had raised and dispersed a bruit and rumour, a little before the field fought, that the rebels had the day, and that the king's army was overthrown, and the king fled; whereby it was supposed, that many succours were cunningly put off and kept back. Pagcon, Hen. VII.

I must meet my danger, and destroy him first;

But cunningly and closely. Denham, Sophy.

When stock is high, they come between,

Making by second-hand their offers;

Then cunningly retire unseen,

With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

2. Skillfully.

A stately palace built of squared bricke,

Which cunningly was without mortar laid,

Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,

And golden soile fl over them dislaid,

That purest skye with brightnesse they dismayd. Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 4.

And many bards, that to the trembling chord

Can tune their timely voices cunningly. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 3.

They shoot wondrous cunningly.

Milton, Hist. of Moscow, ch. 2.

CUNNINGMAN. n. s. [cunning and man.] A man who pretends to tell fortunes, or teach how to recover stolen goods.

One Flaccianus—being about to purchase a piece of ground, went to this diviner or cunningman, to see what he could tell him about it! M. Casaubon, q' Credulity, &c. p. 142.

He sent him for a strong detachment

Of headle, constable, and watchmen,

To attack the cunningman, for plunder

Committed falsely on his lumber. Hudibras.

CUNNINGNESS. n. s. [from cunning.] Deceitfulness; slyness.

But mine is such a drench of balderdash,

Such a strange cyrled cunningness. Beaumont and Fl. Twine Twined.

The doctor by this oversight, or cunningness rather, got a supply of money. Howell, Lett. iv. 2.

CUP. n. s. [cupp, Sax. cup, Welsh; kop, Dutch; kupf, Iceland. kub and kubbe, Pers. كوب, Gr. Κύπελλον.]

1. A small vessel to drink in.

Thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, after the former manner when thou wast his butler. Genesis, xl. 13.

Ye heav'nly pow'rs, that guard

The British isles, such dire events remove

Far from fair Albion; nor let civil broils

Ferment from social cups. Phillips.

2. The liquor contained in the cup; the draught.

Which when the vile enchanteress perceiv'd,

With cup thus charm'd, imparting she deceiv'd. Spenser.

All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cups of their deservings. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Wilt please your lordship, drink a cup of sack. Shakspeare.

They that never had the use

Of the grape's surprising juice,

To the first delicious cup

All their reason render up. Waller.

The best, the dearest favourite of the sky,

Must taste that cup; for man is born to die. Pope, Odys.

3. Social entertainment; merry bout; [in the plural.]

Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouth as household words,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Let us suppose that I were reasoning, as one friend with another, by the fireside, or in our cups, without care, without any great affection to either party. Knolles.

C U P .

It was near a miracle to see an old man silent, since talking is the dis-ease of age; but amongst cups, makes fully a wonder.

B. Jonson, Discourses.

Thence from cups, to civil broils!

Amidst his cups with fainting shiv'ring seiz'd,

His limbs disjointed, and all o'er-gleas'd,

His hand refuses to sustain the blow.

Dryden, Persius.

4. Any thing hollow like a cup; as, the husk of an acorn, the bell of a flower.

A pyrites of the same colour and shape, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherick figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup.

Woodward on Fossils.

5. Cup and Can. Familiar companions. The can is the large vessel, out of which the cup is filled, and to which it is a constant associate.

You boasting tell us where you din'd,

And how his lordship was so kind;

Swear he's a most facetious man;

That you and he are cup and can;

You travel with a heavy load,

And quite mistake prelerment's road.

Swift.

6. [Cuper, French, to scarify.] A glass to draw the blood in scarification.

Hippocrates tells you, that in applying of cups, the scarification ought to be made with crooked instruments.

Achulbrook.

To CUP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with cups. This sense is obsolete.

Plumpey Bacchus, with pink cyne,

In thy vat's out eates he drown'd;

With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd!

Cup us, till the world go round.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. [Cuper, to cut, Fr.] To fix a glass-bell or cucurbit upon the skin, to draw the blood in scarification.

The clotted blood lies heavy on his heart,

Corrupts, and there remains in spite of art;

Nor breathing veins, nor cupping will prevail;

All onward reaches and inward fail.

Dryden, Fob.

You have quartered all the foul language upon me, that could be raked out of the air of Billingsgate, without knowing who I am; or whether I deserve to be cupped and scarified at this rate.

Spectator.

Blistering, cupping, and bleeding are seldom of use but to the idle and intemperate.

Addison, Spect.

Ifm the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd;

They bled, they cupped, they purg'd; in short they cur'd.

Pope.

CUPBEARER. n. s.

1. An officer of the king's household.

There is conveyed to Mr. Villiers an intimation of the king's pleasure to wait and to be sworn his servant, and shortly after his cupbearer at large; and the Summer following he was admitted in ordinary.

Wotton.

2. An attendant to give wine at a feast.

This vine was said to be given to Tros, the father of Priam, by Jupiter, as a recompence for his carrying away his son Ganymede to be his cupbearer.

Broome.

CUPBOARD. n. s. [cup and board, a case or receptacle, Saxon.] A case with shelves, in which victuals or earthen ware is placed.

Some trees are best for planchers, as deal; some for tables, cupboards, and desks, as walnut.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Codrns had but one bed: so short to boot,

That his short wife's short legs hung dangling out:

His cupboard's head six earthen pitchers grac'd,

Beneath them was his trusty tankard plac'd.

Dryden, Juv.

Yet their wine and their victuals these curmudgeon-lubbers,

Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.

Swift.

To CUPBOARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To treasure in a cupboard; to hoard up.

The belly did remain

Th' midst o' th' body, idle and unactive,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing

Like labour with the rest.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

C U P

CUPELLATION. * n. s. [from coppel, which is also written cupel. See COPPEL.] The process of assaying and purifying gold and silver.

From its silver's alloy with copper, iron, and antimony, it may be easily refined by cupellation with the necessary quantity of lead.

Robinson, System of Mineralogy, 1799.

CUPIDITY. * n. s. [Cupiditas, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. It may be from the French cupidité; which, however, Menage thinks to be of no great age in that language. Cotgrave has it. Our own word is old, and in the vocabularies of Bullokar and Cockeram; though Dr. Johnson has cited neither the authority of any dictionary, nor an example.] Concupiscence; unlawful or unreasonable longing.

Our wicked flesh; the fragile, and soft worldly things; all sorts of cupidities do hinder us to know the word of God.

Wadworthe's Fr. Grammar, (1623,) p. 216.

The serpent covertly windeth into your heart; first by blandishments he entangleth your reason, and then by fallacies he diverteth your fear, assuring you shall not surely die; and thus sharpeneth the curiosity, while he suggeth the cupidity; and by these degrees presenteth the fruit, and putteth you out of the garden.

W. Montagu, Dec. Ess. (1648,) p. 170.

CUPOLA. * n. s. [Italian, Dr. Johnson says. I may add the French cupole, because our own word was formerly written cupola. But the word is by some referred to the Gr. κωνέλλων, a sort of cup; by others, to κώβαλλον, sometimes written κώβαλον, a cymbal; both resembling, in their hollowness, a dome or cupola. Yet it is originally, perhaps, from the Arabick cupba or kubba, round: "Fifteen mosques express their bravery here, which in shape are round, after the alkaba, in Mecca." Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 129.] A dome; the hemispherical summit of a building.

The caravans-raw was very neatly built, adorned with cupolas at top.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

Nature seems to have designed the head as the cupola to the most glorious of her works; and when we load it with supernumerary ornaments, we destroy the symmetry of the human figure.

Addison, Spect.

CUPOLATED. * adj. [from cupola.] Having a cupola.

Opposite to this palace is a fair temple—cupolated, compassed with walls, and open to the air.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 163.

Now hast thou chang'd thee, Saint; and made Thyself a lane that's cupolated.

Lovelace, Luc. P. p. 16.

CUPPEL. n. s. See COPPEL.

There be other bodies fixed, as we see in the stuff whereof cuppes are made, which they put into furnaces, upon which fire worketh not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

CUPPER. n. s. [from cup.] One who applies cupping-glasses; a scarifier.

CUPPING-GLASS. * n. s. [from cup and glass. Fr. couper.] See the 2d sense of To CUP.] A glass used by scarifiers to draw out the blood by rarefying the air.

I should rather substitute cupping-glasses, applied on the legs.

Ferrand, Love's Melancholy, p. 340.

The greatest mercy of the physician is to leave him with these cupping-glasses at the neck.

Hammond's Works, iv. 487.

A bubo, in this case, ought to be drawn outward by cupping-glasses, and brought to suppuration.

Wiseman.

CUPREOUS. adj. [cupreus, Latin.] Coppery; consisting of copper.

Having, by the intervention of a little sal armoniack, made copper inflammable, I took some small grains, and put them under the wick of a burning candle, whereby they were with the melted tallow so kindled, that the green, not blue, flame of the cupreous body did burn.

Boyle.

CUPROSE. * n. s. The poppy, so called in the north of England.

CUR. † n. s. [korre, Dutch, from the Goth. korhand. See CURTAIL.]

1. A worthless degenerate dog.

'Tis a good dog.

— A cur, sir.

— Sir, he's a good dog, and a fair dog.

Here's an old drudging cur turned off to shift for himself, for want of the very teeth and heels that he had lost in his master's service.

A cur may bear

The name of tiger, lion, or whatever

Denotes the noblest or the fairest beast.

2. A term of reproach for a man.

What would ye have, ye curs,

That like not peace nor war?

Shakespeare, Coriol.

This knight had occasion to inquire the way to St. Anne's-lane; the person, whom he spoke to, called him a young popish cur, and asked him, who made Anne a saint.

Addison.

CURABLE. adj. [from cure.] That admits a remedy; that may be healed.

A consumption of the lungs, at the beginning, herein differs from all other curable diseases, that it is not to be worn away by change of diet, or a cheerful spirit.

Hursey.

A desperate wound must skilful hands employ,

But thine is curable by Philip's boy.

Dryden, Juv.

CURABLENESS. n. s. [from curable.] Possibility to be healed.

CURACY. † n. s. [from curate.]

1. Employment of a curate, distinct from a benefice; employment which a hired clergyman holds under the beneficiary.

They get into orders as soon as they can, and, if they be very fortunate, arrive in time to a curacy here in town.

Swift.

2. A benefice, distinguished by the name of a perpetual curacy; holden, not as a rectory or vicarage by institution and induction, but by licence from the bishop; who, having received the presentation to the curacy from the patron, (who is usually proprietor of the rectory to which the curacy is appendant, and which had formerly perhaps belonged to some religious house,) admits the curate into all the rights and privileges of the curacy. When these curacies have received an augmentation from the governors of the bounty of queen Anne, they are subject, in regard to avoidance or cession, to the same rules as other benefices.

CURATE. † n. s. [curator, Latin.]

1. A clergyman hired to perform the duties of another.

He spar'd no pains; for curate he had none;

Nor durst he trust another with his care.

Dryden, Fab.

2. A parish priest.

Bishops and curates, and all congregations.

Comm. Prayer.

I thought the English of curate had been an ecclesiastical hiring. — No such matter; the proper import of the word signifies one who has the cure of souls.

Collier on Pride.

3. One who holds a perpetual curacy.

CURATESHIP. † n. s. [from curate.] The same with curacy.

Except he be shortly after to be admitted to some benefice or curateship then void.

Constitut. and Canons Eccles. 33.

CURATIVE. adj. [from cure.] Relating to the cure of diseases; not preservative.

The therapeutick or curative physick, we term that which restores the patient unto safety.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

There may be taken proper useful indications, both preservative and curative, from the qualities of the air.

Arbuthnot.

CURATOR. † n. s. [Latin.]

1. One that has the care and superintendence of any

C U R

The curators of Bedlam assure us that some lunatics are persons of honour.

Swift.

2. A guardian appointed by law.

She was full five and twenty years old, at which age the civil law freeth from a curador.

Bacon, Collect. of V. Eliz.

A minor cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian and curator.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

CURB. n. s. [coubrer, to bend, French.]

1. A curb is an iron chain, made fast to the upper part of the branches of the bridle, in a hole called the eye, and running over the beard of the horse.

Farrier's Dict.

The ox hath his bow, the horse his curb, and the falcon his bells; so man hath his desire.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

So four fierce coursers, starting to the race,

Scow'r through the plain, and lengthen every pace;

Nor reins, nor curbs, nor threatening cries they fear.

Dryden.

2. Restraint; inhibition; opposition; hindrance.

The Roman state, whose course will on

The way it takes, crackling ten thousand curbs

Of more strong links asunder, than can ever

Appear in your impediment.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

We remain

In strictest bondage, though thus far remov'd,

'Under th' inevitable curb, reserv'd

His captive multitude.

By these men, religion, that should be

The curb, is made the spur to tyranny.

Denham, Sophy

Even they who think us under no other tie to the true interest of our country, will allow this to be an effectual curb upon us.

Atterbury.

3. A curb is a hard and callous tumour, which runs along the inside of a horse's hoof; that is, on that part of the hoof that is opposite to the leg of the lame side.

Farrier's Dict

TO CURB. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To guide or restrain a horse with a curb.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed.

Milton, P. L.

2. To restrain; to inhibit; to check; to confine; to hold back.

Were not the laws planted amongst them at the first, and had they not governors to curb and keep them still in awe and obedience?

Spencer on Ireland.

Then thou, the mother of so sweet a child,

Her false imagin'd loss cease to lament,

And wisely learn to curb thy sorrows wild.

Milton.

If sense and learning are such unsociable imperious things, he ought to keep down the growth of his reason, and curb his intellects.

Collier on Pride.

Knowing when a mure should be indulg'd

In her full flight, and when she should be curbed.

Roscommon.

At this she curb'd a groan, that else had come;

And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb.

Dryden, Fab.

'Till force returns, his ardour we restrain

And curb his warlike wish to cross the main.

Dryden.

Some poor cottage on the mountain's brow

Where pinching want must curb thy warm desires,

And household cares suppress thy genial fires.

Prior.

Nature to all things fix'd the limits fit,

And wisely curb'd proud man's pretending wit.

Pope.

3. Sometimes with from.

Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement by

The consequence of the crown.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

4. In the following passage it signifies, I think, as in Fr. to bend.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropics, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams uninhabitable or extremely hot.

Ray.

CURBING. † n. s. [from curb.] Check.

The mind that is warping to vice, should not think much to be kept upright by the curbings and the strokes of adversity.

Felltham, Reb. ii. 57.

CURD. n. s. [See CRUDLES] The coagulation of milk; the concretion of the thicker parts of any liquor.

Milk of itself is such a compound of cream, curds, and whey, as it is easily turned and dissolved. Bacon.

This night, at least, with me forgo your care;

Chesnuts and curds, and cream shall be your fare. Dryden.

Let Sporus tremble—What! that thing of silk!

Sporus, that were white curd of ass's milk? Pope.

To CURD. v. a. [from the noun.] To turn to curds; to cause to coagulate.

Maiden, does it curd thy blood,
To say I am thy mother? Shakespeare, All's well.

It doth posset

And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The young men were friends,

As is the life and blood coagulate,

And curdled in your body. Beaumont and Fl. Mud in the Mill.

This curdled milk, this poor unlittered whelp,

My body. Douglas, Poems, p. 228.

To CURDLE. v. n. [from curd.] To coagulate; to shoot together; to congregate.

Powder of mint, and powder of red roses, keep the milk somewhat from turning or curdling in the stomach. Bacon.

Some to the house,

The fold and dairy, hungry bend their flight,

Sip round the pail, or taste the curdling cheese. Thomson, Summer.

To CURDLE. v. a. To cause to coagulate; to force into concretions.

His changed powers at first themselves not felt,
Till curdled cold his courage gan't assail. Spenser.

Mixed with the sixth part of a spoonful of milk, it burnt to the space of one hundred pulses, and the milk was curdled. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

My soul is all the same,

Unmov'd with tear, and mov'd with martial fame;

But my chill blood is curdled in my veins,

And scarce the shadow of a man remains. Dryden, Virg.

Even now a fatal draft works out my soul;

Even now it curdles in my shrinking veins

The lazy blood, and freezes at my heart. Smith.

There is in life spirit of wine some acidity, by which brandy curdles milk. Floyer.

CURDY. adj. [from curd.] Coagulated; concreted; full of curds; curdled.

It differs from a vegetable emulsion, by coagulating into a curdy mass with acids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CURE. v. n. s. [cura, Latin.] Our word was formerly synonymous with care. "I take no cure," i. e. care, Chaucer. "Take cure of him," St. Luke, x. 35. Mathew's Version. In this sense, "cure of souls" is still applied to the charge or care committed to every clergyman at the institution to his benefice. The old French cure is also care.]

1. Remedy; restorative.

This league that we have made,
Will give her sadness very little cure,

Brother of England, how may we content

This widow lady? Shakespeare, K. John.

Cold, hunger, prisons, ills without a cure,

All these he must, and guiltless oft, endure. Dryden, Fab.

Now we're ador'd, and the next hour displease;

At first your cure, and after your disease. Granville.

Horace advises the Romans to seek a seat in some remote part, by way of a cure for the corruption of manners. Swift.

2. Act of healing.

I do cures to-day, and to-morrow. St. Luke, xiii. 32.

3. The benefice or employment of a curate or clergyman.

Certain honourable persons, as well spiritual as temporal, shall have chaplains beneficed with cure to serve them in their honourable houses. Acts of Parl, 25 Hen. 8. ch. 16.

If his cure lies among the lawyers, let nothing be said against entangling property, spinning out causes, squeezing clients, and making the laws a greater grievance than those who break them. Collier.

To CURE. v. a. [curo, Latin.]

1. To heal; to restore to health; to remedy; to recover; with of before the disease. Used of patients or diseases.

The bones, in sharp colds, wax brittle; and therefore all contusions of bones, in hard weather, are more difficult to cure. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Here the poor lover, that has long endur'd,

Some proud nymph's scorn, of his fond passion's cur'd, Wallen.

I never knew any man cur'd of mutton.

Hear what from love impractic'd hearts endure. Swift.

From love, the sole disease thou canst not cure. Pope.

2. To prepare in any manner, so as to be preserved from corruption. [Fr. curer, to pickle. Cotgrave.]

The beef would be so ill chosen, or so ill cur'd, as to stink many times before it came so far as Holland. Temple.

CURELESS. adj. [cure and less.] Without cure; without remedy.

Bootless are plants, and cureless are my wounds;

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall

To cureless rum. Shakespeare, Merch. of Venice.

If, said he,

Your grief alone is hard captivity,

For love of heaven, with patience undergo

A cureless ill, since fate will have it so! Dryden, Fob.

CURER. n. s. [from cure.] A healer; a physician.

He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Shakespeare.

The indexterity and worse success of the most famous of our consumption cures, do evidently demonstrate their dimness in beholding its cures. Murray on Consumption.

CURFEW. n. s. [curfew, French.] Of earlier practice than William the Conqueror's time. It was an ancient custom among all the convents of the north, to put out their fire when a bell rung; and is mentioned in the Leges Burgorum sub Dav. rege Scotie, c. 86. See Lord Lyttelton's Hist. of Hen. II. i. 495. And Dr. Warton's Essay on Pope, i. 22. See also Laconbe in V. COURFEU. The old French word is curfew, or curfew, which comes nearer to our own. An evening-peal, by which the conqueror willed, that every man should rake up his fire, and put out his light; so that in many places at this day, where a bell is customarily rung towards bed time, it is said to ring curfew. Cicci.

Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice

To hear the solemn curfew. Shakespeare, Tempest.

On a plat of rising ground,

I hear the far off curfew-sound,

Over some well-water'd shore,

Swinging slow with mullen roar. Milton, Il. Pens.

2. A cover for a fire; a fireplate.

But now for pans, pots, curfews, counters and the like, the beauty will not be so much respected, so as the compound stuff is like to pass. Bacon.

CURIALITY. n. s. [from curialis, Latin.] The privileges, prerogatives, or perhaps retinue of a court.

The court and curiality. Bacon to Villiers.

CURIOSITY. n. s. [Fr. curiosité. Cotgrave.]

1. Inquisitiveness; inclination to enquiry.

First granting, as I do, it was a weakness

In me, but incident to all our sex,

Curiosity, inquisitive, importune
Of secrets.

Milton, S. A. 775.

2. Nicety; delicacy.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. Shakspeare, Timon.

3. Accuracy; exactness.

Qualities are so weighed, that curiosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Our senses, however armed or assisted, are too gross to discern the curiosity of the workmanship of nature. Ray.

4. An act of curiosity; nice experiment.

There hath been practised also a curiosity, to set a tree upon the north-side of a wall, and, at a little height, to draw it through the wall, and spread it upon the south-side; conceiving that the root and lower part of the stock should enjoy the freshness of the shade, and the upper boughs and fruit, the comfort of the sun; but it sortet not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. An object of curiosity; rarity.

We took a ramble together to see the curiosities of this great town. Addison, Freeholder.

CURIO'SO.* n. s. [Ital.] A curious person, such as we now call a virtuoso.

Dr. J. Wilkins, warden of Wadham college, the greatest curioso of his time, invited him and some of the musicians to his lodgings, purposely to have a consort. Life of A. Wood, p. 112.

CURIOUS.† adj. Sold Fr. curios, curious, Roq. modern, curieux; Lat. curiosus.

1. Inquisitive; desirous of information; addicted to enquiry.

Be not curious in unnecessary matters; for more things are shewn unto thee than men understand. Eccles. iii. 23.

Even then to them the spirit of lies suggests,
That they were blind, because they saw not ill;
And breath'd into their uncorrupted breasts

A curious wish, which did corrupt their will. Davies.

If any one too curious should enquire

After a victory which we disdain,

Then let him know the Belgians did retire

Before the patron saint of injur'd Spain. Dryden.

Render it any curious stay

To ask my hated name,

Tell them, the grave that hides my clay

Conceals me from my shame. Wesley.

2. Attentive to; diligent about: sometimes with after.

It is pity a gentleman so very curious after things that were elegant and beautiful, should not have been as curious as to their origin, their uses, and their natural history. Woodward.

3. Sometimes with of.

Then saith a senior of the place replies,
Well read, and curious of antiquities. Dryden, Fab.

4. Accurate; careful not to mistake.

Till Arianism had made it a matter of great sharpness and subtlety of wit to be a sound believing Christian, men were not curious what syllables or particles of speech they used. Hooker.

We all should be curious and watchful against vanities.

Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, i. § 2.

5. Difficult to please; solicitous of perfection; not negligent; full of care.

A temperate person is not curious of fancies and delicious-ness; he thinks not much, and speaks, not often of meat and drink. Taylor.

6. Exact; nice; subtle.

Both these senses embrace their objects at greater distance, with more variety, and with a more curious discrimination, than the other sense. Holder.

7. Artful; not neglectful; nicely diligent.

A vaile obscur'd the sunshine of her eyes,
he rose within herself her sweetness closed;

Each ornament about her seemly lies,

By chance, or careless art, composed. Fairfax.

8. Elegant; neat; laboured; finished.

Understanding to devise curious works, to work in gold.

Exodus.

9. Rigid; severe; rigorous.

For curious I cannot be with you
Signor Baptista, of whom I hear so well. Shakspeare.

CURIOUSLY.† adv. [from curious.]

1. Inquisitively; attentively; studiously.

He looked very curiously upon himself, sometimes fetching a little skip, as if he said his strength had not yet forsaken him. Sidney.

At first I thought there had been no light reflected from the water in that place; but observing it more curiously, I saw within it several smaller round spots, which appeared much blackier and darker than the rest. Newton, Opticks.

2. Elegantly; neatly.

Nor is it the having of wheels and springs, though never so curiously wrought, and artificially set, but the winding of them up, that must give motion to the watch. South.

3. Artfully; exactly.

My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.
Psal. cxxxix. 15.

4. Captiously.

CURIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from curious.]

1. Curiosity; inquisitiveness.

Shakspeare.

Ah! curiousness first cause of all our ill,
And yet the plague which most torment us still.

Sir W. Alexander's Hours, H. i. st. 62.

Thus curiousness to knowledge is the guide.

Sir W. Alexander's Hours, H. i. st. 63.

2. Exactness.

He pursues the rational purposes of his own art; that, to the excellence of the metal, he may also add the curiousness of the figure. South, Serm. viii. 321.

3. Nicety.

There is that coolness, and curiousness in a verse, which speaks it greatly unsuitable to the vehemence and seriousness of the prophetic spirit.

Sprucer, Vanity of Vain, Prophecies, p. 53.

CURL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A ringlet of hair.

She apparelled herself like a page, cutting off her hair, leaving nothing but the short curls to cover that noble head. Sidney.

Just as in act he stood, in clouds enshrin'd

Her hand she fasten'd on his hair behind;

Then backward by his yellow curls she drew

To him, and him alone confess'd in view. Dryden, Fab.

2. Undulation; wave; sinuosity; flexure.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plain and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from the sand holes. Newton, Opticks.

TO CURL.† v. a. [krollen, Dutch, cýppan, Sax. krille, Dan.]

1. To turn the hair in ringlets.

What hast thou been?—

—A serving man, proud in heart and mind, that curled my hair, wore gloves in my cap, served the lust of my mistress's heart, and did the act of darkness with her. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. To writhe; to twist.

I soon will find out the beds of snakes,
And with my youthful blood warm their cold flesh,
Letting them curl themselves about my limbs,
Than sleep one night with thee. Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

3. To dress with curls.

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her a kiss. Shakspeare.

They, up the trees
Climbing, sat thicker than the snaky locks
That curl'd Megæra.

Milton, P. P.

4. To raise in waves, undulations, or sinuosities.

The visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Sea would be pools, without the brushing air.
To curl the waves. Dryden, Fab.

To CURL.† v. n.

1. To shrink into ringlets.

Those slender aerial bodies are separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

2. To rise in undulations.

To every nobler portion of the town,
The curling billows roll their festless tide;
In parties now they straggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.
While curling smoke from village tops are seen. Pope.

3. To twist itself.

Then round her slender waist he curl'd,
And stamp'd an image of himself, a sov'reign of the world. Dryden, Fab.

4. To shrink back.

The very thinking it
Would make a citizen start! some politick tradesman Curl'd with the caution of a constable. B. Jonson, Mortimer's Fall.

CURL-HEADED.* adj. Having the hair of the head curled. Hulot.

CURLED-PATE.* adj. Having the hair curled. See CURL-HEADED.

Make curl'd pate ruffians bald.
Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

CURLEW. n. s. [cowlien, Fr. arquata, Lat.]

1. A kind of water-fowl, with a large beak of a grey colour, with red and black spots.

Among birds we reckon creysers, curlews and puffins. Carew.

2. A bird larger than a partridge, with longer legs. It runs very swiftly, and frequents the cornfields in Spain, in Sicily, and sometimes in France. Trevoux.

CURLINESS.* n. s. [from curl.] The state of anything curled. A modern word.

CURLING-IRONS.* n. s. [from curl and iron.] An invention to curl the hair with.

Finding that her literature was thrown away upon me, she bid me, with great vehemence, reach the curling-irons. Johnson, Idler, No. 46.

CURLINGLY.* adv. [from curling.] In a waving fashion or manner. Sherwood.

CURLY.* adj. Inclining to curl; falling into ringlets.

CURMU'DGEON.† n. s. [It is a vitious manner of pronouncing cœur méchant, Fr., Dr. Johnson says, which he received from an unknown correspondent. To this Mr. Nares subscribes. Dr. Ash has transferred this into his vocabulary, as if "an unknown correspondent" was the etymology; distinguishing cœur by the interpretation of unknown, and méchant by that of correspondent; which will always excite both in foreigners and natives a harmless smile! But, to be serious, I doubt the etymology given by Dr. Johnson's correspondent. The French cœur méchant means a bad heart, a malicious perverted mind; our curmudgeon signifies merely a miser, a griper, with some tincture of crossness. Nor is it in the usual manner of derivation from the French language to form a single word from a compound expression. Perhaps it is a derivation from the German curmede, a kind of vassalage in Germany, when the lord claimed, at the death of certain persons, such of their goods as he chose. Hence a German expression, curmedige güter, bona conductitia. See Ludewig, Jura Feudorum Rom. Imp. et Germ. Princip. 1740, p. 509. And Du Cange in V. CURMEDIA. From claims of this kind might easily arise an application to him who made them, similar to that of miser or griper; and the custom might also suggest our word. It is of no great age in our lexicography, being first, I believe, in that edition of Phillips's dictionary, which appeared in 1706. Anthony Wood, in the Life of himself, under the year 1661, writes it curmudgin. "Though he used it not half, yet at the year's end he add, like a curmudgin, sell it, and put the money in his purse." Some may perhaps think the word allied to a snarling cur, connecting it with the Saxon mupenung, a complaint, a murmuring. But the German custom seems the more rational etymology.] An avaricious churlish fellow; a miser; a niggard; a churl; a griper.

And when he has it in his claws,
He'll not be hide-bound to the cause;
Nor shalt thou find him a curmudgeon,
If thou dispatch it without grudging. Hudibras.

A man's way of living is commended, because he will give any rate for it; and a man will give any rate rather than pass for a poor wretch, or a penurious curmudgeon. Locke.

CURMU'DGEONLY. adj. [from curmudgeon.] Avaricious; covetous; churlish; niggardly.

In a country where he that killed a hog invited the neighbourhood, a curmudgeonly fellow advised with his companions how he might save the charge. L'Estrange.

CURRENT.† n. s. [ribes, Lat. Current is an equivocal word with us, taken either for the fruit of a shrub called in Latin ribes; or a small sort of grape, growing in Zante. The name current is taken from Corinthus, whence it's likely this fruit was first brought to us. Ray, Diction. Trilingue, p. 12. n.]

1. The tree hath no prickles; the leaves are large: The flower consists of five leaves, placed in form of a rose: the ovary, which arises from the centre of the flower-cup, becomes a globular fruit, produced in bunches.

The barberry and current most escape,
Though her small clusters imitate the grape. Tate's Cowley.

2. A small dried grape; properly written corinth.

They butter'd currants on fat veal bestow'd,
And rumps of beef with virgin honey st. w'd;
Insipid taste, old friend, to them who Paris know,
Where rocombole, shallot, and the rank garlic grow. Knap.

CURRENCY. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation; power of passing from hand to hand. The currency of those half-pence would, in the universal opinion of our people, be utterly destructive to this kingdom. Swift.

2. General reception: as, the report had a long currency.

3. Fluency; readiness of utterance; easiness of pronunciation.

4. Continuance; constant flow; uninterrupted course.

The currency of time to establish a custom, ought to be with a continuando from the beginning to the end of the term prescribed. Ayliffe, Parergon.

5. General esteem; the rate at which any thing is vulgarly valued.

He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, assisted as it is, and, may be, is no good mintman, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. The papers stamped in the English colonies by authority, and passing for money.

CURRENT. adj. [currens, Lat.]

1. Circulatory; passing from hand to hand.

Shekels of silver, current money with the merchant. Genesis, xxiii. 16.

That there was current money in Abraham's time is past doubt, though it is not sure that it was stamped; for he is said to be rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold. Arbutnot.

2. Generally received; uncontradicted; authoritative.

Many strange bruits are received for current. Sidney.

Because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state, are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, under this fair and plausible colour, whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. Hooker.

I have collected the facts, with all possible impartiality, from the current histories of those times. Swift.

3. Common; general.

They have been trained up from their infancy in one set of notions, without ever hearing or knowing what other opinions are current among mankind. Watts.

About three months ago we had a current report of the king of France's death. Addon.

4. Popular; such as is established by vulgar estimation.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Grew, Cosmol.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Off leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves our ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make
No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course, as, the current year.CURRENT. n. s.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
But his fair course is not hindered;
He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stones. Shakespeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion oftentimes seems to be quickest, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast,
Whose fame in thine, like lesser current's lost;
Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes,
To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Derhan.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays,
While through the sky his shining current strays. Pope.

2. [In navigation.] Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harris.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invested by Pheidias the Lacedemonian insidiously, which drew on a surprise of the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adj. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forestalled, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

3. Popularly; fashionably; generally.

4. Without ceasing.

CURRENTNESS. n. s. [from current.]

1. Circulation.

2. General reception.

3. Easiness of pronunciation.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden, Remains.

CURRICULE.* *n. s.*1. A course. [Lat. curriculum.]

Upon a curricule in this world depends a long course of the next, and upon a narrow scene here an endless expansion hereafter. Brown, Christ. Mor. ii. 23.

2. A chariot. [Lat. curriculus; old Fr. curicule, un petit chariot. Lacombe.] In modern times the word has been adopted for an open chaise with two wheels drawn by two horses abreast.CURRIER.* n. s. [from cur, old Fr. curarius, Lat.]

One who dresses and pares leather for those who make shoes, or other things.

A currier bought a bearskin of a huntsman, and laid him down ready money for it. L'Estrange.

Warn'd by frequent ills, the way they found
To lodge their foathsome carrion under ground;
For useless to the currier were their hides,
Nor could their tainted flesh with ocean tides
Be free'd from filth. Dryden, Virg.

CURRISH. adj. [from cur.] Having the qualities of a degenerate dog; brutal; sour; quarrelsome; malignant; churlish; uncivil; untractable; impracticable.

Sweet speaking of a currish heart reclaims. Sidney.

No care of justice, nor no rule of reason,
Did thenceforth ever enter in his mind,
But cruelty, the sign of currish kind. Spenser, Hubb. Talc.

In fashions wayward, and in love unkind;
For Cupid deigns not wound a currish mind. Fairfax.

I would she were in heaven, so she could Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew. Shakespeare.

She says your dog was a cur; and tells you, currish thanks is good enough for such a present. Shakespeare.

CURRISHLY.* adv. [from currish.] In a brutal or malignant manner.

Boner being restored againe,—currishly, without all order of law or honesty,—wrested from them all the livings they had. Forc's Acts and Mon. Acc. of Ridley.

To use or deal currishly with. Sherwood.

CURRISHNESS.* n. s. [from currish.] Moroseness; churlishness; malignity.

Diogenes, though he had wit, by his currishness got the name of dog. Pelham, Res. ii. 69.

Hell's porter, Cerberus,
That currishness into our breasts dost put!

May's Lucan, B. 6.

To CURRY.* v. a. [Fr. courroyer, from corium, leather, Lat.]

1. To dress leather, by beating and rubbing it.

1. To beat; to drub; to thrash; to chastise.

He hath well curried thy coat. Barret, 1580.

I have seen him

Curry a fellow's carcass handsomely.

Beaumont and Fl. Island Princess.

A deep design in't to divide

The well affected that confide;

By setting brother against brother,

To claw and curry one another.

Hudibras.

I may expect her to take care of her family, and curry her hide in case of refusal.

Addison, Spect.

3. To rub a horse with a scratching instrument, so as to smooth his coat, and promote his flesh.

Your short horse is soon curried.

Beaumont and Fl. Valentinian.

4. To scratch in kindness; to rub down with flattery; to tickle.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow.

Shakspeare.

5. To CURRY FAVOUR. To become a favourite by petty officiousness, slight kindnesses, or flattery. [This expression requires further illustration, than the preceding words of Dr. Johnson. The rubbing down a horse, is a process that conveys pleasure to the animal. So much for curry in the present instance; but favour is a corruption. The true word is favel, as Mr. Donce has abundantly shewn in his Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 474. Thus, in the Merch. Tale of Beryn, in Urry's Chaucer, p. 597. "As though he had lerned curry favel of some old fere." Now the name of favel, Mr. Donce observes, was anciently given to yellow-coloured horses, in like manner as bayard, blanchard, and lyard were to brown, white, or gray. One of Richard the First's horses, he adds, was so called. Robert of Brunne's Chron. p. 175. He therefore rightly concludes, that to curry favel, or, as we now say, to curry favour, is a metaphorical expression adopted from the stable.]

He judged them still over-abstractly to fawn upon the heavens, and to curry favour with infidels.

Hooker.

This humour succeeded so with the puppy, that an ass would go the same way to work to curry favour for himself.

L'Estrange.

CURRY.* n. s. A word imported from the East-Indies, denoting a mixture of various catables, a very relishable composition. The leaves of the canthium parviflorum, one of the plants of the Coromandel coast, being much used in curries, that plant has also there the name of kwa, which means esculent. See Plants of the Coromandel Coast, 1795.

CURRYCOMB. n. s. [from curry and comb.] An iron instrument used for currying or cleaning horses.

He has a clearer idea from a little print than from a long definition; and so he would have of strigil and sistrum, if, instead of a currycomb and cymbal, he could see stamped in the margin small pictures of these instruments.

Locke.

CURRYING.* n. s. [from the verb.] The act of rubbing down a horse.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full; as we see both in men, and in the currying of horses: the cause is, for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits and blood to the parts.

Bacon.

To CURSE. v. a. [Cyprian, Saxon.]

1. To wish evil to; to execrate; to devote.

Curse me this people; for they are too mighty for me.

Numbers, xxxiii. 6.

After Soyman had looked upon the dead body, and bitterly curst the same, he caused a great weight to be tied unto it, and so cast into the sea.

Kholles.

What, yet again! the third time hast thou curst me;

This imprecation was for Laius' death,

And thou hast wished me like him.

Dryden and Lee.

2. To mischief; to afflict; to torment.

On impious realms and barb'rous kings impose

Thy plagues, and curse 'em with such sons as those.

Pope.

To CURSE. v. n. To imprecate; to deny or affirm with imprecation of divine vengeance.

The silver about which thou curstedst, and speakest of also in my ears, behold the silver is with me.

Jud. xvi. 2.

CURSE.† n. s. [Sax. cupp.]

1. Malediction; wish of evil to another.

Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul.

Job.

I never went from your lordship but with a longing to return, or without a hearty curse to him who invented ceremonies, and put me on the necessity of withdrawing.

Dryden.

2. Affliction; torment; vexation.

Curse on the stripling! how he apes his sire!

Ambitiously sententious!

Addison, Cato.

CURSED. part. adj. [from curse.]

1. Deserving a curse; hateful; detestable; abominable; wicked.

Merciful pow'r's!

Restrain in me the curst thoughts that nature

Gives way to in repose.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Unholy; unsanctified; blasted by a curse.

Come lady, while heav'n lends us grace,

Let us fly this curst place,

Lest the sorcerer us entice

With some other new device;

Not a waste or needless sound,

Till we come to holier ground.

Milton, Comus.

3. Vexatious; troublesome.

This curst quarrel be no more renew'd;

Be, as becomes a wife, obedient still;

Though griev'd, yet subject to her husband's will.

Dryden.

One day, I think, in Paradise he liv'd;

Destin'd the next his journey to pursue,

Where wounding thorns and curst thistles grew.

Prior.

CURSEDLY. adv. [from curst.] Miserably; shamefully; a low cant word.

Satisfaction and restitution lies so curst hard on the gizzards of our publicans.

L'Estrange.

Sure this is a nation that is curst afraid of being overrun with too much politeness, and cannot regain one great genius but at the expence of another.

Pope.

CURSEDNESS. n. s. [from curst.] The state of being under a curse.

CURSER.* n. s. [from curse.] One that utters curses or execrations.

All men, lovers of virtue, ought to hold him for a viper, and like a curser of father and mother.

Wodroephe's Fr. Gram. (1623.) p. 332.

The curse causeless: as, the pope's excommunications, and execrations, with bell, book, and candle. Such cursters are curst; the curse will fall upon the curser's head.

Bp. Richardson on the O. T. Test. (1655.) p. 298.

The curser's punishment should fight the curse.

Dryden, Rel. Lairi.

CURSHIP. n. s. [from cur.] Dogship; meanness; scoundrelship.

How durst th', I say, oppose thy curship,

'Gainst arms, authority, and worship.

Hudibras.

CURSING.* n. s. [Sax. cuppung.] An execration; a curse.

He read all the words of the law, the blessings and curings.

Isaiah, viii. 1.

Theodoret calls them execrations, curings, and reviling God.

Abp. Laud.

CURSITOR. n. s. [Latin.] An officer or clerk belonging to the Chancery, that makes out original writs. They are called clerks of course, in the oath of the clerks of Chancery. Of these there are twenty-four in number, which have certain shires allotted to each of them, into which they make out such original writs as are required. They are a corporation among themselves. Corvel.

Then is the recognition and value, signed with the handwriting of that justice, carried by the curstitor in Chancery for that shire where those lands do lie, and by him is a writ of covenant thereupon drawn, and ingrossed in parchment. Bacon.

CURSORY. adj. [from cursor, Latin.] Cursory; hasty; careless. A word, I believe, only found in the following line.

I have but with a cursorary eye
O'erglanc'd the articles. Shakespeare, Hist. V.

CURSORILY. adv. [from cursor.] Hastily; without care; without solicitous attention.

We are so far from slighting or contemning the Scripture, that we are the great admirers of it, and do endeavour to advance it above all other writings whatsoever, and that even in natural things, though never so accidentally or cursorily handled. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 254.

I shall speak cursorily of every thing but that which I had immediately from himself. Burnet, Life of Id. Rochester.

This power, and no other, Luther disowns, as any one that views the place but cursorily must needs see. Atterbury.

CURSORINESS. n. s. [from cursor.] Slight attention.

CURSORY. † adj. [from cursorius, Latin.]

1. Hasty; quick; inattentive; careless.

Some eminent instructive expressions of Holy Writ, which are not obvious to every cursor and superficial reader.

Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 266.

The first, upon a cursor and superficial view, appeared like the head of another man. Addison.

2. Going about; not stationary.

Father Cresswell, legier jesuit in Spain; father Baldwin, legier in Flaunders, as parsons at Rome; besides their cursoric men, as Gerrard, &c.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1606), sign. F.

CURST. adj. Froward; peevish; malignant; mischievous; malicious; snarling.

Mr. Mason, after his manner, was very merry with both parties, pleasantly playing both with the shrewd touches of many curst boys, and with the small discretion of many lewd schoolmasters. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. Proverb.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,

Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewishness:

I am a right maid for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,

Is, that she is intolerably curst,

And shrewd and forward, so beyond all measure,

That, were my state far worse than it is,

I would not wed her for a mine of gold. Shakespeare.

When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight to do it with curst speech,

I threaten'd to discover him. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

And though his mind

Be ne'er so curst, his tongue is kind. Cromwell.

CURSTNESS. n. s. [from curst.] Peevishness; frowardness; malignity.

Then, noble partners,

Touch you the sourest points with sweetest terms,

Nor curstness grow to the matter. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Her mouth she writh'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And every feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden

CURT. † adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

Such a latitude of years may hold a considerable corner in the general map of time; and a man may have a curt epitome of the whole course thereof in the days of his own life. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 28.

Peck! His name is curt,

A monosyllable, but [he] commands the horse well. B. Jonson, New Inv.

TO CURTAIL. † v. a. [curto, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut, being called curtal dogs, the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion. So far Dr. Johnson. But the word is rather from the Fr. tailleur court, and is applicable, as the examples shew, to any deficiency. Nor was curtal, as applied to dogs, always formerly written as he states; but also in a manner which points out the etymology of curt, short, and tail. "The curt-tail'd fox, in the fable, endeavoured to have all foxes cut-tailed." Junius, Sin Stigm. (1539) p. 449.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time

Into this breathing world. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,

And curtail our own privilege?

Indubras.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would assuredly curtail and retrench the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition, as it would shorten the opportunities of vice. Woodward.

* Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we must, has so miserably curtailed some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison, Spect.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the court, that Fact his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having curtailed it of three letters; for that his name was not Fact but Faction. Addison.

CURTAIL DOG. n. s. A dog lawed, or mutilated, according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in coursing. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think, if my breast had not been made of faith, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtail dog, and made me turn the wheel. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

CURTAILER. \ n. s.* [from curtail.] One who cuts off, or leaves out, any thing.

This conduct of theirs—served to shew that the Latins had not been interpolators of the Creed, but that the Greeks had been curtailers. Waterland, on the Athan. Cr. s. § 21.

CURTAILING. \ n. s.* [from the verb.] Abbreviation. Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings, and quaint modernisms. Swift.

CURTAIN. † n. s. [old Fr. courtine. V. Lacombe, vol. ii. in voce; Lat. cortina.] Our own word was sometimes anciently written cortine.]

1. A cloth contracted or expanded at pleasure, to admit or exclude the light; to conceal or discover any thing; to shade a bed; to darken a room.

Their curtains ought to be kept open, so as to renew the air. Arbutnot on Diet.

So through white curtains shot a timorous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

Thy hand, great Dulness! lets the curtain fall,

And universal darkness buries all. Pope.

C U R.

2. To draw the CURTAIN. To close it so as to shut out the light, or conceal the object.

I must draw a curtain before the work for a while, and keep your patience a little in suspense. Barnet's Theory.

Once more I write to you, and this once will be the last: the curtain will soon be drawn between my friend and me, and nothing left but to wish you a long good night. Pope.

3. To open it so as to discern the object.

So soon as the all-clearing sun
Should in the farthest East begin to draw
The shady curtain from Aurora's bed.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone;
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtain will be drawn.

Crashaw.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the wall or rampart that lies between two bastions. Military Dict.

The governor, not discouraged, suddenly of timber and boards raised up a curtain twelve foot high, at the back of his soldiers. Knollys.

CURTAIN-LECTURE. n. s. [from curtain and lecture.]

A reproof given by a wife to her husband in bed.

What endless brawls by wives are bred!
The curtain-lecture makes a mournful bed. Dryden, Arg.
She ought to exert the authority of the curtain-lecture, and if she finds him of a rebellious disposition, to tame him.

Addison.

To CURTAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose or accommodate with curtains.

Now o'er one half the world
Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleep.

Shakespeare, Macb.

The wand'ring prince and Dido,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave.

Til. Andron.

But in her temple's last recess inclos'd,
On Dulness' lap the anointed head repos'd:
Him close the curtain'd round with vapours blew,
And soft be sprinkled with cimmerian dew.

Pope.

CURTAL.* n. s. [Fr. countault.] A horse with a docked tail.

Cotgrave.

Hold my stirrup, my one lacquey; and look to my curtal, the other. B. Jonson, Masques.

CURTAL.* adj. [from curt.] Brief, or abridged.

Matters of this moment, as they were not to be decided there by those divines, so neither are they to be determined here by essays and curtal aphorisms, but by solid proofs of Scripture. Milton, Eikonoclastes.

CURTATE Distance. n. s. [In astronomy.] The distance of a planet's place from the sun, reduced to the ecliptick.

CURTATION. n. s. [from curto, to shorten, Latin.] The interval between a planet's distance from the sun and the curtate distance. Chambers.

CURTELASSE.* } See CUTLASS.
CURTELAX.*** }

CURTILAGE.* n. s. [old Fr. cortillage, "petit jardin, cour d'une maison située à la campagne qui n'est point fermée de murs, mais de hayes." Lacombe. Low Lat. cortilagium, from curs, cortis.] A garden, yard, or field, or other piece of ground, lying near, or belonging to, a messuage. Cowel.

CURTLY.* adv. [from curt.] Briefly.

Here Mr. Licentiat shew'd his art; and bath so curtly, succinctly, and concisely — epitomiz'd the long story of the captive. Gayton, Notes on D. Quir. v. 25.

CURTSY. See COURTESY.

CURVATED. adj. [curvatus, Latin.] Bent; crooked.

CURVATION.* n. s. [curvo, Latin.] The act of bending or crooking.

C U S

As for his session, we must not look upon it as determining any posture of his body, corresponding to the curvation of our limbs. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

CURVATURE.* n. s. [old Fr. curvatur.] Crookedness; inflexion; manner of bending.

It is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included narrow.

Cheyne, Phil. Prim.

Placed it was beyond the activity of the muscle, and curvature of the ossicles, to give it a due tension. Holder.

CURVE. adj. [curvus, Latin.] Crooked; bent; inflected; not straight.

Unless an intrinsic principle of gravity or attraction, make it describe a curve line about the attracting body.

Bentley.

CURVE. n. s. Any thing bent; a flexure or crookedness of any particular form.

And as you lead it round, in artful curve,

With eye intente mark the springing game. Thomson.

To CURVE. v. a. [curvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook; to inflect.

And the tongue is drawn back and curved. Holder.

To CURVE. v. n. [curvatura, Italian.]

1. To leap; to bound.

Cry, holla! to thy tongue! I pry thee: it curvets unseasonably. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Himself he on an earwig set,
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curve,
Ere he himself could settle.

Dryden, Nymphal.

Seiz'd with unwonted pain, surpris'd with fright,

The wounded steed curvets; and, rais'd upright,

Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind. Dryden, Æn.

2. To frisk; to be licentious.

CURVET.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A leap; a bound.

The king — ran his curvets so openly, and made his turns and returns in the head of the army, that so fair a mark invited his enemies' arrows to hit him. Fuller, Holy War, p. 148.

2. A frolic; a prank.

CURVILINEAR. adj. [curvus and linea, Lat.]

1. Consisting of a crooked line.

The impulse continually draws the celestial body from its rectilinear motion, and forces it into a curvilinear orbit; so that it must be repeated every minute of time. Cheyne.

2. Composed of crooked lines.

CURVITY. n. s. [from curve.] Crookedness.

The joined ends of that bone and the incus receding, make a more acute angle at that joint, and give a greater curvity to the posture of the ossicles. Holder on Speech.

CURULE.* adj. [Lat. curulis.] An epithet applied to the chair, in which the Roman magistrates had a right to sit; which our own poet, Butler, has playfully adopted, and also employed as signifying magisterial.

We that are wisely mounted higher
Than constables in curule wit.

Hudibras.

These mounted on a chair curule,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool.

Hudibras.

And Tully's curule chair, and Milton's golden lyre.

Akenside.

CUSHION. n. s. [kussen, Dutch; coussin, French.]

A pillow for the seat; a soft pad placed upon a chair.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Shakespeare, J. Caesar

If you are learn'd,
Be not as common fools; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

But ere they sat, officious Baucis lays
Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise;
Coarse, but the best she had. Drayden, Fab.

An Eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence; and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal, for the son to sit on. Swift.

CUSHIONED. adj. [from cushion.] Seated on a cushion; supported by cushions.

Many, who are cushioned upon throne, would have remained in obscurity. Dissertation on Parties.

CUSHIONET. n. s. [Fr. coussinet.] A little cushion; that which resembles a small cushion.

Upon these pretty cushionets did lie
Ten thousand beauties, and as many smiles,
Chaste blandishments, and genuine courtesies.

Beaumont's Psyche, vi. 290.

CUSP. n. s. [cuspis, Latin.] A term used to express the points or horns of the moon, or other luminary.

Harris.

CUSPATED. adj. [from cuspis, Latin.] A word expressing the leaves of a flower ending in a point. Quincy.

CUSPIDAL. adj. [from the Lat. cuspidis.] Sharp; ending in a point.

This enters and raiseth up into life and beauty the whole corporeal world, orders the lowest projection of life, viz. the real cuspidis of the cone infinitely multiplied, awaking that immense mist of atoms into several energies, into fiery, watery, and earthly; and, placing her magical attractive points, sucks hither and thither to every centre a due proportion, and rightly disposed number of these cuspidal particles.

More, Notes on Psych. p. 346.

TO CUSPIDATE. v. a. [from the Lat. cuspidare.] Dr. Johnson notices, with cuspidate, the adjective cuspidated; but knew not that the verb existed in our language.] To sharpen. Cockeram.

CUSPIS. n. s. [Lat.] The sharp end of a thing. See CUSPIDAL.

The multiplied cuspis of the cone is nothing but the last projection of life from Psyche. More, Notes on Psych. p. 425.

CUSTARD. n. s. [cwstard, Welsh.] A kind of sweet-meat made by boiling eggs with milk and sugar till the whole thickens into a mass. It is a food much used in city feasts.

He cram'd them, till their guts did ake,
With candle, custard, and plumb cake. Hudibras.

Now may'st and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay;
Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day. Pope.

CUSTODIAL. adj. [from custody.] Relating to custody, or guardianship.

Ecclesia commendata, so called in contradistinction to ecclesia titolata, is that church, which for the custodial charges and government thereof, is by a revocable collation concredited with some ecclesiastical person, in the nature of a trustee.

Lett. to the Bp. of Rochester, (1772) p. 2.

CUSTODY. n. s. [custodia, Latin.]

1. Imprisonment; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstrated unto queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advised her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody. Bacon.

For us enslav'd, is custody severe,
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment Inflicted. Milton, P. L.

2. Care; guardianship; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle. Num. iii. 36.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou rust
So great a charge from thine own custody. Shakespeare.

An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody. Knollys.

There is generally but one coin stamp'd upon the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it: by this means the whole fame is in his own custody. Addison.

3. Defence; preservation; security.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas. Bacon.

CUSTOM. n. s. [coutume, French.]

1. Habit; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war;
All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship. Locke.

2. Fashion; common way of acting.

And the priest's custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hands. 1 Samuel, ii.

3. Established manner.

According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord. St. Luke, i.

4. Practice of buying of certain persons.

You say he is assiduous in his calling, and is he not grown rich by it? Let him have your custom, but not your votes. Addison.

5. Application from buyers: as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.] A law or right, not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practised. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued so one hundred years; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular: general, that which is current through England; particular is that which belongs to this or that county; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town. Custom differs from prescription; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man: prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom. Cowel.

7. Tribute; tax paid for goods imported, or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the escheats and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts. Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs, in England. Temple.

Custom to steal is such a trivial thing,
That 'tis their charter to defraud their king. Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britain bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallic trade. Arbutnot.

TO CUSTOM. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay the duty at the custom-house for goods exported or imported.

The ships are safe, riding in Malta road;
And all the merchants, with other merchandize,
Are safe arriv'd, and have sent me to know,
Whether yourself will come and custom them.

Marlow, Jew of Malta.

TO CUSTOM. v. u. To accustom, which see.

For on a bridge he custometh to fight. Spenser, F. Q.

CUSTOM-HOUSE. n. s. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some custom-house officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thrifty squires, are the only thriving people amongst us. Swift.
CUSTOMABLE.† adj. [old Fr. coutenable. Not a single example has hitherto been given of this useful word.] Common; habitual; frequent.

Ye shall fynde it more at large declared in the christen exhortacyon unto customable swearers.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543.) fol. 90. b.

Among the Greeks, by reason of their familiar and customable maner of speeche, one vocable serveth, &c.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) F. f. 4. b.

The customable shooting at home, specially at butts and pricks, makes nothing at all for strong shooting, which doth most good in war. Ascham, Torophilus.

Through the customable use thereof, this vice [adultery] is grown unto such a height, that in a manner among many it is counted no sinne at all. Homilies, B. i. p. 78.

They use the customable adornings of the country.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands, p. 39.

CUSTOMABLENESS. n. s. [from customable.]

1. Frequency; habit.

2. Conformity to custom.

CUSTOMABLY.† adv. [from customable.] According to custom.

Works of darkness, not only because they are customably in darkness, &c. Homilies, B. i. Against Adultery.

Kingdoms have customably been carried away by right of succession, according to proximity of blood. Hayward.

And because I observe that fear and dull disposition, lukewarmness, and sloth, are not seldomer wont to cloak themselves under the affected name of moderation, than true and lively zeal is customably disparaged with the term of indiscretion, bitterness, and choler. Milton, Apology for Smecton.

CUSTOMARILY.† adv. [from customary.] Habitually; commonly.

He underwent those previous pains, which customarily antecede that suffering. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without consideration, is one of the highest indignities and affronts that can be offered him. Ray.

CUSTOMARINESS. n. s. [from customary.] Frequency; commonness; frequent occurrence.

A vice, which, for its guilt, may justify the sharpest, and for its customariness the frequentest invectives, which can be made against it. Government of the Tongue.

CUSTOMARY. adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom; according to prescription.

Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices, that I may be consul: I have here the customary gown. Shakespeare.

Several ingenious persons, whose assistance might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief. Glanville, Secusis.

2. Habitual.

We should avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing, and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it. Tillotson.

3. Usual; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him
 With customary compliment, when he,
 Wasting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
 A lip of much contempt, speeds from me. Shakespeare.

CUSTOMED.† adj. [from custom.] Usual; common; accustomed.

No natural exhalation in the sky,
 No common wind, no customed event,
 But they will pluck away its natural cause,
 And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakespeare, K. John.

To wring the widow from her custom'd right. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Adam wak'd, so custom'd. Milton, P. L.

One morn I miss'd him on the custom'd hill. Gray, Elegy.
CUSTOMER.† n. s. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house; for here be many old customers. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to hire
 A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do.

To persuade customers to buy their goods. Roscommon.

Lord Strut has bespoken his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop: Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day? Arbutnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement. Swift.

I shewed you a piece of black and white stuff, just sent from the dyer, which you were pleased to approve of, and be my customer for. Swift.

2. A common woman. This sense is now obsolete.

I marry her!—What, a customer?—Pr'ythee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. A toll-gatherer; a collector of customs. Barret and Sherwood. This sense also, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson, is now obsolete.

That memorable example of Zacheus's conversion from his evil way of covetousness and extortion, as a common customer. Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 184.

CUSTREL.† n. s.

1. A buckler-bearer, [Fr. constillier. This word is sometimes written coistrel.]

Every one had an archer, a demulce, and a custrel (as our history calls it, but being truly constillier) or a kind of ambacut, or servant belonging to him, besides three great horses for his own use. Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 9.

2. A vessel for holding wine. Ainsworth.

CUSTOMARY.* n. s. [Fr. coutumier.] A book of laws and customs.

The old law of the Lombards gave first use, and the express words of the Norman customary are, "Qu'ils ne puent avoir autre instrument, &c." Seld'n's Duell. ch. 8.

It was drawn from the old Germanick or Gothick customary; from the feudal institutions, which must be considered as an emanation from that customary.

Burke on a Regicide's Peace.

TO CUT.† pret. cut; part. pass. cut. [probably from the Fr. couteau, a knife, Dr. Johnson says. Serenins, in the Appendix to his Syn. Dict. traces it to the West-Goth. kota, to cut. Some have thought it may be referred to the Gr. κόττω, to cut.]

1. To penetrate with an edged instrument; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
 That my great heart may have some scope to beat,
 Or else I swoon with this dead killine leas. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,
 The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
 And severs 'em for ever. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Some I have cut away with scissars. Wicman, Surgery.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon. 2 Chron. ii.

3. To carve; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
 Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakespeare.

The triumphal is defaced by time; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building. Addison.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Exod. xxxix. 3.

5. To divide by passing through.

Before the whistling winds the vessels fly,
 With rapid swiftness cut the liquid way,
 And reach Gerestus at the point of day. Virg., Odyssey.

6. To pierce with any uneasy sensation.

The man was cut to the heart with these consolations.

Addison.

7. To divide packs of cards.

Supine they in their heav'n remain,
Exempt from passion and from pain;
And frankly leave us, human clives,
To cut and shuffle for ourselves.

Prior.

We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Our clives both cut and shuffled them.

Prior.

Take a fresh pack, nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.

Granville.

8. To intersect; to cross: as, one line cuts another at right angles.

9. To castrate.

Hudoc.

Sometimes an old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity. Addison, Spect.

Wilt thou buy there some high heads of the newest cut for my daughter. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

13. It seems anciently to have signified a fool or cully. To cut still signifies to cheat, in low language.

Send her money, knight: if thou hast her not in the end, call me cut. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

14. A horse; a gelding; and perhaps the preceding definition, which is Dr. Johnson's, should be merged in this. The commentators on Shakspeare say, that cut there means a horse.

You lustie youths who nourish high desire, Abase your plumes which make you look so big: The collier's cut, the courtier's steed, will tire: Even so the clarks the parson's gawt doth dig. Glasgow, Parad. of Dainty Devices, (1592.)

He'll buy me a white cut forth for to ride. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

15. CUT and long tail. A proverbial expression for men of all kinds; it is borrowed from dogs. He will maintain you like a gentlewoman. — Ay, that I will, come cut and long tail, under the degree of a squire. Shakspeare, M. W. of Windsor.

At quintin he, In honour of this bridelee, Hath challeng'd either wide countee: Come cut and long tail; for there be Six bachelors as bold as he. B. Jonson, Underwood.

He dances very finely, and very comely, And for a jig, come cut and long tail to him, He turns ye like a top. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

CUTANEOUS. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Relating to the skin. This serous, nutritious mass is more readily circulated into the cutaneous or remotest parts of the body. Floyer on Humours. Some sorts of cutaneous eruptions are occasioned by feeding much on acid unripe fruits and farinaceous substances. Abulnol.

CUTE.* adj. [generally supposed to be a vulgar contraction of acute, Lat. acutus; but it may be the Sax. cuð.] Clever; sharp. Still used in the north of England.

CUTICLE. n. s. [cuticula, Latin.]

1. The first and outermost covering of the body, commonly called the scarf-skin. This is that soft skin which rises in a blister upon any burning, or the application of a blistering-plaster: It sticks close to the surface of the true skin, to which it is also tied by the vessels which nourish it, though they are so small as not to be seen. When the scarf-skin is examined with a microscope, it appears to be made up of several lays of exceeding small scales. Quincy.

In each of the very fingers there are bones and gristles, and ligaments and membranes, and muscles and tendons, and nerves, and arteries, and veins and skin, and cuticle. Al. nail.

2. A thin skin formed on the surface of any liquor. When any saline liquor is evaporated to cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances in rank and file. Newton's Opt.

CUTICULAR. adj. [from cutis, Latin.] Belonging to the skin.

CUTH, signifies knowledge or skill. 'So Cuthwin is a knowing conquerour; Cuthred a knowing counsellor; Cuthbert, famous for skill. Much of the same nature are Sophocles and Sophoclanus. Gibson's Camden.

CUTLASS.† n. s. [coutelas, French.] This word is written sometimes cutlace, sometimes cutleax: in Spenser, cutlaxe; in Shakspeare, cutleaxe; and in Pope, cutlash.] A broad cutting sword: the word is much in use among the sea-folk.

Were't not better
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant cutleax upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. Shakspeare, As you like it.

To the lodgements of his herd he run,
Where the fat porkers slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlash launch'd the spouting blood,
These quarter'd, sing'd, and fix'd on forks of wood. Pope.

Mores, in his curious dissertation on letter-founders, calls a cutlass, as it seems, a courtelass, among the antique typographical ornaments. Barton, Notes on Milton.

CUTLER. n. s. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A paultry ring
That she did give, whose poesy was
For all the world like cutler's poetry;
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakspeare.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Wolton.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clarendon.

CUTLERY.† n. s. [from cutler.] The ware or articles which are made by cutlers.

CUTLET.† n. s. [Fr. cotelette, i. e. petite cote.] A steak; properly, a rib.

So mutton cutlets, prime of meat. Swift.

CUTPURSE. n. s. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,
A cutpurse, for burglary abroad? Tudibras.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be cutpurses and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves. Beutley, Sermon.

CUTTER.† n. s. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing; as, a stone-cutter.

Never saw I figures
So likely to report themselves; the cutter
Was, as another nature, dumb. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

He who is called the cutter, or dissector, with an Ethiopick stone cuts away as much of the flesh as the law commands. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 243.

2. A nimble boat that cuts the water. [So the low Lat. cota, a kind of ship. V. Du Cange in CETA. See note Cor.]

3. [Inch.] The teeth that cut the meat.
The cutter or grinders are behind, nearest the centre of the jaw, because there is a greater strength or force required to cut meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the incisors. Ray on the Creation.

CUT

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then casts the same into the court to be written upon. Cowel.

5. A ruffian; a bravo; 't one that goeth privily with a short sword; a murderer." Barrel.

6. CUTTER off. A destroyer.
"Indeed, there is fortune too hard for nature; when fortune makes nature's natural the cutter off of nature. Swift.

CUT-THROAT. n. s. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolles.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horrid instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

CUT-TIFTHROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carcen, Surv. of Cornwall.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat-soldiers are abroad;
'Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
To save complaints and prosecution, kill. Dryden, Juv.

CUTTING.† n. s. [from cut.]

1. A piece cut off; a chop.
The burning of the cuttings of vines, and casting them upon land, doth much good. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Many are propagated above ground by slips or cuttings. Ray.

2. INISION.
Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you. Levit. xix. 28.

3. CAPER; curvet; [from To CUT a Caper.]
'Some ladies make a better shew of their countenances in those dances, wherein are divers changes, cuttings, turning, and agitations of the body, than in some dances of state and gravity. Florio's Tr. of Montaigne's Essays, p. 228.

4. Division, as of a pack of cards. See the eleventh sense of CUT.

It is here said, there has been much shuffling and cutting in England, and we do not understand what, or who is turned up trump. Hill's Lett. Lett. to him, (1659,) p. 206.

CUTTLE.† n. s. [Lat. sepia, Sax. cutele.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Bacon.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray on the Creation.

CUTTLE.† n. s. [from cuttle.]

1. A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the saucy cuttle with me. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

2. A knife. The commentators on Shakspeare say that this was the cant expression for the knife used by sharpers, in Shakspeare's time, to cut the bottoms of purses; and that the preceding eloquence might allude to this term. But they were not aware that cuttle is a serious term, in use long before Shakspeare wrote.

Dismembering himself with a sharp cuttle.
Bale, Eng. Vol. (1550.) B. ii. C. 2. b.

CUTWORK.† n. s. [cut and work.] Work in embroidery.

sow-bread.

Thirdly, a kind of cyclamen, or sow-bread.

• Transplant autumnal cyclamen now, if you would change their place.
 Evelyn, Gardener's Kal.

CYCLES.* n. s. [cyclos, Latin; κύκλος.]
• A circle.

• A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a cyclical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to style a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof.
Holker on Time.

• A method, or account of a method continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptable work, if here we endeavour to present our gardeners with a complete Cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

• Imaginary orbs; a circle in the heavens.

How build, unbuild contrive
To save appearances; how gird the sphere
With centrick and concentrick, scrib'd o'er
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb!
Milton, P. L.

CYCLOID.* n. s. [from κυκλοειδης, of κύκλος and εἶδος, shape.] A geometrical curve, of which the genesis may be conceived by imagining a nail in the circumference of a wheel: the line which the nail describes in the air, while the wheel revolves in a right line, is the cycloid.

A man may form to himself the notion of a parabola, or a cycloid, in the mathematical definition of those figures.

CYCLOIDAL.* adj. [from cycloid.] Relating to a cycloid; as, the cycloidal space, is the space contained between the cycloid and its substance.
Reid's Inquiry.
Chambers.

CYCLOMETRY.* n. s. [Gr. κύκλος, a circle, and μέτρον.] The art of measuring cycles or circles.

I must tell you, that Sir H. Savile had confuted Joseph Scaliger's cyclometry. Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, (1656,) p. 116.

CYCLOPÆDIA.* n. s. [κύκλος and παιδεία.] A circle of knowledge; a course of the sciences.

CYCLOPEAN.* adj. [from the Cyclopes, who are feign'd to have assisted Vulcan in forming the thunderbolts of Jupiter.] Vast; terrific. See
CYCLOPEAN.

The cyclopean furnace of all wicked fashions, the heart, calls my speech to it.
Bp. Hall, Sermon, Fash. of the World.

CYCLOPEDE.* n. s. The more modern term for cyclopaedia, which see.

Heavy penalties were imposed on those academics, who relinquished the sacred text, to explain the tedious and unedifying commentaries on Peter Lombard's scholastic cyclopede of divinity, called the Sentences, which alone were sufficient to constitute a moderate library.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 450.

CYCLOPEAN.* adj. [from the Cyclopes. See CYCLO-
PEAN.] The French have the adjective cyclopien
note furious, monstrous, or cruel.] Savarreng a bill of defiance to all physicians, chirurgeons, as so many bold giants, or cyclopien seek to fight against heaven by their doses!

Bp. Taylor, Artif

He is no better than a savage beast, and hath a heart o iron and cyclopien breasts, that can invade heaven, and rol
God; and put down the prerogatives of his king, and poi mankind of all safety. Bp. Williams, Chap. of Tr. (1663,) p. 3.

CYDER.* See CIDER.

CYNET.* n. s. [from cycnus, Latin.] A young swan.
I am the cynnet to this pale faint swan,
Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death.

Shakspeare, A. John.

So doth the swan her downy cynnets save,

Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI

Cynnets, from grey, turn white.

Bacon, Nat. Hist

Young cynnets are good meat, if fatt'd with oats; but fed with weeds, they taste fishy.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

CYLINDER.* n. s. [κύλινδρος.] A body having two flat surfaces and one circular.

The quantity of water which every revolution does carry according to any inclination of the cylinder, may be easily found.
Wilkins

• The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments, bases, pedestals, plots, and buildings; your cylin- der for vaulted turrets, and round buildings.
Peacham.

CYLINDRICAL.* adj. [from cylindrus.] Partaking of CYLINDRICAL } the nature of the form of a cylinder.

Minera ferri stalactitia, when ever are contiguous, and grow together in brushiron ore.

Obstructions must be most incident

There are extant in Greek, four books of cynopoeia, or venation.

Cynopoeia. Err. Having the qualities of a dog; currish; brutal; snarling;

It is possible for Diogenes his cynical slovenliness to trample upon his splendid garments with more pride than Plato wore them.

He doth believe that some new fangled wit (it is his cynical phrase) will some time or other find out his art.

A for wilder speech was that of the dog-philosopher, who termed women necessary evils: of this cynical sect, it seems, was he, who would make "cynus" to be the anagram of "uxor."

CYNICK. n. s. [κύνικος.] A philosopher of the snarling or currish sort; a follower of Diogenes; a rude man; a snarler; a misanthrope.

How vildly doth this cynick think! —
Set you henceforth; and my fellow, hence

Without these pretensions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette, the man grows sullen and morose, the woman more continent and fantastical.

CYNOSURE. n. s. [from κύνος and οὐρα.] The star near the North-pole, by which sailors steer

Their compass also is defective; — nor is the magnet, till of late, known amongst them; having the cynosure and trust minor for their best directio.

CYPRUS. n. s. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypressus, as being used in mourning. So far Dr. Johnson. It is most probably from Cypus, where it was originally manufactured. It was a kind of lawn or gauze; and is said to have been also made use of to sift things to the finest powder. It is variously written cypis, cypre, and cypius, and is of frequent occurrence in our old poetry. In Erondelle's French Garden, &c. 1605, the word is called crape: "Commen vendez vous cette piece de crespe? How sell you that piece of white cipresse?"

A thin transparent stuff.

Lawn as white as cypis, and snow,

Cypis black as cypis, and snow

A cypis, not a hooin,

Hides my poor heart!

Your picture — one half drawn

In solemn cypis, th' other cobweb lawn.

All in a robe of d'arest grain,

Flowing with majestic train,

And sable stole of Cypis lawn,

Over thy decent shoulders drawn.

Their ensigns wrapt in cypis.

CYPRUS Wine. n. s. Wine made in the island of Cyprus.

The rich Cypus wine which is so much esteemed in all parts, is very dear.

CYST. n. s. [κύστις.] A bag containing some

CYSTIS. n. s. morbid matter.

In taking it out the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a meliceris.

There may be a consumption, with a purulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst bag, upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated.

CYSTICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts; the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall or the hepatic, or what flows immediately from the liver.

CYSTOTOMY. n. s. [κύστις and τέμνω.] The act or practice of opening incysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CYTISUS. n. s. A shrub, of which there are many varieties. See TREFOIL.

There tamarisks with thick-leav'd box are found;

And cytisus, and garden-pines abound.

CZAR. n. s. [a Slavonian word, written more properly tzar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

There were competitors, the czar of Muscovy's son, the duke of Newburg, and the prince of Lorraine.

CZARISH. adj. [from czar.] Relating to the czar.

His czarish majesty dispatched an express.

CZARINA. n. s. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

When Catherine Alexowna was made empress of Russia, the women were in an actual state of bondage.—Assemblies were quite unknown among them; the czarina was satisfied with introducing them, for she found it impossible to render them polite.

Goldsmith, Ess. 22.
